IN submitting this volume to its patrons, its publishers are quite confident it will be apparent from its pages that every reasonable effort has been made by them to make it complete in its several departments. Notwithstanding this, however, they are conscious that to some of its readers it may appear that historic records have been omitted which should have been given, and that in other cases record has been made of matters without consideration of their unimportance. On behalf of its compilers, it is proper to say that its publishers have the fullest confidence that the most ample care has been taken to catch up all the threads of history and unite them in a common woof; that, if some are worthless, the mass is valuable; that if any have been lost or overlooked, the fault is not one of intention, the primary object having been to preserve even the minutest detail of the history of a county which ranks among the first in the State in its organization, in its development, in its intelligence, and in the patriotism and worth of its sons.

Of many of the pioneer families of the county it may be said that they have now no known representatives within its borders. While the footsteps of their sons may be traced in almost all of the States, the record of themselves can scarce be found, even on graves monuments where their remains were interred. The friendly voice of neighborhood tradition—perhaps the imperishable record of services performed to the State—is all that remains; but these have been gathered up as completely as possible, that their life-work may be placed in rank with those of their contemporaries, that they, with them, may go down to the future in a common remembrance of the toils and struggles and dangers which they alike endured. While this attention has been given to those of past years, the biographical record of the men of the living present has been amply cared for.

To the different departments of the volume special attention need not be directed. It may be proper to say, however, that the General History of the county, as well as the history of Newburgh and of New Windsor, were prepared by Mr. RUTTENBER, and will be found complete and reliable. That department necessarily embraces many facts relating to the towns which could only be presented in consecutive narrative to convey a correct view of the subjects considered. The histories of the remaining towns were compiled by Mr. LEWIS, reeks, CLARK, and the biographies by other writers. Acknowledgment has been made in this volume, or of the work for assistance kindly given to the compilers. The persons referred to have also the thanks of the publishers.

The illustrations speak for themselves, and will, the publishers believe, challenge admiration. The maps are the most complete and accurate, so far as they claim to furnish details, that have ever been given to the public. In the lists of volunteers in the war of the Rebellion, while there are perhaps errors and omissions which would gladly have been avoided, there is also a mass of information that would otherwise, perhaps, never have had the published record which it deserves.

The publishers, however, have no desire to appear as unnecessarily commending the volume, nor do they conceive it necessary to apologize for any of its imperfections. Appreciating fully the generous support which has been extended to them by the representative men of the county, they are content to await their verdict.

OUTLINE PLAN OF ORANGE COUNTY
NEW YORK

HISTORY

ORANGE COUNTY, NEW YORK.

CHAPTER I. ABORIGINAL HISTORY.

THE aboriginal history of Orange County may be properly dated from Sept. 15, 1609, on the morning of which day Henry Hudson rode at anchor in his ship, the "Half-Moon," in the waters of the river now bearing his name, immediately above the Highlands. With the natives of the country which he was exploring his experience was varied. Below the Highlands he made captive two young men, intending to take them to Holland, but when rounding West Point they sprang on the rocky headland and called from the shore to their captor in scorn. Above the Highlands "the people of the country," as he called them, visited his ship and brought some small skins with them, which were "bought for knives and trifles." Subsequently, when anchored off Stony Point, "the people of the mountains" came on board, and when leaving a conflict was brought on which resulted in the death of two of their number, and before reaching the Manhattan islands eight of the aboriginal lords had fallen under the power of European falcons.

Through the early Dutch navigators who followed Hudson's path more definite information is obtained of the people whom he visited, and also the names which were given to the clans or chieftaincies into which they were divided. At "Haverstroo" they were called Haverstroos; from Stony Point to the Dans-Kammer they were Wooranecks,—subsequently called "the Murderer's Creek Indians;" from the Dans-Kammer north through Ulster County, and west through the valley of the Wallkill, they were Waranawonkongs; in the district drained by the Delaware and its tributaries they were Minsis or Minisinks. These names were not those which the natives had given as belonging to themselves, but were those which had been given by them to the Dutch as the names of the streams on which they lived. The Waranawonkong was the Wallkill; the Wooraneck, the Murderer's Creek.

Later the tribal and national organizations of this people appeared. It would be no violation of fact to say that their political constitution was similar to our own. They had villages or towns, counties or enlarged cantons, tribes or states, nations or united tribes. Each in its sphere was independent, yet the whole strongly and firmly bound together. The sub-tribes or villages south of Stony Point were Unulactos, or the Turkey tribe; those north were Minsis, or the Wolf tribe, with territorial jurisdiction extending through the Minisink country of Pennsylvania and New Jersey; south of the Minsis they were Unamis, or the Turtle tribe.* The tribes named constituted the Lenni-Lenape nation, which held its council-fire at what is now Philadelphia. From the Unamis was selected invariably, by the ruling chiefs of the other tribes, the king or sagamore of the nation,—a king both with and without power; a sovereign whose rule was perpetuated only through the love of his people; a monarch the most polished, the most liberal, the poorest of his race; one who ruled by permission, who received no salary, who was not permitted to own the cabin in which he lived or the land he cultivated, who could receive no presents that did not become the property of the nation, yet whose larder and treasure-chest were never empty.

The history of the Lenapes, briefly stated, is, that they were the head of the Algonquin nations at the time of the discovery, but, by a succession of wars with the Dutch, the English, and the Iroquois, were compelled some time about 1670 to yield to the latter and become a "nation of women,"—i.e., a nation without power to make war or peace on their own account, or to sell or convey lands. In this condition they remained until 1755 (having in the mean time become generally known as the Delawares), when they threw off the yoke of subjugation, and under alliances with the Shawanoes, Mingoes, etc., were enabled to place themselves at the head of the Western nations, and contest every inch of soil east of the Mississippi.

* Tribal organizations were known by the totems or emblems which they painted on their cabins, their persons, etc., as the turkey, the wolf, the turtle.

But while these facts were being ascertained,—years before many of them were known,—there came the hurrying to and fro of armed men, and the terribly echoing battle-cry of the woodland lords, “Woach, Woach, Ha, Ha, Hach, Woach!” with which the settlers subsequently became familiar. The Dutch began their settlement at New Amsterdam (now New York) in 1626. A few years later, settlements were commenced at Paulus’ Hook (now Jersey City), then called Pavonia, and at Breucklen, now the city of Brooklyn, and a few small neighborhoods were scattered along the river north of Paulus’ Hook. These settlements brought with them frictions of opposing customs, which, in 1643, resulted in conflicts and massacres in the vicinity of New Amsterdam, by which the Dutch were driven from every foothold outside of their fort, and the whole country from the Neversink highlands to the hills and valleys of the Tappans was again in the possession of its aboriginal lords.

Passing from these fields of conflict to the north of the Hudson highlands, from 1656 to 1664 the territory of the Warranawonkongs became the theatre of war, broken by occasional periods of peace. Whatever may have been the earlier trading-posts, permanent settlement was not commenced among that tribe until 1652, and may be said to have been soon after abandoned until 1656. As in other places, the settlers devoted the largest portion of their time and means to the purposes of trade, and, with a view to secure the largest amount of furs, imprudently made free with the sale of brandy and other liquors, under the influence of which the Indians became troublesome and resorted to violence. Stirring events soon clustered around the infant colony at Atkarkarton (now Kingston). A stockaded village and a fort were found necessary for protection; but even these proved of little avail, for on the 7th of June, 1663, the Indians entered the gates of the villages, two of which, known as the “New” and the “Old,” were then in occupation. Ostensibly seeking trade, they scattered themselves among the houses of the Dutch, until at a given signal their vocation was changed to that of destruction. At a single blow the New Village was destroyed. “Some people on horseback escaped and reached the Old Village, but their arrival was the signal of attack upon the latter, for scarce had the alarm been given when the Indians uttered their war-whoop and commenced the work of death. The people were murdered in their houses with axes and tomahawks, and by firing on them with guns and pistols.” Women and children were seized and carried off prisoners; houses were plundered, and men, rushing to the defense of their families, were shot down by foes concealed in their own dwellings. To aid in the work of destruction, the Indians set fire to the village on the windward side. The flames spread rapidly, but when at their height the wind suddenly changed to the west and prevented further devastation. The panic occasioned by the sudden attack having subsided, the settlers rallied and drove the Indians out. By evening all was still again, and the bereaved inhabitants kept mournful watch during the night. Twenty-one lives were lost, nine were wounded, and forty-five carried off captive; the New Village was annihilated, and at the Old Village twelve houses were burned.*

Immediately on the receipt of the intelligence of this disaster, Stuyvesant dispatched Col. Martin Kregier with a company of soldiers to assist the settlers. Kregier arrived at the Ronduit on the 4th of July. In a few days five Mohawk and Mohican chiefs arrived from Fort Orange, and by their mediation some of the Dutch captives were released; but the Warranawonkongs would not listen to propositions for peace unless the Dutch would pay “for the land named the Great Plot,” and reward them with presents within ten days. The Dutch commander replied by sending out scouting-parties, who succeeded in bringing in a few prisoners, from whom it was learned that the Indians had retreated to their castle; and thither it was determined to follow them. The expedition reached its destination on the evening of the 26th of July. The castle† was a formidable structure. It was “defended by three rows of palisades, and the houses in the fort encircled by thick cleft palisades with port-holes in them, and covered with bark of trees;” in form it was quadrangular, but the angles were “constructed between the first and second rows of palisades,” the third row of palisades standing “full eight feet off from the others towards the interior,” the whole being “on the brow of the hill,” surrounded by table-land. But the object of the expedition was not accomplished. Warned of the approach of their enemy, the Indians retreated to the Shawangunk Mountains and took their captives with them. From a captured squaw it was learned that the Indians were some four miles distant, and a force was sent thither; but when they arrived at the designated place, it was found that they had again retreated. Kregier, however, destroyed the Kahansken castle by fire, cut down the corn-fields which the Indians had planted, and destroyed “about a hundred pits full of corn and beans,” which had been preserved from the crop of the previous year. This work accomplished, he returned to Wiltwyck.‡

The settlers now engaged in harvesting their grain, and the soldiers guarded them while at work. Offensive operations were not resumed until September, when a force of fifty men was sent out to reduce a new castle which the Indians were said to be erecting,

* The New Village was about three miles from the Old Village, and the Ronduit about the same distance.

† The location of this fort, or palisaded village, is defined in the boundary lines of lands conveyed by the treaty of 1665: “Lying and being to the west and southwest of a certain creek or river called by the name of Kahansken, and so up to the head thereof where the old fort was.”

‡ By a formal charter of date May 16, 1661, the settlement was ordered to be called “Wiltwyck,” or Indian Village. The English changed the name to Kingston.

situated "about four hours farther than their first fort," which had been burned. The expedition reached its destination on the 5th of September. The Indians were taken by surprise, but made a stout resistance. They were busy completing their fort, and had left their arms at their houses, "about a stone's throw from the fort." Alarmed by a squaw, who had discovered the approach of the Dutch, they rushed to secure their arms, but were only partially successful so closely were they pursued. Retreating across the kill, they threw back the Dutch fire with such spirit that it was found necessary to send a strong party to dislodge them. "In this attack the Indians lost their chief Papequanaehan, fourteen warriors, four women, and three children." On the part of the Dutch three were killed and wounded. Thirteen Indians were taken prisoners, and twenty-three Dutch captives released. The Dutch found plunder sufficient to "well fill a sloop," but were obliged to leave it. Everything was destroyed that could be. "The fort was a perfect square, with one row of palisades set all around, being about fifteen feet above and three feet below ground," but it was not completed. Two angles of "stout palisades, all of them about as thick as a man's body, having two rows of port-holes, one above the other," were done, and when surprised the Indians were "busy at the other angle." The victorious expedition returned to the settlement laden with spoil, and the Indians fled to the mountains to brood over their defeat and loss.

On the 1st of October another expedition was sent out on the same route, and arrived at the fort last destroyed on the 2d. The Indians had meanwhile returned to it and thrown the bodies of their dead comrades into five pits, from which "the wolves had rooted up and devoured some of them. Lower down on the kill four other pits were found containing bodies; and farther on three Indians with a squaw and child lay unburied and almost wholly devoured by wolves." A terrible picture of desolation was spread out on either hand where but a few days before the native lords had exulted in their strength, but who now, crushed and broken, had retreated southward among their kindred Minsis. The Dutch forces completed the destruction of the fort; the palisades were pulled down, the wigwams burned, and all the corn cut up and cast into the kill.

The Warranawonkongs, upon whom this chastisement had principally fallen, solicited peace in the fall, and an armistice was granted. They had suffered severely; their villages, from Wawayanda to Esopus, were not without mourners; their store-houses were rifled, and their crops destroyed. Nor were their allies, the Waoranecks, more fortunate. Although their territory had not been invaded nor their villages burned, they were not the less subdued; the embers of their forest worship, which had for ages been lighted on the Dans-Kammer, were extinguished forever. In the spring following Sewackenamo, in conference at Fort Amsterdam, lifted up his voice in prayer to his God—BACHTAMO—that "something good" might be concluded with the Dutch, and there executed a treaty, by the terms of which all that had passed was to be forgiven and forgotten; the lands claimed by the Dutch, and now conquered by the sword, were to remain the property of the conquerors, and the vanquished were not to approach the Dutch settlements with arms. This treaty was ratified (May 16, 1664) amid the roar of cannon, and was celebrated by a public thanksgiving. With its conclusion was also closed the struggle of the aboriginal clans for the possession of their ancient seats on the western slope of the valley of the Hudson, from the Katskills to the sea. The retreating footsteps of some of their warriors were yet to be marked on advancing frontiers by blazing torch and branding tomahawk, but those who remained in the vicinity of the "river of the mountains" awaited in peace the granting of title-deeds to their European successors. Meanwhile, however, those who survived the conflict with the Dutch, more especially the Minsis, in the western part of the county and the adjoining territory, were greatly strengthened by additions to their number, first in 1692, and again in 1694, of large colonies of Shawanoes who located in western Ulster and Orange. It is not impossible that these immigrants left behind them in their western march names which have been ascribed to earlier periods. However this may be, it is certain that from the nursery-beds of the Shawanoes in Orange went forth to the West some of the most able chiefs and warriors of that tribe.

CHAPTER II.

LAND TITLES—FIRST SETTLEMENTS.

"THE lands which I intend shall be first planted are those upon the west side of Hudson's River, at or adjoining to the Sopes," wrote Governor Nicolls in 1664. With the exception of the "Great Plot," now occupied by the city of Kingston, embracing about four thousand acres, which had been given to Governor Stuyvesant by the Warranawonkong chiefs "to grease his feet," the lands to which Governor Nicolls refers were the first to which Europeans had a title, and were "conquered by the sword." They are described in the treaty of 1665 as "a certain parcel of land lying and being to the west and southwest of a certain creek or river called by the name of Kahanksen, and so up to the head thereof, where the old fort was; and so with a direct line from thence through the woods and across the meadows to the Great Hill, lying and being to the west or southwest thereof, which Great Hill is to be the true west or southwest bounds of the said lands, and the creek called Kahanksen the north or northeast bounds of the said lands." In other words, they were the lands that Kregier and his

Dutch troops had ravaged in 1663. They were limited in extent, embracing scarce three townships in southwestern Ulster, and were specially designated by the Indians as Shawangunk, "the white man's country," as distinguished from the lands to which they retained the title.

From this extreme position on the northwest bounds of the present county chronology takes us to the extreme south of the old county of Orange, "the Christian patented lands of Haverstraw." Here Balthazer de Hart and his brother Jacob, immigrants from Holland at an earlier date, prior to July 31, 1666, purchased from the Indians "all that tract of land lying on the west side of Hudson's River called Haverstraw, being on the north side of the hills called Verdrietig Hook, on the south side of the Highlands, on the east side of the mountains, so that the same is bounded by Hudson's River and round about by the high mountains." Presuming that the tract was included in the boundaries of New Jersey, he obtained from Carteret and the Council of that province a patent,* and transferred his interest to Nicholas Depuy and Peter Jacobs Marius. On subsequent purchase and patent he acquired (April 10, 1671) the "parcels of land called by the Indian names of Newasink, Yandakah, Caquaney, and Aquamak, bounded on the west by a creek called Menisakcungue, on the east and north by Hudson's River, and on the south by the mountains," which became the property of his brother Jacob; and also a tract "known by the name of Ahequerenoy," which, with a portion of the previous purchase, came to the possession of Hendrick Ryker, the whole becoming the basis of the boundaries of all subsequent grants in the district.

Turning again to the north of the district, we find that Louis Du Bois, a Huguenot pioneer, driven thither by the pending persecutions of the people of his faith in France, located, with some of his friends, at Esopus in 1660. Contributing the captivity of his wife and children to the Indian war of 1663, he subsequently induced several families of his countrymen, who were more recent immigrants, to unite with him in establishing a French town. Twelve men, known as the "Twelve Patentees," were selected to obtain title to lands, who, after an examination of the country, purchased from the Indian proprietors (May 26, 1677) a tract of thirty-six thousand acres, lying immediately south of the "Redoute Creek," as the Warranawonkong came to be called. On the 29th of September following a patent was obtained from Governor Andros, in the name of "Louis du Bois and his partners, that is, Christian Doyau, Abraham Hasbroucq, André le Febvre, Jean Hasbroucq, Pierre Doyau, Louis Beviere, Anthoine Crespel, Abraham du Bois, Hugue Frere, Isaac Du Bois, and Simon le Febvre, their heirs and others," men whose names live in the annals of their adopted country. On this patent nine families immediately settled, and laid, in the faith which they professed, the foundations of New Paltz.

Midway between the Haverstraw and New Paltz settlements, Patrick MacGregorie, his brother-in-law, David Toshuck, who subscribed his name "Laird of Minivard," and twenty-five others, principally Scotch Presbyterians, entered upon lands at the mouth of the Waoraneck. It was their original intention to settle in New Jersey, but they were persuaded by Governor Dongan to take up lands in New York. Obtaining a license for that purpose, MacGregorie, acting as their representative, purchased for his people a tract of four thousand acres, embracing lands on both sides of "Murderer's Creek," "and so settled themselves, their families and sundry of their servants, on the land so purchased, and were not only the first Christians that settled and improved thereon, but also peaceably and quietly possessed and enjoyed themselves during the term of their natural lives." On what is now known as Plum Point, but which was then called, from its aboriginal owner, Couwanham's Hill, MacGregorie reared his cabin; in the same vicinity were the cabins of his associates, while on the south side of the creek the "Laird of Minivard" and his servant, Daniel Maskrig, established a trading-post. Within the bounds of the present county of Orange this was the first European settlement, as Haverstraw was the first in the original county.

Unfortunately, MacGregorie did not perfect his title by patent. Trusting to Governor Dongan to protect his interests, he entered the service of the State, while Dongan obtained by purchase on his own account (Oct. 25, 1684), from "Mangenaett, Tsema, Kegnhekapowell, alias Joghem, three Indians, native proprietors and principal owners, with the consent of Pameranaghin, chief sachem of Esopus Indians," a tract described as extending from "the Paltz along Hudson's River to the land belonging to the Indians at the Murderer's Kill, thence westward to the foot of the high hills called Pitkiskaker and Aiaskawasting, thence southwesterly all along the said hills and the river called Peakadasank to a water-pond lying upon said hills called Meretange, comprehending all those lands, meadows, and woods called Nescotank, Chawangon, Memorasink, Kakoghgetawarnuch, and Ghittatawagh." The consideration was the sum of ninety pounds and eleven shillings, in the following goods: "10 fathoms blue duffels, 10 fathoms of red duffels, 200 fathoms white wampum, 10 fathoms stroud water (red cloth), 10 fathoms blue cloth, 10 blankets, 10 guns, 10 kettles, 10 duffel coats, 10 drawing-knives, 10 shirts, 10 tobacco-boxes, 10 children's duffel coats, 10 children's shirts, 10 pair of hose, 50 lbs. powder, 50 bars lead, 10 pair shoes, 10 cutlasses, 10 hatchets, 10 hoes, 10 scissors, 10 tobacco tongues, 100 flints, 2 rolls of tobacco, 20 gals. rum, 2 vats strong beer, and 1 barrel cider."

To this purchase he added (April 16, 1684), by deed

* The grant was subsequently confirmed by the Governor and Council of New York. The patent is of record in New Jersey.

from Werekepes, sachem, Sackaghemeck, Sewiskkamock, alias Hans, Apiskaeuw, Cashoros, Csquameck, Moringamaghan, Pogghhock, and Kaghtsikoos, the lands owned by "themselves and copartners," being a tract beginning "at about a place called the Dancing Chamber; thence south to the north side of the land called Haverstraw; thence northwest along the hill called Skoonnenoghky to the bounds of his purchase from the Esopus Indians aforesaid, including the Murderer's Creek." The consideration was 150 fathoms of wampum, 120 royals, 20 fathoms duffels, 6 guns, 7 brass kettles, 8 blankets, 6 fathoms strouds, 2 cloth coats, 2 broad axes, 5 pair shoes, 6 children's shirts, 20 knives, 50 lbs. powder, 30 bars lead, 25 lbs. shot, 2 rolls tobacco, 4 iron pots, 10 tobacco tongues, 10 tobacco-boxes, 4 lbs. bood, 2 half-vats single beer, 2 half-vats double beer, 5 glass bottles, 5 earthen jugs, 3 pewter dishes, 2 bottles, with rum, 100 tobacco pipes, 10 hatchets, 6 drawing-knives, 4 addz, 10 hoes, 10 pair stockings, 8 shirts, 6 pistols, 10 children's blankets, 2 boys' cloth coats, 6 boys' duffel coats, 20 gallons rum, £2* paid Frederick Phillipse, £2 paid Stephanus Van Cortlandt.

Not only had the Indians previously sold to MacGregorie a portion of the lands which by this sale they conveyed to Dongan, but Stephanus Van Cortlandt held their deed for a tract opposite Anthony's Nose. The purchase was made July 13, 1683, and the tract described as "beginning on the south side of a creek called Sankapogh, and so along said creek to the head thereof, and then northerly along the high hills as the river runneth to another creek called Assinapink, and thence along the said creek to Hudson's River again, together with a certain island and parcel of meadow-land, near or adjoining the same, called Manahawaghkin, and by the Christians, Salisbury Island." Sackaghemeck, sachem of Haverstraw, Werekepes, and Kaghtsikoos were the grantors. Luckily, he preserved his deed, and under it succeeded in obtaining a patent attaching his purchase to his manor, on the opposite side of the river.

But the MacGregorie colonists were not so fortunate. Governor Dongan conveyed his two purchases to Capt. John Evans by patent Sept. 12, 1694, under the title of the Lordship and Manor of Fletcherdon. MacGregorie, after serving the province in the capacity of muster-general of the militia and as its agent among the northwestern Indians in a district of country which had not been previously visited, had yielded up his life in the Leslie revolution of 1691, and a peaceful death had closed the earthly cares of David Toshuck in the bosom of his family, at Plum Point. To dispossess the heirs was the first work of Evans, to whose shame it is written that he compelled MacGregorie's widow, Margaret, to sell to him the house in which she lived for "£30 or £35, to the ruin of herself and family." To her and to her surviving neighbors he then granted leases, thus preserving title and possession, as well as the continuity of the settlement. The Scotch settlers who remained in possession under these leases obtained no subsequent patent titles, except in the case of the heirs of MacGregorie, to whom, some years later, a patent was granted for the Plum Point farm, and also for a mountain tract, in consideration of their claim.

The fourth settlement, and by far the most considerable, was made adjoining the "Christian patented lands of Haverstraw." It was composed of immigrants from Holland, principally members of the Reformed Dutch Church. Among them were descendants or relatives of David Pieterse de Vries, who had occupied a conspicuous position in the earlier history of the province, and had established a plantation which he called Vriesendaal, situated "in a beautiful valley just below the mountains." Driven thence during the war of 1645, he had taken to Holland a memory which had been treasured by his family and neighbors, who, on their arrival, selected a location in the vicinity, if not embracing the site, of his ancient "little bouwerie." Obtaining, through trustees selected for that purpose, a title from "the native Indian proprietors," and being in numbers sufficient to demand it, they were granted (March 20, 1686) a township patent, "under the name of the Town of Orange," with all the powers "practiced or belonging unto any town within this Government." The trustees of the grant were Cornelis Claessen Cuyper, Daniel de Klercke, Peter Harnich, Cattis Harnich, Gerritt Steumetts, John de Vries, Sr., John de Vries, Jr., Claes Mannde, Jan Stratemaker, Staates de Groot, Aerean Lammeates, Lamont Arianuis, Huybert Gerrits, Johannes Gerrits, Eide Van Vorst, and Cornelius Lammerts. The boundaries of the tract were defined as "beginning at the mouth of Tappan Creek where it falls into the meadow and running from thence along the north side of the said creek to a creeple bush and falls into Hackinsack River, northerly to a place called the Greenbush, and from thence along said Greenbush easterly to the lands of Class Janse and Dowe Harmanse,† and from thence southerly along said land upon the top of the hills to the aforementioned mouth of Tappan Creek where it falls into the meadow aforesaid." The centre of the township was at Tappan, where a glebe for the support of a minister was laid out and a church organized.‡

A vacant tract of land, immediately west of Haverstraw, was conveyed by deed and patent (the latter, June 25, 1696) to Daniel Honan and Michael Hawdon. This tract, which is described as being known by the name of Kuck-quack-ta-wake (Kakiate), was "bounded on the east by the Christian patented lands of Haverstraw, on the north by a creek called Shamorack or Peasqua, which runs under a great hill, from which it continues a west course until the west-southwest side of a barren plain called Wishpegwrap bears south, thence to the west-southwest side of aforesaid plain, from thence south-southwest until the said line comes to a creek that runs to David Demaree's creek to the south side of the land called Marranchaw, and thence down the said creek to the Christian patented lands." Adjoining this tract on the south, Samuel Bayard was granted certain tracts called Whorinims, Perseck, Gemackie, and Narrashunck, "bounded north by the land of Daniel Honan and Michael Hawdon, south by the parting line of this Province and the Jerseys, west by Saddle River, and east by Demaree's Creek," containing two thousand acres. The Indian deed for this and several other purchases was covered by one to Lucas Tienhoven, embracing by survey one hundred thousand acres, but for which no patent was issued.

Between the township of Orange and the Haverstraw lands the rocky bluff known as Verdrietig Hook, by the Indians called Quaspeeck, including Rockland Lake, became the subject of controversy between "John Hutchins and Company" and "Jarvis Marshall and Company." Both parties obtained deeds, but the latter apparently had priority in date of purchase and were granted (Sept. 27, 1694) the patent, the patentees being Jarvis Marshall and William Welch. At a later period (April 23, 1708) a patent to Lancaster Syms, Robert Walter, and Hendrick Ten Eycke covered the vacant river-front, described as "beginning by the south bounds of Haverstraw, thence west to the northermost end of the land or island called Mattasink or Welch's Island, thence southerly to the southermost end of said island, then east to the creek that runs out of the pond upon Verdrietig Hook and along the same to the Hudson, then north to the place of beginning, except the grant to Honan and Hawdon."

The patents described covered the entire district on the Hudson from the New Jersey line to New Paltz, and extended west to the line of the Shawangunk Mountains. While they were being taken up, some entries had also been made on the Delaware River. Arent Schuyler, employed by the government as an interpreter of the Indian language and as an agent among the Indian tribes, obtained (May 20, 1697), on previous deed from the Minisinks, a patent for one thousand acres, more particularly described as a "tract of land in the Minisink country called by the native Indians Sankhekeneck, otherwise Mayhawaem; also another tract, called Warinsayskmeck, situated upon a river called Mennessincks before a certain island called Menagnock, which tract is adjacent or near to a tract of land called Maghaghkemek." In the same year (October 14th) a patent was granted to Jacob

Codebec, Thomas Swartwout, Anthony Swartwout, Bernardus Swartwout, Jan Tyse, Peter Gimar, and David Jamison, for "a certain quantity of land at a place called Maghaghkemek, being the quantity of one thousand two hundred acres; beginning at the western bounds of the lands called Nepeneck, to a small stream of water called by the Indian name of Assawagkemeck, and so along said run of water and the lands of Mansjoor the Indian."

It has been claimed that there was a settlement in the vicinity of the Swartwout Patent some time prior to the date of that instrument. At an early period what was known as "the old mine road" was opened between Esopus and the Delaware, constructed, it is said, by a company of Dutch miners. This road ran through the Mamakating Valley, north of the Shawangunk Mountains, was continued in the valley of the Maghaghkemek branch of the Delaware, and penetrated the Minisinks proper east of that river. Here, it is added, the company discovered copper, worked a mine, and transported its product over the road which they had constructed to the Esopus settlement. Unfortunately for the value of the tradition, the road was simply the enlargement of an Indian trail which had been followed for ages, while the mine referred to was in what is now the town of Warren, Sussex Co., N. J. The boundaries of the question are still further circumscribed by the fact that the Dutch at Esopus, during the war of 1660-63, had little knowledge of the country even east of the Shawangunk Mountains, and that the Minisink country was penetrated, if at a much earlier period, by the way of the Delaware River.

Nor is it true that the first settlement was on the Swartwout Patent. At the date of issue of that patent, Jacob Codebec, Thomas Swartwout, Anthony Swartwout, and Peter Guimar* were residents of New Paltz or of Kingston. They certainly had not made settlement on the Delaware in 1690. But there was settlement there, about that time, by one William Tietsoort, a blacksmith, who in a petition to the Governor and Council of New York, dated April 10, 1708, states that he was formerly a resident of Schenectady, and that from the massacre at that place, in 1689, he barely escaped with his life; that having friends in the Esopus country he removed thither, where, being known by the friendly Indians, he was invited by them to take up his residence in the Minisink country, the Indians voluntarily granting unto him a tract of land situate and being at Maghaghkemek, named and known by the name of Schaikaeckamick, in an elbow ; that he obtained license to purchase Oct. 15, 1698, that he so purchased,* and that his possessions were subsequently assumed to be included in a purchase by and patent to Matthew Ling, against which he asked protection. There is very little room to doubt that he was the first settler on the western border. His deed from the Indians was obtained subsequently, as his gift-title could not be regarded as strictly legal. It bears date June 3, 1700, and is duly recorded in Ulster records.

* Peter Guimar, a native of Moir Saintonge, was married to Esther Hasbroucq, native of the Palatinate, at New Paltz, April 18, 1692. He left his native place in company with Codebec in 1685, or rather the families of Abraham Guimar and James Codebec, of which he and Jacob Codebec were minor members, came out together. That Codebec, Swartwout, and Guimar were what may be regarded as the first permanent settlers on the patent will not be disputed, but there were three settlements in the ancient precinct,—“Big” and “Little Minisink,” and the “neighborhood of Maghaghkemek,” and were recognized by the law of 1701.

Active competition in the extinguishment of Indian titles by purchase and obtaining patents sprung up at the opening of the succeeding century. Associations were formed, not unfrequently mainly composed of those holding official positions under the government, and large grants obtained. Three principal patents of this class necessarily require notice in this connection. The first, the Chesekook Patent, was included in a purchase from "Moringamaghan, Skawgus, Ughquaw, Onickotapp, and Aioqhquaeharæ, native Indians, proprietors," Dec. 30, 1702, by "Doctor John Bridges, Hendrick Ten Eycke, Derick Vandenburgh, John Cholwell, Christopher Denn, Lancaster Syms, and John Merritt," of a "certain tract of upland and meadow called Chesekook, bounded north by the patent line of Capt. John Evans, to the west by the high hills of the Highlands, to the south by Honan and Hawdon's Patent, and to the east by the lands of the bounds of Haverstraw and Hudson's River," and for which they received a patent March 25, 1707. The second, the Wawayanda Patent, was on a purchase (March 5, 1703) from "Rapingonick, Wawastawa, Moghopuck, Cornelawaw, Nanawitt, Arawinack, Rombout, Claus, Chouchhass, Chingapaw, Oshasquememus, and Quilapaw, native Indians and proprietors," by "Doctor John Bridges, Hendrick Ten Eycke, Derick Vandenburgh, John Cholwell, Christopher Denn, Lancaster Syms, Daniel Honan, Philip Rokeby, John Merritt, Benjamin Aske, Peter Mathews, and Cornelius Christianse," for a "certain sum of money and goods," of "certain tracts or parcels of vacant lands named Wawayanda, and some other small tracts or parcels of land, being bounded on the eastward by the high hills of the Highlands and the patent of Capt. John Evans, on the north by the division line of the counties of Orange and Ulster, on the westward by the high hills to the eastward of Minisinks, and on the south by the division line of the provinces of New York and East Jersey." The patent was granted April 29, 1703.

The third grant, the Minisink Patent, was still more extensive. It was issued Aug. 28, 1704, to Matthew Ling, Ebenezer Wilson, Philip French, Derick Vandenburgh, Stephen de Lancey, Philip Rokeby, John Corbett, Daniel Honan, Caleb Cooper, William Sharpas, Robert Milward, Thomas Wenham, Lancaster Syms, John Person, Benjamin Aske, Petrus Bayard, John Cholwell, Peter Fanconier, Henry Swift, Hendrick Ten Eycke, Jarvis Marshall, Ann Bridges (widow of John Bridges), and George Clark, and conveyed to them "all that part of Orange and Ulster Counties, beginning at a place in Ulster County called Hunting House, or Yagh House, lying to the northeast of land called Bashe's land, thence to run west by north until it meets the Fishkill or main branch of Delaware River, thence to run southerly to the south end of Great Minisink Island, thence due south to the land lately granted to John Bridges and Company (Wawayanda), and so along that patent as it runs northward and the patent of Capt. John Evans, and thence to the place of beginning." The grant consolidated two grants, one to Philip French and Company, and one to Ebenezer Wilson and Company, and only excepted from its sweeping boundaries the tract called Sankhekeneck or Mayhawaem, with a parcel of meadow called Warinsayskmeck, previously granted to Arent Schuyler, and a tract called Maghaghkemek, near Nepeneck, granted to Jacob Codebec and others.

Had the purchasers a deed from the Indians? Not only is there none on record, but Sir William Johnson writes, "An elderly man who lived in the Highlands, and at whose house I dined on my way from New York some years ago, told me that he lived with or in the neighborhood of Depuy, and was present when the said Depuy† purchased the Minisink lands from the Indians; that when they were to sign the deed of sale he made them drunk, and never paid them the money agreed upon. He heard the Indians frequently complain of the fraud, and declare that they would never be easy until they had satisfaction for their lands."‡ When in 1757 the wronged red men swept the western border with devastation, it was their declaration that they would never "leave off killing the English until they were paid for their lands, mentioning Minisink almost to the Hudson River."

* From a joint affidavit made by him and his son Jacob, in 1717, it appears that he sold two parcels of land at Maghaghkemek, in 1713, to Jan Decker, who, with his cousin, "young Jan Decker," were to occupy one of the parcels, and his brother, Hendrick Decker, the other. He was then a resident of Dutchess County, to which he probably removed immediately after his sale to Decker. In a list of residents of Dutchess County in 1714 is the following entry: "William Tetsort, number of male persons above sixty years, one; number of male persons from sixteen to sixty, two; number of females from sixteen to sixty, two; number of females under sixteen, one." From which it may be inferred that he was then over sixty years of age, and that his family was composed of himself, his wife, two sons, and two daughters. His wife is said to have been Sarah Decker, and that her name, with his own, is recorded in the records of Maghaghkemek Church in 1739, at the baptism of their son Bernardus. The truth of this statement may be doubted, however, unless Bernardus was a very old boy, or Sarah Decker was a second wife, for Tietsoort himself must have been over eighty-two years of age at the time. The family subsequently lived in Wantago, N. J., where the name is now written Tietworth.

† Samuel Depuy was settled on the west bank of the Delaware, three miles above the Water Gap. He was one of the Walloons who came to New York about 1697. He became a large land-owner in Pennsylvania, and was well known to all who traveled "the mine road." It is possible that he is referred to in the text.

‡ MSS. of Sir William Johnson, xxiv. 14.

The boundary lines of the Chesekook, Wawayanda, Minisink, and Evans Patents were for a long time a disturbing element. They were entirely undefined, except in general terms. The west line of Chesekook and the east line of Wawayanda was designated by a mountain range; the east line of Minisink and the west line of Wawayanda was also a mountain range, and so in part was the north line of both the Chesekook and the Wawayanda, or rather the south-west line of the Evans Patent, to which they ran. In the subsequent adjustment of the latter, together with that of the county line, a portion of the territory claimed by the Wawayanda patentees was cut off, while on the west an angle was formed, known as the Minisink Angle, embracing a tract of one hundred and thirty thousand acres.

The granting of immense tracts of land aroused the attention of the English government in 1698. Investigation followed and resulted in annulling the patent to Capt. Evans, by act of the Assembly, May 12, 1699. Notwithstanding the policy of issuing patents for small tracts, upon which the repeal of the Evans Patent was predicated, was abandoned in the almost immediately following issue of the Wawayanda, Minisink, and similar large grants, the territory which the Evans Patent covered was conveyed in small tracts by patents issued at different periods from 1701 to 1775, but principally prior to 1750, and were—exclusive of those not included in the present boundaries of the county—as follows:

1. Roger and Pauline Mumpesson, 100 acres, March 4, 1709.
2. Robert Wilson and Benjamin Asse, 200 acres, May 3, 1710.
3. R. Van Der, Philip, Anthoni Philippe, David Provost, Jr., Jan. 18, 1710; Symes, and Thomas Jones, 100 acres, March 20, 1710.

* Cut off from Wawayanda by boundary line of other patents of this class are similarly designated.

† It is not located, but has no possessors, but tract it contains substantially all the patents granted. There are tracts of small lots

The precise location of these several patents will not be attempted. Some of them became centres of population; especially is this true of the German Patent of 1719, which was issued to fugitives from the Palatinate of the Rhine, who had been settled thereon in 1709, and is now embraced in the city of Newburgh. A comparatively small portion of the Minisink Patent extended over the present county. The Wawayanda and Chesebrough Patents were wholly within its limits, the former being the largest, and embracing its most fertile sections. The progress of settlement of the district during the century succeeding the discovery, aside from the extinction of the aboriginal title and the issue of patents, is approximately conveyed in the census of 1702, by which it appears that the population at that time, exclusive of the MacGregorie settlement, consisted of forty-nine men between the ages of sixteen and sixty, forty married women, fifty-seven male and eighty-four female children, thirteen male negroes, seven negroes, and thirteen negro children.

Adverting more particularly to the Wawayanda Patent, we find it an undefined district both in purchase and in grant. The Indian deed of March 5, 1702-3, to Dr. John Bridges, Hendrick Ten Eyck, Derrick Vandenburg, John Cholwell, Christopher Denne, Lancaster Symes, Daniel Honan, Philip Rokeby, John Merritt, Benjamin Aske, Peter Matthews, and Cornelius Christianse, described the conveyance as of "certain tracts and parcels of vacant lands in the county of Orange, named Wawayanda, and some other small tracts and parcels of land, being bounded eastward by the high hills of the Highlands and the patent of Capt. John Evans, on the north by the division line of the counties of Orange and Ulster, on the westward by the high hills to the eastward of Minisink, and on the south by the division line of the province of New York and East Jersey;" and the patent of April 29, 1703, repeats these boundaries literally. Standing on one of "the high hills of the Highlands," on the east, the eye could sweep the outline of the valley below and trace the circling line of "the high hills to the eastward of Minisink" until they faded away in the south, but no eye could estimate its actual surface, and its proprietors were themselves surprised at the extent of their grant. It was held by deed in common until 1705, when it was agreed to divide it in twelve parts and release survivorship rights. This release was executed Sept. 23, 1706, at which time the number of original holders had been reduced to eight, viz.: Derrick Vandenburg, bricklayer; John Cholwell, merchant; Christopher Denne, merchant; Lancaster Symes, gentleman; Daniel Honan, gentleman; Benjamin Aske, merchant; Peter Matthews, gentleman; and John Merritt, gentleman, all of the city of New York. The remaining four of the patentee interests were held as follows: the Bridges share by Ann Bridges, the Rokeby share by Daniel Cromeline and others, the Christianse share by Derrick Vandenburg, and the Ten Eyck share by Daniel Cromeline. In 1713 the number of shares was increased to thirteen by the admission of Dr. Samuel Staats, each of the twelve proprietors yielding to him a twelfth share of their respective interests, in satisfaction of a claim which he had set up to a portion of the tract by virtue of prior purchase (1702).

The sale and settlement of the patent made little progress prior to 1714. The several shares were surveyed, at least partially, and located, and the general fact ascertained that it would be perhaps prudent to conceal the actual acreage. To do this more effectually it was assumed that each share was two thousand acres, and so published it, when in reality they were over five times that number, as appears by a subsequent or "second division," which was made some years later. Of the "first division" maps were made and exposed at the land-offices in New York, accompanied by a description of the soil, rivers, ponds, etc., as shown by the partial surveys; but purchasers either came not or were better pleased with offers elsewhere.

In March, 1706, the patentees agreed to add six hundred acres to the share of that one of their number who should make settlement on the patent before the end of May, 1709, or, as we understand it, that six hundred acres should be given to the first settler; but the offer was not taken. In September, 1706, they constituted and appointed "any number of themselves" who might be conveniently got together, "with full power to convey, bargain, sell, or devise one full fourth part of all the said tracts" to any person or persons who should erect thereon, prior to 1716, "saw-mills, grist-mills, or other water-mills," the "runs, creeks, and rivers" not to be disposed of, however, in fee simple, but "leased or devised for a term of years or life;" but it does not appear that this proposition was received with more favor than that first made.

The patent stood unoccupied until 1712, when the active surviving share-holders determined to make settlements themselves. These were Christopher Denne, Daniel Cromeline, and Benjamin Aske, who were made justices of the peace of Orange County to facilitate the end in view. In their effort they were joined by at least one person who had obtained an interest in the patent, Christian Snedeker, of Long Island. Laborers were hired and supplies procured, and in person or by proxy they simultaneously entered the patent,—Christopher Denne preceded, it is said, by Sarah Wells; Daniel Cromeline by William Bull; Benjamin Aske by Lawrence Decker; and Snedeker by Johannes Wisner, his wife, and sons Hendrick and Adam. It is perhaps unnecessary to discuss the ques-principally overplus in surveys of other patents, obtained at later periods, but the acreage in them is not sufficiently large to justify extended research. It may be well to add that, through heirs and devisees of the original grantees, some of the patented lands became known by the names of other parties.

tion of priority in actual occupation. Wisner's deed from Snedeker for two hundred acres bears date June 23, 1714, he then being in "possession and occupation," and clearly so at a prior date, while tradition asserts that Sarah Wells was the first white woman—and a remarkable woman she was in her age and in her descendants—on the patent,* and that she came in 1712. Whatever may be the facts of the case, the record is clear that the settlement of Goshen, Warwick, and Chester was commenced simultaneously by parties sent out by the proprietors named. Soon after this John Everett and Samuel Clowes, of Jamaica, L. I., were induced to take charge of the settlement of the patent. They appear to have been land speculators, but were nevertheless the direct agents in inducing immigration and in founding prosperous towns.

Strictly in the line of this chapter, as relating to land titles, may be here enumerated the recorded sales by the proprietors to actual settlers and others, as well as to Everett and Clowes, prior to 1721. They were as follows:

1. Philip Rokeby sold his undivided twelfth part to Daniel Cromeline, John Merritt, and Elias Boudinot, June 10, 1704. Merritt sold his third to Cromeline in 1705. Boudinot sold his third to George McNish, who sold to Clowes, Feb. 5, 1714, for £150.

2. Cornelius Christianse sold to Derrick Vandenburg, Sept. 8, 1704, all his twelfth part. Vandenburg sold to Elias Boudinot, and the latter sold one-sixth of same to Everett and Clowes, July 20, 1714, for £66 13s. Boudinot's heirs subsequently sold five-sixths to Everett and Clowes for £41 13s. 4d. This tract embraced New Milford, in the present town of Warwick.

3. Hendrick Ten Eyck sold his twelfth part to Daniel Cromeline, Dec. 8, 1704. Cromeline, who also owned two-thirds of the Rokeby share, sold to Everett and Clowes, Jan. 1, 1714, the sixth part of his interest for £83 6s., excepting two tracts, one of which contained three thousand seven hundred and six acres. This tract was principally in the present town of Chester, and embraced the site on which he had made settlement and erected a stone dwelling, and to which he had given the name of "Gray Court."

4. Ann Bridges sold to John Van Horne, merchant, of New York, July 4, 1705, all the equal undivided twelfth part held by her husband, Dr. John Bridges, for the sum of £250. Van Horne was also the purchaser of a part or the whole of another share, and sold to Everett and Clowes one-sixth part of one-sixth of one-thirteenth part for £58 6s. 8d. Amity was in Bridges' parcel.

5. Daniel Honan sold to John Merritt, 1705, all his twelfth part. Margery Merritt, widow, and John Merritt, son, sold to Adrian Hoaglandt one-half, and to Anthony Rutgers one-half. Rutgers sold to Everett and Clowes one-twelfth of his half, and Anna, widow of Hoaglandt, sold to the same parties one-twelfth, the latter, April 12, 1714, for £75.

6. Derrick Vandenburg died holding his original share, and his wife Rymerich, and his son Henry, his heirs, sold the same to Elias Boudinot, Aug. 8, 1707. Boudinot sold this entire share to Clowes, Oct. 27, 1713, for £355. This parcel embraced what is called in the old deeds the "Florida tract;" the name "Florida" is still retained.

7. John Cholwell sold his twelfth part to Adrian Hoaglandt, Oct. 5, 1706, for £350. Anna Hoaglandt, his widow, sold to Everett and Clowes one-sixth of the share, and the remainder descended to Christopher Banker and Elizabeth his wife, James Renanst and Bertilje his wife, and Petrus Rutgers and Helena his wife, her heirs.

8. John Merritt held his share at the time of his death, and his heirs, Margery Merritt, widow, and John Merritt, eldest son, sold one-half to Adrian Hoaglandt. John (then a resident of New London) sold to John Everett, Feb. 25, 1714, the remaining half for £120.

9. Benjamin Aske sold to Everett and Clowes, July 20, 1714, one-sixth of his thirteenth part for £50. He subsequently sold a portion to Lawrence Decker, Feb. 28, 1719; another to Thomas Blain, May 20, 1721; and another to Thomas De Kay, Dec. 8, 1724. In all cases the land conveyed is described as part of his farm, "called Warwick," and in all cases the parties to whom the deeds were made were described as residents of the county and upon the land conveyed.

10. Lancaster Symes sold to Everett and Clowes, July 20, 1714, one-sixth of his thirteenth part for £50.

11. Peter Matthews, then living in Albany, sold all his thirteenth part to Clowes, Feb. 11, 1713, for £200.

12. Christopher Denne sold, July 20, 1714, to Clowes and Everett one-sixth of his share for £50. He also sold to Robert Brown three hundred and ten acres, Sept. 3, 1721. Elizabeth Denne sold to William Mapes, Joseph Allison, John Yelverton, Ebenezer Holly, Joseph Sears, John Green, and John Worley, the Mapes deed bearing date March 1, 1729. The remainder of her interest in the patent passed by her will to Sarah Jones, spinster, of New York, and Vincent Matthews. Sarah Jones afterwards married Thomas Brown.

13. Dr. Samuel Staats' thirteenth part descended to his children, Gertury, wife of Andries Codymus; Sarah, wife of Isaac Gouverneur; Catlyria, wife of Stevanus Van Cortlandt; Anna, wife of Philip Schuyler; Johanna White, widow; and Tryntie Staats, who sold to Clowes and Everett one-sixth of said part for £50, Sept. 2, 1720.

John Everett and Samuel Clowes, by these deeds, came into possession of one-third of the Rokeby, one-half of the Christianse, all of the Vandenburg, one-half of the Merritt, all of the Matthews, two-twelfths of the Honan, and one-sixth of each of the shares held by the other patentees, in all equaling four of the thirteen parts. Obligated thereto by the terms of the deeds to them, they laid out as early as 1714 the township of Goshen. This township plot was divided into farms of varying quantities, and roads opened and reserved. The roads ran north and south and east and west, and divided the plot into what became known as the East Division, West Division, North Division, and South Division. Everett and Clowes were also obligated to assign two hundred acres of land to a minister, whenever the owners and occupants of the plat should agree in the selection of one. It would perhaps be impossible to certainly determine who the first settlers were, the deeds on record being the only guide to dates, which may be anterior to or after settlement was made. They are:

Jan. 8, 1714, to Michael Dunning, of Jamaica, L. I.
 June 23, 1714, to Johannes Weasner, late of the Swiss contingent.

July 21, 1714, to Solomon Carpenter, of Jamaica, L. I.

July 31, 1714, to Abraham Finch, of Stamford, Conn.

July 31, 1714, to Samuel Seeley, of Stamford, Conn.

July 31, 1714, to John Holly, of Stamford, Conn.

Oct. 7, 1715, to John Yelverton, of Jamaica, L. I.

Oct. 31, 1718, to William Jackson.

April 25, 1719, to Daniel Coole.

April 15, 1720, to William Burch, of Hempstead, L. I., who sold to John Yelverton, July 16, 1723.

May 22, 1721, to Joseph Allison, of Southold, L. I.

That there were deeds which were not recorded is apparent from the names attached to one which was given to the first blacksmith. This deed is dated July 21, 1721, and recites that the proprietors had "lately caused two small lots to be laid out in the south division of the township for the encouragement of a blacksmith, which was much needed;" that "William Thompson is lately settled there," and in consideration thereof the lands were bargained and sold to him. The proprietors and resident owners appearing as grantors were:

John Everett.
 Samuel Clowes.
 John Carpenter.
 Thomas Watson.
 Hope Rhodes.
 John Holly.
 Charles Williamson.
 Solomon Carpenter.
 Michael Dunning.
 Samuel Webb.

James Jackson.
 Isaac Finch.
 John Bears.
 Samuel Seeley.
 George McNish.
 James Sands.
 John Knapp.
 John Alsop.
 Samuel Gileston.
 Cornelius Jones.

In 1722, April 17th, a deed was executed "designed as an encouragement to the first minister." The recipient was John Bradner, who had been "lately settled and established the first minister of the said precinct of Goshen." Lands "for a parsonage and other public uses," and "for a burying-ground and whereon to build the minister's house," then being erected, were also deeded. In the execution of these deeds we have in the first instance the names of the holders of lots in the patent at that time, and in the second the names of proprietors of the township. The former were:

Lancaster Symes.
 Christopher Denne.
 Benjamin Aske.
 Daniel Cromeline.
 John Van Horne.
 Anthony Rutgers.
 Michael Dunning.
 William Jackson.
 Richard Halstead.

John Everett.
 Samuel Clowes.

Isaac Finch.

The proprietors in the township were:

John Everett.
 John Gale.
 Nathaniel Higby.
 G. McNish.
 Thomas Watson.
 John Holly.
 Isaac Finch.
 John Bears.
 Samuel Seeley.
 William Jackson.
 John Knapp.
 John Alsop.

In this connection may be recapitulated facts already stated in regard to settlements on other parts of the patent. The house erected by Cromeline was completed in 1716 and occupied; that of Christopher Denne was also completed and occupied, as well as that of Benjamin Aske, at Warwick, at about the same time. William Bull, the mason and architect of Cromeline's house, married Sarah Wells, who had been sent out by Denne with the men in his employ, in 1718, and put up a cabin near Denne's (now in Hamptonburgh), on a farm given to Sarah. Johannes Weasner was certainly in the township in 1714 with his family, and it is safe to say that Lawrence Decker was in Warwick, under Aske, at as early a date. The written record cannot be successfully controverted by tradition upon any point, no matter with what attraction the tradition may be recited, or however honestly it may be believed.

The settlement of other patents may be more satisfactorily treated in connection with the towns in which they were located. As a general guide to determine the question of priority of settlement in the patents composing the northeastern and western portions of the present county, the following official lists are given. Further approximative dates may be obtained from the military rolls hereinafter quoted:

"The freeholders, inhabitants, residents, and sojourners in the county of Ulster, their real and personal estates, are rated and assessed by the Assessors (on their death) chosen for the same on the 26th day of January, 1714-5, and are to pay at the rate of one penny half-pence $\frac{1}{2}$ £ to discharge this year's payment of said county's quota, levied by an act of the Assembly, entitled an act for levying the sum of ten thousand pounds," viz.:

* The pounds of that period were only about equivalent of one dollar each of the present United States issue. Some of the parties were rich in uncleared acres of land, however.

CHAPTER III.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT—ORIGINAL COUNTY OF ORANGE—THE PRESENT COUNTY OF ORANGE—COURTS, PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ETC.

UNTIL the conquest of the province by the English in 1664, its civil government was an extension of the laws and customs of Holland, in which local government was the prerogative of towns. The English system differed from this in many respects, but in the nature of the situation in which the province came to their hands, they were compelled to combine their own with that of Holland. Without disturbing the Dutch towns of New York, Albany, Kingston, and Esopus, further than in a change of names, courts and sheriffs were introduced in the English counties by what was known as "the Duke's Laws," in 1665. In this crude condition—the sparcity of population scarcely requiring that which was more complete—the government remained until 1682, when Col. Thomas Dongan was appointed Governor of the province with instructions to organize a Council, to be composed of not exceeding ten of "the most eminent inhabitants," and to issue writs to the proper officers for the election of "a General Assembly of all the freeholders by the persons who they shall choose to represent them," in order to consult with him and his Council "what laws are fit and necessary to be made and established" for the good government of the province "and all the inhabitants thereof." On the 17th of October, 1683, the Assembly thus authorized met at Fort James in New York. It was composed of delegates from all parts of the province, and during its session of three weeks passed fourteen several acts, which were assented to by the Governor and his Council. Among these laws was one "to divide this province and dependencies into shires and counties," and one "to settle courts of justice." Twelve counties were established by the former: New York, Kings, Queens, Suffolk, Richmond, Westchester, Albany, Ulster, Dutchess, Orange, Duke's, and Cornwall, which, with the exception of Dutchess, which was placed under the care of Ulster, and Orange, which was similarly associated with New York, were to be entitled to representation in future General Assemblies. The law relating to courts established four distinct tribunals: Town Courts, for the trial of small causes, to be held each month; County Courts, or Courts of Sessions, to be held at certain times, quarterly or half yearly; a General Court of Oyer and Terminer, with original and appellate jurisdiction, to sit twice in every year in each county, and a Court of Chancery, to be the "Supreme Court of the Province," composed of the Governor and Council, with power in the Governor to depute a Chancellor in his stead, and appoint clerks and other officers. The old Court of Assizes was replaced by the Court of Oyer and Terminer. This system continued until 1691, when courts of justices of the peace were organized in every town, and one of Common Pleas for every county.

One of the leading features in the early civil divisions established by the English was the organization of precincts. Cities and towns had been established by the Dutch prior to the English occupation; a few English towns existed on Long Island, and a few town charters were subsequently granted by the Governor and Council to companies or associated colonists; but precincts were entirely different in their constitution and government, and of necessity became more numerous. Primarily, they were composed of the scattered settlements of contiguous territory, organized by the courts as court districts, and attached to some adjoining town for assessment and local government. Their boundaries were crude; their population small; their officers such as were known only to the county at large. Subsequently, as population increased, their boundaries were more clearly defined, and officers assigned to them. So numerous did these divisions ultimately become that towns were almost entirely lost sight of until after the Revolution, when the distinction, which then existed only in name, was removed.

In 1701 the Assembly, by act of October 18th, provided that the justices of the peace of the several counties, "or any five or more of them, two whereof to be a quorum," should, once in the year, at a court of general or special sessions, supervise, examine, and allow the public and necessary charge of their respective county, and of every town thereof," including the "allowance made by law to their representative or representatives." For the assessment and collection of the accounts allowed by them, they were "empowered to issue their warrant to the several towns for the election of two assessors and one collector in each town." The act further provided that the "justices at the respective general sessions" should, "once in the year, make provision for maintenance and support of the poor" of their several towns or precincts.

This law continued in force until June, 1703, when it was enacted that there should be "elected and chosen, once every year, in each town, by the freeholders and inhabitants thereof, one of their freeholders and inhabitants, to compute, ascertain, examine, oversee, and allow the contingent, public, and necessary charge of each county, and that each and every inhabitant, being a freeholder in any manor, liberty, jurisdiction, precinct, and out-plantation, shall have liberty to join his or their vote with the next adjacent town in the county, where such inhabitants shall dwell, for the choice of a supervisor." The law also provided that there should be annually chosen "in each town, ward, manor, and precinct, by the freeholders and inhabitants thereof, two assessors and one collector." The elections were to be held "on the first Tuesday in April," or on such other days as were "appointed by their charters and patents." The supervisors were required to meet annually, "at the county town in each respective county, on the first Tuesday in October," and at such other time and times as they should "judge and find necessary and convenient," and then and there "compute the public necessary contingent charges against their respective counties," together with "such other sum and sums of money" as should be "brought and exhibited to or before them," to be levied on their respective "counties by the laws of the colony." When the computation was "perfected, and the proportion of each town, manor, liberty, jurisdiction, and precinct ascertained and appointed," it was to be transmitted to the assessors, who were "required, equally, duly, and impartially, to assess and make a rate for their respective proportions," being first sworn to make such assessment equally and impartially. The assessment, when completed, was to be delivered to the collectors, who were empowered to collect and pay the same to the county treasurer, who was to be "annually chosen in each county by the supervisors."

The changes which up to this time had been made in the civil government, it will be observed, consisted in substituting courts of justices of the peace for the courts held by overseers under the law of 1665. Constables were continued in each town, and in addition the towns were authorized to elect supervisors, assessors, and collectors. Officers equivalent to the present commissioners of highways were given to the towns in 1691, by an act "impowering" the freeholders "to nominate and make choice in each of their respective towns, annually, three persons to be surveyors and orderers of the work for laying out and the amendment of the highways and fences within the bounds and limits of their respective towns." This law also gave power to the freeholders of the towns, when assembled for the election of the officers to which they were entitled, "to make, establish, constitute, and ordain such prudential orders and rules, for the better improvement of their lands in tillage, pasturage, or any other reasonable way," as the majority should deem "good and convenient."

It was under these general laws that the district of country now forming the county of Orange, as a part of the original counties from which it was taken, had its organization and early development. The act of 1683, dividing the province into shires and counties, provided: "The County of Ulster to contain the towns of Kingston, Hurley, and Marbletown, and all the villages, neighborhoods, and Christian habitations on the west side of Hudson's River, from the Murderer's Creeke, near the Highlands, to Sawyer's Creeke. The County of Orange* to beginne from the limitts or bounds of East and West Jersey, on the west side of Hudson's River; along the said river to Murderer's Creeke, or bounds of the county of Ulster; and westward into the woods as far as Delaware River." These boundaries, though crude and illustrative of the imperfect knowledge of the country which then prevailed, were destined to be substantially maintained for over one hundred years.

The organization of the towns and precincts in the original county of Orange began with that of the town of Orange in 1686. Soon after its organization the inhabitants of the adjoining patents, including Haverstraw, were attached to it for court jurisdiction and assessment. By act of Assembly, June 24, 1719,—in response to a petition of the inhabitants of Haverstraw, reciting the inconveniences of association with Orangetown,—the northern settlements were included in a precinct under the title of the Precinct of Haverstraw, thereby creating two precincts, viz.: Orangetown, with Tappan as its centre, and Haverstraw, with the "Christian patented lands of Haverstraw" as its centre. The boundaries of the latter were "from the northernmost bounds of Tappan to the northernmost bounds of Haverstraw." Its inhabitants were authorized to elect on the first Tuesday in April annually the officers common to a town, viz.: "One supervisor, one collector, two assessors, one constable, and two overseers of highways," who should be "invested with all the powers, and be obliged to perform such services and duties" as pertained to similar officers.

The settlements of Goshen, Warwick, Gray Court, etc., on the Wawayanda Patent, were given organization as the Precinct of Goshen some time about 1714, the township of Goshen becoming the political centre.† Under the general law of 1703, it was entitled to two assessors, a collector, overseers of highways, and a constable. It remained without change until 1743, when it was empowered to elect, in addition to its other officers, two constables, one of whom should be "from and out of such of the inhabitants" as had their residence in the south part of the precinct "commonly called Wawayanda," and the other from "the inhabitants to the northward, near the meeting-house commonly called the water-side meeting-house." The territory embraced in the precinct included the entire county, with the exception of the Haverstraw and Orangetown districts, and extended from the Delaware to Hudson's River.‡ By act of Assembly, Oct. 20, 1764, it was divided by "a straight line to be run, beginning at the borders or verge of the county of Ulster, near the new dwelling-house of John Manno, thence on a course which will leave the house of Barnabas Horton, Jr., ten chains to the westward to the most extreme parts of said precinct;§ all the lands lying to the west of said line to be Goshen Precinct, and all eastward to be called New Cornwall Precinct. These two precincts, with the precincts of Haverstraw and Orangetown, constituted the political divisions of the county until after the Revolution. Subsequently, and prior to 1797-98, the following changes were made: The title of precinct was changed to that of town in the cases of Orangetown, Haverstraw, Goshen, and New Cornwall, in 1788,|| at which time the towns of Warwick and Minisink were erected from Goshen; from Haverstraw the towns of Clarkstown and Ramapo were erected in 1791; New Corn-

* Goshen was founded as a township, precisely as was Orangetown, and was similarly included in the subsequent precinct organization with other settlements. It should be observed, however, that in these and other cases of prior township organizations the adjoining settlements were the precincts of the town to which they were attached.

† That portion of the precinct lying west of the Minisink Mountains was subjected to several political changes: By act of Oct. 18, 1701, "for the more regular proceedings in election of Representatives," the inhabitants of "Wagacheneck and Great and Little Minisink" were "empowered to give their votes in the county of Ulster." By act of Nov. 12, 1709, "to determine, settle, and ascertain the bounds and limits of the county of Orange," the act of Oct. 18, 1701, was repealed so far as it related to the settlements named, which were in effect declared to be a part of Orange County. By subsequent survey Maghaghkemek (Cuddebackville) was found to be north of the line of Orange, and hence passed to the jurisdiction of Ulster, appearing on the tax-roll as the "Neighborhood of Maghaghkemek." It remained in this political relation until 1799, when the town of Deepark was erected as one of the consequences of the reorganization of Orange County, of which it became part. The other settlements were included (after 1709) in the precinct of Goshen; subsequently that portion lying north of the New Jersey line became part of the town of Minisink (1788), from which they were taken (1798) and included in the boundaries of Deepark. It may be added that a portion of the district, embracing what subsequently fell to New Jersey, appears to have had organization as the precinct of Minisink, and as such, through its assessors, raised its quota of the tax for the erection of the court-house at Goshen in 1739. Its constitution as a precinct was no doubt by order of the court; it has no record of that character in the acts of the General Assembly.

‡ This line is said to have been parallel with the west line of the present town of Monroe.

|| The erection of towns at this date, wherever situated in the State, was under a general law passed March 7, 1788, entitled "An act for dividing the counties of this State into towns."

wall changed its title to Cornwall in 1797. These changes gave to the county, in 1798, the towns of Orangetown, Haverstraw, Clarkstown, Ramapo, Goshen, Warwick, Minisink, and Cornwall.

From this survey of the original county of Orange we pass to notice the civil divisions of Ulster County so far as they were embraced in the district which we are considering. Immediately north of Murderer's Creek there was no civil organization until the advent of the Palatines in 1709,* when the precinct of the Highlands was erected and attached to New Paltz. The boundaries of the precinct are not stated, but the order is understood to have applied more especially to the territory extending from New Paltz to Murderer's Creek, in which district the Palatines at Quassaick were then the principal settlers. At the same time or soon after, the constitution of the Precinct of the Highlands, and evidently by order of the court, the Precinct of Maghaghkemek,† and the Precinct of Shawangunk were constituted, the latter attached to New Paltz. As in the case of the Precinct of the Highlands, no boundaries are given; but from deeds, tax-rolls, and other papers of record, it is clear that the present towns of Montgomery, Crawford, and Wallkill were embraced in the limits of this precinct. Under this limited organization the territory which these precincts covered remained until 1743, when, by act of Dec. 17, three full precincts, having all the officers of towns and exercising all their duties, were established by act of the Assembly. These precincts were to be known and called "by the name of the Wallkill Precinct, Shawangunk Precinct, and Highland Precinct." The first, the Precinct of Wallkill, was bounded on the north "by the north bounds of ten thousand acres of land granted to Jeremiah Schuyler and others, by the south bounds of four thousand acres of land granted to Gerardus Beekman and others, by the north bounds of three thousand acres of land granted to Henry Wileman and others, by the east bounds of three thousand acres of land granted to John Johnson, and by the east bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Cadwallader Colden;" on the south "by the north bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Patrick Hume, by the north and west bounds of the land granted to Cornelius Low and others, and by the northwest and southwest bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Phineas McIntosh, and by the line dividing the counties of Orange and Ulster to Shawangunk Mountains." In more general terms, the district was defined as "bounded westerly by the Shawangunk Mountains as they run from the county of Orange to a creek or river called the Plattekill, then along the Plattekill to Shawangunk River, then all along Shawangunk River to the north bounds of the ten thousand acres granted to Jeremiah Schuyler aforesaid." The freeholders were required to "meet at the house of Matties Millspaugh‡ on the first Tuesday of April yearly," or at such other place as should be selected by the inhabitants after the first meeting, and elect one supervisor, two assessors, a collector, a constable, and an overseer of the poor. One of the assessors was to be located on the west side of the Wallkill, "and because the said Wallkill River, which crosses the said precinct, is sometimes dangerous to pass," one collector and one constable were added to the officers of the precinct "for that part thereof which lieth to the westward of said river."

The second, the Precinct of Shawangunk, was bounded on the west "by the foot of Shawangunk Mountains; on the south and west by the precinct of Wallkill; on the east by the line or bounds of three thousand five hundred acres granted to Rip Van Dam and others, by the east bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Barbarie, and by the east bounds or line of two thousand acres of land granted to Huddleston; and on the north by the north bounds or line of the said two thousand acres granted to Huddleston, by the north bounds of two thousand acres granted to Peter Matthews and others;" on the south by a line "crossing the said Wallkill River to the mouth of Shawangunk River, and running thence southwesterly all along the northwest side of said Shawangunk River to the southwest corner of the land granted to Col. Jacob Rutzen;" and on the west by the "westerly bounds or line of said land granted to Rutzen to a salt pond, called 'the great salt pond,' and from thence upon a west line to the foot of Shawangunk Mountains aforesaid." The first precinct meeting was to be held at the house of Benjamin Smedes, Jr., at which a supervisor, two assessors, and the usual precinct officers were to be chosen, and the place of subsequent meetings designated.

The Precinct of the Highlands embraced the patents lying along the Hudson from Murderer's Creek to New Paltz, and was more particularly described as "bounded on the east by Hudson's River; on the south by the line dividing the counties of Ulster and Orange; on the west by the precincts of Wallkill and Shawangunk and the neighborhoods annexed to the New Paltz,§ and on the north by the bounds or line

* So much of the district as was embraced in the Evans Patent was, by the terms of that instrument, erected into the "Manor and Lordship of Fletcherdon," with the usual authority conferred in manorial grants, but, in the absence of other population than that included in the MacGregorie settlement, it is not probable that even the civil jurisdiction of a manorial court was established during the few years the grant was continued.

† The correctness of this statement having been questioned, we quote from the act of Dec. 17, 1743: "And whereas Shawangunk, Highlands, and Maghaghkemek have formerly been deemed and esteemed three precincts, and have been assessed by their own assessors," etc. Maghaghkemek was subsequently included in the Precinct of Mamakating.

‡ Millspaugh was a very early settler in the present town of Montgomery. He married the widow of Johannes Mingus, who erected the first grist-mill in the town (1721-22), and through this marriage obtained the Mingus mill and farm.

§ The "neighborhoods annexed to New Paltz" were "Guilford and several other patents, from the south bounds of New Paltz to the north bounds of Shawangunk precinct, and from the foot of the high mountains eastward to the east line of the patent granted to Thomas Garland, of New Paltz town." The precinct meetings were to be held "at the house of John Humphrey, Jr.," who resided in the present town of New Windsor, "on the first Tuesday of April annually," for the election of precinct officers.

The same act gave primary constitution to the Precinct of Mamakating, in which was included "all the land to the southward of the town of Rochester as far as the county of Ulster extends, and to the westward of the precincts of Wallkill and Shawangunk as far as the county extends." The first precinct meeting was to be held at the dwelling-house of Samuel Swartwout, at which one constable, two assessors, two overseers of the poor, and two surveyors of highways were to be elected. In the election of supervisor the freeholders were associated with the town of Rochester. Under the law of 1798, the northern part of the territory included in the then town of Deerpark was taken from this precinct.

The Precinct of the Highlands continued in existence until 1762, when it was divided into the Precincts of Newburgh and New Windsor, "by a line beginning at the mouth of Quassaick Creek, and running thence along the south bounds of a tract of land commonly called the German Patent to another tract granted to Alexander Baird, and then along the southerly bounds of the said last mentioned tract to the Wallkill Precinct; all the lands heretofore comprehended within the said Highland Precinct lying to the southward of the aforesaid dividing line to be called by the name of New Windsor Precinct, and all the lands heretofore comprehended within the said Highland Precinct lying to the northward of the said line to be called by the name of Newburgh Precinct." The latter was divided in 1772 by a line running along the north bounds of the Harrison, Bradley, Wallace, Kip and Cruger, and Jamison Patents, to the Precinct of Shawangunk, "all the land lying to the northward of said line to be called and known by the name of New Marlborough Precinct, and all the land south of said line to continue to be called Newburgh Precinct."

The same law divided the Precinct of Wallkill by a line beginning at the southwest corner of the McIntosh Patent and the southeast corner of McKnight's, "thence along the southwest bounds of Thomas Noxon, the southwest bounds of Harrison and Company, the southwest bounds of Philip Schuyler, to the Pakadassinck River or Shawangunk Kill;" all northeast of this line "to be called the Precinct of Hanover, and all the land southwest of said line, heretofore comprehended in the Precinct of Wallkill, to continue to be called the Precinct of Wallkill."

The precincts named carried with them their design-and by the south and east by the land granted to Hugh Freer and others, and to the eastward by an east line from the said Hugh Freer's bounds to the bounds or line of New Paltz." The freeholders were to vote with the freeholders of New Paltz, and in all respects to be considered a part of that town.

native titles in their organization as towns under the act of 1788, with the exception of Hanover, whose inhabitants, for the purpose of attesting their detestation of the English government, as well as their appreciation of the heroic services of Gen. Richard Montgomery, obtained consent from the Provincial Convention of the State in 1782 to change the precinct name to Montgomery.* By the act of 1788 they were severally erected as the towns of Newburgh, New Windsor, New Marlborough, Shawangunk, Montgomery, and Wallkill.

Incident to the history of the original county, it is proper to remark, in this connection, that, although organized in 1683, it was only a county in name,—a district in the wilderness with boundaries upon paper. It was not until nearly twenty years later that it became a county de facto. True, it was assigned a sheriff and a clerk, and had a jail, but it was attached to New York in other respects in the character of a borough. Governor Leisler, in his ill-starred rebellion, attempted to use it (1691) by appointing as one of his Council William Lawrence, of New York, as representing Orange, and when it was given representation in the Assembly (1699), it was not as a right due to population, but to serve another purpose.

Aside from their town and precinct officers and representatives in the Assembly, the people had no voice in the selection of their rulers. The sheriffs held the elections for representatives, and the choice was determined by the viva voce† vote of the freeholders, who were required to be twenty-one years of age, and to be possessed of "land or tenements improved to the value of forty pounds free from all incumbrances." Freeholders having property in more than one county could vote in as many counties as they had property liable to taxation, and for their accommodation the elections were so ordered that opportunity was given them to cast the full number of votes to which they were entitled. It could scarcely be called a representative system, so far as representative systems are understood to express the popular will; it was more properly a property representation, under which power was given to a few persons. The districts were large; the population was scattered; the elections were held at the "county towns;" the polls were kept open several days to enable all to vote who might wish to do so. Where the conveniences existed for transit from point to point, as they did along the Hudson, a freeholder residing in New York was enabled to vote in half a dozen counties if holding property therein, while those occupying more inland locations were in most cases necessarily deprived of a voice in elections.

Until 1699 the freeholders of the county were asso-

* This is the fact, as it appears from the proceedings of a public meeting held in the precinct to petition for the change. The name selected, however, had been applied to a township plot, now the village, or part of the village, of Montgomery, by Gen. James Clinton, several years before the Revolution, as appears by deeds of record conveying township lots.

† Until after the adoption of the constitution of 1777. Voting by ballot was regarded by the framers of that instrument as an experiment.

ciated with those of New York in the selection of representatives, but were not obliged to visit New York in order to give their votes. The sheriff of the county held the election at Orangetown, and made return to the sheriff of New York, who declared the result. In 1699 the county was given representation in the Assembly. At this and subsequent elections until 1749, the poll was held exclusively at Orangetown, and those who wished to vote were compelled to visit that place. This was in part remedied by the law of 1748, by which it was provided, "for the time to come, all elections for representatives" should be opened "either at the court-house or some convenient place in Orangetown, or at the court-house or some convenient place in Goshen," and after being held for a certain time at the place where first opened, should be adjourned "to the other court-house or place of election, so that all the freeholders may, if they please, be polled at such elections."*

That the system was corrupt, especially in the earlier years of its administration, is a fact revealed on every page of the history of that period. Frauds upon the revenue pervaded all departments of the public service; piratical expeditions, including that of the notorious Capt. Kidd, were fitted out by men high in public affairs; land-grants were obtained for considerations paid to the Governor; there was nothing, apparently, that had money in it that was not prospered by official connivance. In one instance only is it written that the Governor's Council "was ashamed to consent" to one of his grants, and that not because of its magnitude, but that it proposed to give his footman a lease for "a little island called Nutten Island," which had hitherto been "convenient for grazing a few coach-horses and cows for the Governor's family."† Sectarism was the cloak for all kinds of peculation; to write against another at one time that he was a Protestant, or at another that he was "a Popish tailor," or similar epithet, was the stepping-stone to official promotion. Indeed, it would seem that more modern political partisans have not learned much that is new, or that many who have since held official station have special claim to originality in methods of abusing public trusts.

It was when this era of corruption was at its height that the people of Orange County appear distinctly in the politics of the province. Governor Bellomont, who succeeded Governor Fletcher in 1698, was clothed with power to correct the abuses which had grown up, for which purpose he was given "a negative voice in the making and passing of all laws, statutes, and ordinances, and could "adjourn, prorogue, and dissolve the Assembly" whenever he deemed it necessary.‡ Issuing a warrant for the election of a new Assembly, he cautioned the sheriffs, by whom it was to be held, against "undue elections and returns;" but the latter were themselves creatures of the corrupt combination which had been formed, or, as the record states, "were for the most part men of mean rank," who "had been continued in their places from year to year by Governor Fletcher," and who, "instead of complying" with their instructions, "carried themselves most unfairly, in so much that one of them made return for a county (viz., Orange County), in which he suffered not any one freeholder to vote."§ Other districts shared in the "corruption of the franchise" to such an extent that when the Assembly convened, eleven of the nineteen members of which it was composed, it is said, "sat by controverted elections," and, having the majority, "established themselves and brought all things into the greatest confusion."

Finding that nothing could be done with such a body of men, Bellomont dissolved the Assembly and ordered a new election, taking care that Governor Fletcher's sheriffs were retired from the management. The result was satisfactory to him, but not to those who were defeated, who complained to the king that "the election was appointed to be upon the same day in all places except the two most remote counties, whereby the best freeholders, who had estates in several counties, were deprived of giving their votes at several elections; that "the sheriffs performed the business they were appointed for by admitting some for freeholders who were not so, and rejecting others who were really so, as they voted for or against their party, and by nominating and appointing inspectors of the poll who, upon any complaint of unfair dealing, gave this general answer: 'If you are aggrieved complain to my lord Bellomont, and the same practice in all places gives just reason to believe the orders for it came from his excellency.'

"To secure a majority of such men as he desired," continues this remonstrance, "his lordship, without any instruction from England, added two to the former number, viz.: one more to be chosen for the city and county of Albany, and one for the county of Orange, which last is by act of Assembly made a part of the county of New York, and has not twenty inhabitants freeholders in it, and never before had a distinct representation in Assembly. By this means one Abraham Gouverneur, a Dutchman,—so indigent as never to be assessed in the public taxes, and who, as is reasonably to be supposed, had a deed of some land made to him of purpose to qualify him for it, because he never had any land before,—was chosen an Assemblyman, and is since made Speaker of the House of Representatives. This fellow was formerly convicted of murder and pardoned,|| and soon after the Revolution publicly declared that Jacob Leisler had carried the government of New York by the sword, and had the same right to it as King William had to the crown, having conquered the kingdom of England. At the meeting of the Assembly it appeared of the twenty-one representatives there were but seven Englishmen, the remainder being all Dutch and of the meanest sort, half of whom do not understand English, which can conduce little to the honor of the English interest there.*

|| Gouverneur was attached to the administration of Governor Leisler, and was tried and condemned, with others, for his participation in the resistance to Governor Sloughter, during which several of the king's troops were killed, including Capt. MacGregorie. He was subsequently pardoned by the king. It is to these facts the text refers.

* The old story of carrying the ballot-box around the country originated in this. Unfortunately for the story, there was no ballot-box, the vote of the freeholders being simply registered.

Notwithstanding this bitter complaint, the Assembly instituted some important reforms. Grants of large tracts of lands were set aside, the elections for representatives were regulated, and provision made for the severe punishment of frauds upon the revenue. Had Bellomont lived, perhaps more general reforms would have been secured; but his death, in 1701, was followed, after a short administration under the Council, by the appointment of Lord Cornbury, who not only restored the unscrupulous officials that had been removed by Bellomont, but earned for himself the "unenviable distinction of being the worst of all the Governors under the English crown." "Rapacious without a parallel, he hesitated not," says one of his biographers, "to apply the public money to his own private purposes; and though notoriously vicious, yet he was so intolerant that he sought to establish the Episcopacy at all hazards, imprisoning and prohibiting ministers of other denominations from exercising their functions without his special license. He was, moreover, as destitute of gratitude as of courtesy, injuring those most from whom he had received the greatest benefits. His manners were as ignoble and undignified as his conduct was base, and when this hopeful scion of royalty wandered about the streets clothed as a woman (which was a common practice with him), the people felt that he had taken Caligula for a model."

But a better state of affairs was born of the excesses which Cornbury committed. While at Chear Hall, his country-seat in Haverstraw, he surrounded himself with such men as Daniel Honan, the freeholders looked upon his extravagance with alarm, and, through the Assembly, refused the grants of money which he asked. The rights of the people with regard to taxation, to courts of law, to officers of the crown, were speedily asserted and increased in strength with the political education of the people. When Cornbury was succeeded by Lovelace (1709), the Assembly began the contest that was never to cease but with independence. The crown demanded a permanent revenue, without appropriation; the Assembly would only grant an annual revenue and appropriate it specifically. The power lodged in the Governor to dissolve the Assembly was invoked in vain; the people were mainly of one mind that they had an "inherent right" to legislation, springing "not from any commission or grant from the crown, but from the free choice and election of the people, who ought not, nor justly can, be divested of their property without their consent." In all the long struggle which followed and which culminated in the war for independence, the representatives of original Orange were found in the interest of freedom, and gave to the final issue its most consistent advocates, its most devoted adherents.

Practically, the organization of the county began in 1703, when the first session of the court and the first meeting of justices acting as a board of supervisors was held.† Such local administration as it had, aside from the officers of its precincts, may be briefly stated. Minnie Johannes was its first sheriff, 1685; Floris Willemsse Crom in 1690, Stanley Handcock in 1694, John Patersen in 1699, and Theunis Toleman in 1701. The latter was not held in very high esteem by Governor Cornbury, who apparently regarded the ability of a man to write his own name as a qualification. Dirck Storm was the county clerk, or clerk of the court, in 1691, and William Huddleston in 1703. Judges of the Common Pleas came in in 1701, William Merritt being the first judge. The first session of the court was held at Orangetown, April 28, 1703; present, William Merritt and John Merritt, judges. The first recorded sessions of justices of the peace, acting as a board of supervisors, was held April 27, 1703; present, William Merritt, John Merritt, Cornelius Cuyper, Tunis Van Houton, Thomas Burroughs, Michael Hawdon, justices; John Perry, sheriff; William Huddleston, clerk; and Conrad Hauson, constable. From this time the record is continuous.

Many franchises were dependent upon population. Of this character were surrogate's courts. The first law of the province relating to estates gave to courts of Common Pleas power to take proof of wills and grant letters of administration in remote counties. Other counties, including Orange and Ulster, were required to transact such business in New York. This was changed by act of Nov. 24, 1750, which relates that whereas, at the time of the enactment of the law providing that in remote counties courts of Common Pleas should be authorized to take the examination of witnesses to any will, on oath, and to grant letters of administration, the "county of Orange was not considered and esteemed one of the remote counties," but that since the passage of the said act "the northwest parts of the said county, being nearly one hundred miles distance from the city of New York," had "increased greatly in number of inhabitants, as well by families removed to those parts as otherwise," who were laboring under "the like inconveniences as those of said remote counties;" that therefore the judges and justices of the said Court of Common Pleas, and the clerk of the said county, be vested with authority to take such examinations and issue such letters of administration. This arrangement was continued until 1754, when William Finn was appointed surrogate and a Surrogate's Court established.

The judicial history of the county properly begins with the Court of Common Pleas (1691), the first session of which was held at Orangetown, April 28, 1703. Prior to that time, and for several years subsequent, in some cases, as has been already stated, its primary settlements were attached to New York or were included in the county of Ulster. The Court of Common Pleas was continued until 1847, when it gave place to the present County Court. The Supreme Court (also established in 1691) held circuits in the county after 1703. Its bench was composed of the best legal talent of the province and of the State. Its circuits were succeeded by the Circuit Courts, established by the constitution of 1821, and the latter by the judicial system of 1846, when a new Supreme Court was organized having general jurisdiction of law and equity, and holding at least two terms annually of the Circuit Court and Court of Oyer and Terminer in each county. Surrogate's Courts have been held in the county since 1754. The original county was divided into two court districts in 1727, when courts were held at Orangetown and at Goshen alternately, the former being the shire-town. A similar division was made in the present county in 1798, when Goshen was established as the shire-town, and court terms alternated with Newburgh. This division is still preserved, and is the only practical surviving link between the past and the present, but without other use than to serve as a reminder of the wilderness era, with its log court-houses, dreary forest roads, pioneer jurors and pioneer justice, and of the changes in the modes of transit, which now render what is vulgarly called "half-shire towns" unnecessary.

The changes which had been made from time to time in the precinct organizations of the district, which have been already stated, were the outgrowth of increasing population and the necessary convenience of local administration. But their subdivision, especially after the war of the Revolution, did not entirely meet the emergencies which the rapid increase of population demanded. The people of Newburgh and the neighboring southern towns of Ulster County were required to transact their county business at Kingston, while those of Cornwall and the northeastern part of Orange were compelled to attend courts and enter their records at Orangetown. In either case the county-seat was thirty miles or more distant, and in precisely opposite directions, while the facilities for communication, for a large portion of the time, were most exceptionable. The inhabitants of the western part of Orange were better accommodated, Goshen being made a half-shire district; still, their records were kept at Orangetown, and a considerable portion of their court business was necessarily transacted there. To inaugurate the correction of these inconveniences a convention of delegates from the several towns interested was held at Ward's Bridge* on the 6th of April, 1793, but without other result than the agitation of the question, and the half-expressed willingness of the delegates from Goshen to a union of the northern towns of Orange and the southern towns of Ulster in a new county organization, with courts alternately at Newburgh and Goshen. A second convention was held at the house of John Decker, at Otterkill, in February, 1794, with no better result, the delegates from Newburgh being instructed to decline "any union at all" unless it should be agreed that a court-house be erected and courts held at Newburgh and Goshen alternately,† a proposition which the Goshen delegates were not fully disposed to concede.

Here the matter rested until 1797, when a third convention assembled, similarly composed, at Kerr's hotel, in Little Britain. At this convention, Gen. Wilkin and Gen. Hopkins, from Orange, and Daniel Niven and Isaac Belknap, Sr., from Ulster, appointed a committee to report terms upon which a union should be formed, agreed to a stipulation that the courts should be held at Newburgh and Goshen alternately, and the convention ratified it. The subject came before the Legislature in the winter of 1797-98. Two bills were presented,—one entitled "An Act for Dividing the County of Orange," the other, "An Act for Altering the Bounds of the Counties of Orange and Ulster." The first was passed on the 23d of February, and enacted "That all that tract of land in the county of Orange, lying northwest of a line beginning at the mouth of Poplopen's Kill, on Hudson's River, and running from thence to the southeastermost corner of the farm of Stephen Sloat, and then along the south bounds of his farm to the southwest corner thereof, and then on the same course to the bounds of the State of New Jersey,‡ shall be and hereby is erected into a separate county, and shall be called and known by the name of Orange;" and "That all that part of the said county of Orange lying southward of the above described line shall be erected into a separate county, and shall be called and known by the name of Rockland." The act also made provision for holding courts, fixed the number of members of Assembly, etc. The second act was passed on the 5th of April following. It enacted "That the towns of New Windsor, Newburgh, Wallkill, Montgomery, and Deerpark, now in the county of Ulster, shall be and hereby are annexed to the county of Orange," and made provision for holding courts alternately at Newburgh and Goshen, the latter being the county-seat.

With these enactments the records of the original county were closed, and from the heart of the patents and precincts covering the district was erected the present county, bearing, under the title of Orange, the colonial and Revolutionary history of the territory which it embraced, the most populous* and fertile of the lands of the original district, and more than two-thirds of its wealth,—elements which gave to it immediate prominence in State and national politics, and which, under subsequent and progressive development, have maintained its rank among the first counties of the State. The boundary lines of the new county were definitely fixed by the general law of April 3, 1801, entitled "An Act to divide this State into Counties," as follows: "The county of Orange to contain all that part of this State bounded easterly by the middle of Hudson's River, southerly by the said county of Rockland and the division line between this State and the State of New Jersey, westerly by the river Mongaap† and the division line between this State and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and northerly by a line drawn from a point in the middle of said Hudson's River opposite the northeast corner of a tract of land granted to Francis Harrison and Company, called the five-thousand-acre tract, to the said northeast corner, and running from thence westerly along the north bounds of the said tract and the north bounds of another tract granted to the said Francis Harrison to the tract of land commonly called Wallace's tract, then along the lines of the same northerly and westerly to the northeasterly bounds of a tract of land granted to Jacobus Kip, John Cruger, and others, commonly called Kip and Cruger's tract, then westerly along the northeasterly and northerly bounds thereof, and then westerly to the northeast corner of a tract of three thousand acres granted to Rip Van Dam and others, thence southerly along the same to the northeast corner of a tract of three thousand acres granted to Henry Wileman, and running thence along the north bounds thereof to the Paltz River, commonly called the Wallkill, then southerly up the said river to the southeast corner of a tract of four thousand acres of land granted to Gerardus Beekman and others, then westerly and northerly along the southerly and westerly bounds thereof to the northeast corner thereof, and then northwesterly along the north bounds of the land granted to Jeremiah Schuyler and Company to the Shawangunk Kill, thence southerly along said kill to the north part of the farm now or late in the occupation of Joseph Wood, Jr., thence west to the river Mongaap. By act of the 7th of April of the same year definite boundary lines were given to the towns composing the newly-constructed county, namely: Blooming-Grove, Chesekook, Cornwall, Deerpark, Goshen, Minisink, Montgomery, New Windsor, Newburgh, Wallkill, and Warwick.‡

The first buildings of the original county were erected at Orangetown some time about 1703. At the first court of sessions held by justices of the peace, April 5, 1703, an examination of the "common goal of the county" was ordered and directions given to complete the same. By act of the Assembly, Dec. 16, 1737, "the justices of the peace of that part of Orange County lying to the northward of the Highlands" were "authorized to build a court-house and goal for the said county at Goshen."§ This building was completed under act of Nov. 3, 1740, by which one hundred pounds were authorized to be raised for the purpose on the portion of the county already named. It was a structure of wood and stone; was repaired in 1754, and was torn down in 1775 or 1776,|| a new stone court-house having been erected. The latter was on the site now occupied by the office of the county clerk in Goshen. Its erection was provided for under an act of the Assembly, March 12, 1773, by which one thousand pounds were raised for the purpose on the precincts of Goshen and Cornwall. Four hundred pounds additional were raised in 1774 to finish it, and prisoners were removed to it under act of April 1, 1775. Meanwhile the old court-house at Orangetown was replaced by a new structure in 1704, the

The census of 1800, immediately following the erection of the new county, gave its population as 29,368, and that of the towns not included as 14,807,—showing the population of the district at that time to be 44,175.

† Originally known as the Minigwing. Mongaap is presumed to be Dutch. It is entered on Southier's map, "Mangawping." While the old county line ran to the Delaware River, the new line stopped at the Mongaap; it was also farther north than the old line.

‡ From the territory embraced in the towns named the following additional towns were erected: Chester, 1845, from Goshen, Warwick, Blooming-Grove, and Monroe; Crawford, 1823, from Montgomery; Greenville, 1853, from Minisink; Hamptonburgh, 1830, from Goshen; Blooming-Grove, Montgomery, New Windsor, and Wallkill; Mount Hope, 1833, from Wallkill, Minisink, and Deerpark; Wawayanda, 1849, from Minisink; Highlands, from Cornwall, 1872; the city of Newburgh, 1866, from Newburgh. The county now embraces eighteen towns, one city, and six incorporated villages.

expense being borne by the "southern part of the county." It was subsequently destroyed by fire.

The court-house and jail erected at Goshen under the act of March 12, 1773, came into the present county on its reorganization under the act of 1795, and with its history, and that of other public buildings erected since that time, we are more immediately interested than in those of the original county. The court-house of 1773 stood on the site now occupied by the office of the county clerk, the well on the west side of the latter building having stood about ten feet from the rear of the centre of the court-house. There were two periods in its architecture. As originally constructed it was two stories high; its first floor contained a hall in the centre, with sheriff's office and dwelling-rooms on the west, a dungeon on the southeast, and a staircase on the northeast. The court-room was at the west end of the second floor, the judges' bench facing the entrance; on the southeast were cells for minor offenders. The building was plain, and without belfry; its only ornamental features were two windows larger than the others and arched, one over the front door on the north side, its mate directly opposite on the south side, and the date "1773" worked conspicuously in brick on the east wall in lieu of the British crown-stone which had been obtained for the place, but which Gabriel Wisner demolished with a hammer.* Here were confined during the Revolution political offenders or Tories, and prisoners of all grades; among others Joshua Hett Smith, who was arrested for complicity in the treason of Arnold, and who presents in his narrative an inside view of the prison at that time. He writes: "The jail was filled with those who professed to be the king's friends: Tories, and those who were prisoners of war; felons, and characters of all colors and descriptions. I was challenged to know if I had any hand in the business of aiding the Tory prisoners to effect their escape from the dungeon. These were a number of persons who were taken in arms while going to join the king's troops in Canada; they were residents of western settlements where, the country being thinly inhabited, they had no jails, or at least none that were large and strong enough to contain the number of persons who were captured, and who were therefore brought to this place for greater security. Among them were some of the most daring and hardy people, belonging to Col. Brant and Butler's corps of whites and Indians. Fifty of these were crowded in a small cell, which had a window grated with strong bars of iron, and a sentinel to watch it.† Notwithstanding his vigilance, however, some implements were conveyed to the prisoners, who, in the night, by gentle degrees, picked away the mortar from the heavy foundation walls, and in the course of one night made an aperture large enough to admit a man of almost any size to pass through, which they all did and effected their escape. Fortunately a few days after, several persons came to see me, as well on business as from friendship, and they having interest with the deputy sheriff, persuaded him to suffer me to come out of my place of confinement, and sit with them in the open court-room." As evening approached, he took occasion to ask to visit his room a moment; but instead of doing so, "when I came near the door of my prison, I suddenly turned, and from a wink of my servant went down a staircase that was at the side of it, and without delay made to the outer door of the jail, which not being bolted, I went out."

The building was changed by the addition of a third story, cupola and bell, about the commencement of the present century. On the new floor was a large or main jail-room at the southeast corner, and adjoining it on the northeast was a dungeon with one grated window so arranged that it could be completely darkened. Immediately west of these was a large hall separating the rooms on the east side from a jail-room on the west and three other rooms, one occupied by the county clerk and the surrogate, the others by a jailer, and used as occasion required for prisoners. The arrangement of the court-room was changed, the bench being placed on the northerly side, with the prisoners' dock on the right, and seats for jurors on both left and right. The building had no basement. When prisoners died in it who were confined for debt, they were buried under the floor; or, if on the limits, in the prison-yard.‡ The death penalty was inflicted publicly, outside the court-house walls.§ The building was without special architecture. Its length exceeded its depth; its walls were stone; its roof was hipped; its ceilings quite high for a structure of that period. Its little bell now calls the firemen of Goshen to their duties; the old stones in its walls are incorporated in the walls of the present jail; its historical associations embrace all that is now regarded as barbarous in the old judicial system.

The court-houses now in use at Newburgh and Goshen were erected by the present county in 1842, and were the result of a compromise on the question of erecting a new county, which had been agitated at

‡ Among those who were buried under the floor of the building was Major Antill, an Englishman of high social rank, who had been imprisoned for debt. Under the law, the body was held until the debt was paid. In 1875 the remains of several persons who had been buried in the yard were exhumed, in digging a trench, and removed elsewhere, gaining their final release from the old "limits" through the mercy of a laborer's shovel. The remains were not identified.

§ Claudius Smith was executed a few rods in the rear of the court-house, at about the point now formed by the southwest angle of the Presbyterian church grounds. Teed and Dunning were executed in a field just out of town, a mile or so south of the court-house, near what is known as Stewart's woods. Peter Crine was hanged in the court-room, and his execution was the first in Orange County under the statute decreeing that capital punishment should be more privately administered different periods* by the people of Newburgh and the northeastern towns. Their erection was inaugurated in 1839 by an application to the Legislature, on the part of the board of supervisors, for authority to build a new court-house at Goshen. This proposition was opposed by Newburgh, and the passage of the act defeated. In December following the supervisors at an extra session (December 7th) adopted, by a vote of ten to four, a resolution to apply to the Legislature for power to levy a tax of thirty thousand dollars on the county for the building of a court-house and jail at Goshen and a court-house and cells at Newburgh,—seventeen thousand dollars to be expended in the former and thirteen thousand dollars in the latter town. The act applied for was passed by the Legislature in April, 1841, and the erection of the buildings begun soon after. In their external appearance they are alike, and were from plans furnished by T. M. Niven, architect. The basement of that at Newburgh is occupied in part by cells, which are not necessary at Goshen, the county jail being a separate building at that place. The site of the Newburgh building was enlarged to an open square by private subscriptions of citizens.

* The tradition is that a controversy arose in regard to the place where the stone should be fixed. Wisner, who was a justice of the peace, asked that it be handed to him and he would place it where no one would object. Holding the stone in the wall, as if to adjust it, he suddenly struck it with a sledge and broke it in fragments. He was subsequently killed in the battle of Minisink.

Originally the county clerk and the surrogate had their offices at their dwellings; subsequently in the reconstructed court-house. At a later period a clerk's and surrogate's office was erected on the west side of the site now occupied by the court-house at Goshen. It was a small building of brick, and was moved a short distance south in 1842, but in moving its walls were cracked, which gave rise to the necessity for the erection of the present clerk's office, which was built in 1851 and occupied in the fall of that year.† It is a brick structure of one story, fireproof, and was occupied for some years by the clerk and the surrogate. At the annual session of the supervisors in 1873, the erection of a building for the use of the surrogate and the supervisors was authorized, from plans submitted by Cornelius Ackerman, architect, and C. M. Thompson and J. H. Vail, appointed as building committee. The contract was awarded to Thomas Dobbin, of Newburgh, and the building completed in the summer of 1874, at a cost of seven thousand four hundred and seven dollars and eighty-five cents. The structure is of brick, two stories high, and presumed to be fireproof.

The support of the poor of the county and of its several towns, with the exception of the town and

* The first effort for a new county was made in 1822, when it was proposed to give it the name of "Jackson;" the second in 1832, when "Newburgh" was fixed upon as the name. The third effort was made in 1858,—the new county to be called "Highland." The two former were predicated upon the refusal of the western towns to consent to the erection of a court-house at Newburgh.

† The resolution for its construction was introduced in the board of supervisors in the fall of 1850, by R. M. Vail. The contract was awarded to Francis Boyd, of Newburgh, architect. The building committee was composed of R. M. Vail, of Goshen; James R. Dickson, of Newburgh; and Daniel Fullerton, of Wawayanda. The cost of the building and furniture was six thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

city of Newburgh,‡ is provided for by a county house and farm situated about four miles south of the village of Goshen, on the road leading to Florida. In the early years of the settlement of the county, this support devolved, under the law of 1701, upon the several towns and precincts. The relief provided was of two kinds: temporary or special assistance to the poor, and absolute support where the latter was necessary. In most cases those of the latter class were given out to board with the person who, at the annual town-meeting, should propose the lowest rate of compensation; although in some cases tenements were rented for families. Newburgh and Monroe purchased lands and erected town poor-houses, but they were the exception.§ As population increased and the number of paupers became greater, the distinction between town and county poor was established,—the latter being provided for by general tax upon the county; and the former, which was administered in the form of temporary relief, by tax upon the town in which it was afforded. Various methods were from time to time considered for administering the support required for permanent paupers, resulting ultimately in the passage by the Legislature (Nov. 27, 1824) of an act to provide for the establishment of county houses for both town and county poor. This act was amended (April 4, 1828) by providing for the submission to the people of the towns, at an annual town-meeting, of the question of adopting the county system, and, if approving, to so instruct their supervisors and file their action with the county clerk. The people of Blooming-Grove were the first to move for the adoption of the system in Orange, by appointing, at their town-meeting in 1828, a committee to make inquiry in regard to it, and the probable expense of its establishment. This committee—composed of Joseph McLaughlin, Joseph Moffat, and Robert Denniston—made a lengthy report (Feb. 19, 1829), in which the results of the system in the county of Ontario were presented, and the rapidly increasing poor rates of the county dwelt upon,—the expense of supporting the town and county poor during the previous year having been as follows:

reduced and a better support provided by the new system, the cost of the establishment of which was estimated at ten thousand one hundred and ninety dollars. The committee suggested a meeting of delegates from the several towns, which was held on their call at Goshen on the 22d of March; John McGarrah, of Monroe, chairman, and Stacey Beakes, of Wallkill, secretary. This meeting approved the county system, and requested the officers of the different towns to submit the question to the electors at the ensuing town-meetings. The question was accordingly submitted, and, the towns consenting, the board of supervisors met at Goshen in October to take such further action as was required. At this meeting a committee was appointed to consider and report; and at a subsequent meeting, in November, full powers were given a committee to purchase a site, with the necessary land, and proceed with the erection of buildings. On the 6th of February, 1830, the proposals for erecting the buildings were opened and the contract awarded to John H. Corwin and Samuel Bull of Wallkill, for seven thousand two hundred and eighty-nine dollars. As the general act authorized the expenditure of seven thousand dollars only for land and buildings, application was at once made to the Legislature for power to raise five thousand dollars additional, and subsequently for one thousand dollars for land.* At their November meeting (1829) the supervisors appointed the following persons as the first board of superintendents: Gilbert Holmes, of Newburgh; Jesse Wood, Jr., of Warwick; Daniel Corwin, of Wallkill, and William Smith and John Wilson, of Goshen, who appointed (November) Festus A. Webb, of Minisink, keeper, at a salary of five hundred dollars.† The terms of the general law were fully complied with on the 29th of March, 1831, when the house was opened, and the distinction between town and county poor abolished except in temporary relief, which was continued by the towns. During the eight months embraced in the first report of the superintendents, four hundred and thirty-two persons were relieved at an expense of five thousand five hundred and eighty-nine dollars and eighty-eight cents; and the apparent economy of the system shown in the statement that for the support of the county poor alone, from Dec. 1, 1830, to March 31, 1831, had been expended four thousand eight hundred and ninety-four dollars and twenty-two cents.‡ The cost of the house, with one hundred and twenty-eight acres of land,§ was twelve thousand dollars. The original building has been improved and others erected at different times, and the property now embraces the main asylum, erected in 1830, fifty by one hundred and fifty feet, three stories and a half high, with accommodations for three hundred persons; a lunatic asylum adjoining on the northwest, erected in 1848 by Riley & McFarr, thirty by fifty feet, with accommodations for about thirty lunatics; a separate building on the south for colored people, erected in 1865 by B. H. Corwin, with accommodations for one hundred persons.|| Adjoining the original asylum on the northwest is the new asylum for the custody and care of the chronic insane, furnished with all modern conveniences,—the first of its kind erected in the State. Its construction was authorized by the board of supervisors, whose attention was called to its necessity by J. H. Goodale, superintendent, at a special session held Aug. 12, 1874, when the board appointed Messrs. D. Thompson, D. M. Wade, and M. Shuit a committee to examine the matter, who reported (December 2d) that the representations which had been made by Mr. Goodale were fully sustained; that at the county house thirty insane persons were confined to fifteen rooms; that additional room was absolutely required; that the annual expense of maintenance in State asylums of thirty-eight persons was seven thousand and twenty-four dollars, and that it was believed this sum could be largely reduced and at the same time the inmates of the house be better cared for by the erection of an additional building of sufficient size to accommodate all the chronic insane of the county.

The report was accepted and the erection of the proposed building voted. Plans submitted by John C. Sloat, architect, were adopted, and Messrs. Owen, Bell, and Shuit, of the board, and J. H. Goodale, superintendent, appointed building committee. The contract for the building was awarded to Thomas Dobbin, of Newburgh; and the corner-stone was laid June 11, 1875. The dimensions of the building are: length, eighty feet; width, forty feet; height, four and a half stories; height of ceilings, average ten feet; walls hard-finished throughout. A corridor fourteen feet wide traverses each story, and the rooms, each ten feet ten inches deep by seven feet in width, are arranged on either side. It will accommodate about one hundred persons. The cost of the structure was provided for by certificates of indebtedness, issued by the board of supervisors for twenty thousand dollars, payable five thousand dollars annually. The farm now contains two hundred and sixty-three acres, of which two hundred are tillable, and is supplied with all necessary outbuildings. The present valuation of the estate is about seventy thousand dollars.

The first board of supervisors of the present county assembled at Goshen, May 28, 1798, and was composed of John Vail, Goshen; Francis Crawford, New Windsor; Reuben Tooker, Newburgh; Anselem Helme, Cornwall; Jacobus Post, Warwick; Nathan Arnout, Minisink; James Finch, Deerpark; David Galatian, Montgomery; and Andrew McCord, Wallkill. The business of the session was confined to the audit of accounts. In the course of its subsequent history there are few salient points. It has erected three towns,—Greenville, Wawayanda, and Highlands; improved one and constructed two court-houses,—of the latter, one at Goshen with jail, and one at Newburgh with cells; two county clerk's offices and a surrogate's office at Goshen, a county almshouse, and a county asylum for the insane. In its expenditures it has been prudent, perhaps in the character of its public buildings too prudent; but it has never suffered the credit of the county to be impaired, or its people to be oppressed by taxation where the assessment was under its control. With its powers enlarged and entering upon a new political era, its future will not be without more marked influence.

* The first act was passed March 3, 1830; the second Feb. 5, 1833.

† Five superintendents were appointed until 1838; after that, and until 1857, three. In 1857 the number was reduced to one, to be elected by the people. James O. Adams was then chosen.

CHAPTER IV.

LOCATION—PHYSIOLOGY—GEOGRAPHICAL NOMENCLATURE—CLIMATE—GEOLOGY.

THE county of Orange, erected Feb. 23, 1798, is located between $41^{\circ} 8' S.$ and $41^{\circ} 38' N.$ latitude,— $10' E.$ and $43' W.$ longitude from the city of New York. It is bounded on the south by the Rockland County and the State of New Jersey, on the west by the county of Sullivan and the State of Pennsylvania, on the north by the county of Ulster, and on the east by Hudson's River. It is centrally distant ninety miles from Albany, and contains eight hundred and thirty-eight square miles. The surface of the county is mountainous upon the southeast and northwest borders, and a rolling upland through the centre. The Kittatinny, or South Mountains extend in several parallel ranges from the New Jersey line northeast to the Hudson, ending in the rocky and precipitous bluffs known as the Highlands. The Shawangunk Mountains extend from the Delaware River northeast through the northwest corner of the county. Among the principal ridges are the Warwick, Bellvale, and Rough and Sterling ranges, near the south border of the county, and the Schunemunk range. The extreme northwest corner of the county is occupied by the series of highlands extending from the Delaware River into Sullivan County. The central portion of the county, lying between the mountain systems, is a rolling upland, broken in many places by abrupt and isolated hills and the deep valleys of streams. More than one-half of the entire surface of the county is susceptible of cultivation; and forms a fine agricultural district. Along the southwest border, extending through several towns and into New Jersey, is a low, flat region, lying upon the streams, and known as the Drowned Lands. This tract, consisting of about seventeen thousand acres, was originally covered with water and a dense growth of cedars; but a large portion of it has been drained and reclaimed, and now forms one of the finest agricultural portions of the county. On the extreme northwest and forming in part the boundary line of the county, the river Mongaup flows south and unites with the Delaware. Neversink River flows south along the west foot of the Shawangunk Mountains, and forms a tributary of the Delaware, the latter stream being for a short distance at this point the boundary line of the State. The Pakadasink or Shawangunk River flows north along the east foot of the Shawangunk Mountains, and forms a tributary of the Wallkill. The Wallkill or Paltz River flows north through near the centre of the county, and forms a tributary of the Hudson at Rondout, in Ulster County. Murderer's Creek and its principal tributary the Otterkill flow east through near the centre of the county, and discharge their waters into the Hudson. Wawayanda Creek flows south into New Jersey, and re-entering the county as Pochuck Creek, unites with the Wallkill. Ramapo River rises in the south part of the county and flows south into Rockland. A number of small local streams furnish hydraulic power in other parts of the county. The principal lakes are Greenwood, Thompson's, Mombasha, and Orange, which, with a series of smaller bodies of water, add picturesqueness to the topography of the county. There are also swamp districts, in addition to the Drowned Lands, of which the Chester meadows have been largely reclaimed and are very productive.

MOUNTAINS AND VALLEYS.

The Highlands are the most prominent of the mountain ranges. Approached from the north, to the right of the range stands the anciently so-called Butter Hill, a title with which Irving embalmed it in his famous but fictitious "Knickerbocker" history. It is now quite generally known as Storm-king, a title bequeathed to it by the poetic fancy of Willis, from the fact that for years it has served as a weather-signal to the inhabitants of the immediate district. At one time a cap of fog upon its crown indicates the coming of rain; at another, clouds are seen rising over the Shawangunk range, following its course north and south, separating into two parts, the one passing over the Warwick Mountains to the Highlands, the other over the hills of Ulster to Marlborough, and both joining as it were over Butter Hill, pouring out torrents of rain, not unfrequently accompanied by reverberating peals of thunder such as one rarely hears except in similarly broken mountain ranges. The ancient Dutch navigators, noticing the latter peculiarity, preserved a record of the apparently culminating point of these peals in the Dunderberg, situated farther south. Butter Hill has an altitude of fifteen hundred and twenty-four feet. Its ascent from the river-front is precipitous; on the north, however, it is crossed by wagon-roads.

Cro'-nest, adjoining Butter Hill on the south, is the second peak of the range, rising above the Hudson fourteen hundred and eighteen feet. Its modern name preserves in substance its Algonquin title, which, in ancient records, is written Navesing, signifying "a resort for birds." The name is retained in the Sandy Hook highlands and in the Neversink River in Sullivan and Orange, the latter as well as the Hudson having on its border a Cro'-nest, —its original Navesing. Bear Mountain is the third principal elevation, rising thirteen hundred and fifty feet above the river. Mount Independence forms the background of the plateau at West Point, and is crowned with the crumbling walls of Fort Putnam. Just below, in a gorge in the rocks dividing the sites of Forts Clinton and Montgomery, flows Poplopen's Kill, at the mouth of which the county line leaves the Hudson and from thence passes amidst the hills southwesterly. In successive proximity are the elevations known as Black Rock and Deer Hill, Ant Hill, Lawyer's Hill, Mount Rascal, and Peat, Pine, Cold, and Round Hills. Following the range we meet Blacktop, Black-cup, and Long Hills, the ancient Dutch Dunderberg, Torn Mountain, and Cape Hill, Tom Jones' Mountain, and Hemlock Hill. To this may be added as objects of interest by the way, Kidd's Pocket-book, the Lover's Rocking-stone, the Giant's Haunt, the Giant's Slipper, Picnic Rock, Poised Rock, and Erlin's Bluff,—a singular mingling of poetic and commonplace titles, and suggestive of paucity in proper orthologic terms. The Dunderberg and Torn Mountain are east of the county line, and, though former residents of Orange, now grace the borders of Rockland. In this enumeration they serve the purpose of territorial monuments. The Torn forms the right shoulder of the Ramapo Valley; its name and its appearance alike suggest the violence with which it was upheaved or torn from its fellows, although in local acceptance "steeple" is understood to explain its title and resemblance.

No mountain range is so well known in Europe, nor is there one with which the history of our own nation is so intimately associated. The visitor at Westminster Abbey reads there the name of André; the story of Arnold is sown broadcast through American schools. Both point to one centre: the Highlands of the Hudson,—the one awakening regret at the fate of the young and gifted; the other nerving the hearts of thousands to love of country. Aside from its history, the range has an economic character. It tempers the winds of the sea-board, and bears upon its sheltering breast the fiercest blasts of many storms. Of Storm-king and Cro'-nest it has been well said, by a recent writer, "They have a charm that might induce a man to live in their shadow for no other purpose than to have them always before him, day and night, to study their ever-changing beauty. For they are never twice alike; the clouds make varying pictures all day long on their wooded sides, and nowhere have we seen more wonderful effects of shadow and sunshine. Under the frown of a low thunder-cloud they take on a grim majesty that makes their black masses strangely threatening and weird; one forgets to measure their height, and their massive, strongly-marked features, by any common standard of every-day measurement, and they seem to overshadow all the scene around them, like the very rulers and controllers of the coming storm. And when the sunlight comes back again, they seem to have brought it, and to look down with a bright benignity, like giant protectors of the valley below."

The Shawangunk range is less broken than the Highlands. It continues, with but slight breaks, from near Carpenter's Point on the Delaware to the Sullivan and Ulster line, and forms the boundary line between Deerpark and the towns of Greenville and Mount Hope, those being the only towns of the county touched by the range. The eastern slope is singularly uniform, and is adapted to cultivation to the summit; the western is broken and precipitous, presenting peaks fourteen and eighteen hundred feet above tide. Few inland landscapes are more beautiful than the former. Approached from the east, the eye rests upon fields of grain and grass, upturned furrows, the verdure of waving trees, and the homes of thrifty husbandmen, spread out from vale to crest, from south to the far north, in unwearying panoramic beauty,—a patchwork of gold and green, of brown and gray, of white and red,—

"As though all tints
Of gem, of bird, of flower, of cloud, of sky,
Had met and blended in a general glow!"

The name by which the range is known does not strictly belong to it. In the Indian deed to Governor Dongan, and in the subsequent patent to Capt. John Evans, its principal divisions are given respectively the names Pitkiskaker and Aiskawasting. On Sau-thier's map the same divisions are called Alaskayering and Shawangunk. Many interpretations of the latter have been made. In Mather's "Geology of New York" the signification is given as "the place of the white rocks;" the late distinguished Algonquin linguist, Henry R. Schoolcraft, renders it, "south mountain;" the Rev. Charles Scott, taking Shawangun as the original, "south water;" another from jewan, "swift current, or strong stream;" another from shong, "mink river;"* and another, from cheegaugang, "the place of leeks." The error in all these cases, probably, is in regarding the term as descriptive of a specific place or physical attribute rather than as a generic phrase. All writers who have examined the subject are aware that Indian geographical terms are of two classes: general or generic, and specific or local, and are so compounded as to present in a single expression a complex idea, or several ideas among which there is a natural connection. In specific names the combination may be simple, as Cocksackie,—co, object, and acke, land; in others intricate, as Maghaghkemek, in which acke, land, is buried in consonants and qualifying terms. The terminal of a word materially aids but does not govern its translation. Uk or unk indicates "place of" in a specific sense, as in Mohunk; ong, "place of" in a more general sense, as in Warranawongkong, the place or territory of the clan of that name; ik, ick, eck, or uk denotes rocks or stones; ack or acke, land; ing or ink, something in which numbers are presented, as "the place of birds;" ais, oes, os, aus, denote a single small object or place, as Minnisais, a small island,—a number of islands, Minnising or ink; ish, eesh, oosh, or sh indicates a bad or faulty quality; co is object; at, at or near. In some cases these root terms are thrown into the body of the word, as in Maghagkemek, Alaskawasting, etc. General terms have no positive reference to the physiology of the districts of country to which they are applied. Wawayanda is of this class,* and also the term or phrase we are considering, which is preserved in two forms: the Dutch Shawangunk, and the English Chawangong,—the first in translated records of the Esopus war (1663), and the second in English deeds twenty years later but practically contemporaneous with the first. The latter is known to be correctly written; the former may perhaps correspond with the accepted modern orthography rather than with the original Dutch. While regarding Chawangong as the most pleasant, and while as a rule the English rendering of all Algonquin terms is the most correct, the only material difference in this case is in the terminal; the one indicating a specific place, the other, place or territory in a general sense. In the connection in which they are used we may, however, accept them, and also Shawan, Chawan, and Shuwun, as equivalent terms varied by dialect, and so accepting them the interpretation is as plain as that of any word in the English language, viz.: "the place or territory of the white man." This interpretation and no other harmonizes with historical facts. In no case does it appear that the term was used or known to the Dutch until after they had conquered the district, which then became, under Indian law, the place or territory of the conquerors,—literally, "the place of the white man." In the treaty of peace (1663) and in its subsequent renewal (1665), this recognition is distinctly made. In the latter instrument the boundaries of the conquered territory are defined as a certain "parcel of land, lying and being to the west and southwest of a certain creek or river called by the name of Kahanksen, and so up to the head thereof where the old fort was, and so with a direct line from thence through the woods and across the meadows to the Great Hill lying and being to the west and southwest thereof, which Great Hill is to be the true west or southwest bounds of the said lands, and the said creek called Kahanksen the north or northwest bounds of the said lands." This was the original Shawangunk of the Dutch,—a district embracing many specific Indian localities, the names of none of which were subordinated or disturbed by the phrase under which the conquered admitted that part of their territory had become "the place of the white man."† That the term has, strictly speaking, been improperly extended to mountain, river, meadow, etc., may be conceded, yet for its history, its poetry, and its orthology, we may well consent to let it forever rest upon Pitkiskaker and Alaskawasting.

* "Shongham" is the local Dutch, and is adopted in Silliman's Journal.

The Schunemunk range is appropriately described as "the high hills to the west of the Highlands." It extends from northeast to southwest, and is divided longitudinally principally by the boundary line of Monroe and Blooming-Grove, with a portion on the northeast in the town of Cornwall. It was the original dividing line between the Wawayanda and Chesekook Patents, and also one of the monuments in the line of the Evans Patent. Its name appears in several forms. In the deed to Governor Dongan (1684), one of the lines of his purchase is described as running "northwest along a hill called Skoonnenoghky;" in another paper of the same period it is called Skonemoghky; in a deed to Joseph Sackett (1727), the property is described as being on the "south side of a high hill called Skonemugh;" in a deed to Edward Blagg (1726) it is spoken of as Schunamock Hill. It will be observed that the prevailing orthography down to the Blagg deed contains ske, the Algonquin generic term for fire, and that the terminal indicates a certain place. From this analysis, without considering no, na, ne, in the body of the word (signifying excellent), we have the literal interpretation, "fire place," the reference being (as in Skootag, now Schodac) to the principal castle or palisaded village of the clan owning the land. This castle stood on the north spur of the range. At the time of the sale it was occupied by Maringoman and his people, and was known and called Maringoman's castle, to distinguish it from the wigwam in which he subsequently lived, which was situated near Washingtonville. The latter is a landmark in the boundaries of the Mompesson and Rip Van Dam Patents, issued subsequent to the Evans.

North of Schunemunk is Muchattoes Hill, extending north and south in the towns of New Windsor and Newburgh. Its name is Algonquin,—muhk, black; at, near or by; oes, small: signifying literally "a small black hill near the river."

* "Wawayanda" is a compound term signifying a district embracing several well-known and occupied lands, or a village and its dependencies. We is a reflective plural, and may mean he or they, or, by repetition, we; Aindau-yunn, is "my home;" Aindau-yun, "thy home;" Aindau-and, "his or her home;" da, "town or village." From these terms we have Wawayanda,—"our homes or places of dwelling," or "our village and lands."

† A general term of this character was applied by the Indians to Detroit after the site of that city passed to the possession of the French. There is one other possible solution of the name, and that is that when the Shawanoes, of Maryland, removed to the territory of the Minnies, in 1694, they were assigned lands on the Shawangunk range, and through what is now Sullivan County, and that the name comes from their occupation, as the country of the Shawanoes. There is still a hill in Sullivan called Shawanoes Hill. Our conclusion, however, is based on the presumption that the name is older than Shawanoes occupation, but of this we have no other evidence than that furnished by O'Callagan and Brodhead in their rendering of Holland documents. If they have made an error in applying a modern term to an ancient date we cannot correct it.

West of Schunemunk is Woodcock Hill now so known, but called Winegetkonk in the patent to Sir John Ashurst (1709), and Wenighkonk in the patent to Edward Blagg (1726). The present name requires no explanation, although a reasonable apology for its retention appears to be necessary.

From Woodcock Hill southwest are a series of elevations in the following order: Round Hill, in shape like an inverted bowl; Mosquito Hill, a jagged elevation; Rainer's Hill; Peddler's Hill; Tom Rocks, which are more rocky than mountainous and rise in two separate peaks to an elevation of about two hundred feet above the surrounding country; Lazy Hill, whose gradual slopes, it is presumed, suggested its name; and Goose-pond Mountain.

At this point rise what are known as the Bellvale Mountains; connecting peaks continue the line to the Sterling Mountains on the south, the Rough Mountains and Southfield Mountains on the east, and the Warwick Mountains on the southwest; on the northwest are the Taylor Mountains, Round Hill, Rocky Hill, and Pochuck Mountain, filling out the southeast and southwest borders of the county with a battlement of mountainous elevations.* Pochuck Neck and Pochuck Mountain intrude upon the Drowned Lands. Pochuck is of course Algonquin corrupted; po should be pogh as in the original of Ramapo, Poughkeepsie, etc.; uck, as in Mahicanitik, signifying "large areas of land and water,"—a name most certainly misapplied to the mountain. Farther north, in Warwick, are Mount Adam and Mount Eve, conjoined,—the former being much the highest, the latter much the longest,—which spring up from the bottom-lands and the rolling glades surrounding them and are picturesque in all their phases. Directly east, in Chester, is Sugar-loaf Mountain, which, when seen from the north, resembles a sugar-loaf; hence its name. Its northern ascent is quite gradual, its southern broken and precipitous. With its adjacent hills it is the apex from which the country descends to the north and to the south. It is therefore a very prominent object for a great distance on either side. Northwest from Sugar-loaf is Mount Lookout, the principal elevation in the town of Goshen, where both hills and stones are the exception.

Scattered through the county are minor elevations: the Comfort Hills, on the line between Montgomery and Crawford; Pea Hill, Pine Hill, and Sloop Hill, in Cornwall; Three-mile Hill and Mount Joy, in Walkkill; Rough Ridge and Forge Hill, in New Windsor; King's Hill, in Newburgh; Jogie Hill, in Minisink, etc., the latter perpetuating in its name the name and residence of Kedgekapowell alias Joghem,

* The principal elevations in Warwick are Hogback, Decker, One Pine, and Pine and Hull's Hills on the east, Bill and Coxcomb Hills in the centre, Long, Cedar, Pond, and Bill White's Hills in the southeast, Round, Rocky, and Chuck's Hills in the south, Pochuck Mountain, and Green and Adney's Hills in the west, and Mounts Adam and Eve and Round Hill in the northwest.

one of the grantors of the lands included in the Evans Patent. In Deerpark, Mount William and Point Peter form prominent and attractive features of the village of Port Jervis.

The valleys of the county are not less numerous than its mountains and streams. That portion of Deerpark bordering on the Delaware is but a narrow and irregular valley, broken by mountains and tributaries of the Delaware. The valley of the Neversink and Basha's Kill comprises the main portion of the valuable and cultivated lands of the town of Deerpark. These together are sometimes called the Huguenot Valley, from the early Huguenot settlers who reclaimed it from the Indians; those portions along the Basha and Pine Kill were long known as the Peenpack Valley,—a name corrupted from Neepe-nack, the original western boundary of the Swartwout Patent. The Walkkill Valley widens out on either side of the Walkkill. It is of singular beauty and fertility, and is properly classed among the finest bottom-lands of the State. The valley of the Shawangunk Kill is narrow and crooked. To the east of the valley of the Walkkill is that of the Otterkill, which for miles runs approximately parallel with the former but suddenly turns to the east, and, through a winding course amid the hills, reaches the Hudson above the Highlands. Throughout this valley, says a recent writer, the hills approach and retire in singular fantasy, affording wide alluvial flats and pent-up gorges, gradual slopes and steep declivities, hither and thither. At Salisbury it narrows to a gorge of rocks, and nearer its mouth it assumes, in picturesqueness and beauty, the poetic name (by Willis) of Moodna Valley. Cromeline Valley, through which Cromeline Creek passes, has its head in the far east of Warwick, from whence it follows the tortuous course of the stream from which it takes its name until it reaches its junction with the valley of the Otterkill, presenting throughout scenes wild and beautiful, a surface varied from plain to mountain, a soil from rich to poor, smooth to broken and precipitous. Sugar-loaf Valley runs from the mountain of that name to Wickham's Pond, and from thence a devious course to the village of Warwick, with hills and mountains, vales and headlands intersecting; from Warwick its course continues south and west until it passes out of the State. Bellvale Valley, or the lower valley of Warwick, extends from the immediate vicinity of the village of Warwick southerly to Greenwood Lake and the Sussex, N. J., Clove. It is an especially rich farming section. The valleys of most of the small streams have more or less local celebrity. That of the Arackhook or Tinn Brock has many patches of beauty, while that of the Quassaick, near its confluence with the Hudson, has passed into history under the title of "The Vale."

The principal cloves—so called from the Saxon word cleopan, "to split asunder," and meaning "valley," literally—are known as Blagg's Clove, in Blooming-Grove, between the Schunemunk and Woodcock Mountains; Woodbury Clove, in Cornwall and Monroe, between the Schunemunk and the Highlands, now traversed by the Newburgh and New York (Short-cut) Railroad; and Smith's Clove, extending from Highland Mills to the Ramapo Valley. Smith's Clove has fame in Revolutionary history from its occupancy by portions of the American army, and as the birthplace of Chief Justice William Smith; of his brother, Joshua Hett Smith,* whose name is associated with that of Arnold in the treason at West Point, and also of the locally notorious Claudius Smith and his equally notorious sons. What relationship Claudius sustained to the chief justice and to Joshua it may not be well to inquire;† it is sufficient to know that in their devotion to the mother-country they richly earned the name of Tory, and that their offenses against their Whig neighbors differed only in degree.

Tortuous cloves from Long and Poplopen's Ponds, converging to the south from Black-top Mountain and Cat Hollow, give character to Forest of Dean, far depressed beneath Bear Mountain, where, from the south, Two-pond Valley intersects and thence diverges to the northeast and reaches the Hudson, forming a succession of vales where mountain cliffs and jagged rocks occupy the foreground, and abrupt declivities and broken valleys fill the picture. To the south of Black-rock Hill lies Eagle Valley,—so called from local tradition describing it as the resort of the "king of birds,"—through which, descending as rocks and hills permit, in crooked course to the Hudson, the waters from Bog-meadow Pond chant their music and finally dash over the rocks in foaming spray, forming the "Boter Melck Val" of the early Dutch skippers,—the Buttermilk Falls of our times. Poplopen's Valley—through which pass the waters of Poplopen's Creek, the outlet of Poplopen's and other mountain ponds—is similarly constituted. Its name is apparently from that of a Highland chieftain whose rude castle once crowned one of the adjacent hilltops. The valley of the Ramapo, the largest of the mountain passes, continues Smith's Clove to the Hudson. The term Ramapo was, it is assumed, originally given to the entire district as one of "many ponds." The original orthography, Ramspook or Ramapogh, however, indicates "a river into which empty a number of ponds," the application being specific to the river.

PONDS, STREAMS, ETC.

Few districts of country are so bountifully supplied with ponds and streams as that embraced in the county of Orange. On hilltops or in valleys, dashing over rocks, winding through cultivated fields, lying in repose, or chained to the service of man in the forge, the factory, or the mill, they are not only a source of wealth but beautify the landscape. The lake system of the county begins in the northern part of the Highlands in Cornwall, continues through the towns of Highlands and Monroe, culminates in Warwick in that beautiful sheet of water known as Greenwood Lake, and from thence west and north appears in inland reservoirs of various sizes. Cornwall has one pond, Sutherland's; Bog-meadow Pond, Round Pond, No. 1, Long Pond, and Cranberry Pond, No. 1, are in Highlands; Poplopen's Pond, Bull or Agnel's Pond (also called Wood Lake), Summit Lake, Two Ponds or Twin Ponds (upper and lower), Slaughter's Pond, Cranberry Pond, No. 2, Greenwood Pond, Hazzard's Pond, Round Pond, No. 2, Mombasha Pond, Cedar Pond, No. 1, Truedo or Duck-cedar Pond, Round Island Pond, Little Long Pond, No. 1, Little Long Pond, No. 2, Green Pond, Car Pond, Spruce Pond, and Nigger Pond are in Monroe; Wickham's Pond, Stirling Lake, Cedar Pond, No. 2, and Greenwood Lake, are in Warwick; Thompson's Pond, on the line between Warwick and Chester; Binnenwater or Maretange Pond, in Greenville; Washington Lake, in New Windsor; Orange Lake, in Newburgh; Big Pond and Little Pond, in Deerpark; and Round Pond, No. 3, in Wawayanda.

Sutherland's Pond, in Cornwall, lies under the shadow of Black-rock Hill, southwest from Cro'-nest, and is about half a mile long. Its name—like that of others in the series which will be recognized without special notice—is that of an individual owner. Its outlet runs west and south and unites with Murderer's Creek, after furnishing the falls that are seen near the Cornwall mineral spring.

Bog-meadow Pond, the first in the town of Highlands, lies southwest from Black-rock Hill. It covers about three hundred acres of land, and has a depth of some twenty-five feet. Its outlet dashes over the rocks at Buttermilk Falls and reaches the Hudson. Round Pond, No. 1, and Long Pond are northwest from Highland Falls. The former is more elevated than the latter, into which its waters flow; the outlet of the latter unites with Poplopen's Creek. The waters of Round Pond, in making connection with Long Pond, flow under a natural bridge, the breadth of which is fifty feet, and its length, up and down stream, seventy-five or eighty feet. It is used as a bridge, and one may ride over it without being aware of it. There is no daylight under it. The stream on the upper side passes into a cave, and is lost to sight until it emerges from another cave on the other side. Willis describes it as "a massive porch, covering the last stair of a staircase by which a cascading stream descends into a mountain lake." It differs in situation only, however, from the subterranean passage of the outlet of Washington Lake in New Windsor. Cranberry Pond, No. 1, is in the south part of the town and southwest from Fort Montgomery.

Poplophen's Pond, in the northeast part of the town, and Bull or Agnel's Pond, its neighbor on the southwest, are the first of the Monroe series, and lie northwest from Forest of Dean. Their waters flow to Poplophen's Creek. Summit Lake, Two Ponds, Slaughter's Pond, Cranberry Pond, No. 2, Greenwood or Echo Pond, Round Pond, No. 2, Green Pond, and Car Pond, lie in a chain south-southwest from Poplophen's; Cedar Pond and Little Long Pond, No. 1, are east, and Spruce and Truxedo Ponds west of the chain-line; Nigger Pond is in the extreme southern part of the town. The waters of Two Ponds flow to Poplophen's Creek; those of Summit Lake, Slaughter's, Cranberry, No. 2, Greenwood, and Round, No. 2, are united for the use of Greenwood furnace, and from thence flow to the Ramapo; Little Long Pond, No. 1, and Cedar Pond, No. 1, send their waters into Rockland County and there unite with the Ramapo, while those of Green, Car, Spruce, Truxedo, and Nigger Ponds unite with the same stream in Orange. Slaughter's Pond is about one mile and a half long and half a mile wide, and Cedar and Little Long Ponds are of nearly the same size. Truxedo Pond is two miles long, north and south. Greenwood, Green, Car, Spruce, and Nigger Ponds are small. Round Pond, No. 2, or Little Round Pond, more nearly resembles a vast moat than a pond, as a circular wooded island nearly fills its circumference. In most cases the names of these ponds require no explanation; but of Truxedo it may be remarked that it is apparently a corruption of Truxillo, while the surname, "Duck-cedar," is a misnomer. Hazzard's Pond, in the north part of the town and west from Poplophen's, is about half a mile in diameter. Its outlet, Woodbury Creek, furnishes power to the Highlands Mills; flows thence north through Woodbury Clove and unites with Murderer's Creek. Round-island Pond—so named from a round island in it called Chestnut—lies southwest from Hazzard's and near the line of Blooming-Grove. It is about a quarter of a mile wide and three-quarters of a mile long, and is the head of the Ramapo River. Little Long Pond, No. 2, is nearly south from Round-island and near the Chester line. It is about one mile long and a quarter of a mile wide. Its outlet furnishes part of the head-waters of Cromeline Creek. Mombasha Pond is in the west part of the town, near Warwick. It is from one and a half to two miles in diameter, and contains two or three islands. Its outlet flows northeast and thence south, passing the Southfield works, furnishing power for mills and forges. Its name is presumed to be a corruption of Mombaccus, "the place of death,"—the reference apparently being to a burial-ground or a battle-field.

The Warwick series begin with Stirling Lake in the southeast, covering about sixty acres of land. At its outlet was established, in 1751, by Ward & Colton, the Stirling Iron-Works, which have been continued since that time. Gen. William Alexander, Lord Stirling, was interested in the works prior to the Revolution, and from him the works and the lake take their name. The outlet of the lake flows into New Jersey. Cedar Pond, No. 2,* lying southeast, unites its waters with the waters of Stirling Lake, above Stirling works. Wickham's Pond, in the north, covers an area of about eighty-five acres. Its outlet is a tributary of Wawayanda Creek. Greenwood Lake is the largest body of water in the town or county. It is about nine miles long and one mile wide; extends into New Jersey, and is used as a feeder for the Morris Canal. Its original name, Long Pond, although descriptive of its shape, was long enough in use; its present title is the offspring of more cultivated taste.

Thompson's Pond is in the northwest part of Warwick, east of Florida, and extends into Chester. It covers an area of about one hundred acres. Its outlet furnishes power for grist- and saw-mills, and is a tributary of Quaker Creek. It has recently been rechristened, and is now entered on the map Glenmere Lake, though why "lake" should be added is not clear. "Glen" is a depression between hills; "mere," a pool or lake.

Binnenwater, in Greenville, covers about fifty acres, and sends its waters to Rutgers' Creek. It lies about two miles southerly from the village of Mount Hope, about one and one-half miles southeast from Finchville, and about one mile south from the boundary line between Mount Hope and Greenville.† At one time it was an important landmark, constituting the southwest corner of the Evans Patent and the southeast line of the Minisink. Half a century or more later a new line was established for the Evans Patent farther east, the Minisink angle formed, and the pond excluded from the boundary. In the deed to Governor Dongan it is described as "a water pond called Mare-tange;" in the patent to Evans it is called Merchary, on Sauthier's map, Maretang,—from the German "merche," "mericha," an aquatic plant of the genus Hippuris vulgaris, having silicious jointed stems. The present name is German; its correct orthography is Binnenwasser (one word), signifying "inland water." The original title should be restored to the maps of the county for its historic associations, or at least coupled with its more modern name.

Round Pond, in Wawayanda, is emphatically round. It lies in the south part of the town, near Gardner-ville, and is about one mile in circumference. It is clear and fresh, very deep, indeed reputedly bottomless, and has no visible outlet or inlet.

* The figures inserted after the names of ponds are to distinguish them from others of the same name, of which there are several in the county. The poverty of the language is so great that the donors of these names were probably forced to repetition.

† This line is the old east-and-west line of the original counties of Orange and Ulster. New Windsor and Cornwall are also divided by this line.

Big Pond, in Deerpark, is about one mile long and half a mile wide. Its outlet, known as Shingle Kill, passes south and enters the Delaware at Honesville. Little Pond, in the same town, lies southeast from Big Pond, and is about one-quarter of a mile in diameter. Its outlet passes south and forms Old-dam Brook, a tributary of the Neversink.

Washington Lake, in New Windsor, covers seventy-six acres, or, including overflowed swamp, one hundred and seven acres. Its outlet, for some distance, is subterranean, disappearing at the Swallow-hole and emerging at the Trout-hole,—a fall of forty feet. The Newburgh water-works take its waters. For years it was known as Little Pond, and is still so called by many.

Orange Lake, in Newburgh, covers some four hundred acres of land, and is quite deep in places. At different times it has been known as Binnenwasser (by the Germans), Moose's Pond, Machin's Pond (from Capt. Thomas Machin), and Big Pond, the latter giving place to its present title. The Algonquin name was Qussuk,—now rendered Quassaick and applied to its outlet. It is fed by two small streams in addition to strong springs in its bed. The mill-owners on its outlet use it as a reservoir, and during the most severe droughts the supply has never been exhausted.

The whole country is remarkably rich in the lacustrine and marsh alluvions; indeed, they are more abundant than in any other county in the State, there being probably forty thousand acres.* The principal districts are the Drowned Lands, the Gray-court Meadows, Big Swamp in Newburgh, Great Swamp in New Windsor, Long Swamp in Warwick, Tamarack and Purgatory Swamps in Hamptonburgh, Cedar Swamp in Goshen and Warwick, Pakadasink Swamp in Greenville, Grassy Swamp in Deerpark, Pine Swamp in Crawford, Barton's Swamp in Cornwall, and the Black Meadows in Chester and Warwick.

The Drowned Lands extend from the Chechunk outlet in Goshen, through Warwick, Wawayanda, and Minisink, into New Jersey, and cover in the towns named about seventeen thousand acres. They are full of islands of great fertility, some of them of considerable area. Their names are Pine, Great, Pellet's, Gardner's, Merritt's, Cranberry, Black-walnut, Fox, and Seward. An arm of the lands, known as Cedar Swamp, extends east to near Orange farm, in Goshen. Quaker Creek passes through this arm on the north, and Mounts Adam and Eve adjoin it on the south. The reclamation of the lands has been gradual, and is mainly effected by an outlet, constructed many years ago, by which a rocky ridge in the bed of the Wallkill was avoided. This outlet has worn its way through the soil until from a simple ditch it has come to contain the principal flow from the lands. Pochuck Creek, Rutgers' Creek, Quaker Creek, and the Wallkill pass through the lands, the latter for their entire distance in this county. The aboriginal name of the district may well have been Pochuck,—“a large area of land and water.” It is presumed, however, that the Indians had no general name, but gave specific titles to different portions of the tract, of which Pochuck and Woerawin only have been preserved. The latter appears in a deed to Dr. Samuel Staats, in 1703, for a tract not located, but described as having been found on examination to be “altogether a swamp.” The inference from the term itself, is that “many good lands” were intended to be conveyed,—probably the islands already named, which then appeared to be worthless.

The Gray-court Meadows extend from near Craigville, in Blooming-Grove, into the northern part of Chester, and embrace about five hundred acres. They are now mainly under cultivation and very fertile. Their name is that originally given by Daniel Cromeline to his tract in the first division of the Wawayanda Patent,† of which they are a part. Cromeline Creek passes through and drains these meadows.

The Black Meadows extend through Chester on the northwest and into Warwick east of Thompson's Pond. They embrace an area of one thousand acres, through which runs the Black-meadow Creek.

The Long Swamp, in Warwick, southwest from Edenville, covers about one thousand acres, and is drained from the south into New Jersey.

The Tamarack and Purgatory Swamps, in Hamptonburgh, are of considerable extent, and are drained by a small sluggish stream. The latter is represented as having been originally a dismal swamp, from which fact Mr. Peter Bull, its owner, gave the name, bestowing at the same time upon his own residence that of Paradise.‡

The Grassy Swamp, in Deerpark, extends from Sullivan County to the Mongaup. It is a low, wet swamp, overgrown with long, coarse grass. Grassy-swamp Brook passes through it.

The Big Swamp, in Newburgh, takes its name from Big Pond (Orange Lake), which it adjoins. It stretches from the Ulster County line to the lake, and was probably originally an extension of the lake to the north as well as south of its present borders, which, if all under water, would add three times to its present length. Bushfield Creek passes through the swamp to the lake.

The Great Swamp, in New Windsor, lies in the northwest part of the town, near Coldenham. The Arackhook or Tinn Broek passes through it.

The Great Pine Swamp commences near Howell's, on the Erie Railroad, and extends northward and eastward seven miles in the town of Wallkill, having in its area many oases and cultivated farms. Part of its overflow passes into the Shawangunk Kill, south of Bloomingburgh.

The Little Pine Swamp lies east of Thompson Ridge and Pine Bush, in Crawford, extending northward into Ulster. Its surplus waters assist in swelling the volume of the Dwaars Kill.

The Pakadasink Swamp, in Greenville (on lands of Isaac M. Seybolt and others), is the head of the Big Pakadasink or Shawangunk Kill, as that stream was formerly known and described. The Little Binnenwater Swamp, also in Greenville, lies directly south from the village of Mount Hope. A small stream flows from it southwesterly and connects with the outlet of Binnenwater Pond, the latter uniting with Rutgers' Creek.

The Barton Swamp, in Cornwall, is inconsiderable in size, compared with the others named. Peat of a fair quality is taken from it.

Marl and peat beds are found in several localities, from which portions and in some cases entire skeletons of the mastodon have been exhumed. The first exhumation of record was in 1794, the second in 1800, the third in 1803, the fourth in 1805, the fifth in 1838, the sixth in 1844, the seventh in 1845, the eighth in the same year, the ninth in 1872. The skeleton of 1845, exhumed from a marl bed near Coldenham, was complete and weighed nineteen hundred and ninety-five pounds. It is now in the Boston Museum. The one exhumed in 1872, in the town of Mount Hope, was also complete. Its weight was about seventeen hundred pounds. It is now in the New Haven Museum.

The boundary streams of the county are the Hudson on the northeast, the Delaware and Mongaup on the west, and the Shawangunk on the northwest. Of the first, the Hudson, it is not necessary to speak. Its aboriginal name, Mahicanituk, was that of a particular division rather than of the entire stream. The principal harbor on it, within what may be called the waters of Orange County, is at Newburgh, where it expands into a bay one mile and a quarter in width, sheltered by the Highlands from "all winds save an east-northeast wind," as Hudson wrote in 1609. For the convenience of commerce, principal landing-places or wharves have been established at Newburgh, Cornwall, and West Point, and for more local trade at Hampton, New Windsor, Cozzens', Fort Montgomery, etc. The water-front of the city of Newburgh is without a rival on the river, the channel being abrupt and the depth ample to float the largest vessels.

The Delaware, on the west, touches the county for only a short distance. Like the Hudson, it had no general aboriginal name,—Lenapewhituk being applied to it at Philadelphia, while above and below Port Jervis it was known and called by the Indians Minising,—literally "a river of islands."* Beyond

* Minis and Minis are entirely two different words,—the first signifying island, the second wolf. Some writers confuse the terms and give rafting it has no commerce at this point, and is crossed by railroad and foot bridges.

The Mongaup River, the dividing line between Orange and Sullivan, is properly in Sullivan County, the line of Orange running "to" and "along" its course. Mr. Quinlan, in his "History of Sullivan County," says it was originally known as the Mingap-ach-ka. Mongawping or Mingwing is better authenticated,—implying a plurality of streams, comprehending the three branches of which it is composed. Its present name, as already stated, is presumed to be Dutch. It appears in the early records, Mongaup.

The Shawangunk Kill, on the northwest, has its head in Pakadasink Swamp, in the town of Greenville, passes through the town of Mount Hope, and upon the line between Ulster and Orange, running a northeast course to the Wallkill, in Ulster County. Its present name has already been explained. Like other streams,—and, it may be said, all streams, mountains, etc.,—it had no general name, but was specifically divided, Achsinink being recorded in one locality and Pakadasink in another. In the deed to Governor Dongan it is described as "the river called Peakadasink," and in the act of 1762, dividing Wallkill Precinct, the line is described as extending "to the Pakadasink River or Shawangunk Kill." In another paper of nearly the same date, it is said, as well understood evidence, "Nothing could more plainly point out where that pond lies (Maretange) than the river Pakadasink, which takes its rise opposite to the said pond and extends along the foot of the said hills from a place called Pokanasink, and from that place to the head of the said river, and nowhere else, the said river is called by that name."

How the river lost a name so well established is explained by the papers relating to the bounds of the Minisink Patent. Having succeeded in spreading their line, the proprietors of that patent found it necessary to obliterate its old landmarks. A general change of names ensued: Maretange Pond was located on Sam's Point; the Big and Little Pakadasink Kills (the latter now called the Little Shawangunk Kill) were shifted to the same vicinity, and to make the whole apparently and entirely consistent, two small streams in Crawford received the names respectively of Big and Little Pakadasink, that it might not be missed in its ancient neighborhood. The original name contained equivalents signifying "swamps," and being generic, may be applied wherever the corresponding topography exists.†

The principal streams passing through or entirely the latter as the derivative of Minisink. The explanatory tradition that either name originated from the breaking through of the waters at the Delaware Water Gap is not well founded.

† It will be observed by those familiar with the district that the topography in this case corresponds almost precisely. It is not assumed that the name is in itself improperly applied to its present locations; it is strictly correct.

included in the county are the Neversink, the Wallkill, the Otterkill or Murderer's Creek, and the Ramapo.

The Neversink receives its head-waters from north-western Ulster and northern Sullivan. It runs south and southeast into the town of Deerpark to near Cuddebackville, and thence turns south and southwest until it joins the Delaware near Carpenter's Point, where it is about two hundred feet wide. It is a never-failing stream. Its name has been explained in another connection. Its principal tributaries are Basha's Kill and Old-dam Brook (Ouwe-dam Kill). The former rises in Sullivan County, and is about seventy feet wide. Its name is from an Indian squaw-sachem called Basha Bashiba, who lived on its banks, near Westbrookville.* Old-dam Brook is the outlet of Little Pond. Its name is from an old dam erected upon it by Indians or beavers, which caused its waters to overflow a large tract of land. About half a mile above its junction with the Neversink, it falls over six hundred feet in the course of a mile, and is called Fall Brook.

The Wallkill rises in Wantage, Sussex Co., N. J., flows through the Drowned Lands into Orange, where it forms the dividing line between Warwick and Minisink, Goshen and Wawayanda, Hamptonburgh and Wallkill, passes through the town of Montgomery into Ulster County, and thence to the Hudson River at Rondout. Its course is northeast, the plane of elevation upon which it runs being from Sussex County in New Jersey, descending gradually to near Esopus in Ulster. It is a durable stream, and furnishes extensive hydraulic power throughout its course. Its current is not rapid, except at Walden, where it passes over a fall of about forty feet.† Its aboriginal name is not known, but the presumption is in favor of Warranawongkong. Its present name is unquestionably from the Huguenots or Walloons who settled New Paltz, it being repeatedly entered in the records as "the Walls or Paltz River."‡ Its principal branches are the Long-house-Wawayanda-Warwick-Pochuck Creek, Quaker Creek, Rutgers' Creek, Tinn Brock, McCorlin's Kill, Muddy Kill, and Dwaars Kill. Long-house Creek rises in New Jersey, and runs north until it receives the outlet of Wickham's Pond;

from thence it forms the Wawayanda or Warwick Creek, and flows southwest through the village of Warwick into New Jersey, where it becomes Pochuck Creek, returns to the county, and unites its waters with the Wallkill in the Drowned Lands. The names which it bears are explained in other connections, with the exception of "Long-house," the European title for the peculiar dwellings which the Indians occupied, one of which stood upon its banks.‡ Quaker Creek has its principal head in Thompson's Pond. It flows west, forms the boundary line between Goshen and Warwick, receives several small tributary streams, and unites with the Wallkill in the Drowned Lands. Rutgers' Creek has its extreme western head in the town of Greenville, flows thence southeasterly to Waterloo Mills, in Minisink; thence northeast to Rutgers' Place, where it unites with its northern head. The latter rises in Wallkill, flows thence south to Millsburgh, receiving in its course the outlet of Binnenwater Pond and Binnenwater Swamp, and Boudinot's and Tunkamoes ("small stream") Creeks, in Wawayanda and Minisink. From Millsburgh it is the boundary line between Wawayanda and Minisink. It enters the Wallkill at Merritt's Island. Its name is from Anthony Rutgers,|| one of the proprietors of the Wawayanda Patent, from whom also Rutgers' Place (the residence of the late Dr. M. H. Cash) takes its name. Boudinot's Creek,¶ its largest affluent, flows through Greenville to the southeast corner of Mount Hope, thence southeast to its junction in Wawayanda. Monhagen Creek flows southeast through Middletown and enters the Wallkill northeast from New Hampton. It is now the source from which Middletown is supplied with water. McCorlin's Kill, or McNeal's Kill, rises in Crawford, flows south, passes through Mechanictown, and enters the Wallkill one mile and a half above Stony-ford bridge. Dwaars Kill has its rise in the town of Wallkill, flows northeast through Crawford, and enters the Wallkill in Ulster County. Its name is Dutch (originally Dwaars Stroom), and means "a stream that ‡ These dwellings were formed by long, slender hickory saplings set in the ground in a straight line of two rows, as far asunder as they intended the width to be, and continued as far as they intended the length to be. The poles were then bent forward in the form of an arch and secured together, giving the appearance of a garden arbor. Split poles were then lashed to the sides and roof, and over these bark was placed. Rarely exceeding twenty feet in width, these dwellings were sometimes six hundred and fifty feet long, and were occupied by an indefinite number of families.

|| There is not the slightest foundation for the statement (Eager, 418) that Rutgers "is an English corruption of Rutkys, the Indian name." The latter is a corruption of the former, and a very bald one. Rutgers was a member of the Assembly, 1726-27.

¶ Mr. Eager enters the name "Bandegot." It now appears on the maps "Indigot." The correct orthography is Boudinot, from Elias Boudinot, a proprietor of the Wawayanda Patent. Boudinot would not have deemed it possible his name could be so transposed.

 Mr. Eager (346) gives the name "McCormick's Kill," and (354) "McCorlin's Kill." The latter has been entered on the maps of the county. We are informed that the stream was known years ago as "McNeal's Kill," from John McNeal, who had a grist-mill on it as early probably as 1760. McCorlin is a mythical person.

* Quinlan's "History of Sullivan County," 423. In the Swartwout Patent the stream is called the Assawaghkemeck, from "wassa," light or foaming, and "eck," rocks,—literally, the "light waters," reference being made to the fall. "Basha's Kil" is Dutch. "Basha's land" was one of the boundaries of the Minisink Patent, 1704. She was not a mythical character.

† The fall at Walden was called Hasdisch by the Indians,—a term in which "dangerous" is expressed.

‡ This explanation of the origin of the name by the Rev. James R. Wilson, D.D., is fully sustained by the records discovered since he wrote.

It may be added that, although now written Wallkill, the name is strictly two words, walle and kil. In this work the local orthography has been followed in Wallkill, Otterkill, etc., as being too firmly established to suffer correction. The word "creek," applied to a stream of water, is quite as incorrect as "kill;" yet Webster admits its use to be established "in some American States."

runs across" or unites "with another."* The Tinn Brock was called by the Indians Arackhook or Akhook, the Algonquin term for snake, the reference no doubt being to its extremely sinuous course, which resembles the contortions of a snake when thrown upon a fire. Its present name is from the Saxon words Thynne, "thin or small," and Broc, "running water less than a river,"—a small brook. It rises in New Windsor, south of Coldenham, but does not take its name until after it crosses the Cohecton turnpike, runs north and west, and enters the Walkill half a mile below Walden. Muddy Kill (Dutch, Modder Kil,—literally, Muddy Kill) flows from the eastern slope of the Comfort hills and runs south to the Walkill above Montgomery. The mischievous chorographer now writes its name "Mother Kill."

The Otterkill rises in the north part of Chester, and passes through the East Division of Goshen into Hamptonburgh, where it was called Denn Creek,† from Christopher Denn, one of the proprietors of the Wawayanda Patent. At La Grange it flows upon nearly the same level with the Walkill, the two streams being within a mile of each other at this point. Through Hamptonburgh it runs around the base of the hills in the form of a half circle; thence into Blooming-Grove, and in a serpentine course through Washingtonville to Salisbury Mills, where, meeting the mountain ledges, it passes over a fall into a deep chasm, which it follows through rocks and crags and continues to the Hudson. Its name is presumed to have been bestowed from the otters which were found in it at the early settlement of the county. Its largest tributaries are Cromeline Creek, Goldsmith Creek, Colemantown Creek, Beaver-dam Creek, Schunemunk Creek, Woodbury Creek, and Canterbury Brook. Cromeline Creek receives its principal head-waters from Little Long Pond, No. 2, in Monroe; flows thence through Chester and the western part of Blooming-Grove to its junction with the Otterkill in the northwest part of the latter town. Schunemunk Creek rises in the southeast part of Blooming-Grove; flows northwest and northeast around the hills, and joins the Otterkill above Washingtonville. On some maps it is called Satterly's Creek. Woodbury Creek has its principal head in Hazzard's Pond, in Monroe. It receives the outlet of Sutherland's Pond; flows northeast through Woodbury Clove, and enters the Otterkill at Orr's Mills, in Cornwall. Canterbury Brook rises in the Cornwall Highlands; flows northeast through the village of Canterbury, and enters the Otterkill (under the name of Idlewild Brook) near the Hudson. Goldsmith Creek rises in Little Britain and runs south to the Otterkill above Washingtonville; Colemantown Creek also flows south and enters above the same place. Beaver-dam Creek rises in Montgomery, and passes south through low meadows from near Goodwill Church to its junction at Campbell Hall. Its head-water is a spring of several yards in diameter and of unknown depth; its name is from an old beaver dam‡ near Campbell Hall. From its junction with Cromeline Creek east to the Hudson, the Otterkill loses its name and is called Murderer's Creek and the Moodna, the latter a Willisian designation. To the early Dutch traders it was known as the "Waoraneck;" subsequently, as the "Martelaer's Rack Creek;" after 1656, as "the Murderer's Creek." It is assumed by some writers that the latter was derived from its immediately preceding title, signifying a baffling, struggling reach or course in the navigation of the Hudson, bounded on the north by this creek and on the south by Martelaer's Rock, opposite West Point; by others, that it was bestowed as a memorial of some act of hostility by the Waoranecks during the early Indian wars; but superior, in local estimation, to philology or probability, is the explanation given by Paulding in his beautiful tradition of Naoman, his faithfulness and his fate, pointing unwaveringly to Maringoman as the author of a horrid massacre.§

Quassaick Creek is composed of the outlet of Orange Lake and of the Fostertown and Tent Stone Meadow Creeks. It flows southeasterly through the western part of the town of Newburgh, and forms the boundary line between the city of Newburgh and the town of New Windsor. Its name (Quassaick) signifies stony brook. Its water-power is very durable and is largely employed. Fostertown Creek rises in Ulster County, and flows southerly through the central part of the town of Newburgh. It is called Fostertown Creek until it reaches Gidneytown, when it takes the latter name. Tent Stone Meadow Creek rises in a large swamp in Ulster County, known many years ago as the Tent Stone Meadow. It flows southerly and empties into the Quassaick at the Powder Mills. Bushfield Creek, one of the feeders of Orange Lake, and necessarily of Quassaick Creek, rises in a swamp in Ulster County, known as the Stone Dam Meadow. Its original name was Beaver-dam Creek.

† From the remains of the dams which they constructed, the streams of the county apparently abounded in beavers at the time of the discovery, though now extinct.

‡ "In ancient Dutch days it was known as the Martelaer's Rack, or Martyr's Reach. The Dutch navigators divided the river into reaches, to which they gave descriptive names. They found here (West Point) a rocky point nearly at right angles with the current, and, when sailing with a fair west wind, encountered, on passing it, the wind 'dead ahead,' compelling them to beat or struggle with it. Hence the name Martelaer, signifying contending or struggling. The tradition which converts the name into a memorial of deeds of violence, on the part of the Indians, is entirely worthless."—J. J. Monell's Hand-book.

* "The Dwaars Stroom unites with or flows across the Walkill; hence the name indicates that fact or circumstance, and becomes the characteristic of the river."—Dr. E. B. O'Callaghan. The tradition given by Eager (334), that the name is from an Indian chief, has no other foundation than the possibility that there was an Indian nicknamed Dwass.

† The following from the Mapes' deed (1727) established the early use of both titles: "Lying on the west side of the Otterkill, known as the Dennekill." The latter may well be preserved as a memorial of the first settler on that part of the Wawayanda Patent.

The Ramapo River has its head in Round-island Pond in Monroe, and flows thence southerly through Ramapo Valley into Rockland County. It receives the outlets of thirteen of the mountain ponds already named: Round island, Summit, Slaughter's, Cranberry, No. 2, Greenwood, Round, Little Long, Cedar, Green, Car, Spruce, Truxedo, and Nigger. It enters the Passaic River near Pompton Plains, N. J. There is no stream in the world like it.

Poplopen's Creek is composed of the outlets of Poplopen's, Round, No. 1, Long, Bull, Cranberry, No. 1, and Two Ponds. Its course is southeast to the Hudson. Queensborough Brook and Sickbosten's Kill (now called Stony Brook) are its tributaries.

The tributaries of the Hudson, aside from those already named, are small streams, principally in Newburgh. The Neversink and the Shingle Kill flow into the Delaware in Deerpark,—the former at Carpenter's Point, and the latter at Honesville. Grassy-swamp Brook, in the same town, unites with the Mongaup; the latter unites with the Delaware about six miles northerly from Carpenter's Point. The Little Shawangunk Kill and the Big and Little Pakadasink are tributaries of the Shawangunk. One branch of the former rises half a mile easterly from the village of Mount Hope, and is met, about a mile east from that village, by a branch from the town of Wallkill; flows thence through the town northeasterly until it strikes the line of the town of Wallkill; thence northwest to its junction with the Shawangunk in the latter town. It was originally known as the "Little Pakadasink," as has been already stated. The present Big Pakadasink and Little Pakadasink are in the town of Crawford, and flow north to the Shawangunk. In the Crawford dialect they are called the Big and the Little "Paugh-caugh-naugh-sing," the most prolix orthography of the original name on record.

The islands of the Hudson lying opposite the lines of the county are Poleber's, now called Pallopel's; Martelaer's Rock, now Constitution, and Manahawagkin, now called Iona. Though not under the jurisdiction of the county, their position in its water-scapes entitles them to recognition in its topography.

CLIMATE.

Newburgh is in $41^{\circ} 30'$ north latitude, and is elevated one hundred and fifty feet above tide-water. From observations made for thirteen successive years, the mean temperature has been found to be $50^{\circ} 10'$. In Goshen, situated in latitude $41^{\circ} 20'$, and elevated four hundred and twenty-five feet above tide-water, observations made for eight years show a mean temperature of $49^{\circ} 16'$. Difference between Newburgh and Goshen ninety-four minutes. At Newburgh the period between frosts, though variable, has been known to be from the 5th of May to the 29th of September,—one hundred and forty-six days. At Goshen frosts have been noticed as late as the 1st of June, and as early as the 20th of September,—one hundred and eleven days. Difference between periods of frost, thirty-five days. At Newburgh the shadblush bloomed April 24th, the peach April 23d, the plum May 1st, the cherry April 27th, the apple May 6th; strawberries ripened June 10th; haying commenced July 4th; wheat harvest commenced July 17th; the first killing frost September 29th. At Goshen the shadblush bloomed April 27th, the peach April 28th, the plum May 4th, the cherry April 29th, and the apple May 9th; haying commenced July 8th; the wheat harvest July 21st; the first killing frost September 20th. The observations made at Newburgh show the temperature of the eastern part of the county, while those made at Goshen may be applied to the central. On the eastern slope of the Shawangunk range, representing the western part of the county, the temperature is from two to four degrees less than at Newburgh; at the top of the range full five degrees less.

The temperature of the eastern and southern portions of the county is affected in some degree by the shelter afforded in the mountain ranges; the former also by the tides of the Hudson. The Highlands, for many years exempt from taxation by reason of their unfitness for cultivation, are an incalculable advantage to Newburgh, New Windsor, and Cornwall; they effectually break the force of all winds save from the east-northeast. Thousands of invalids may be found in those towns, as permanent residents or as boarders, brought thither by this peculiarity in situation. The poet N. P. Willis, from his experience of twenty years as a consumptive, found no language too strong in which to commend the hygienic virtues of the Highlands. The entire mountain system of the county has more or less effect on its climate. In the economy of nature, currents of air gather around the ranges; are forced upward to a lower temperature, and precipitation ensues, while the atmospheric condensation produces a local heat beyond the natural temperature. For this reason most of the cloves are more temperate than their elevation and latitude would otherwise warrant; those opening towards the south especially so.

GEOLOGY, ETC.

Probably no county in the State presents more interesting geological features than Orange. The rocks of the Highlands are granite, gneiss, and sienite, with veins of trap. The central portions of the county are occupied with strata of Hamilton shales, Helderberg limestones and grit, Medina sandstone, and the gray sandstones, all extending from the northeast to the southwest, from the east foot of the Shawangunk Mountains. The rocks which compose the Shawangunk Mountains are the shales and the sand-stones of the Chemung group. The red shales and grits of the Catskill group are seen at the falls of the Shingle Kill in Deerpark. The Erie division are found from the Delaware River, along the west side of Mamakating Hollow. Some of the rocks of this division, near Port Jervis, are upturned at a high angle; others, towards Cuddebackville and Ellenville, are more indurated and seem almost trappean. The geological series descend southwest to the primary rocks of the Pochuck Mountains. The Helderberg division extends through the county, on the Mamakating Valley, by Cuddebackville, to Carpenter's Point on the Delaware. The limestones of this division are all upturned, often at a very high angle, in the town of Deerpark, where they form a range of low mountains, rising from the level of the Never-sink to half the elevation of the Shawangunk. A limestone, containing fossils of this division, is also found in the town of Cornwall, between the village of Canterbury and Salisbury Mills. Its position is between the slate and grit rock; its dip is to the southeast.

The Shawangunk grit of the Ontario division extends on the top of the Shawangunk Mountains from New Jersey to near Kingston. The thickness of these grits varies from sixty to one hundred and fifty feet. They have been used as millstones, known as "Esopus millstones."* A pyritous grit, in the form of boulders, is scattered over the county. Rocks similar in character to the Shawangunk grit, and the interstratified and overlaying red rocks, extend from the Jersey line on the west side of Greenwood Lake northeast to Canterbury in Cornwall. They are also found at Pine Hill. This hill is primitive, and here the grit rock inclines against it and rests upon it. The grit rock is regularly stratified, and dips to the southeast; is of all colors from white to red. It extends from Round Hill four miles, to Woodcock Mountain. It is also found in the southeast base of Schunemunk, interstratified with graywacke and slate; also at Pine Hill. Here the rock is red, and can be quarried in blocks suitable for building. The Bellvale Mountains, in Warwick, on the southeast side, are composed of graywacke; also the Schunemunk in Blooming-Grove, the Goose-pond Mountain, and the Sugar-loaf. Quarries of blue and red stone abound in Schunemunk and Pine Hill.

In the Champlain division is the "Hudson River series—slate group,"—which consists of slates, shales, grits, limestones, breccias, and conglomerates,—sometimes designated as graywacke slate, graywacke shale, graywacke, and slaty graywacke. They contain facets and testacea, of which a few are seen at the falls of the Wallkill, near Walden, at Orange Lake, and at Sugar-loaf. The Hudson River group of rocks occupies a large extent of the surface of the county. Its general direction is northeast and southwest. Its dip is uniform to the southeast, in some places thirty degrees, in others nearly vertical. It extends from the Hudson River through Warwick to the Jersey line, and on the west side of the Wallkill, from New Jersey to Ulster County; and in all this range there is no rock resting upon it. It forms the bank of the Hudson River from Cornwall Landing to four miles above Newburgh, and it is always seen stratified with graywacke and graywacke slate. In this form it is found at Walden, below Montgomery, in Mount Hope, at Newburgh, and towards Hampton. In the town of Warwick, near the Jersey line, it forms a cuneiform termination, the limestone surrounding it on both sides. From this the argillite widens into an elevated ridge of rich land, called Long Ridge, which extends into Goshen. It forms the surface rock of most of Goshen, Blooming-Grove, parts of Cornwall, New Windsor, Newburgh, Montgomery, Hamptonburgh, Crawford, Wallkill, and in Mount Hope and Minisink, quite to the top of the Shawangunk Mountains. The Utica slate is found on the banks of the Hudson, above Newburgh. It is of dark color, and in some places black, and highly carbonaceous.

The Trenton limestone is found near Mount Lookout; also in the town of Hamptonburgh, where it is full of the fossil shells of the very early periods of animal life. In that neighborhood it is called the "Neelytown limestone." Black River limestone is found a few miles from Goshen, Mount Lookout being entirely composed of it. It is also found on Big Island, in the Drowned Lands, on Pochuck Neck, and in Minisink west of the Drowned Lands. A blue limestone, sometimes sparry and checkered, commences on the bank of the Hudson at Hampton; it is about one mile in width northwest and southeast, and passes southwesterly through Newburgh into New Windsor, disappearing in the vicinity of Washington Lake. The elevated point of this rock at Hampton is in the vicinity of the Dans Kammer. It is also found east of Salisbury Mills in Cornwall, and is visible through Blooming-Grove and Warwick to the State line; also in the north part of Monroe, north of Greenwood Furnace, and extends southwest to near Greenwood Lake; also in Cornwall, near Ketcham's Mill, and in Goshen, two and a half miles from the village, extending from the Wallkill southwest to Glenmere. The western edge of this bed underlays the Drowned Lands, and passes along the northwestern margin of the white limestone of Warwick; here it divides into two branches on each side of the primitive rock, and passes into New Jersey. This limestone also interlocks with the argillite ridges, as at near Goshen. Limestone of the oolitic character is found on Big Island, near New Milford, and on Pochuck Neck. The edges of that found in some perpendicular cliffs at the latter place are exposed in layers one above the other; some are of the usual character; others are oolitic, but the round granules are bluish-white quartz; others slaty, approaching the calciferous state, and others are of a ribbon-like appearance.

* These millstones were the first that were quarried in the province, and were regarded as superior to those imported from Europe.

Below the New York transition system lies the "Taconic system," consisting of slates, limestones, and granular quartz rocks. Slate rocks of this system are found four miles north of Newburgh, near a small hill of granite rock. The limestone between the Highlands and Goose-pond Mountain, and also about Bellvale, belong to this system. Metamorphic rocks consist of limestones that are granular, dolomitized, and stratified,—color, white, blue, and red; of slates that are talcose, argillaceous, micaceous, and hornblende; and of sandstones that are changed to granular quartz rocks, eurite, and gneiss. In their several deposits all the changes from the gray and blue limestone are traced into the perfect crystallized limestone, containing the various crystallized minerals, which give them their metamorphic character. There is a white limestone of this variety ranging from Mounts Adam and Eve, in Warwick, to Andover, in New Jersey. It is developed in a succession of narrow ridges of only a few rods in width, and is separated by masses of other rocks of granite, sienite, and granular quartz. Hornblende rock and augite are scattered all around. This white limestone is rarely stratified, and in some places runs into the blue and gray limestone, which is fossiliferous in some instances and oolitic in others. The white limestone forms the shore of the Drowned Lands at Amity. In some localities it is snow-white, translucent, and compact, like Parian marble. Plumbago and mica are found in it, and also a great variety of minerals. Northeast of the Amity church, on a small knoll, are found calcareous spar, rhomb spar, yellow brucite, xanthite, talc, black and ruby spinelle, cocolite. About one mile southwest of Amity is specular iron ore and serpentine; veins of scapolite are found southwest of this place, and about a mile north the limestone is filled with brucite of various colors, magnetic oxide of iron, hornblende, and serpentine. At the south base of Mount Eve, in an old mine-hole, fine crystals of green and brown hornblende are found. At another place is a vein of arsenical iron. The same kind of limestone is found near Fort Montgomery, in the Highlands (in the gorge through which the creek passes into the Hudson), at or near Forest of Dean; thence it is traced by way of Little Round Pond towards Greenwood Furnace and across the Ramapo. It is also seen southwest of Queensborough Furnace in limited extent. These beds also contain the minerals above named.

The primary rocks of the county consist of gneiss and hornblende granite, sienite, limestone, serpentine, augite, and trappean. Among these rocks there are no continuous ridges of mountains of more than a few miles in length, in consequence of the interruptions caused by the dislocations and the lateral upheavals of masses of the strata. Ridge succeeds ridge, each of which runs out and diminishes until it disappears below the rocks of a more recent origin.

The primitive rocks extend from Butter Hill to Fort Montgomery, thence along the line of the county to New Jersey, thence to Pochuck Mountain, embracing a large part of the towns of Warwick, Monroe, Highlands, and Cornwall; part of New Windsor, Newburgh, Blooming-Grove, and the south part of Goshen. Woodcock Mountain, Round Hill, Peddler Hill, Goose-Pond Mountain, Sugar-loaf and Sugar-loaf Mate, Brimstone Hill, Muchattoes Hill, Mount Adam, Mount Eve, and Pochuck Mountain, are composed of this series.

Granite is found at the foot of Butter Hill suitable for quarrying; sienite at West Point, on the east side of Bear Mountain, and at the base of Butter Hill. Gneiss abounds in all the Highlands, and has been quarried at Butter Hill, Cro'-nest, West Point, Buttermilk Falls, and between that and Fort Montgomery. Mica slate, or micaceous gneiss, is found one mile north of Fort Montgomery, and at the foot of Cro'-nest. Augite rock is found between West Point and Round Pond; also in Monroe, south of Cedar Pond; near Slaughter's Pond, Green Pond, and Mom-basha Pond, and near the O'Neil, Forshee, Clove, Rich, and Forest of Dean mines. Greenstone trap is found near Truxedo Pond. Granular greenstone is found at Cro'-nest and at Butter Hill. Hornblende rock is found in large strata, and quartz rock is in every hill and mountain of the Highlands. In the town of Monroe is a bed of the latter four rods wide rising fifteen feet above the gneiss on each side. Serpentine is found at the O'Neil and at the Forshee mine, and there is a large bed of it in the town of Warwick. Crystallized serpentine is also found in Warwick in the white limestone. Scapolite is found at Amity; also, blende of minute, red, brilliant prisms, with adamantine lustre. Yellow garnet is found at Edenville. A species of soapstone is found at the Clove mine in Monroe; magnetic pyrites, mica, and hornblende, at the Rich iron-mine. Large sheets of mica are found southwest of the Forshee mine. In the latter mine are found beautiful red garnet, brown tremoline, cocolite, and umber. The O'Neil mine abounds with a great variety of beautiful minerals, among which are crystallized magnetic ore of great brilliancy and beauty, magnetic pyrites, copper pyrites, carbonate of copper, serpentine, amianthus, asbestos, brown spar, rhombic spar, augite, cocolite, feldspar, and mica.

West of the village of Canterbury is a bed of hematite ore, on the late Townsend farm. Two beds of arsenical iron are found in Warwick: one in a vein near Mount Adam, and the other near Edenville. The latter contains arsenical pyrites of a white silver color, in connection with arsenic, sulphur, and iron; also red oxide of iron. This vein is connected with the white limestone. An ore of titanium is also found in Warwick, associated with augite and scapolite. An ore of cerium occurs near Fort Montgomery.

The primitive rocks of the Highlands abound in ore of the magnetic oxide of iron. The granite gneiss more generally contains it in layers having the lines and bearing of the rock. At West Point the ore is associated with hornblende. Meek's mine, Kronkite's mine, Round Pond mine, Forest of Dean mine, Long mine, Patterson mine, Mountain mine, and a group of mines around it, and Crossway mine, all abound in this ore, of rich quality. A bed of titaniferous iron ore is located on the east side of Bear Hill; magnetic ore at the lower landing at Fort Montgomery, mixed with the sulphuret of iron; also at the place called Queensborough ore-bed, within a mile or two of Queensborough Furnace. In several localities of the Shawangunk grits are found veins of lead. Beds of lead ore have been opened at Eden-ville, and also in the towns of Deerpark and Mount Hope.* Zinc ore has also been found, exceeding in quality the lead. A copper-mine was opened near Otisville in 1866, and worked for about a year, showing good ore but in small quantities.

The mines which have been opened in the beds described, and some of which have been named in other connections, are the Stirling mine, in Monroe, opened in 1781.† Its ore is very sound and strong, and has been much used for cannon. Part of its ore is bare, and part of it slightly covered with soil and rocks. It embraces a surface of about thirty acres. One and a half miles southwest of the Stirling is the Belcher mine, supposed to be a prolongation of the Stirling mine. Long mine and Red mine are farther south; the ores of the latter are magnetic and full of pyrites. East of Stirling Pond are the Mountain mine, the Crossway mine, and the Patterson mine. About a mile south of the village of Monroe is the Clove mine, the ore of which is magnetic, granular, and compact; a portion of it soft, in a black powder, and can be taken out with a shovel. Southeast of the Clove is the O'Neil mine, in the midst of granitic gneiss and sienite. Half a mile southwest of this is the Forshee mine, permeating the whole hill upon which it is located. About five miles southeast of Monroe is the Rich mine, the ore of which is strongly magnetic, rich, and abundant. The Smith mine is between Cro'-nest and Butter Hill; its ore is a native magnet; it has not been worked of late years. The Townsend mine of hematite ore is in Cornwall, about two miles and a half west from Canterbury. Its ore is lean, but makes excellent iron. It is mostly in powder or small fragments, mixed with balls of the hematite of a few pounds' weight. Forest of Dean mine was opened as early probably as 1761. It lies west from Fort Montgomery. The Queensborough‡ mine lies south from Forest of Dean; it has not been worked to any extent. Greenwood mine, in Monroe, lies north of the Erie road. Its yield is consumed by Greenwood Furnace.

Traditions of lead, tin, silver, and even gold mines, in the Highlands, are quite prevalent, while on the Schunemunk range and in other places the carbonaceous slates have been pretty thoroughly examined from presumed indications of veins of coal. The early European adventurers evidently made a very complete examination of the entire district in the hope of striking the precious ores. Some magnificent magnetic pyrites, however, was their only reward, as it has been of equally sanguine but more recent searchers.

The soils of the county vary with the geological features of the different sections. The district known as the primary, in most of its higher elevations, is not susceptible of cultivation, owing to the rough and broken state of the surface and the naked character of the rocks. At the base of the Highlands are outcropping hills, and the surface, though broken, is productive, and in many instances presents beautiful farms. In the district of the Hudson system of slates and limestones, though irregular and broken, its slaty or shaly beds and sandstone and limestone rocks furnish a soil favorable to the growth of grain and grass. Above the Highlands this district diverges from the river to the southwest quite into the State of New Jersey. No part rises into mountains, yet there are steep bluffs, but not higher than three hundred feet. West of this lies the belt of land to the Shawangunk Mountains, stretching across the county from Crawford to the Jersey line, in which the soil partakes of the grits and shales of this series, giving peculiar features and qualities to the surface.

In this connection it may be remarked that the most striking feature of the Shawangunk range, as presented to the eye, is the fact that the surface of its eastern or southeastern slope bears abundant evidence that the great glacial or ice age witnessed the passage from it of an enormous glacier, which ground up the rocks until the soil was produced which is now so highly cultivated, while its western or northwestern slopes remain rocky and untillable, bearing nothing but forest-trees and minerals. This peculiarity exists in the range even beyond the limits of the county; and the glacier marks, so plainly visible, afford a means of judging of the kind of plow that dug out the beds and valleys of the Wallkill and the Shawangunk Kill.

* The principal lead-mines that have been opened are in Mount Hope and Deerpark. They are known as the Erie, at Guyard; the Walkill, two and a half miles northeast of Guyard; the Champion, Washington, Mammoth, Mount Hope, and Central. Of these, but two, the Erie and the Walkill, have ever been extensively worked. The lead of the Erie mine is argentiferous, and at times the yield of silver pays running expenses, leaving the lead a clear profit. The works are within a few rods of the Erie Railroad.

† The Stirling iron-works were established in 1751. This mine was discovered in 1780 and opened in 1781. The works are now connected with the Erie road by a branch from Stirling Junction.

‡ Queensborough mine takes its name from a tract of one thousand four hundred and thirty-seven acres granted to Gabriel and William Ludlow, Oct. 18, 1731, and to which they gave the name. The name is now frequently but wrongly written Queensbury; the suffix should be borough, signifying, in its application, Queen's Hill.

Throughout the county the existence of large masses of boulders, the origin of which can only be referred to distant places, furnishes evidence that in many sections the soil has been the result of drift deposits. Below the city of Newburgh, the drift bed, containing boulders and pebbles that are scratched, overlies the abraded rocks, and is in turn overlaid by clay beds, sand, and gravel, in regular courses. Boulders, erratic blocks, and scratched rocks abound on the Highlands. The boulders are formed mostly of granites and gneiss; occasionally one of graywacke, showing unmistakably its transportation from a great distance; their accompanying friable deposits now enrich the mountain cloves. Aside from their contributions to the soil, many of the drift deposits are valuable,—the sand for casting or moulding, smoothing and rubbing stones used in lithography, blotting sand, and for mortar and glass; the clays, for pottery and brick.

The soil of the plateau adjoining the Hudson, forming a semicircle from the Highlands to the Dans Kammer, is gravelly, sandy, clayey,—a mixture forming a warm and fertile loam. The surface rises gradually to Orange Lake, then descends to the Wallkill. The soil of the Wallkill Valley is peculiarly rich and fertile. Much of it is alluvium, intermingled with clay, sand, and gravel. In the town of Wallkill the soil is more diversified; in some places it is clayey and of no great depth above the rock; in others gravelly, and again sandy and elevated. Through Goshen and Warwick it partakes more of clay and sand loam, with slight intervals of gravel. Approximating the State line, the primitive formations of Mount Adam, Mount Eve, and Pochuck Mountain change the constituents, but not to detract from its fertility. Some of the most rich and productive soils in the county are found in the islands of the Drowned Lands. West of the Wallkill Valley the soil is affected in its constituents by the Shawangunk range of mountains, and is generally a clayey loam, well adapted to grass. In some parts it becomes slaty and warm; in others it is shaly and covered with fragments of rocks. In Deerpark is a range of soil, brought down from the adjacent hills and upper country, that is very fertile and easy of cultivation; and, though it has been under the plow nearly two centuries, it still ranks with the most productive lands of the State. The valley of the Otterkill is a sandy and gravelly loam, partly alluvial.

CHAPTER V.

MILITARY HISTORY—FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR—WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

THE military history of the county obliges us to return again to a recognition of the territory from which it was taken, being component parts of Ulster and Orange. At best the earliest militia rolls are imperfect. They serve, however, as far as they go, to show organizations, and, inferentially, the names of pioneer settlers. Beginning with that portion of the county which was taken from Ulster, we find that the first military organization within its limits was made prior to 1738, and was composed of two companies of the regiment of which A. Gaasbeck Chambers was colonel, Wessel Ten Broeck lieutenant-colonel, Coenradt Elmendorf major, and Cornelius Elmendorf quartermaster.* The first of these companies was known as "The Foot Company of Military of the Precinct of the Highlands;" the second as "The Company of Militia of the Wall a Kill." The following were their muster-rolls in 1738:

"June 20, 1738."

The Ulster regiment was divided, in 1756, into two regiments, the first (or northern) embracing Kingston, etc., and the second (or southern) embracing the precincts of Highlands, Wallkill, and Shawangunk, and in this form took part in the French and Indian war of 1656. In September, 1773, the southern regiment was under the following officers, viz.: Thomas Ellison, colonel; Charles Clinton, lieutenant-colonel; Cadwallader Colden, Jr., major; and Johannes Jansen, adjutant. The first company in the regiment was located in Newburgh, and was composed as follows, viz.: Jonathan Hasbrouck, captain; Samuel Sands, first lieutenant; Wolvert Acker, second lieutenant; Cornelius Hasbrouck, ensign; four sergeants, four corporals, one drummer, and one hundred and forty-one privates.*

What changes, if any, occurred in the Orange County regiment cannot be stated, except inferentially. It appears to have been divided, the companies of which Abraham Haring and Jacob Vanderbilt were captains forming the nucleus of a regiment in the Orangetown district (now Rockland).

On the 22d of August, 1775, the Provincial Congress of New York passed a law under which the militia of the Revolution was organized. This law provided that counties, cities, and precincts should be divided by their respective local committees, so that in each district a company should be formed "ordinarly to consist of about eighty-three able-bodied and effective men, officers included, between sixteen and fifty years of age;" the officers to consist of one captain, two lieutenants, one ensign, four sergeants, four corporals, one clerk, one drummer, and one fifer. The several companies so formed were directed to be "joined into regiments, each regiment to consist of not less than five nor more than ten companies," which should be commanded by "one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, two majors, an adjutant, and a quartermaster." The regiments were to be classed in six brigades, under "a brigadier-general and a major of brigade," and the entire force was to be under the command of one major-general.*

When the organization was perfected, the counties of Ulster and Orange formed the fourth brigade, under Brig.-Gen. George Clinton.† This brigade was composed of five regiments in Orange County, commanded respectively by William Allison, of Goshen, Jesse Woodhull, of Cornwall, John Hathorn, of Warwick, A. Hawkes Hay, of Orangetown, and Abm. Lent, of Haverstraw; and of four regiments in Ulster County, commanded respectively by Johannes Hardenbergh, of Kingston, James Clinton, of New Windsor, Levi Pauling, of Marbletown, and Jonathan Hasbrouck, of Newburgh. Territorially, our inquiry is confined to Col. Allison's, Col. Hathorn's, and Col. Woodhull's regiments in Orange, and Col. Hasbrouck's and Col. Clinton's regiments in Ulster, although it will be understood that Col. Hay's and Col. Lent's regiments were in what was then Orange County. The territory in Col. Allison's regimental district included Goshen and the western part of the county; Col. Hathorn's embraced Warwick and the southern settlements; Col. Woodhull's embraced Cornwall (then including Monroe and part of Blooming-Grove); Col. Hasbrouck's embraced Newburgh, Marlborough, and Shawangunk; and Col. Clinton's embraced New Windsor, Montgomery, Crawford, and Walkill. The rosters and muster-rolls of the regiment cannot be obtained, and all information in reference to them is fragmentary.

COL. ALLISON'S GOSHEN REGIMENT, 1776.

Benjamin Tusten, lieutenant-colonel.

Goshen Co.—1775—George Thompson, captain; Joseph Wood and Coe Gale, lieutenants; Daniel Everett, Jr., ensign. 1776—William Thompson, second lieutenant, and Phineas Case, ensign, vice Coe Gale and Daniel Everett, Jr., transferred to Minute Company under Capt. Moses Hatfield.

Warawanda Co.—1775—William Blair, captain; Thomas Wisner and Thomas Sayne, Jr., lieutenants; Richard Johnson, ensign.

Drowned Lands Co.—1775—Samuel Jones, Jr., captain; Peter Gale and Jacob Dunning, lieutenants; Samuel Webb, ensign.

* Proc. Prov. Conv., 104, 114, etc.

† This brigade should not be confused with the special brigade which was organized under Gen. Clinton in August, 1776, which was composed of "all levies raised and to be raised in the counties of Westchester, Dutchess, Orange, and Ulster" (Proc. Prov. Conv., 563), nor with the commission issued to him by the Continental Congress in March, 1777.

Chester Co.—1775—John Jackson, captain; John Wood and James Miller, lieutenants; James Parshal, ensign.

Pochuck Co.—1775—Ebenezer Owen, captain; Increase Holly and John Bronson, lieutenants; David Rogers, ensign. 1776—Increase Holly, captain; David Rogers and James Wright, lieutenants; Charles Knapp, ensign.

West Side, Walkill Co.—1775—Gilbert Bradner, captain; Joshua Davis and James Dolsen, lieutenants; Daniel Finch, ensign.

Minisink Co.—1775—Moses Kortright, captain; John Van Tile and Johannes Decker, lieutenants; Ephraim Medaugh, ensign. 1777—Mertinus Decker, second lieutenant, vice Johannes Decker.

COL. HATHORN'S FLORIDA REGIMENT.

John Hathorn, colonel.

Warwick Co.—1775—Charles Beardsley, captain; Richard Welling and Samuel Lobdell, lieutenants; John Price, ensign. 1776—John Minthorn, captain, vice Beardsley, deceased; Nathl. Ketcham and George Vance, lieutenants; John Benedict, ensign.

Pond Co.—1775—Henry Wisner, Jr., captain; Abm. Dolson, Jr., and Peter Bartholf, lieutenants; Matthew Dolson, ensign. 1776—Abm. Dolson, Jr., captain; Peter Bartholf and John Hopper, lieutenants; Mathias Dolson, ensign. 1777—Peter Bartholf, captain; John De Bow and Anthony Finn, lieutenants; Joseph Jewell, ensign.

Sterling Co.—1776—John Norman, captain; Solomon Finch and William Fitzgerald, lieutenants; Elisha Bennett, ensign. 1777—Henry Townsend, captain; William Fitzgerald and Elisha Bennett, lieutenants; Joseph Conkling, ensign.

Florida Co.—1775—Nathaniel Elmer, captain; John Popino, Jr., and John Sayre, lieutenants; Richard Bailey, ensign. 1776—John Kennedy, lieutenant, vice Popino. 1777—John Sayre, captain; John Kennedy and Richard Bailey, lieutenants; John Wood, ensign.

Wantag Co.—1775—Daniel Rosekrans, captain; James Clark and Jacob Gale, lieutenants; Samuel Cole, ensign.

COL. WOODHULL'S CORNWALL REGIMENT.

Jesse Woodhull, colonel.

Elihu Marvin, lieutenant-colonel.

Nathaniel Strong, Zachariah Du Bois, majors.

William Moffat, adjutant.

Nathaniel Satterly, quartermaster.

Oxford Co.—1775—Archibald Little, captain; Birdseye Youngs, first lieutenant; Thomas Horton, second lieutenant; Nathan Marvin, ensign. Formerly commanded by Capt. Elihu Marvin, promoted lieutenant-colonel. 1777—Thomas Horton, captain; Josiah Seeley, first lieutenant; Nathan Marvin, second lieutenant; Barnabas Horton, Jr., ensign.

Clove Co.—1775—Jonathan Tuthill, captain; John Brewster, Jr., first lieutenant; Samuel Strong, second lieutenant; Francis Brewster, ensign. Formerly commanded by Capt. Jesse Woodhull.

Bethlehem Co.—1775—Christopher Van Duzer, captain; William Roe, first lieutenant; Obadiah Smith, second lieutenant; Isaac Tobias, ensign. 1776—Gilbert Weeks, ensign.

Upper Clove Co.—1775—Garret Miller, captain; Asa Buck, first lieutenant; William Horton, second lieutenant; Aaron Miller, ensign. A new company, being part of the company formerly commanded by Capt. Austin Smith.

Woodbury Clove Co.—1775—Francis Smith, captain; Thomas Smith, first lieutenant; Alexander Galloway, second lieutenant; John McManus, ensign. 1776—John McManus, second lieutenant; Thos. Lammoureux, ensign.

Southwest Co.—1775—Stephen Slote, captain; George Galloway, first lieutenant; John Brown, second lieutenant; David Rogers, ensign. A new company.

Blooming-Grove Co.—1775—Silas Pierson, captain; Joshua Brown, first lieutenant; David Reeve, second lieutenant; Phineas Heard, ensign. Formerly commanded by Capt. Phineas Rumsey.†

Light-Horse Co.—1776—Ebenezer Woodhull, captain; James Sayre, lieutenant; William Heard, cornet; Azariah Martin, second master.

† At the meeting to reorganize the company there were two tickets,—the one given above and one on which Phineas Rumsey was named for captain, John Vail for first lieutenant, and John W. Tuthill for second lieutenant. It was claimed that the latter received the most votes.—American Archives, vol. iii. 627.

Wallkill—Second Co.—1775—William Faulkner, Jr., captain; Edward McNeal, first lieutenant; John Wilkins, second lieutenant; John Faulkner, ensign. Company located on west side of Wallkill, "between the said Wallkill and the Little Shawangunk Kill."
Wallkill—Third Co.—1775—Isaiah Velie, captain; Israel Wickham, first lieutenant; John Dunning, second lieutenant; Jonathan Owen, ensign. Company located between the Wallkill and the Little Shawangunk, to the southward of Capt. Faulkner's company district.
Wallkill—Fourth Co.—1775—William Denniston, captain; Benjamin Velie, first lieutenant; Joseph Gillet, second lieutenant; David Corwin, Jr., ensign. Company located to the northwest of Little Shawangunk Kill.

There were, of course, many changes in these commands during the Revolution, but of which we have found no record. The duties specially assigned to the active members of the militia were, "in case of any alarm, invasion, or insurrection;" to immediately repair, "properly armed and accoutred," to the habitations of the captains of the companies to which they belonged, or to a duly appointed rendezvous. Captains were required to march their companies, when thus assembled, "to oppose the enemy, and at the same time send off an express to the commanding officer of the regiment or brigade," who was in turn required "to march with the whole or part of his command," as he should judge necessary. By the law of 1778, those "who, in ordinary circumstances would be exempt," were organized in companies to repel invasions and suppress insurrections.

During the early years of the war of the Revolution the militia was kept in a state of demoralization by the formation of

SPECIAL ORGANIZATIONS AND CONTINENTAL REGIMENTS.

The first of the special militia organizations was that known as Minute Men, which was formally recommended by the Continental Congress to the several provinces for adoption in May, 1775. Under the militia bill of August 22d, the Provincial Convention of New York accepted the plan, and provided "that after the whole militia" was formed, in the manner already detailed, "every fourth man of each company" should be "selected for minute men" of such persons as were willing to enter into that "necessary service." The persons thus selected were to be organized in companies and elect officers, except in cases where an entire company of any regiment should offer its services, when it was to be commanded by the officers already chosen. The companies were to be organized in regiments under officers corresponding with those of the regular militia, and the manner in which they were called out was similar; but they were required to meet in subdivisions for military drill at least four hours in each week, and in companies for the same purpose at least four hours every fortnight, and when in service were subject to the orders of officers of the Continental army, and entitled to the "same allowance, as to pay and provisions, with the Continental forces." The plan, however, was not satisfactory in its operation, and it was abolished in June, 1776. In the mean time the provisions of the law were generally complied with. In the southern district of Ulster three companies were raised, viz.:

Newburgh Minute Co.—Uriah Drake, captain; Jacob Lawrence, first lieutenant; William Ervin, second lieutenant; Thomas Dunn, ensign.
New Windsor Minute Co.—Samuel Logan, captain; John Robinson, ensign; David Mandeville and John Scofield, sergeants.
Hanover Minute Co.—Peter Hill, captain; James Latta, first lieutenant; Nathaniel Hill, second lieutenant; William Goodyier, ensign.

With a company organized in Marlborough a regimental organization was effected, of which Thomas Palmer was colonel; Thos. Johnston, Jr., lieutenant-colonel; Arthur Parks, first major; Samuel Logan, second major; Isaac Belknap, quartermaster. Companies were also organized in Goshen, Cornwall, etc.,

* These returns are not of official record. The original rolls from which they are taken were accidentally discovered in a quantity of old paper sent to market in 1864. Of their genuineness there is not the slightest doubt.

† Prior to the organization of this company two companies had existed in New Windsor, attached to Col. Ellison's regiment, one in New Windsor Village and one in Little Britain,—the former commanded by Capt. William Ellison, who was superseded by Nicoll. Of the old Little Britain company, James McClaughry was captain, George Denniston, lieutenant, and John Burnet, James Humphrey, James Faulkner, Jacob Newkirk, Richard Wood, William Telford, Samuel Logan, James Kernaghan, and Alexander Beatty among its members.

and a regiment formed, of which Isaac Nicoll was colonel; Gilbert Cooper, lieutenant-colonel; Henry V. Verbeyck, first major; Hezekiah Howell, Jr., second major; Ebenezer Woodhull, adjutant; Nehemiah Carpenter, quartermaster.* The companies organized for this regiment were:

Cornwall Minute Co.—Thomas Moffat, captain; Seth Marvin, first lieutenant; James Little, second lieutenant; Nathan Strong, ensign, succeeded by William Bradley.

Goshen Minute Co.—Moses Hetfield, captain; Cole Gale, and Daniel Everett, lieutenants. At another date, James Butler and William Barker named as lieutenants, and William Carpenter, ensign.

The second special organization of the militia included the several drafts made to reinforce the army at different times. The first draft occurred in June, 1776, when four battalions were organized for service in the vicinity of New York City, to which Orange County sent three companies and Ulster four, as part of Gen. John Morin Scott's brigade. The second draft was made in July, 1776, and embraced one-fourth of the militia under command of Cols. Isaac Nicoll and Levi Pauling, the whole constituting a brigade under Gen. George Clinton. The third draft was in September, 1776, for six hundred men to reinforce the garrison at Forts Clinton and Montgomery, of which number sixty-two were drawn from Col. Hasbrouck's regiment, and the whole placed under command of Johannes Snyder. Details in regard to the officers and privates in these and subsequent drafts are not of record, but it is known that under them the militia were in varying numbers almost constantly employed.

On the 23d of July, 1776, companies of Rangers were authorized for the protection of the inhabitants of the northern and western frontiers of the province. These companies were to hold themselves in constant readiness for service, with a view especially to prevent the incursions of Indians and Tories, but were to be confined entirely to the counties in which they were raised, unless by mutual consent of the committees of adjoining counties, or unless otherwise directed by the convention. Three companies were organized in Ulster County, under Capts. Isaac Belknap, of Newburgh, Jacob R. DeWitt, of Deerpark, and Elias Hasbrouck, of Kingston. Capt. Belknap's company was composed (Oct. 7, 1776) as follows:

The first active service of the company was under the direction of the Committee of Safety at Fishkill. In February, 1777, it was attached to Governor Clinton's brigade, and was thereafter kept busy in the Highlands.† The organization was abandoned, March, 1777.

The first New York, or "Continental" regiments as they were called, were constituted in 1775 for the term of six months. These regiments were four in number, and were commanded respectively by Alex. McDougall, Goosé Van Schaick, James Clinton, and James Holmes. Col. Clinton's regiment (the third) was largely composed of Orange and Ulster County men, the district embraced in the present county of Orange furnishing two companies, viz.: Capt. Daniel Denton's, of Goshen, and Capt. John Nicholson's, of New Windsor. The regiments were in the expedition against Canada in the fall and winter of 1775. On the 8th of January, 1776, the Continental Congress issued its first formal call for troops for the purpose of reinforcing the army in Canada. Under this call New York furnished one battalion, of which Col. Van Schaick was continued in command. On the 19th of January of the same year the second call was issued, under which New York was required to furnish four battalions "to garrison the several forts of the colony from Crown Point to the southward, and to prevent depredations upon Long Island, and promote the safety of the whole." These battalions were assigned to the command of Alex. McDougall, James Clinton, Rudolphus Ritzema, and Philip Van Cortlandt. The quota of Orange County was two companies, and that of Ulster three companies, which were filled in April following, the companies being Capt. Daniel Denton's, of Goshen, Capt. Amos Hutchins', of Orangetown, and Capt. William Roe's, of Cornwall, from Orange County, and Capt. John Belknap's, of New Windsor, Capt. William Jackson's, of Montgomery, and Capt. Cornelius Hardenburgh's, of Hurley, from Ulster County. Capt. Roe's company was in excess of the quota. Denton's and Hutchins' companies were in Ritzema's regiment, and the other companies in Clinton's regiment. On the 16th of September the Continental Congress issued its third call for troops, under which New York was required to furnish four battalions "to serve during the war." These battalions were the first of their class, and were placed under the command of Cols. Goosé Van Schaick, Philip Van Cortlandt, Peter Gansevort, and Henry B. Livingston. Ulster furnished three companies to Col. James Gansevort's regiment, of which Capt. James Greggs', of New Windsor, was one, and one company—Capt. William Jackson's, of Montgomery—to Col. Livingston's regiment. In July previous, the Continental Congress authorized a commission to Maj. Lewis DuBois, of Col. Hasbrouck's regiment of militia, to raise a battalion "for three years or the war," but the Convention of New York objected, and the matter was held in abeyance. Now, however, the Convention asked authority to recruit a fifth battalion, of which Maj. DuBois should have the command, and, the request being granted, the battalion was commissioned. While more or less mixed by general recruiting, this battalion was regarded as the battalion of the district the history of which we are considering. It was ordered to garrison Fort Montgomery in March, and was on duty there in the action of October, 1777, when it sustained a heavy loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners. Its field-officers were:

† Jour. Prov. Conv., 536, 813, etc. The names of the members of Capt. Belknap's company are from a memorandum-book found among his papers, and are no doubt correct. The same book contains a diary of the services of the company during the month of October, 1776, from which it appears that its first muster for duty was at the house of Mrs. Ann DuBois, in Marlborough, on the 7th of that month. It marched from thence to Fishkill, and reported to the Convention on the 17th, when it was placed "under the direction of the committee for trying tories." It was still at Fishkill in January, 1777. There is little room for doubting that Capt. Belknap was the original of Cooper's Capt. Towusend in "The Spy." There was certainly no other company of rangers at Fishkill.

* Both regiments were on duty in the Highlands in 1775-76.—Proc. Conv., 381.

Lewis DuBois, colonel; commissioned June 25, 1776; resigned Dec. 29, 1779.

Jacobus Bruyn, lieutenant-colonel; commissioned June 25, 1776; taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery, Oct. 6, 1777.

Martinus Willett, lieutenant-colonel; commissioned July 1, 1780.

Samuel Logan, major; commissioned June 26, 1776; taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery; exchanged Dec. 21, 1780; served to the end of the war.

Henry DuBois, adjutant; commissioned Nov. 21, 1776; promoted captain July 1, 1780.

Nehemiah Carpenter, quartermaster; commissioned Nov. 21, 1776; taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery; exchanged and promoted lieutenant.

Samuel Townsend, paymaster; commissioned Nov. 21, 1776.

John Gano, chaplain; commissioned Nov. 21, 1776; promoted brigade chaplain; served to the end of the war.

Samuel Cook, surgeon; commissioned Nov. 21, 1776; served to the end of the war.

Ebenezer Hutchinson, surgeon's mate; commissioned June 12, 1778.

The battalions authorized under this call, and Col. Lamb's artillery,—which drew many officers and privates from Orange and Ulster,—were the only three years' regiments raised in the State during the Revolution, and were kept in the field by levies and by recruiting for shorter periods to supply vacancies in their ranks.

UNIFORMS AND EQUIPAGE.

The uniform which was worn by the Continental regiments varied with the ability of the authorities to purchase the materials. The regiments raised in 1775 were clothed in the same general style but in different colors. The first had blue broadcloth dress coats with crimson cuffs and facings; the second had light brown coats with blue cuffs and facings; the third had gray coats with green cuffs and facings; the fourth had dark brown coats with scarlet cuffs and facings. Their breeches (as they were called) and waistcoats were of Russia drilling; the former were short (to the knee) and the latter long (to the hips). Their stockings were long (from the knee), of "coarse woolen homespun;" low shoes, linen cravats, and round low-crowned broad-brimmed felt hats. The regiments raised in January, 1776, were supplied with hunting-frocks in lieu of coats, and in June the Russia drillings gave place to "brain-dressed deer's leather sufficient to make each soldier one waistcoat and one pair of breeches." The established uniform of the troops, however, so far as there was one, was the hunting-frock, which came in under the order of the Continental Congress in 1776. These frocks have the same description wherever spoken of. "The uniform of the South Carolina rebels," says an English writer, "is a hunting-shirt such as the farmers' servants in England wear;" and another, referring to the Continental soldiers who were killed at Fort Montgomery, says, "they had on frocks such as our farmers' servants wear," from which fact it was presumed they were militia-men, instead of members of Col. DuBois' regiment as they were. The description by the Hessian officer, Briefwechsel, of the army under Gen. Gates at Saratoga, which was composed of over nine thousand regular troops, may be accepted as applicable to the entire army of the Revolution at that time. The rank and file, he writes, "were not equipped in any uniform." A few of the officers wore regimentals; and those fashioned to their own notions according to cut and color. Brown coats with sea-green facings, white linings and silver trimmings, and gray coats in abundance, with buff facings and cuffs, and gilt buttons; in short, every variety of pattern. The brigadiers and generals wore uniforms and belts which designated their rank, but most of the colonels and other officers were in their ordinary clothes; "a musket and bayonet in hand, and a cartridge-box or powder-horn over the shoulder." The Continental uniform, now generally accepted as such, was not adopted until 1780, when, by general orders (June 28th), all officers were directed "to wear their coats with buff facings and linings, yellow buttons, white or buff under-clothes, with a black and white feather in their hats."

The equipage of the militia, as well as of the early Continental regiments, consisted of "a good musket or firelock and bayonet, sword or tomahawk, a steel ramrod, worm, priming-wire and brush fitted thereto, a cartouch-box to contain twenty-three rounds of cartridges, twelve flints, and a knapsack, one pound of powder, and three pounds of bullets." The muskets were of a variety of patterns; the long gun of the old French war, the shorter standard musket of the English army, and a scant assortment of rifles. The Convention of New York endeavored, in its contracts,* to secure uniformity by providing that the

* Robert Boyd established, in June, 1775, a forge in New Windsor, just south of Quassaick Creek, for the manufacture of muskets and baymusket-barrel should be "three feet and a half in length, and of three-fourths of an inch bore, well fortified at the breech," and that bayonets should be "one foot and nine inches from the shoulder;" but as there were few gunsmiths in the province at that time (1776), it was not until after arms were received from France that there was a perceptible regularity or a sufficient quantity to supply the troops. Meanwhile spears, spontoons, and tomahawks were called into use and became effective weapons.* Not only did the district now comprising the county of Orange furnish men and arms, but within its limits were established the first works for the manufacture of powder, of which (January, 1778) "near 2000 weight" was delivered to the order of the Convention of the State, and the remainder of their production "to the several orders of Gen. Washington and Gen. Schuyler at different times."

FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR.

Having enumerated as far as fragmentary records will permit the military organization of the district down to and including the heroic era of the Revolution, a brief review of their services in the field obliges a return to the French and Indian war of 1755. This was peculiarly a frontier war, although a war in which the question of English supremacy in all that section of North America over which the English flag was floating at the outbreak of the Revolution. The Indians of the Delaware River country (the ancient Lenapes and Minsis) had grievances to adjust which led them to become the allies of the French. They had sold their lands to William Penn, who, perhaps under the expectation of arranging the boundaries himself to the satisfaction of the grantors, had drawn a deed of which advantage could be taken, and his successors, the proprietaries of Pennsylvania, were not slow to improve it,—literally "running" the boundaries of the famous "walking purchase." The Minsis had special complaint against the traders in the Minisink country who had made them drunk and defrauded them of the purchase-money of their lands; who invariably, by the same process, defrauded them of the price of the peltries which they brought in. The Delawares complained; the proprietaries summoned them to a council, with chiefs of the Six Nations as arbitrators; feasted the latter and loaded them with presents. The result may be anticipated: the Delawares, then tributary to the Six Nations, and the special wards of the Senecas, were obliged to relinquish their lands and remove to Wyoming. Not satisfied with what they had wrongfully obtained, the proprietaries followed up their advantage with the Six Nations, and, with the Susquehanna Company of Connecticut, bought the lands at Wyoming. The transaction so incensed the Senecas, who had been but partially represented in the matter, that they drove from their ranks their best chief for his participation in it, and removed the "petticoat" from the Delawares and bade them defend their homes. The latter were ready for the work. Liberated from the thralldom to which they had been subjected for nearly a century, and with all its grievances to redress, the chiefs of the East met those of the West in council at Alleghany; rehearsed their wrongs, and declared that wherever the white man had settled within the territory which they claimed, or of which they had been defrauded, there they would strike him as best they could with such weapons as they could command; and that the blow might be effectually dealt, each warrior-chief was charged to kill and scalp and burn within the precincts of his birthright, and all simultaneously, from the frontiers down to the heart of the settlements, until the English should sue for peace and promise redress.

In October following, with their allies, painted black for war, in bands with murderous intent, they moved eastward, and the line of the Blue Mountains, from the Delaware to the Susquehanna, became the scene of the carnival which they held with torch and tomahawk during many coming months. The Minsis performed their part, and on the frontiers of Orange and Ulster Counties, and New Jersey, but principally within the limits of the Minisink Patent, were repeated the fearful ravages of the more remote districts of Pennsylvania. The settlements were small, at considerable distance from each other, and much exposed to the surprises of the Indians, whose incursions were frequent. The people, especially in the contested district, were kept in almost perpetual alarm, and under such "continued military duty as to be rendered incapable of taking care of their private affairs for the support of their families." An extent of country, on the west side of the Wallkill, of fifteen miles in length and seven or eight in breadth, which was "well and thickly settled, was abandoned by the inhabitants, who, for their safety, removed their families to the east side of the river, and became a charge on the charity of their neighbors," while others "removed to distant parts, and some out of the province."†

"Fatigues of body, in continually guarding and ranging the woods, and anxiety of mind which the inhabitants could not avoid, by their being exposed to a cruel and savage enemy, increased by the perpetual lamentations of the women and children," were not the only evils which the inhabitants sufonets. The Convention voted to pay him "three pounds fifteen shillings, New York money, for each good musket with steel ramrod, and bayonet with scabbard." In February, 1776, he was able to write that he had "the best gunsmiths' shop in the colonies;" but nevertheless its capacity was limited from the difficulty in obtaining workmen.

* The Provincial Convention of New York ordered (Sept. 4, 1776) the manufacture of four thousand lances or spontoons to arm the militia for whom no guns could be obtained. Eight hundred were sent to Orange, and the same number to Ulster County. (Proc., 607.) Tomahawks were a favorite implement, and many thousand were furnished the troops. As a whole, the equipage of the army was not ineffective.

† N. Y. MSS., LXXXII. 107, etc.

fered. Three men were killed at Cocheecton; five men at Philip Swartwout's; Benjamin Sutton and one Rude, two of the Goshen militia, were killed at Minisink; Morgan Owen was killed and scalped about four miles from Goshen; a woman, taken prisoner at Minisink, was killed and her body cut in halves and left by the highway; Silas Hulet's house was robbed and he himself narrowly escaped. "From about the Drowned Lands for fifteen miles down the Walkill, where fifty families dwelt, all save four abandoned their fields and crops."*

Pending negotiations for peace, hostilities were suspended during the year 1756, but in August of the succeeding year, says Niles, "one James Tidd was scalped in the Minisinks. About this time also, one James Watson, with James Mullen, went out on some business, and were fired upon by a party of Indians. Watson was found killed and scalped; Mullen was carried off, as was concluded, not being found or heard of. About the 19th of September, Patrick Karr was scalped and killed at a place called Minisink Bridge. Some time in October, in Ulster County, the Indians fired into the farthestmost house in Rochester, and killed two women, but were repulsed by two men.†

"On the 16th of May, 1758, about two o'clock in the afternoon, about thirteen Indians rushed into the house of one Nicholas Cole, on the frontiers of the Jerseys, if I mistake not. Cole not being at home, they immediately pinioned his wife, and tomahawked their son-in-law, about eighteen years old, and dragged her (Mrs. Cole) out of doors, where her eldest daughter, about thirteen years old, lay murdered, and a boy aged eight, and her youngest daughter aged about four. This last—the poor, helpless old woman saw the cruel savages thrust their spears into the body of their gasping infant. They rifled the house, and then carried her and her son off, after they had scalped the slain above mentioned.

"Soon after they were joined by two Indians with two German captives they had taken that day, and killed and scalped another, in one Anthony Westbrook's field, near Minisink, so called. Not long after, Cole returned home, where to his great surprise he found his four children murdered, and his wife and other son missing. Upon which he went to Minisink (Napanoch) Fort,‡ and got a few soldiers to assist him in burying his children and the German. The soldiers joined with some of the neighbors that evening to cross the Delaware River at daylight, and waylay the road to Wyoming; and as four of them were going to one Chambers', about two o'clock at night, they heard the Indians coming down a hill to cross the Delaware, as was supposed, when one of the four fired on them. They immediately fled, giving a yell after their manner. The woman they led with a string about her neck, and the boy by the hand; who, finding themselves loose, made their escape along the road, and happily met at James McCarty's, the boy first and afterward the woman.

"The daughter of one Widow Walling, living near Fort Gardiner, between Goshen and Minisink, going out to pick up some chips for the fire, was shot at by three Indians. Her shrieks alarmed the people. Her brother, looking out at a garret window, and seeing a fellow dispatching and scalping his sister, fired at them and was pretty certain he wounded one of them. The old woman, during this, with her other daughter and son, made off and escaped.

"About this time (beginning of June), a sergeant went from Waasing? to Minisink with a party of men, but returned not at the time they were expected. Upon which a larger party went out in search of them, and at their arrival at Minisink, found seven of them killed and scalped, three wounded, and a woman and four children carried off. Near about the same time, a house was beset by a party of Indians, where were seventeen persons, who were killed, as I remember the account. A man and a boy traveling on the road with their muskets, were fired on by some Indians in ambush. The man was killed, but the boy escaped, having first killed one of the Indians. Not far from this time—whether before or after I am not certain—the Indians killed seven New York soldiers. This slaughter was committed at a place called Westfall's."

Such is the imperfect record of these hostilities, attested by the most respectable residents of the district,—among others by Col. Thomas Ellison and Col. Charles Clinton, of the settlements on the Hudson, which, though exempt from the brand of the enemy, were not the less sufferers by the war, their male inhabitants being in almost continual service on the frontiers, and their dwellings converted into places of defense. That the incursions of the Indians on the frontiers were not continued in their first severity was due in part to the erection by Governor Hardy, in the summer of 1757, of a series of block-houses along the western frontier,|| and in part to the nego-

* "All the families between the deponent's house and Minisink, to the amount of one hundred and fifty persons, have deserted those settlements and come into four frontier houses, one of which is the deponent's house, which is now a frontier house on that side, and which was, last year, fifteen or sixteen miles within the settlements at Minisink, and about sixteen miles from Hudson's River."—Affidavit of James Howell, N. Y. MSS., LXXVII.

† The attack here spoken of was on the house of Peter Jan, in the southwestern part of Rochester. Jan's house was burned and one of his daughters, and two men who acted as scouts, were killed. His wife and two daughters, and himself and two sons, who were in the field, escaped. —Doc. Hist., II. 763, 764.

|| "From a place called Machakamak to the town of Rochester."—Gov. Hardy's Message. Mr. Guamer states that at this time there were three small forts in the Upper Neighborhood and three in the Lower Neighborhood. "One in the Upper Neighborhood was on the Neversink, at the northeast end of the settlement; one at the house of Peter Guamer, in the central part of the neighborhood, and the third at the south-tations which had been instituted with Teedyuscung, the king of the Delawares, who, seeking only the redress of his people, was ready to restrain them from war could that end be secured by other means. In October, 1758, the proprietaries surrendered their titles and recognized the right of the government to arrange the boundaries of the lands claimed under them; the Minsis were paid for their lands in the Minisink country; an exchange of prisoners was agreed to, and terms of peace concluded. Subsequently the Indian allies of the French held the frontier under terror until after the close of the war, when the avocations of the pioneers were resumed and their rude forts permitted to decay.

The services of the militia during this struggle come down to us in imperfect records. Writes Col. Thomas Ellison in 1757: "It is but too well known by the late numerous murders barbarously committed on our borders, that the county of Ulster and the north end of Orange is become the only frontier part of the province left unguarded and exposed to the cruel incursions of the Indian enemy, and the inhabitants of these parts have been obliged to perform very hard military duty for these two years past, in ranging the woods and guarding the frontiers, these two counties keeping out almost constantly from fifty to one hundred men; sometimes by forced detachments of the militia and at other times by voluntary subscriptions; nay, often two hundred men, which has been an insupportable burthen on the poor people. And yet all the militia of these parts were ordered to march to Fort Edward, while the officers had no orders to leave a detachment to guard the frontiers. . . . The generality of them marched as soon as it was possible to get so scattered a people together; and I would say for the three hundred who went out of the little distressed Second Regiment of Ulster, that men never marched with more cheerfulness."

From Col. Vincent Mathews' regiment nothing appears but eloquent bills:

THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

It is perhaps unnecessary to say that the people of Orange and Ulster, and especially of the district now composing the county of Orange, acted with great unanimity in the war for independence, not only in their political associations but in their military organizations. During the earlier years of the struggle the militia were almost constantly under arms or engaged in the construction of the forts in the Highlands, and in preparing obstructions to the navigation of Hudson's River. It was during this period, too, that the companies already named as belonging to the first Continental regiments (1775) took part in the Canada expedition. In July, 1776, apprehending a movement of the enemy up the Hudson, the Provincial Convention ordered that "one-fourth part of the militia of the counties of Orange and Ulster be drawn out for the defense of this State" and "stationed in the Highlands on the west side of Hudson's River to guard the defiles." Two regiments were organized under this order: one from Ulster, Levi Pauling, colonel, and one from Orange, Isaac Nicoll, colonel; Gilbert Cooper, lieutenant-colonel; Samuel Logan, major. A more sweeping requisition was made in December, when, after the capture of New York, the British followed Washington into New Jersey, they were ordered to co-operate with the forces under Gens. Lee and Gates in that State. Assembling at Chester,* they marched thence to a place called "the City, at the parting of the roads leading from Tappan to Pyramid," under command of Gen. George Clinton.† That their service in the field at this time was arduous and sacrificing is abundantly shown by a letter written by Henry Wisner, Jr., under date of December 24th: "I have been visiting," he writes, "the different battalions of militia, and finding them so uneasy that I am afraid that, notwithstanding everything that can be said and done, many of them will go home. The situation of their families is so very distressing that no argument can prevail with them. Many of them left their families without wood, without meal, and without fodder at home for their cattle, many of their families without shoes, and some of them little better here," and he might have added, perhaps, without proper food, for he takes occasion to say that he had stopped, on his own responsibility, for their use a drove of cattle that were being sent to Philadelphia. The victory of Washington at Trenton changed the aspect of the campaign, and they were soon after returned to their homes. Their retirement, however, was only temporary. As a part of Clinton's brigade they were, for over two years, practically resolved into minute men and placed under orders to march upon signal to the defense of the Highlands;* special services almost innumerable were thrown upon them.† Rallying after the loss of Fort Montgomery, we see them on the march to Kingston, struggling against hope to save that place from the flames, and from thence returning to build anew their shattered citadels, and to reappear in the conflict at Minisink.

* "Resolved, That all the militia of Orange and Ulster Counties be forthwith ordered to march, properly armed and accoutered, to Chester, in Orange County, there to receive further orders from Gen. George Clinton for effectually co-operating with Maj.-Gen. Lee and Maj.-Gen. Gates, in harassing and distressing the enemy, who have entered the State of New Jersey."—Res. Prov. Conv., Dec. 9, 1776. A subsequent order confined them to the limits of New York.

† At that time brigadier-general of militia of Ulster County; subsequently Governor of the State.

Although familiar, an abridged narrative of their services in these fields may not be omitted in this connection. In July, 1775, the British ministry, in arranging their plan for the suppression of the rebellion, determined "to command the Hudson with a number of small men-of-war and cutters, and maintain a safe intercourse and correspondence between Quebec, Albany, and New York, and thus afford the finest opportunity to their soldiery, and the Canadians in conjunction with the Indians, to make continual incursions into Massachusetts, and divide the provincial forces, so as to render it easy for the British army at Boston to defeat them and break the spirits of the Massachusetts people, desolate their country, and compel an absolute subjection to Great Britain." To counteract this plan, the Continental Congress, in May of the same year, at the suggestion of the Convention of New York, resolved, "that a post be taken in the Highlands, on each side of Hudson's River, and batteries erected, and that experienced persons be immediately sent to examine said river in order to discover where it would be most advisable and proper to obstruct the navigation." During the succeeding fall, Forts Clinton and Montgomery were erected under the supervision of the Convention of New York, and the navigation obstructed by means of chains, booms, fire-ships, and vessels of war, during the summer of 1776.‡ The forts were largely garrisoned by the militia of the district, who were called together by a system of beacons and signals, consisting of flags and alarm-cannon by day, and beacon-fires upon the mountain tops at night. The works were strengthened during the summer of 1777, by the construction of Fort Constitution on Constitution Island, and of Fort Independence at Peekskill, and the command, on the east side of the river, intrusted to Gen. Putnam; Governor Clinton and Gen. James Clinton and the militia retaining the west side.

Scarcely had the work been completed when Burgoyne swept down from Canada with his splendid army, and the campaign for the possession of the Hudson opened. To aid in the movement, Howe threatened an attack on Philadelphia, by way of Delaware River, and thus forced Washington to draw men from the Highlands until only fifteen hundred remained. About the 20th of September, while Howe was marching into Philadelphia and Burgoyne had reached Saratoga, over three thousand British soldiers arrived in New York, and there joined the armament of Sir Henry Clinton, then in waiting, and in a few days started to force their way up the Hudson. Misleading Gen. Putnam by feigning an attack on Peekskill, the forces of the enemy crossed the river to Stony Point, marched around the western base of the Dunderberg (October 7th), and appeared before the forts. The militia of the district, about six hundred in number, that had been hastily called in the day previous, united with the garrisons and made a most heroic defense, fighting against superior numbers until twilight, when they gave way and made a scattered retreat, leaving behind them about three hundred of their number in killed, wounded, and prisoners.§

‡ The first obstructions consisted of a chain eighteen hundred feet in length from the foot of the rock at Fort Montgomery to the base of Anthony's Nose. A considerable portion of it was brought from Fort Ticonderoga, where it had been used to obstruct the river Sorel; the remainder was manufactured at Poughkeepsie. It was protected by a boom of logs, and guarded by batteries on the shore. From Plum Point to Pallopel's Island a chevaux-de-frise was constructed. The fire-ships were rafts loaded with combustibles. The ships-of-war were two armed frigates, two galleys, and an armed sloop.

§ The following report of the action was made by Governor Clinton to Gen. Washington:

"NEW WINDSOR, Oct. 9, 1777.

"DEAR GENERAL,—I have to inform you that, in consequence of intelligence received by Gen. Putnam from Gen. Parsons (who lay with his brigade at the White Plains), of the enemy's having received a reinforcement from Europe at New York, and that by their movements there was reason to believe they intended an attack on Peekskill, and to possess themselves of the passes in the Highlands, the general immediately wrote to me these circumstances; and to prevent if possible the disagreeable consequences that might arise if the army at the different posts was not timely reinforced, I ordered that part of the militia of this State that had not already marched to the northward to move, and part of them to join Gen. Putnam, and the remainder of them to reinforce the posts of Fort Montgomery and Fort Clinton; but, it being a critical time with the yeomanry, as they had not yet sown their grain, and there being at that time no appearance of the enemy, they were extremely

* "On the firing of two cannon at Fort Montgomery, and two at Fort Constitution, to be answered by two from the brass twenty-four-pounder at New Windsor, the militia on the west side of Hudson's River, in the counties of Orange and Ulster, as far as Col. Hasbrouck's regiment, including the same, are to march by detachments, without further notice, as reinforcement of this garrison."—Order of Brig-Gen. James Clinton, commanding at Fort Montgomery, July 10, 1777. From December, 1776, to April, 1778, the militia were called out twelve times and spent two hundred and ninety-two days in the field.

† A single instance of the many recorded services of this nature is the following, which occurred on the morning preceding the battle of Minisink, and which accounts for the limited number of men in that action: "On the evening of the 21st of this instant I received an order from his excellency Gen. Washington, together with a requisition of the Commissary of Prisoners, to furnish one hundred men of my regiment to guard the British prisoners on their way to Easton. I ordered three companies of my regiment, including the exempt company, to parade for that purpose."—Bathorn's Report, July 25, 1779.

The regiments engaged were Col. Allison's, from Goshen, commanded by himself; Col. Jesse Wood-restless and uneasy. They solicited Gen. Putnam for leave to return, and many of them went home without his permission. Urged by these considerations he thought proper to dismiss a part of them.

"As I thought it essentially necessary that they should remain in the field for some time, in order to check the progress of the enemy should they attempt to put their design in execution, I issued another order for one-half of them immediately to march, part of them to join Gen. Putnam and a sufficient number to reinforce the forts and the pass at Sydman's Bridge, at the mouth of the Clove; and, in order to induce them to turn out with the greater alacrity, I thought it necessary to fix their time of service to one month, at the expiration of which time they were to be relieved by the other half. While this arrangement was in agitation, and before a proper arrangement could possibly be made by the respective officers as to what part of them could serve for the first month, they were not so expeditious as was absolutely necessary, which the event has fully evinced. A number of the enemy's ships made their appearance on the 3d instant in Tarrytown Bay, where they weighed anchor the next day, being joined by several ships-of-war and transports from New York. They proceeded up the river as high as King's Ferry, and at day-break on Sunday, the 5th, landed a considerable body of men on Verplanck's Point.

"As I was apprehensive from many circumstances that an attack on the forts was intended, I dispatched Maj. Logan, an alert officer, who was well acquainted with the ground, on Sunday evening, through the mountains to reconnoitre, and if possible gain intelligence of the enemy's motion. The major returned about nine o'clock on Monday, informing me that, from the best intelligence he could procure, and the rowing of the boats, he had reason to believe they had landed a considerable force on the west side of the river at King's Ferry, and between that and Dunderberg; but, as the morning was foggy, it was impossible to discern them so as to form any judgment of their numbers. As soon as I had obtained this intelligence, I immediately dispatched Lieut. Jackson with a small party to discover the enemy's movements; but they had not proceeded more than two miles on the Haverstraw Road when they were attacked by a party of the enemy, who had formed an ambuscade at a place called Doodletown. They immediately retreated after returning the fire. As soon as the firing was heard, I detached Lieut. Col. Bryn with fifty Continental troops, and as many of the militia under Lieut. Col. McLaughry to sustain Lieut. Jackson; the garrison at that time being so weak that we could not afford them greater aid on that road, and I imagined it would be necessary to send out a party likewise on the road which leads to the Forest of Dean. The detachment under Cols. Bryn and McLaughry were soon engaged, but, being too weak to withstand the enemy's great force, retreated to Fort Clinton, disputing the ground inch by inch. Their gallant opposition, and the roughness of the ground, checked the progress of the enemy for some time.

"While matters were in this situation in the neighborhood of Fort Clinton, a large body of the enemy were advancing on the road which leads from the Forest of Dean to Fort Montgomery. As I had only one field-piece at the above fort, I ordered Col. Lamb of the artillery to send it off to an advantageous post on that road, with a covering party of sixty men, and another of the same number to sustain them, in order to give the enemy a check, and retard their movements till I could receive reinforcements from Gen. Putnam, to whom I had sent an express for that purpose. This order being immediately complied with, the piece had hardly reached the place of its destination, and the covering party been posted on strong ground, when the enemy were seen advancing with hasty strides; but being unexpectedly annoyed by discharges of grape-shot from the field-piece and a well-directed fire from the muskets, which made great havoc among them, as we have since been informed, they were repeatedly driven back, till, filing off through the woods upon the right and left with a view of surrounding our men, and the handful of brave fellows being alarmed at their critical situation, they were constrained to abandon the field-piece, after rendering it useless to the enemy by spiking it. In order to cover the men who were retreating, and to check the farther progress of the enemy, I ordered out a twelve-pounder, which being well-served with grape-shot, annoyed them greatly, and gave the men an opportunity of retreating into the garrison with very little loss on our side, except that of Capt. Fenno, who commanded the field-piece, and was made a prisoner.

"This was about two o'clock in the afternoon, and the enemy approached the works and began the attack, which continued with few intervals till about five o'clock, when an officer appeared with a flag. I ordered Lieut.-Col. Livingston to meet him without the works and know his business. Col. Livingston having demanded his rank and business, he was told by the bearer of the flag that he was Lieut.-Col. Campbell, and that he came to demand the surrender of the fort to prevent the effusion of blood. Col. Livingston replied that he had no authority to treat with him, but if they would surrender themselves prisoners of war they might depend upon being well treated, and if they did not choose to accept those terms they might renew the attack, as soon as he should retire within the fort, he being determined to defend it to the last extremity. As soon as Lieut.-Col. Livingston returned the attack was renewed with great violence, and, after as obstinate a resistance as our situation and the weakness of the garrison would admit, having defended the works from two o'clock till the dusk of the evening, the enemy, by the superiority of numbers, forced the works on all sides. The want of men prevented us from sustaining and supporting every part, having received no reinforcement from Gen. Putnam.

"Our loss, killed, wounded, and prisoners, is not so great as might have been expected, when the strength of the enemy and our weakness are properly considered. My brother was wounded with a bayonet. Many officers and men, and myself, having the advantage of the enemy by being well acquainted with the ground, were so fortunate as to effect our escape under cover of the night, after the enemy were possessed of all the works. I was so happy as to get into a boat, crossed the river, and immediately waited on Gen. Putnam, with a view of concerting measures for our future operations, to prevent the designs of Gen. Clinton, and impede his progress in facilitating the movements of Burgoyne from the northward. I can assure your Excellency that I am well convinced if night had not approached rather too fast to correspond with our wishes the enemy would have been disappointed in their expectations, as a reinforcement of five hundred men from Gen. Putnam's army were on the west side of the river ready to cross for our relief when the works were forced; and many of the militia were in the mountains on their march to join us, had not the communication between us and them been cut off.

"I have to add that by some fatality the two Continental frigates were lost, they having been ordered down by Gen. Putnam for the defense of the chain; but being badly manned, they could not be got off in time, though I ordered the ship 'Congress' to proceed to Fort Constitution the day before the attack, lest she should meet with a disaster; and the ship 'Montgomery,' which lay near the chain, having neither anchor nor cables to secure her, it being the ebb of the tide and the wind falling, fell down so near the chain that Capt. Hodge was constrained to set her on fire to prevent her from falling into the hands of the enemy. The 'Congress' unfortunately getting aground on the flat near Fort Constitution, shared the same fate. Fort Constitution being destitute of troops to defend it, was evacuated, after bringing off part of the stores. I am now about three miles from New Windsor, with Col. Samuel B. Webb's regiment of Continental troops, the remains of Col. DuBois', about one hundred of Col. Lamb's regiment, who escaped from the fort, and some militia. I intend to collect what force I possibly can to oppose the enemy, should they land on this side of the river.

"Sir Henry Clinton commanded in person. Gen. Tryon, Gen. Vaughan, and two other general officers were with him. The army who attacked us, by the lowest account, consisted of three thousand, chiefly British and Hessian troops. The garrison of both our posts did not exceed six hundred men, and many of these unarmed militia. The ordinary garrison was thus reduced by detaching Maj. Moffat with two hundred men to the post at Sydman's Bridge, and Col. Malcom's regiment being ordered from thence, and sixty men on Anthony's Nose by Gen. Putnam's orders, received the day before the action. I have only to add that where great losses are sustained, however unavoidable, public censure is generally the consequence to those who are immediately concerned. If, in the present instance, this should be the case, I wish, so far as relates to Fort Montgomery and its dependencies, it may fall on me alone; for I should be guilty of the greatest injustice were I not to declare that the officers and men under me, of the different corps, behaved with the greatest spirit and bravery.

"I am, etc.,

Many of these prisoners were wounded in the action and died of their wounds, and many of them died in the sugar-house prison in New York; others were exchanged after years of confinement. But of the killed in action no list was possible,—on the rolls of their regiments when called could only be entered "missing" opposite the names of many noble men whose places were thereafter forever vacant. Rev. Timothy Dwight, chaplain in Parson's brigade, who visited the scene of conflict in March following, tells the story of their fate. He writes: "As we went onward, we were distressed by the fetor of decayed human bodies. To me this was a novelty, and more overwhelming and dispiriting than I am able to describe. As we were attempting to discover the source from which it proceeded, we found at a small distance from the fort a pond of moderate size, in which we saw the bodies of several men who had been killed in the assault upon the fort. They were thrown into this pond the preceding autumn by the British, when probably the water was sufficiently deep to cover them. Some of them were covered at this time, but at a depth so small as to leave them distinctly visible. Others had an arm, a leg, and part of the body above the surface. The clothes they wore when they were killed were still on them, and proved that they were militia, being the ordinary dress of farmers. Their faces were bloated and monstrous, and their postures uncouth and distorted, and in the highest degree afflictive. To me, a novice in scenes of this nature, it was overwhelming."

Fortunately for the district, the regiments were by no means full; probably not over one-fourth of the militia was present in the actions. Fortunately, too, the Clintons escaped,—Governor George by a boat, in which he gained the eastern shore and made his way to Putnam's headquarters; and Gen. James by slipping down the rocks to the bed of Poplopen's Kill and thence up the same into the hills. Wounded in the thigh by a bayonet thrust, he reached his home at Little Britain covered with blood, after a detour of sixteen miles. Defeated as they were—overwhelmed by numbers rather—they were by no means crushed. From Gen. Putnam Governor Clinton obtained Col. Webb's brigade, and with them crossed the river to New Windsor on the 8th (the day after the battle). Meanwhile by alarms and signal-guns the militia that had not been in the actions were brought together at Little Britain, where they were joined by fugitives from the forts, and by the time the British had destroyed the obstructions to the navigation a respectable force was again under the Clintons on the west shore to prevent the enemy from landing, while on the eastern side Putnam was able to successfully protect the army stores at Fishkill and at points above. As the enemy's fleet moved north, Putnam's and Clinton's commands moved with them. Unfortunately, the roads leading north were more circuitous than the course of the river, and while Clinton "forced the march" of his troops, they had only reached Rosendale Creek when the ascending smoke gave evidence that they were too late to save Kingston. Here the enemy stopped. Advices from the north conveyed to them the fact that they too were "too late,"—that Burgoyne had surrendered and that their further advance was useless. Their return voyage to the Highlands was watched by Putnam and Clinton, and on the 23d of October, when the enemy had passed below Pallopel's Island, the forces of the latter (then under Gen. James) were at New Windsor, occupying stations as follows: Gen. Webb's command at New Windsor village; Capt. Nicoll's company at Murderer's Creek; Col. Tusten with the remains of Col. Allison's regiment, and Col. Woodhull's regiment, from Murderer's Creek to Smith's Clove; Col. McClaughry's regiment at Hasbrouck's mill; and Col. Hasbrouck's regiment from Newburgh along the river north. Tarrying only a few days in the Highlands to complete the destruction of the fort, the enemy sailed for New York, and the militia returned to their homes.

While these events were transpiring on the Hudson, the western frontier was harassed by the incursions of Indians and Tories. At the outbreak of the war the colonists made no little effort to induce the more important tribes, as well as the resident Indians, to remain neutral. To some extent this effort was successful, but ultimately the rude savages, always easily debauched by rum and trinkets, yielded to the solicitations and rewards of the English agents, and accepted service in their ranks. The bulk of the Six Nations were more immediately employed in the northern and western parts of the province, in company with the Tories, in an independent organization known as "Tories and Indians." This organization was extended to the southwestern frontiers in 1777, when a rendezvous was established by Brant and Butler at Oghkawaga (now Binghamton), where was soon gathered a motley crew of whites and savages, from the Delaware and its branches, whose field of operations was to embrace the frontier settlements with which its members were best acquainted. In anticipation of the events which subsequently followed, the settlers in the western part of Orange erected, soon after hostilities commenced, a number of block-houses,* while others stockaded their dwellings with a view to defense. The first invasion of the district is said to have occurred on the 13th of October, 1778, when two dwellings were attacked, three persons killed, and the inhabitants despoiled of their grain and stock.† Count Pulaski, with his legion of cavalry, was then sent to Minisink for the protection of the settlers, and remained during the winter of 1778–79, and Col. Van Cortlandt's regiment was sent to Wawarsing. Hostilities were renewed in the spring; the valley of the Susquehanna was devastated; Wyoming became the scene of frightful massacres; northwestern Ulster was invaded, and the Fantinekill and Woodstock settlements visited. The withdrawal of Count Pulaski from Minisink left the lower frontier exposed, and, on the night of July 19th, Brant, with sixty-five of his warriors, and twenty-seven Tories disguised as savages,‡ stole upon what was then known as the Lower Neighborhood,§ and before the people were aroused from their slumbers several dwellings were set on fire, and the work of death begun. Without means of defense, the inhabitants fled to the mountains, leaving all their worldly goods a spoil to the invaders. Their church, mills, houses, and barns were burned; several persons were killed and some taken prisoners; cattle were driven away, and booty of every kind carried to Grassy Brook on the Delaware, where Brant had his headquarters.

Alarmed by fugitives, Lieut.-Col. Tusten, of Col.

* Mr. Gumaer states that three small forts were erected in the Peenpack neighborhood,—"one at the house of Jacob Rutsen DeWitt, one at the house of Benjamin R. DePuy, and one at the house of Ezekiel Gumaer." He intimates that there was none at the Lower Neighborhood or Little Minisink. Sauthier's map of 1779 locates "Col. Jersey Fort" at the "Lower Neighborhood," and "Fort Cotenco" north of the "Upper Neighborhood." Besides the "Col. Jersey Fort," there were several forts (so called) at the "Lower Neighborhood," erected by individuals for their own protection. Among others one at Daniel Van Auken's, and one at Martinus Decker's.

† This statement is on the authority of Mr. Gumaer. We find no other record.

‡ The number of the attacking party was never definitely known.

§ Now in Deepark, south of the Neversink River, and so called to distinguish it from the Upper Neighborhood, or original settlement on the Cuddeback Patent.

Allison's Goshen regiment, Col. Hathorn of the Warwick regiment, and Capt. Meeker of the New Jersey militia, with such number of their commands as could be brought together in so brief a time, met in council at Minisink the following morning. Col. Tusten regarded the force as being too small to attempt the pursuit of the invaders, but he was overruled, and the line of march taken up under command of Col. Hathorn, and continued until the high hills overlooking the Delaware, near the mouth of the Lackawaxen, were reached, where the enemy was discovered. Ordering his force into three divisions, Hathorn made preparations for the attack; but was anticipated by Brant, who having, it is said, received reinforcements, threw his warriors into action before Hathorn's dispositions were fully made, and compelled his rear division to break and fly. Hathorn rallied his men as best he could; but Brant had the advantage of position and superior numbers, and drew his fire closer and closer until Hathorn was hemmed in within the circumference of an acre of ground, upon a rocky hill that sloped on all sides, where, with only forty-five men, he maintained the conflict for over five hours, when, the ammunition of his men being exhausted, he formed them in a hollow square, and prepared for a final defense with clubbed muskets. Broken at one corner, the square became a rout, and the flying fugitives sought safety in all directions. Behind a rock on the field, Tusten dressed the wounds of his neighbors, but his occupation was no protection; the Indians rushed to the spot, killed him and the wounded men in his charge, seventeen in number, and completed the bloody work which they had commenced. Of those who heroically took part in the action, only about thirty returned to relate the experiences through which they had passed in the scourging conflict,—the whistle of bullets, the moans of the wounded, the yells of savage foes, grafting them forever upon the memory of their descendants and weaving them imperishably into the traditions and the history of the county. Engraved on the monument to their memory* at Goshen are the names, so far as known, of those who perished in the action:

Benjamin Tusten, lieutenant-colonel.	James Little.
Samuel Jones, captain.	Gilbert S. Vail.
Ephraim Masten, ensign.	Abram Shepherd.
John Duncan, captain.	— Shepherd.
Gabriel Wisner.	Daniel Talmage.
Nathaniel Terwilliger.	David Harney.
Ephraim Ferguson.	Abram Williams.
Samuel Knapp.	Isaac Ward.
Benjamin Bennett.	Gamaliel Bailey.
Jacob Dunning.	Eleazer Owens.
	Samuel Little.

* In 1822 the bones of the fallen were gathered from the battle-field and interred at Goshen under a monument inscribed, "Erected by the inhabitants of Orange County, July 22, 1822. Sacred to the memory of forty-four of their fellow-citizens who fell at the battle of Minisink, July 22, 1779." No positive identification of the remains could be made. The present monument was the gift of the late Dr. M. H. Cash, and was erected by the board of supervisors in 1862. The battle-ground is in the present county of Sullivan.

An account of the engagement which shall satisfactorily harmonize the traditions concerning it cannot be attempted with the hope of success. The stories which have been repeated by sire to son for four generations cannot be, and perhaps should not be, uprooted. The only statement that has the semblance of authority upon the subject is the official report of Col. Hathorn, made five days after the action, and while yet the account of the dead and missing was incomplete. The following is this report:

"WARWICK 27 July, 1779.

"GOV. CLINTON—DEAR SIR: In conformity to the Militia Law I embrace this first opportunity to communicate to your Excellency my proceedings on a late tour of duty with my Regiment. On the Evening of the 21st of this instant I received an order from his Excellency General Washington, together with a requisition of the Commissary of Prisoners, to furnish one hundred men of my Regiment for to guard the British Prisoners on their way to Easton, at the same time received an Express from Minisink that the Indians were ravaging and burning that place. I ordered three companies of my Regiment including the Exempt Company to parade for the purpose of the Guard. The other three Companies to March Immediately to Minisink. On the 22 I arrived with a part of my people at Minisink, where I found Col. Tustin of Goshen and Major Meeker of New Jersey with parts of their Regiments who had marched with about Eighty men up the river a few mile. I joined this party with about Forty men the whole amounting to one hundred and twenty men Officers included. A spy come in and informed me the Enemy lay about four hours before at Mungaup, six miles distant from us. Our people appeared in High Spirits. We marched in pursuit with an intention either to fall on them by surprise or to gain in front and Ambush them. We were soon informed that they were on their march up the River. I found it impracticable to surprise them on the ground they now were and took my Rout along the old Keshethon path. The Indians encamped at the mouth of the half-way brook. We encamped at 12 o'clock at night at Skinners Saw Mill three miles and a half from the Enemy where we lay the remainder of the night. The Mountains were so exceedingly rugged and high we could not possibly get at them as they had passed the grounds the most favourable for us to attack them on before we could overtake them. Skinners is about eighteen miles from Minisink. At daylight on the morning of the 23, after leaving our horses, and disengaging of every thing heavy, we marched on with intention to make the attack the moment an opportunity offered. The Indians, probably from some discovery they had made of us, marched with more alacrity than usual, with an intention to get their Prisoners, Cattle and plunder taken at Minisink over the river. They had almost effected getting their Cattle and baggage across, when we discovered them at Lacawack, 27 miles from Minisink, some Indians in the river and some had got over. It was determined in council to make an attack at this place. I therefore disposed of the men into three divisions, ordered Col. Tustin to command the one on the right and to take post about three hundred yards distance on an eminence to secure our Right; sent Col. Wisner with another Division to file out to the Left and to dispose of himself in the like manner. In order to prevent the Enemy from gaining any advantage on our flank, the other Division under my command to attack them with that vigor necessary to Strike Terror in such a foe.

"Capt. Tyler with the advance Guard unhappily discharged his piece before the division could be properly posted, which put me under the necessity of bringing on the Action. I ordered my Division to fix their Bayonets and push forcibly on them, which order being resolutely executed put the Indians in the utmost confusion great numbers took to the river, who fell from the well directed fire of our Rifle men, and incessant blaze from our Musketry without returning any fire. The Divisions in the rear, not subject to order broke, some advanced down the hill toward me, others fled into the woods. I soon perceived the enemy rally on our right and recrossing the river to gain the heights. I found myself under the necessity to rally all my force which by this time was much less than I expected. The enemy by this time had collected in force and from the best accounts can be collected received a reinforcement from Keshethon began to fire on our left. We returned the fire and kept up a constant bush firing up the hill from the river, in which the brave Capt. Tyler fell, several were wounded. The people being exceedingly fatigued obliged me to take post on a height, which proved to be a strong and advantageous ground. The enemy repeatedly advanced in from 40 to 100 yards distance and were as repeatedly repulsed. I had now but 45 men (officers included) who had lost their command naturally drew toward me. The spirits of these few notwithstanding their fatigue, situation, and unallayed thirst, added to that cruel yelling of those bloody monsters, the seed of Anak in size, exceed thought or description. We defended this ground near three hours and a half during the whole time one blaze without intermission was kept up on both sides. Here we had three men killed and nine wounded. Among the wounded was Lt. Col. Tustin, in the hand, Maj. Mesker in the shoulder, Adj. Finch in the leg, Capt. Jones in the foot, and Ensign Wood in the wrist. The chief of our people was wounded by Angle shots from the Indians from behind Rocks and Trees. Our Rifles here were very useful. I found myself under the necessity of ceasing the fire, our Ammunition from the continual fire of more than five hours* naturally suggested that it must be Exhausted, ordered no person to shoot without having his object sure that no shot might be lost. This gave spirits to the Enemy, who formed their whole strength and forced the North East part of our Lines. Here we gave them a severe Gail. Our people not being able to support the lines retreated down the hill precipitately towards the River. The Enemy kept up a constant fire on our Right which was returned. The people by this time was so scattered I found myself unequal to rally them again, consequently every man made choice of his own way. Thus Ended the Action.

"The following are missing in the whole from the last accounts:

"Col. Ellison's Regiment—Lt. Col. Tustin, Capt. Jones, Capt. Wood, Capt. Little, Capt. Duncan, and twelve privates. One private of New Jersey. Adjutant Finch, Ensign Wood, and one private of my Regiment. In the whole twenty-one men.

"Several wounded men are in. I hope others will be yet found. I received a wound on my head, one in my leg and one in my thigh—slightly. The one in my thigh, from inattention, is a little troublesome. Several spies that lay near the enemy the night following the action inform us that they moved off their wounded in canoes, on the day following: that on the ground where they lay there was great quantities of blood, and the whole encampment was marked with wounded men. Great numbers of plasters and bloody rags was found. Although we suffered by the loss of so many brave men, the best for the number, without sensible error, in the Precinct. It's beyond doubt the enemy suffered much more. From the various parts of the action can be collected a greater number of Indian dead than we lost, besides their wounded. The number of Indians and Tories is not ascertained; some accounts say 90, others 120, others 160. Col. Seward of New Jersey, with 93 men, was within five or six miles of the action, on the Pennsylvania side, did not hear the firing; approached and lay near the Indians all night following, and from their conduct and groaning of the wounded gave rise to the belief that they had been in some action where they had suffered, and would have attacked them round their fire, but a mutiny arose among some of his people which prevented—a very unfortunate and to be lamented circumstance. If in their situation he had attacked them, with the common smiles of Providence he must have succeeded and put them to total rout.

"Dear Governor, it's not in my power to paint out to you the disagreeable situation I was in, surrounded by a foe, with such a handfull of valuable men not only as soldiers but as fellow citizens and members of society, and nothing to be expected but the hatchet, spear and scalping knife. The tremendous yells and whoops, all the fiends in the confines of the Infernal Regions, with one united cry, could not exceed it. Add to this the cries and petitions of the wounded around me not to leave them, was beyond parallel or idea. My heart bleeds for the unfortunate wounded who fell into their hands. However, circumstances give me a little consolation. Mr. Roger Townsend, of Goshen, received a wound in his thigh; being exceedingly thirsty, making an attempt to go to find some water, was met by an Indian who very friendly took him by the hand and said he was his prisoner and would not hurt him. A well-directed ball from one of our men put the Indian into a dose, and Mr. Townsend ran back into the lines. I hope some little humanity may yet be found in the breasts of the savages.

"I should be at the greatest loss was I to attempt to point out any officer or soldier that exceeded another in bravery during the time of the general action. Too much praise cannot be given to them for their attention in receiving orders and alacrity in executing them.

"I have acquiesced with Col. Woodhull in ordering one-eighth of our Regiments to Minisink as a temporary guard until your excellency's pleasure is known on the subject.

"The Indians were under the command of Brant, who was either killed or wounded in the action. They burnt Major Decker's house and barn, Saml. Davis's house, barn and mill, Jacobus Van Vleck's house and barn, Daniel Vanoker's barn, (here was two Indians killed from a little Fort round the house, which was saved,) Esquire Cuykindall's house and barn, Simon Westfall's house and barn, the Church, Peter Cuykindall's house and barn, Mertinus Decker's fort, house, barn and saw mills, and Nehemiah Patterson's saw mill; killed and scalped Jeremiah Vanoker, Daniel Cole, Ephraim Ferguson and one Tavern, and took with them several prisoners, mostly children, with a great number of horses, cattle and valuable plunder. Some of the cattle we rescued and returned to the owners.

"I hope your Excellency will make allowances for the imperfect stile, razures and blots of this line, whilst I have the honor to subscribe myself, with the most perfect esteem, in haste,

"Your Excellency's Most Obedt Servt,

"JOHN HATHORN, Col."

Detachments from Woodhull's, Allison's, and Hathorn's regiments were immediately sent to guard the frontier from further incursions. Their continuance in the field, however, was of short duration, for the moving of Sullivan's expedition up the Susquehanna, and of Clinton's co-operating command through the Mohawk Valley, drew the attention of Brant and his Tory allies to their own protection, and the scourging which they then received deterred them from again venturing upon the war-path.

A reason of quite an opposite character tended to relieve the militia of eastern Orange and southern Ulster from the active service in which they had participated for three years. The forts in the Highlands having become of the utmost strategic importance, Washington, with the main body of the Continental army, encamped in their vicinity, and held in check the movements of the enemy. But without further service in the field,—a duty from which they were not fully relieved,—the record of their part in the drama of the Revolution will rank them with the most heroic of that heroic era.

* A question has been raised as to the time of the continuance of the action. It will be observed that in another place Col. Hathorn gives the line of his march as extending twenty-seven miles, nine of which were traveled on the day of the action before the enemy was discovered. Some time was also spent in countermarching and forming line of battle, the whole probably occupying the day until near noon. A "continued fire of more than five hours" would have taken the time to about half-past five. It is evident that the object was to hold the place to as late an hour as possible that escape might be attended with the best advantages, and it is to this fact, perhaps, that no pursuit was made by the Indians, and that so many fugitives made their way to their homes. Maj. Wood, in his journal, says the "conflict lasted almost the whole day," which apparently confirms the current account of the continuance until near twilight.

CHAPTER VI.

REVOLUTIONARY EVENTS—PLEDGE OF ASSOCIATION.

EVENTS connected with the war of the Revolution, aside from military organizations and their services, mainly cluster around the associations which were formed in 1775 to maintain civil government and sustain the action of the Continental Congress, and the operations of Claudius Smith's band of "cow-boys." True, there were other events which transpired in the district now constituting the county, as well as in that which was then embraced within its limits. The part taken by the people in erecting the forts in the Highlands and in obstructing the navigation of Hudson's River; the story of Stony Point; the treason of Arnold and the capture and execution of André; the encampment of the Continental army in Smith's Clove and in New Windsor; the headquarters of Washington in New Windsor and Newburgh; the Temple, the Newburgh Letters, and the Society of the Cincinnati have their place in the county's annals. Nevertheless, they were events that have properly been remanded to the domain of general history, and have therein been exhaustively chronicled, and it would be a work of supererogation to repeat their details. We turn, therefore, to the organization of the local REVOLUTIONARY ASSOCIATIONS.

The war of the Revolution may be said to have been inaugurated by the Continental Congress of 1774. No matter what may have been the steps which led the colonists up to that point, the passage of the non-importation resolutions of 1774 was the point of departure from which neither the government nor the colonies could recede,—the issue of compulsion and resistance was by that act established. One of the leading features of these resolutions was the call for the organization in every city, county, town, and precinct of a "Committee of Safety and Observation." The city of New York took the lead by organizing a committee of one hundred, of which Isaac Low was chairman, and by sending circulars to all the towns and precincts in the province urging the formation of similar committees. About the same time a pamphlet entitled "Free Thoughts on the Resolves of Congress" made its appearance and was scattered broadcast over the land. The people thus had the question fairly before them, and in their local meetings discussed the points involved. The district now included in the county was ripe for the movement. In original Orange the general sentiment was especially one of approval, for, notwithstanding the fact that the city of New York had selected the delegates to the Congress of 1774, the people of Orange determined to send a delegate of their own, and, at a convention held at Goshen, appointed Henry Wisner to represent them, whose voice and signature were given for non-importation, while southern Ulster, the home of George Clinton, had approved his every act of opposition to the demands of the ministry. It is not with surprise, therefore, that we read that in the precincts of Newburgh, New Windsor, Hanover, Walkkill, Goshen, and Cornwall the pamphlet referred to was publicly burned and committees of safety organized.

The first duty of these committees was to provide for sending delegates to a provincial convention to be held in New York for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Second Continental Congress at Philadelphia. Scarcely had this work been completed, when, on the 29th of April, the committee of New York drew up and signed a pledge to observe and maintain the orders and resolutions of both the Continental and Provincial Congresses, and sent it for signatures to all the precincts and counties in the province. It was an important proceeding. While local committees of safety had their place in giving expression to the popular voice, the pledge of association, bearing the individual signatures of the people, was an evidence that could not be impeached. Another important feature was that it was virtually the organization of a revolutionary government. It was in the following form:

"Persuaded that the salvation of the rights and liberties of America depend, under God, on the firm union of its inhabitants in a vigorous prosecution of the measures necessary for its safety; and convinced of the necessity of preventing anarchy and confusion, which attend the dissolution of the powers of government, we, the freemen, freeholders, and inhabitants of —, do, in the most solemn manner, resolve never to become slaves; and do associate, under all the ties of religion, honor, and love of our country, to adopt and endeavor to carry into execution whatever measures may be recommended by the Continental Congress, or resolved upon by our Provincial Convention, for the purpose of preserving our Constitution, and opposing the execution of the several arbitrary acts of the British Parliament, until a reconciliation between Great Britain and America, on constitutional principles (which we most ardently desire), can be obtained; and that we will in all things follow the advice of our General Committee respecting the purposes aforesaid, the preservation of peace and good order, and the safety of individuals and property."

With the return of the signatures to the general committee of New York the local organizations were complete, presenting as their representatives committees of safety and observation charged with the execution of whatever measures might be regarded as necessary by the general committee of New York. Almost immediately following this organization they were recognized by the Provincial Convention, and the local committees invested with power to appoint assessors and collectors, while the county committees were to be "considered as supervisors according to the police of the city, county, town, or precinct" in which they had been chosen, and, with the assessors and collectors, were directed to assess, raise, and collect the quotas to be raised for the support of the revolutionary government, and were empowered to enforce collection "by distress upon the goods and chattels of the defaulters," as had been previously practiced in the collection of taxes for the crown. The power to arrest persons "inimical" to the measures which had been or might be taken was vested in the local committees; subsequently (1777) this power was greatly enlarged by the Continental Congress, and the local committees practically constituted marshals of the United States, with power to arrest under warrants charging the "levying of war against the United States of America, holding correspondence with and assisting the enemies of the said States," and of being "inimical to the cause of America." Whatever may have been their purpose and action in other provinces, in New York—where a government had to be created to supplant that which had been established by England—they became the government, the town committees, where it was necessary, taking upon themselves the powers of town officers, county committees becoming boards of supervisors, the general committee of the province performing legislative duties in the recess of the Provincial Convention, the latter body becoming the supreme head of the Revolutionary movement until 1777, when a constitution was adopted,—the first republican constitution of the State of New York.

✕ It may be proper to add that the county committees were not all constituted in the same manner. In counties where the precincts had chosen committees, the latter bodies composed the county committee; in counties where there were no precinct organizations, county committees might be formed of any number of the "friends of liberty;" in other counties, where a majority of the precincts had chosen committees, it was provided that "if there be any district or districts that have not chosen committees, the county committee are to proceed in like manner as if such district or districts were actually represented in said county committee" in the assessment of taxes, etc. Many of the duties conferred upon county committees were not operative where the local authorities acted in accord with the opponents of the crown, and the assessment and collection of taxes was in their interest; but in other respects they had powers growing out of the necessities of the situation, among which was the following:

"If any person or persons shall hereafter oppose or deny the authority of the Continental or of this (Provincial) Congress, or the Committee of Safety, or the committees of the respective counties, cities, towns, manors, precincts, or districts in this colony, or dissuade any person or persons from obeying the recommendations of the Continental or this Congress, or the Committee of Safety, or the committee aforesaid, and be convicted thereof before the committee of the county, or any thirteen or more of their number, who shall or may meet upon a general call of the chairman of such committee where such person or persons may reside, that such committee shall cause such offenders to be disarmed; and for the second offense they shall be committed to close confinement, at their respective expense."

This explanation is given for two purposes: first, that the true character of the associations and committees may appear; and, second, that the impression which many entertain that a signature to the pledge is to be regarded as positive evidence of the loyalty of the person making it to the cause of independence, may be corrected. In the great majority of cases the impression referred to is no doubt in accordance with the facts, in others it is not. There were a few—whose names appear as refusing to sign—who could, perhaps, be classed as "Tories" prior to the adoption of the Declaration of Independence. Men were only asked to give their approval to proposed measures "until a reconciliation should be effected." When the Declaration was adopted, John Alsop, in resigning his seat in the Continental Congress, voiced the sentiments of a minority of respectable members in saying, "As long as a door was left open for a reconciliation with Great Britain, upon honorable terms, I was willing and ready to render my country all the service in my power; but as you have, by that declaration, closed the door of reconciliation, I must beg leave to resign." Perhaps it is fortunate that an analysis of the lists cannot now be made with a view to show the position of each person in the broader field of rebellion to which the country was carried by the Declaration. That there were many and violent opponents raised up who had previously acquiesced in the measures for redress, will not be questioned by those familiar with the history of the Revolution. "Loyalists" and "Tories" then became familiar terms,—“Indians and Tories” a terror on the frontiers. Perhaps the Whigs committed excesses, or were too severe in committee administration; but this at least is true, that they discriminated between their opponents, driving one class from the country, but suffering the other to enjoy their possessions, and their descendants to stand as the peers of their own children in the national temple which they had erected. It is not for the present or for future generations to appeal from the justice of that discrimination.

One other explanation. The signatures in Goshen precinct embraced the present town of Goshen, Chester, Warwick, Wawayanda, Greenville, and part of Blooming-Grove; Mount Hope and Deerpark appear in the precinct of Mamakating; Cornwall precinct embraced the present towns of Cornwall, Highlands, Monroe, part of Blooming-Grove, and a portion of the present county of Rockland; the precincts of Newburgh, New Windsor, and Wallkill will be recognized as present towns, while the precinct of Hanover included the present towns of Montgomery and Crawford. It is this subdivision of the old precincts that prevents the assignment of names to towns as now constituted. The following were the signatures:

"Committee of Safety and Observation," 1775: Hezekiah Howell, Archibald Little, Elihu Marvin, Nathaniel Satterly, Nathaniel Strong, Jonathan Brooks, Stephen Gilbert, Zachariah DuBois, Thomas Moffat. Thomas Moffat, chairman.

The "County Committee" of Orange, in 1776, had for its chairman Elihu Marvin, of Cornwall, and David Pye "deputy chairman for south side of mountain,"—i.e., for Haverstraw and Orangetown. In Ulster County, Robert Boyd, of New Windsor, was chairman.

In regard to the action or causes of action of the committees of the precinct, or of the county committee, there is little of record except inferentially. The first duty upon which the former entered was the organization of military companies and the procuring of arms and ammunition; their second, was the arrest of the disaffected. In October, 1775, Stephen Wiggins and David Purdy, of Newburgh, were arrested for inimical conduct and principles. In 1776, Samuel Devine was committed to jail, he having "repeatedly drank damnation to the Congress and all the Whigs." In 1778, Samuel Fowler and Daniel Denton were arrested as persons of "equivocal and suspected characters;" Silas Gardner for "levying war against the United States of America, and holding correspondence with and assisting the enemies of the said States,"—his real offense being that he had assisted the wife of Sir John Johnston in passing the American lines to her husband in New York, for which he was sentenced to be hung, and was pardoned under the gallows. The next were James Flewwelling, Elnathan Foster, John Flewwelling, David Wyatt, Solomon Combs, Benjamin Smith, Stephen Wood, John Moffat, Benjamin Darby, Timothy Wood, Robert Denton, James Cosman, and Amos Ireland, who, it was alleged, were on their way to join the enemy. Cadwallader Colden, Jr., for general conduct inimical to the popular cause, and for having concealed weapons, was arrested by the New Windsor committee, it appearing that the committee of Hanover Precinct, in which he lived, had some fear in undertaking proceedings against him. He was kept on parole for the remainder of the war, and ultimately returned to the possession of his estates. Elnathan Foster and Benjamin Smith took the oath of allegiance and returned to their homes after a period of incarceration in Kingston jail, and lived and died respected by their neighbors. James Flewwelling ultimately joined the cow-boys, and was hung at Goshen. James Cosman found refuge in Tarleton's Legion, and, after the war, in Nova Scotia.

Meagre as are these details, they serve to show that the committees were not idle, a fact which more clearly appears from general records. Joshua Hett Smith, arrested for complicity in Arnold's treason, writes in his narrative, that the jail at Goshen "was filled with those who professed themselves to be the king's friends,—Tories, and those who were prisoners of war,—felons, and characters of all colors and descriptions." The jail at Kingston overflowed with similar prisoners, and the surplus were removed to vessels which were anchored in Rondout Creek and termed the "Fleet Prison." Notwithstanding the arrests which were made, those who were opposed to the revolutionary movement continued to be troublesome. Thomas Palmer, under date of March 11, 1777, referring to the precinct of Newburgh more especially, but with evident application to adjacent country, writes:

"You are not altogether strangers to the nest of Tories which has, since the troublesome times, infested this precinct in particular. The necessary precautions, however, heretofore taken for curbing their insolence has humbled some, while a number of others, not being able to retain their venom, have gone over to the enemy and left their families with us, who, being chiefly women and children, speak the language of their absconded husbands and parents. But in the midst of our trouble with these rebels we are greatly satisfied to hear that their leader, the mischievous Major Colden, is apprehended and secured; but still every day seems to bring along with it new evidences of their rebellious intentions, for numbers of those who have gone off to the enemy have left behind them at their farms near the river crops of wheat and other grain, and as they refuse selling it at any rate, no doubt their intentions are to reserve it for the enemy, as many of them boldly say that they expect the shipping up daily. It is not only those, but many others who are not gone off, no doubt act upon the same principle, as they refuse in like manner to part with their grain."

To what extent "the necessary precautions" adopted by the committees had a beneficial effect cannot be stated, but that they were not sufficient to prevent no small number from joining the British army in active hostilities is only too evident. The occupation of New York City, Long Island, and the eastern part of New Jersey by the British gave to this class of their allies peculiar opportunities for predatory warfare, and from their operations the Highland districts of Orange were especially harassed. Gathering in small bands under some chosen leader, they sallied forth on their errands of plunder from New Jersey and from secure retreats in the lower Highlands, covered by the enemy's works at Stony Point and at Fort Lee, and became a terror to the inhabitants. The names of the captains or leaders of these several bands have not in all cases been preserved. Conspicuous among them, however, were Cpts. Moody, John Mason, and Claudius Smith, and his son, Richard Smith. Capt. or Ensign Moody is introduced by Joshua Hett Smith, who writes of him:

"The Clove was celebrated for the attachment of the inhabitants in general to the British interests, who had frequently encouraged and protected parties from New York in their mountainous recesses, and it was in this defile that the celebrated Capt. Moody, in May, 1781, intercepted an express from Gen. Washington to Congress, communicating the result of his interviews with the commanders of the land and naval forces of France."

Subsequently we find him in New Jersey, at the head of a party of nine men, bearing a commission from Gen. Knyphausen, "to carry off the person of Governor Livingston, or any other person acting in public station" that he might meet with whose arrest he might deem necessary to secure his own safety and that of his party. He failed in the undertaking, and barely escaped capture. When the facts became known Governor Livingston offered a reward of two hundred dollars for his apprehension, or for any or either of his associates, whose names, so far as known, were recited as Caleb Sweesy, James O'Hara, John Moody, and Gysbert Eyberlin. Moody retaliated with a proclamation offering two hundred guineas for the delivery of Livingston alive into the custody of Cunningham, the provost-keeper in New York, and thus the matter ended.* It may be remarked that the dispatches which he captured were designed by Washington to fall into the hands of the British, and had the effect to lead Sir Henry Clinton to withdraw a portion of the forces under Cornwallis, rendering the capture of the latter at Yorktown a matter of much easier accomplishment.

Of John Mason nothing appears of record further than the fact stated by one of his accomplices under arrest that he was a leader of one of the bands which had their headquarters in the Clove, and is said to have been engaged in several robberies and at least one murder. The theme of local interest and history is

THE STORY OF CLAUDIUS SMITH.

Who was Claudius Smith? His family is said to have been of English origin, and to have been among the early settlers of Brookhaven, L. I., where he was born, and from whence he removed with his father some years anterior to the Revolution, and took up his residence at a place more recently known as McKnight's Mills, in the present town of Monroe, where he grew up to manhood, married, and had sons of sufficient age to unite with him in his predatory excursions. It is not necessary that his identification should be made more complete, and an attempt to do so, in the absence of positive evidence, might result in injustice. It may safely be stated, however, that the family of Smiths were early settlers in and gave their name to Smith's Clove. Claudius is described as "a man of large stature and powerful nerve, of keen penetration; one upon whom nature had bestowed abilities worthy to be exerted in a better cause. He conducted his expeditions with such cautiousness as scarcely to be suspected until in the very execution of them; and if a sudden descent was made upon him, by some bold stroke or wily manœuvre he would successfully evade his pursuers and make his escape." That he had the credit of doing much that he did not do is no doubt true; murder was not one of his offenses, although murder was committed; he was a "cow-boy," a stealer of horses and cattle, perhaps of silverware, and money, if he could find it, and as a thief he was tried and executed at Goshen on the 22d of January, 1779, his indictment being "for burglary at the house of John Earle; for robbery at the house of Ebenezer Woodhull; for robbery of the dwelling and still-house of William Bell." Whatever other sins he may have committed were not charged against him. He had good qualities. It is said "that the poor man found in him a friend ready to share both his meal and his purse, and it is believed that much of what he extracted from the wealthy he bestowed upon the indigent." He was hospitable. "The late Judge Bodle, of Tompkins County, a former resident of Orange, related a circumstance which occurred with himself. On the morning following the capture of Fort Montgomery by the British, he was pursuing his way homeward from the neighborhood of the disaster, when he suddenly met Claudius Smith in the road. They knew each other. Judge Bodle was perplexed; to escape was impossible, and putting on a bold front he approached Claudius, who addressed him with a friendly good-morning, and after inquiring the news from the river, continued, 'Mr. Bodle, you are weary with walking: go to my dwelling yonder (directing to a place off the road) and ask my wife to give you a breakfast, and tell her that I sent you.'" He hated meanness, and when one whom he knew had money refused to lend that which was necessary to Mrs. Col. James McClaughry to relieve her husband, then a prisoner in the hands of the British, it is said that he sent members of his band and abstracted the money the loan of which had been denied.

At what time Claudius Smith commenced his depredations in the interest of the British government is not known; he is first met in public records in July, 1777, as a prisoner in Kingston jail, in company with one John Brown, "charged with stealing oxen belonging to the continent." From Kingston he was transferred to the jail at Goshen, from whence it is said he escaped. In anything like a tangible record, he is next met on his capture on Long Island, in the fall of 1778, and the official narrative closes with his execution. The immediate act which led to his arrest was the murder of Maj. Nathaniel Strong, of Blooming-Grove. Immediately following this outrage, and with a view to break up the band, Governor Clinton (Oct. 31, 1778) offered a reward for the apprehension of Claudius and his sons, Richard and James. Claudius fled to Long Island, where he was recognized by Maj. John Brush, at that time visiting Long Island from his residence in Connecticut, who, having previously read Governor Clinton's proclamation, returned across the Sound and made up a party, who visited the island in the night, seized Smith in his bed, and conveyed him to Connecticut, where he was placed under guard. By direction of Governor Clinton, to whom the arrest was immediately reported, Smith was taken through Connecticut to Fishkill Landing, where he was met by Col. Isaac Nicoll, sheriff of Orange County, and, under guard of Capt. Woodhull's troop of light-horse, taken to Goshen, where he was ironed and placed in jail. His trial was held at the Oyer and Terminer, Jan. 13, 1779, and his execution followed on the 22d of the same month.

Smith's associates were greater criminals than himself. Five of them, viz.: "Matthew Dolson, John Ryan, Thomas Delamar, John Gordon, and Amy Augor, late Amy Jones," were executed with him. His son James is believed to have been executed at Goshen soon after his father, in company with James Flewwelling and William Cole; his son William was shot in the mountains before his father was executed, and also Benjamin Kelley, another member. Not one of the band was ever tried for murder, although murder was committed by them in the case of Maj. Strong, and also in the case of one John W. Clark, who resided near the Stirling Iron-Works.* Richard, the youngest son of Claudius, with several members of the band, escaped to Nova Scotia after peace was declared. Traditions of the mode of procedure and operations of these men are numerous and varied. One of the best authenticated is supplied by Mr. Quinlan in his "History of Sullivan County," who recites the story of the attack on Henry Reynolds, of Monroe (subsequently of Sullivan County). On one occasion the "avengers of Claudius Smith" surrounded Reynolds' house and endeavored to effect an entrance, but the doors and windows were securely bolted and barred. Determined not to be baffled, they got upon the roof, and were descending inside the wide, old-styled chimney, when one of the family threw a basket of feathers on the fire, and the intruders were literally smoked out, and gave up further operations. A second attempt, in July, 1782, was more successful. Benjamin Kelley, Philip Roblin, and several others went to Reynolds' house in the night, and pretending that they were a detachment from Washington in search of deserters, he opened the door to them. They had scarcely entered when they discovered their true character by attacking Reynolds, who endeavored to escape. The noise aroused the family, consisting of Reynolds' wife, seven children, and a lad who lived with him, but they were powerless in such hands. In their presence Reynolds was cut and wounded with knives and swords, and finally hung by the neck on the trammel-pole of his fireplace. They then proceeded to search the house for valuables, and, in their absence from the room, Reynolds' daughter, Phebe, cut the rope and released her father and got him upon a bed. Returning to the room and discovering what had been done, they whipped the daughter with the rope until they thought she was disabled, and again hung Reynolds to the trammel-pole, from which his heroic daughter again rescued him. They then flew at Reynolds with knives and swords, and only ceased their work when they supposed he was dead. After destroying Reynolds' papers, and taking whatever of value that he had, they left the building, and after fastening the door on the outside set it on fire. The daughter, Phebe, again proved a heroine by extinguishing the fire. Then, finding that her father was not yet dead, she devoted herself to him and succeeded in stanching his wounds. With the coming of morning she started out and alarmed the neighborhood, and shortly after sunrise a company of armed men was in pursuit of the marauders, who were followed to the mountains and overtaken. A well-directed shot from a man named June wounded one of them, Benjamin Kelley. His body was subsequently recovered and identified by a suit of Quaker clothes which he had stolen from Reynolds. Meanwhile a physician had reached Reynolds' house and dressed his wounds. He was found to be wounded in over thirty places. One of his ears were so nearly severed that it hung down to his shoulder. It was put back in its place, but healed in such a way as to leave him disfigured for life. One of his hands was also so badly cut that he never recovered its use. He lay for weeks on the brink of the grave, but ultimately recovered, and lived to see his eighty-fifth year. Phebe, who was then only twelve years of age, married Jeremiah Drake after her removal to Sullivan County, where she died in 1853. It may be added that Phebe's mother was brought to confinement by the excitement of the terrible night through which she had passed, and that the daughter then born to her (Polly) subsequently became the wife of Dr. Blake Wales.*

From tradition we turn to the written record,—the "confession of William Cole, taken at New Barba-does, March 29, 1779," which was as follows:

"William Cole saith that about the 3d day of April, 1777, he, accompanied by John Babcock, William Jones, and John Ellison, at —, where he enlisted in Col. John Bayard's regiment (loyalists), in which he continued until the battle of Fort Montgomery. That at the surrender of the fort, and at the departure of the British troops from there, he, the said William Cole, and one James Babcock, being left sick about two miles from the fort at Moses Clements', Esq., went to the house of the said James Babcock at Stirling, where the said James Babcock continues (having in a short time thereafter delivered himself up to justice). That from thence he, the said William Cole, went to Pompton Plains, where he resided about a month, being suspected of having been with the enemy. That from Pompton he returned to the Clove, and from thence, in company with and by the persuasion of one David Babcock and one Jonathan Gage, he went to New York. That some time in the latter end of last fall he left New York in company with Thomas Ward, John Everett, Jacob Acker, James Cowen, George alias Thomas Harding, David Babcock, James Twaddle, Martinus Lawson, and Peter Lawson, and a certain John Mason, who was the head of the gang. That he parted company with them at the Clove about a mile beyond Sidman's, being something indisposed, and remained in the house of Edward Roblin in the Clove, while the above-

Iron-Works on the night of Saturday, the 26th of March, by a party of villains, five or six in number, the principal of whom was Richard Smith, eldest surviving son of the late Claudius Smith, of infamous memory, his eldest son having been shot last fall at Smith's Clove, in company with several other villains, by one of our scouting parties sent out in search of them. These bloody miscreants, it seems, that night intended to murder two men, who had shown some activity and resolution in apprehending these robbers and murderers who infested the neighborhood. They first went to the house of John W. Clark, near the iron-works, whom they dragged from his house and then shot him, and observing some remains of life in him, one of them saying, 'he is not dead enough yet,' shot him through the arm again and left him. He lived some hours after, and gave an account of their names and behavior. They then went to the house of —, who, hearing some noise they made in approaching, got up and stood on his defense with his gun and bayonet fixed, in a corner of his little log cabin. They burst open the door, but seeing him stand with his gun were afraid to enter, and thought proper to march off. The following was pinned to Clark's coat:

"A Warning to the Rebels.—You are hereby warned at your peril to desist from hanging any more friends to government as you did Claudius Smith. You are warned likewise to use James Smith, James Flewelling, and William Cole well, and ease their irons, for we are determined to hang six for one, for the blood of the innocent cries aloud for vengeance. Your noted friend, Capt. Williams, and his crew of robbers and murderers, we have got in our power, and the blood of Claudius Smith shall be repaid. There are particular companies of us who belong to Col. Butler's army, Indians as well as white men, and particularly numbers from New York, that are resolved to be avenged on you for your cruelty and murder. We are to remind you that you are the beginners and aggressors, for by your cruel oppressions and bloody actions you drive us to it. This is the first, and we are determined to pursue it on your heads and leaders to the last, till the whole of you are murdered."

mentioned persons robbed Mr. Erskine and Mrs. Sidman. That the above-named George Harding made a present of Mrs. Erskine's gold watch to David Matthews, Esq., mayor of New York, and that Mr. Erskine's rifle was given by Mason to Lord Cathcart. That the same party together with West, and Banta, and Richard and James Smith, sons of Claudius Smith, and a certain Nathaniel Figg, were the persons who robbed Muster-Master General Ward, &c., for which they received one hundred guineas from Lord Cathcart, as he, the said Cole, was informed by them on their return from New York. That just before he was taken he met with John Mason, David Babcock, Thomas Ward, and Richard Smith, near the bridge commonly called the Dwaus, who threatened vengeance for the execution of Claudius Smith, from whence he escapes them to have been the persons who murdered Mr. Clark; soon after that David Babcock, Richard Smith, and Jonas Ward, with about eleven of Gen. Burgoyne's men, were the persons that fired upon Maj. Goddins, some time in last January, as he was informed by said persons, in New York after the fact. That as he heard from them, one Henry McManus, who generally had his haunts near Stirling, one William Stagg, and one or two of Burgoyne's men, were the persons who robbed a certain Light-body, towards Wallkill, and that David Babcock and Richard Smith brought two horses, robbed from Nathaniel Seely, in Smith's Clove, into New York, in January last, which they sold to John Day, who formerly lived in Tine Valley. That when he robbed Mr. Ackerman he was accompanied by George Bull, Jacob Low, James Flewelling, all of whom formerly lived at Wallkill. That the above robbery was the only one in which he was ever concerned in, except that he took Hendrick Odell's gun.

"That the persons who harbor these gangs are Benjamin Demarest, Tunis Helme, John Harring, John Johnston (under ——— mountain); William Conkling, Elisha Babcock, Elisha Babcock, Jr., John Dobbs (near ———); Edward Roblin, in the Clove; Peter Nail, Benjamin Kelley, and Powers ———, all in the Clove; Edward Enners and John Winter in ———; Peter Acker in Paskock; and Jacobus Peak. That there is a cave dug under ground by the sons of Isaac Maybee and on the said Maybee's land, about half a mile from John Harring's, and another at about a quarter of a mile distant from the former, dug by the same persons, and a third about three miles from the house of Joseph Wessels in the Clove, and well known by Roblins in the Clove, each of which may contain about eight persons, where these robbers generally resort; and that John King, Jacob Acker, and John Stat are now in the Clove at ———, or in the houses around it. That Harding, Everett, he as soon as the weather grows warm, intend to plunder Col. ——— at Wallkill, to burn Col. Nicolls' house, the gniol, and some other houses in and near Goshen, and to remain in the county for that purpose. That there is a gang of the same kind on the east side of Hudson's River, whose names are Mandeville ———, Peter Wood, William Hulliker, William Danforth, Aaron Williams, James Houston, and others, who plundered and brought some cattle and horses from Tarrytown to New York the day before the said Cole left it."

"William Welcher says that some time last January, Wiert Banta and others applied to him to go with them to take Governor Livingston, for whose capture a reward of two hundred guineas was offered by the mayor of New York, which he refused. That he never was concerned in any robberies but that for which he is condemned. Mentions the same persons who harbor gangs as named in Cole's confession, and besides, one Arie Ackerman, at Paskock, where the wife of one of those robbers (John Mason) lives."

It was for many years a current belief that the valuable plunder obtained by these bands was buried in the mountains, and among other articles a silver stand, a quantity of pewter plates, and a large number of muskets. The story of searches for the buried articles by the grandsons of Claudius Smith, and also by sons of one of the Roblins, is told with no little minuteness of detail, but there is no evidence that anything more than guns were ever found. Like the buried treasures of Kidd, they have failed to be revealed to the earnest gaze of credulous searchers. It is apparently the fact that they never stole much besides cattle, as there was very little of gold or silver, money or stocks, in the possession of the people whose houses they visited. They may have become infamous, but they were never made rich by the business in which they engaged. It is said that their operations were continued until the permanent encampment of the American army in the Highlands (October, 1781) rendered their operations extremely hazardous, and finally ceased on the exchange of the preliminary articles of peace (1782), which obliged the British officers in New York to withdraw the encouragement which they had previously extended.

CHAPTER VII.

SECOND WAR WITH ENGLAND—WAR WITH MEXICO.

PERHAPS less is known, at the present time, in regard to the second war with England, commonly called the war of 1812, than there is in regard to the Revolution. Two reasons may be assigned for this,—the Revolution gave birth to the nation, and participants in it have commanded that respect, and its influence upon the world has been such, that the most thorough attention has been devoted by historians to the collection of facts and records with a view to preserve its most minute details; and, second, whatever of documentary evidence exists touching any of its details is accessible to those wishing to make examinations. The second war has not been so fortunate. Its successes were mainly through the navy on the ocean. But two triumphs occurred on land of any considerable importance—the victories at Plattsburgh and New Orleans—to compensate for many humiliations, not the least of which was the capture by the British of the capital of the nation, and the burning of the national records, an event which, by drawing from the States whatever records they possessed to supply the place of those which were thus destroyed, has rendered them almost wholly inaccessible.

The causes of the war were manifold. It was not without some prophetic accuracy that Franklin, replying to congratulations on the success of the colonies in their struggle for independence, remarked, "Say, rather, the war of the Revolution—the war for Independence is yet to be fought," for at no time until after the war of 1812 did England fully recognize the independence of the United States. There was a constant friction between the two governments, growing out of the weakness of the one and the powerfulness of the other, which culminated in the impressment of American seamen and the enforcement of the claimed right to search every vessel bearing the flag of the United States and the involvement of the United States in the war between England and France. This involvement did not grow out of any act of the United States government further than was necessary for the protection of American commerce. The English government issued its famous Orders in Council, which declared that all American vessels going to and from the ports of France and her allies, without first touching at or clearing from an English port, should be considered lawful prizes. These orders provoked the Berlin and Milan Decrees, on the part of France, by which all vessels that had touched at an English port, or submitted to be searched by an English cruiser, were pronounced to be the property of France; while British goods, wherever found, were made subject to seizure and confiscation.

Under such circumstances the American government could not remain inactive and allow its commerce to be ruled or ruined by the policy or pride of Britain or of France. Accordingly, in December, 1809, Congress resolved, as a matter of protection, to lay an embargo upon all American vessels and merchandise. This embargo prohibited American vessels from sailing from foreign ports, and all foreign ships from carrying away American cargoes. Its effect was suddenly to suspend commerce, to expose thousands of merchants to the risk of bankruptcy, and to check at once the flow of produce from the interior to the sea-board,—results which were severely felt by the people and which tried their patriotism to the utmost. The navy of the United States was actively employed in enforcing this embargo on the coast, and in the course of its operations brought on the historic contest between the "President" and the "Little Belt," on the 16th of May, 1811, which tended materially to the alienation of the nations. "In the winter of 1812, a plot on the part of English agents to sever the American Union was revealed to the government, and at a later day the determination of the English ministry to adhere to her Orders in Council was formally communicated to the President. At the same time the claim to impress English seamen out of American ships on the high seas was maintained in theory, while in practice the impressment was constantly extended to natives, the boarding officers claiming that the seaman who failed to prove that he was an American should be seized as an Englishman." From this determination there could be but one appeal, and on the 18th of June, 1812, Congress formally declared war against England.

Throughout the controversy preceding the declaration of war, and in the subsequent efforts to maintain it, the great majority of the people of the county were unwavering in their support of the national authorities. From first to last, by resolutions passed in conventions, by the expression of their sentiments through the ballot-box, by the prompt offer of volunteers, and by the contribution of men to actual service, they evinced their purpose to resist the "attacks of domestic enemies and the insolent aggressions of foreign powers." The first formal manifestation of local sentiment occurred in 1807, when the "Republican Blues," of Newburgh, tendered their services to the Governor of the State, as volunteers. This was followed by the overwhelming defeat of the Federal party, which was charged with being in sympathy with the English (though perhaps without sufficient reason), at the election in 1808 and 1809, and again in 1814, when Jonathan Fisk, representing the War party, obtained a majority of 1785 for congressman over Jonas Storey. The issue was perhaps more fairly joined in 1809 than in 1814. In that year (March 9th) the Republicans held a county convention at Goshen, preparatory to the State election,—Gen. Hathorn, chairman, and Jonathan Fisk, Esq., Col. John Nicholson, Gen. Reuben Hopkins, Capt. Josiah Brown, and Judge Nathan H. White, committee on resolutions,—and resolved, "That we view the laying of an embargo as a wise and patriotic measure, imperiously demanded by the exposed condition of our seamen, shipping, and trade to the audacious outrages of foreign powers; that it has saved thousands of our seamen from imprisonment and slavery, and millions of property of our countrymen from capture and confiscation." On the other hand, the Federal party—Daniel Niven, chairman, and John Barber, Alex. R. Thompson, Alanson Austin, John Bradner, J. N. Phillips, John Morrisoa, John Duer, Samuel Sayer, Jonas Storey, Solomon Sleight, John Decker, and Samuel B. Stickney, committee on resolutions—resolved, "That the act for enforcing the embargo, passed Jan. 9, 1809, in our deliberate opinion, is unjust, illegal, and oppressive, subversive of the rights and dangerous to the liberties of the people." When the war finally came on, many of the anti-embargo men of 1809 sustained the administration, holding with the majority that it was "just and necessary to redress our grievances and avenge our violated rights." The minority who withheld their assent are perhaps correctly represented by the vote in 1814 for Mr. Storey. We have no criticism to make on the course of any men or body of men, but believe it to be the highest prerogative of an American citizen to approve or refuse to approve of any war which may be declared by Congress, or into which the nation may be plunged. The citizen only becomes criminal by the commission of acts of treason, of which the expression of opinion is not a recognized element.

During the continuance of the war the militia were not without service in the field, while in the navy and in the volunteer regiments recruited by order of the government the county was honorably represented. For the reasons already stated, an accurate account of the movements of the militia during the war cannot now be obtained. The plan for raising troops was simple enough. The coast fortifications were to be well garrisoned by the local militia, assisted, when necessary, by regular troops, while aggressive operations were to be intrusted to the regular army and volunteers. The militia was to be called out to garrison the fortifications and for coast defense in detachments which were to include uniformed companies only, and in case their ranks were not full, drafts were to be made upon the enrolled militia to supply the deficiency. Second requisitions were not to include those serving under the first, and from the third, the first and second were relieved, the object being to divide the burden of duty as equally as possible. The first call was made April 21, 1812, and under it the detached militia were arranged in two divisions and eight brigades, and the brigades were divided into twenty regiments, to the command of each of which a lieutenant-colonel was given. Stephen Van Rensselaer, of Albany, was appointed to the command of the first division, the second brigade of which, under Brig.-Gen. Reuben Hopkins, of Goshen, embraced the militia detachments of Orange and Ulster, which were organized as the fourth regiment under Lieut.-Col. Andrew J. Hardenburgh, of Shawangunk. The cavalry and the artillery companies were similarly organized, the artillery in the first brigade of artillery, and the cavalry in the first brigade of cavalry. This arrangement was continued during the war, Lieut.-Col. Isaac Belknap, Jr., of Newburgh, taking the place of Col. Hardenburgh, in 1813 and 1814. The first call (1812) included all the uniformed companies; the second, made in July, 1813, included "all the uniformed companies of infantry, grenadiers, and riflemen," excepting members who had been on duty in 1812, and, as the number of exempts was considerable, the deficiency in the company rolls was made up by draft; the third call, made July 20, 1814, included infantry, artillery, and cavalry. Newburgh and New Windsor were made the place of rendezvous, and from thence the companies were moved to New York by sloops, and assigned to Harlem Heights and the fortifications around New York. The periods of service were three or four months.*

We have been unable to obtain a complete list of the uniformed companies of the county at that time, but the following were among the number, viz.: the Orange Hussars, of Montgomery, Capt. William Trimble (subsequently Capt. Milliken†); Capt. Van Orsdall's and Capt. Dorcas' companies of infantry, of the same town; Capt. Kerr's company of artillery, of New Windsor; Capt. Butterworth's company of artillery, of Newburgh; Capt. Westcott's company of cavalry, of Goshen;‡ Capt. Acker's company of cavalry, of Newburgh and Marlborough; Capt. Denniston's and Capt. Birdsall's companies of infantry, of Newburgh.

In 1812 (Nov. 30th), Capt. Denniston, whose company was known as the "Republican Blues," proposed the organization of a company of volunteers, to serve for one year or during the war, and succeeded in enlisting about fifty men, who elected Jonathan Gidney captain. The company went to New York and formed part of a detached regiment of riflemen, ranked, we are informed, as the Twenty-seventh U. S. Infantry, of which Capt. Denniston became major, and subsequently colonel. The name of Capt. Benjamin Wood, of Goshen, also appears in connection with this regiment, which is presumed to have been the regiment in which volunteers from the county mainly enlisted.

From a sketch written by Moses H. Corwin, and published elsewhere, it appears that there was a company or a portion of a company from Wallkill, in September, 1813. This company was known as the "Republican Blues," and proceeded to Waterford, via sloop from Newburgh, where it was embraced in a regiment under Col. Abraham Hardenburgh, of Ulster County. From Whitehall the command moved to Plattsburgh, and from thence to Fort Hampton, near the Canada line. The regiment had no special service other than guard duty. The muster-roll of the company, as supplied from memory, was as follows:

Captain, — Clark; lieutenant, Stacey Beaks, commandant; first sergeant, Nathaniel Penny.

Privates.—John Canfield, John B. Cox, Samuel Cox, Abner Miller, Moses H. Corwin, Stephen Sayre, Andrew Gunsoules, Gabriel Hill, Daniel Parsons, David Youmans, Samuel Canfield, Henry Coleman, William Penny, Joseph K. Owen, Joseph Kien, Peter Quick, Alexander Parsons, John S. Clark, Matthew Faulkner, Benjamin Parsons.

The following roll of a detached company cannot be located, from the fact, already stated, that all such companies were made up from other companies of an entire regimental district. The list embraces Orange as well as Ulster County names:

"Muster Roll of a company of New York militia under the command of Capt. John Dunning, in the consolidated regiment of cavalry commanded by Lieut.-Col. Michael Smith from the seventh of September, 1814, when mustered, to the first day of November, 1814, in the service of the United States."

John Dunning, captain.

William Mullicks, first lieutenant.

legislation. His mantle has now fallen on the present commandant, Capt. William C. Brewster, who is resolved to wear it manfully and with the true spirit of the soldier."

‡ The following brief record occurs in the local newspapers, April 11, 1813:

"In the squadron of Maj. Westcott of the first regiment of cavalry of this State, Charles Lindsey has been appointed captain; Joseph H. Jackson, first lieutenant; Daniel McNeal, second lieutenant; and Stephen P. Rockefeller, cornet." The persons named were all residents of Montgomery, except Maj. Westcott.

* The detached militia rendezvoused at Newburgh and New Windsor in 1814, embarked Aug. 28th and returned Dec. 4th, a period of four months.

† The history of this company was referred to by Mr. Hugh B. Bull, in an address delivered by him at the presentation of a stand of colors to the corps, Aug. 9, 1865, as follows:

"This company of cavalry has been in existence for more than six decades of years without an interregnum. It was organized shortly after the Revolutionary war, under the auspices of Joseph Barbour, a patriotic citizen of the town of Montgomery, who some thirty years or more since went to that rest which awaits the soldier equally with others of our race. His descendants and kindred are among the most respectable and honorable of our county. His commission bears date Oct. 9, 1793, under the hand and seal of His Excellency George Clinton, the then Governor of our State. This company has preserved an actual existence from that until the present period. It has been marshaled in succession under Barbour and Milliken; and in what is called the war of 1812, when the design was formed by the perfidious foe to humble and crush our infant nation, this troop rallied on Brooklyn Heights, and bore their part in turning back the invader and averting the tide of desolation that was about to flow over our domains. Also, under Hill, Waugh, and that indomitable and energetic soldier, William Wright, who, for a quarter of a century or more, caused his ardent soldiery to appear at his call, and they in turn responded with alacrity. He has sustained this corps during that period through good and evil report, under adverse and favorable the "Java." Augustus C. Ludlow was on the "President," the "Constitution," the "Hornet," and the "Chesapeake," of which latter he was lieutenant under Capt. Lawrence, in the action with the English ship "Shannon" (July, 1813). His heroic conduct in that action, and his almost tragic death, made for him a name which will be an example while American history shall be cherished. Sailors in merchantmen were captured by English cruisers and confined in Dartmoor prison, and among their number were those whose birthplaces and homes were in the county of Orange.

Immediately following the capture of Washington in 1814, the people of the county were brought together in determination to resist to the utmost the apparent purpose of England to destroy the independence of the nation. Party spirit was hushed in the presence of the impending danger, and, if at no other time, it could then be written, "patriotism reigns predominant." At Goshen, on the 30th of August, a "patriotic meeting" was held, for the purpose of "taking into consideration the propriety of erecting new or repairing the old fortifications at West Point and in the vicinity thereof, and of devising some plan for effecting that object, and for other purposes of public defense under the present circumstances of the country."† This meeting, of which Gen. James W. Wilkin was chairman, and Dr. David R. Arnell, secretary, "Resolved, That John Duer, Jonathan Fisk, William Ross, James W. Wilkin, George D. Wickham, James Finch, Jr., and Nathan H. White be a committee to devise some plan for accomplishing the above object," and to enable them to report, the meeting adjourned until the afternoon of the 31st. At the adjourned meeting, the committee reported as follows:

"The situation of our country calls upon the people to feel and act like freemen at war with a powerful enemy. An availing foe desolating our towns must be met and repulsed. A sense of danger, the dictates of duty, and the spirit of patriotism summon us to offer our united and zealous exertions for the defense, the safety, and the protection of our country. If we cannot go forth to meet the enemy, we can prepare to receive him on his approach to us. The forts and works of defense at West Point and its vicinity we can repair, strengthen, and defend. That this object may be accomplished

"Resolved, That a Committee of Defense for the county of Orange, to consist of twenty-two members, be appointed.

"Resolved, That it be recommended to the people in the several towns of the county to meet without delay, and take measures to co-operate with the Committee of Defense.

"Resolved, That the Committee of Defense invite our fellow-citizens of the counties of Dutchess and Putnam, Ulster, Greene, and Columbia, to unite and co-operate with the citizens of Orange County in adopting measures of defense.

"Resolved, That the Committee of Defense meet at the house of Col. Tutbill, in Goshen, on the 2d day of September next at 3 o'clock P.M., and afterwards on their own adjournments.

"The following gentlemen were then appointed a Committee of Defense: From the town of Miniskunk, John Bradner and Nathan Arnet; Deerpark, James Finch, Jr., and Joseph Baird; Wallkill, Henry B. Wisner and Benjamin Woodward; Goshen, John Duerand Freegift Tutbill; Warwick, Dr. Samuel S. Seward and Jeffrey Wisner; Monroe, James D. Secor and Benjamin Cunningham; Cornwall, William A. Clark and Joseph Chandler, Jr.; Blooming-Grove, Col. Selah Strong and Jeremiah Horton; Montgomery, John Blake, Jr., and Johannes Miller; New-lough, John D. Lawson and Jacob Powell; New Windsor, Joseph Morrell and David Dill.

At the meeting of the Committee of Defense, according to appointment, September 2d, all the members named were present except John D. Lawson and Joseph Morrell. Selah Strong was appointed chairman, and John Duer, secretary. It was Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to communicate with the general and State governments, to tender the services of the citizens of this county in repairing the fortifications in and about West Point, to ascertain the precise state of the works and the extent of the repairs that may be necessary, and that the committee consist of the following persons. The chairman and secretary, William A. Clark, Joseph Morrell, and Johannes Miller, and that they report to the committee at their next meeting.

Resolved, That this committee recommend to their fellow-citizens of this county that town-meetings be held at the usual place of holding the same in the different towns, on Saturday the tenth day of September, for the purpose of appointing committees to co-operate with the general committee in such measures of defense as the situation of the county may require.

Resolved, That our fellow-citizens exempt by law from the performance of military duty be requested without delay to form themselves into military associations for the defense of their country.

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee be authorized to call meetings of the general committee from time to time, as he may think necessary, and that seven members constitute a quorum."

At an adjourned meeting of the committee, September 17th, it was

Resolved, That the town committee be instructed to proceed without delay in collecting subscriptions of money and labor, from their respective towns, for the repairing and erecting fortifications at and about West Point, and that it be recommended to them to request subscriptions agreeably to the rate of the last assessment of town and county taxes, and that they report to the general committee the amount of their several subscriptions.

Resolved, That the town committees be further instructed to inquire into the state of the arms and ammunition in their respective towns, and to report to the general committee the quantity of arms and ammunition which their respective towns may wish to procure.

Resolved, That the town committees be further instructed to take the necessary measures for organizing the exempts and the volunteers of the Middle District (Senatorial), and that they report the number organized to the general committee."

On the 25th of October it was reported that a letter had been received from the Secretary of War informing the committee that he would "order a skillful engineer to repair to West Point to superintend the works and point out the sites most eligible for defense." At another meeting it was reported that the people of Montgomery had subscribed three hundred and thirty-two days' work and four hundred and eleven dollars. Here the newspaper record ends. It does not appear that the repair of the forts was commenced,* but in several of the towns military companies, composed of exempts, were organized. Of the latter a single record has found its way to preservation, as follows:

* Maj. Boynton, in his "History of West Point," states that Fort Putnam was partially repaired about 1794, from appropriations made by Congress. It is not believed that any repairs were made in 1814 through the efforts of the Committee of Defense.

"NOTICE.—In the present alarming crisis of our affairs, when our country is invaded, our seaports destroyed, our rights infringed, and our liberty and independence threatened, it becomes the imperious duty of every person capable of bearing arms to step forward in defense of his bleeding country.

"We therefore, the subscribers, inhabitants of the Town of Warwick, in the County of Orange (being exempt by law from military duty), do hereby agree to enroll ourselves for the purpose of forming an independent company to be called the Warwick Volunteers, and as soon as there shall be the number of forty able-bodied men thus enrolled, we agree that on notice being previously given at a day and place certain, we will meet and by a plurality of vote present choose officers to command said company; immediately after which we will tender our services to the Governor and Council of this State in defense of the middle district of this State, and pray them to grant commissions to said officers agreeable to law.

The return of peace was celebrated in every town in the county. Speeches, toast-tables, cannon, and illuminations proclaimed the general joy, while the churches emulated each other in public offerings of thanksgiving and praise. As indicative of the general spirit, the action of the people of Hopewell is in point, viz.:

"On Thursday the 24th ult. (April 24th), soon after information of the treaty of peace was received in Hopewell, a number of the inhabitants of the place assembled at the public-house of Isaac Schultze, in order to adopt such measures as might be deemed most expressive of the feelings of joy on the occasion. Mr. E. Gillman being called to the chair, and Mr. Isaac Schultze chosen clerk, it was Resolved, to assemble in the church, on the Tuesday evening following, and there solemnly to offer up thanksgiving and Praise to Almighty God for granting Peace to our country. It was likewise resolved that the Rev. Mr. Van Doren, pastor of the congregation, be requested to lead in the devotion of the evening, and to deliver an address."

"Agreeably to the foregoing resolution, on Tuesday evening a large concourse of people assembled in the church, which was elegantly illuminated with about seven hundred candles; when, after appropriate sacred music and solemn prayer and praise, the following address was delivered. The most becoming behavior was observed throughout the whole assembly, and joy and gratitude appeared to irradiate every countenance.

"ADDRESS."

"Assembled, as we are, on this joyful occasion, to celebrate, in the house of God, the return of peace to our bleeding country, it becomes us, in the first place, to celebrate His praise who maketh war to cease unto the ends of the earth; who breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; who burneth the chariot in the fire. Since not to acknowledge His hand in our deliverance would be both ungrateful and impious, let us then, as a Christian people, indulge the warm affections of gratitude and joy, joy for the blessing of peace, which the Governor of the Universe has bestowed upon us, and gratitude, as an expression of our obligation to Him for the favor. Such affections are pleasing in His sight, who looketh on the heart. While then our hearts are glowing with gratitude and leaping with joy under a sense of the recent display of divine goodness to us, let us for a moment call to mind the many distinguished with which the God of Heaven has been pleased to signalize our infant country.

"Collected on the shores of the American wilderness, as its first settlers were, from almost every nation and clime, fugitives from oppression, from persecution, and from want, the God of their fathers has prospered and blessed them. He cast out the heathen from before them, and planted them in a goodly soil. He crowned the labor of their hands with plenty, and prospered their institutions, both civil and religious. Thus, pardoned with the smiles of Heaven, they increased in numbers, in arts, in wealth, and respectability. Colleges were formed, temples for the worship of the living God were raised, the sound of the hammer was heard in every quarter, and commerce began to unfurl her thousand sails.

"Nor was our prosperity unobserved by the nations of the earth. They saw, they wondered, and they admired. Our prosperity excited the cupidity, especially of that nation which claimed us as her colonies. But before the yoke which she had prepared for us was riveted to our necks, we cast it to the ground and dashed it in pieces. It would be ungrateful here not to acknowledge the hand of God in enabling us to assert our rights and to obtain our independence, by which we took a place among the nations of the earth. Although the conflict was long and bloody, the Lord of Hosts crowned our arms with success, and said to our country, thou art free! and thereby taught mankind that the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, but that salvation is of the Lord. Nor can we doubt that God taught our senators wisdom, since they were enabled to devise and prepare a constitution for the States by which the wisdom and wealth and power of each were concentrated and made to flow in the same channel for the common benefit of all; a constitution which, while it secures life, liberty, and property to each individual, yet sufficiently nerves the arm of government to guide and protect the whole.

"And what has been our situation since that time? While the plains of Europe have for years smoked with the blood of the slain, while mighty convulsions have overturned her mighty thrones and shaken whole kingdoms to their centre, we for thirty years enjoyed the sunshine of peace and of equal laws. The thunder of Europe's cannon was heard, but at so great a distance that its sound came only murmuring on our ears. And so familiar did we become with her oft-repeated tale of woe, that the fate of her mighty armies, which marched into the field but never returned, excited in us feelings of commiseration but for a day. While thus in a great measure insensible to the distress of others, their broils enriched our coffers.

"But, alas! with our growing wealth we became more proud, more ungrateful, more wicked, and therefore more ripe for the judgment of Heaven. Nor have they been delayed. The sword has been unsheathed on our borders, and made drunk with the blood of our fellow-citizens. Many have been made to feel sorely the rod of God's displeasure. Yet as a nation we have suffered but lightly compared with what the nations of Europe have lately experienced from the awful ravages of war. And is it, O Lord, because our crimes have been less? Or is it not rather that Thy compassion and grace to us have more abounded? Although a righteous God has visited our favored land with the fire and with the sword, and with pestilence, He has in His abundant mercy preserved us from the horrors of famine, a still sorer judgment, for the earth has yielded the fruits of her increase in abundance, and we have eaten to the full.

"War on our coasts and throughout our land has ceased. God hath said to the destroying angel, It is enough. The sword has been returned to the scabbard, and we are now permitted each one to sit under his own vine and fig-tree, there being none to alarm us or make us afraid. And shall we not be glad on that account, and joy in the God of our salvation? Surely he that does not and will not rejoice must be destitute of the feelings of humanity, as he is insensible to the dying groans of the soldier, and regardless of the bitter cries and despairing agonies of the aged parent, the affectionate wife, and helpless youth, from whose tender embrace war tears a son, a husband, or a father, and writes in characters of blood the name of the first, childless; of the next, a widow; of the last, an orphan. And who can tell how many such have been called during the last war to mourn in secret, and have pined away in anguish a life that was bound up in the life of their departed friend? None can tell but He whose eye is over all His works, and who deigns to notice the sighs and tears of the widow and fatherless. Oh! their departed friends shall never return; their blood has flowed at their country's call and their eyes are sealed in death.

"Sad and gloomy as these reflections are and must be to a virtuous mind, yet we, as a congregation, have abundant ground for rejoicing, since not one from among us has been called into the field of battle, and although a number of you have, for a short time, exchanged your ordinary pursuits for the life of a camp, yet, through the goodness of God, you have returned in safety to your friends, one only excepted, and are permitted to join with us in offering thanksgiving to the God of all our armies. And what, O! what, shall we render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards us? Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works among the children of men!

"Whatever may be our feelings on this occasion, yet as no hostile foot has visited our doors, as no alarms for personal safety have disturbed our slumbers, as none of us have been called to mourn the losses of friends whose blood has flowed in the service of our country, we cannot so fully appreciate the blessings of returning peace as many throughout our land. Would you, at least in some measure, rightly estimate the blessings of peace, imagine for a moment the situation of those inhabitants living on our seaboard on the east, or on our frontiers on the north and west, who were either driven from their homes or were daily exposed to an invading fleet, or more-to-be-dreaded scalping-knife of the Indian. Imagine for a moment the situation of those inhabitants whose homes were laid in ashes, and themselves obliged to wander as fugitives and strangers on their native soil. Imagine for a moment the feelings of those remnants of families from which one or more of their number has been ravaged by the war. As little as we are willing or able to realize these scenes of distress and misery, they are not fictitious, but have actually and frequently taken place during the past war, and in a greater or less degree do take place in all wars.

"But blessed be His name who maketh the wars to cease. The tomahawk is now buried, and the late hostile fleets now visit our shores in peace. And O! may the confused noise of the warrior and garments rolled in blood no more be heard or seen in our land in our day, nor in the day of our children, nor children's children.

"And since the judge of all the earth has deigned to bestow upon us the blessings of peace, may we not hope that with it He will also grant us other tokens of his favor? May we not hope soon to see new fields of industry and wealth opened to the farmer, a new spring given to the mechanic arts, and our dying commerce again revive? Yes; may we not hope soon to see commerce, the parent of industry and source of wealth, unfurl her canvas to every wind, visit every clime, and isle, and continent, return with their riches and pour their wealth upon our favored shores? May we not hope that, being restored to peace with our enemy, we will lay aside all enmity against them, and view them as brethren descended from the same common parent, sharers in the same benign religion of Jesus, and warmed with the same hopes of immortality with ourselves? May we not hope that, with returning peace abroad, the bitterness of party spirit among ourselves, which has disgraced all ages, and ranks, and sexes, may be eradicated from our bosoms, and exchanged for an ambition who shall become the best member of society by fulfilling all the duties of their several stations? For in the final issue of things it will then be made to appear that the best Christian is the best patriot.

"Would we then truly enjoy the blessings of peace, let us imbibe and cultivate the spirit of the Gospel and fearlessly discharge all the duties it enjoins, both public and private. Let us enlist under the banners of the Prince of Peace, who is the Prince of the kings of the earth, that we may enjoy His smiles and gracious protection. And let us ardently desire and pray for the coming of that day when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ; that He may have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth, for in His days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth."

WAR WITH MEXICO.

The war with Mexico drew a number of volunteers in New York City regiments, but so far as we can learn there were no companies organized in the county, except Company K, of the Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, Capt. Alexander Wilkin, which was recruited at Goshen. A history of this company will be found in connection with the town of Goshen.

CHAPTER VIII.

ORANGE COUNTY IN THE REBELLION.

In the civil war of 1861-65, the people of this county proved themselves worthy representatives of a heroic ancestry. In all the larger towns meetings were held immediately upon the fall of Fort Sumter. Men and money were freely tendered for the defense of the Union. Enlistments commenced forthwith, and the action of the citizens was everywhere prompt and enthusiastic. When it became necessary at a later period to raise large sums to fill the several quotas, these were voted without hesitation.

Briefly recapitulated, the following regiments and companies were recruited and organized in the county, viz.:

3d Regiment, Co. B, infantry, 1861.
 18th Regiment, Co. D, infantry, 1861.
 18th Regiment, Co. I, infantry, 1861,—in part.
 36th Regiment, Co. B, infantry, 1861.

 7th Regiment, artillery, 1864,—70 men.
 7th Independent Battery, 1861.
 19th and 71st Militia, 1861-62,—517 men.

There were, in addition, many enlistments in other regiments and also in the navy. The following aggregate of men furnished may be accepted as very nearly accurate:

While a detailed history of the services of the companies and regiments enumerated is not within the province of this work, more than a mere reference is due to some of them.

THIRD REGIMENT—CO. B.

Company B, Third Regiment Infantry, claims to have been the first company recruited and ready for muster in the State, although not the first mustered. Recruiting for it was commenced in Newburgh immediately on the passage, by the Legislature, of the act of April 16, 1861, entitled "An act to authorize the equipment of a volunteer militia and to provide for the public safety." Although the movement for the recruiting of the company was inaugurated by Stephen W. Fullerton, Esq., at that time a member of Assembly, and subsequently captain of the company, James A. Raney was in charge. The company was mustered in May 14, 1861,—seventy-seven men,—for two years. At the expiration of its term its remaining members were mustered out. The company was reorganized, however, and continued in the field until finally mustered out, Aug. 28, 1865. Big Bethel, Fort Wagner, Bermuda Hundred, Petersburg, Fort Gilmer, Chapin's Farm, Fort Fisher, and Wilmington, N. C., were its more important fields of service. Its officers were:

Stephen W. Fullerton, captain, April 20, 1861; died of disease at Newburgh Sept. 11, 1861.

Ervine A. Jones, first lieutenant, April 20, 1861; promoted captain Sept. 25, 1861; dismissed Aug. 16, 1862.

Alexander Mann, second lieutenant, April 20, 1861; promoted first lieutenant Sept. 30, 1861; captain, June 10, 1862; discharged Aug. 31, 1864.

Jeremiah D. Mabie, first sergeant, May 14, 1861; second lieutenant, Sept. 14, 1861; first lieutenant, April 24, 1862; captain, Co. F, June 15, 1863; discharged Sept. 18, 1864.

James H. Reeve, fourth sergeant, May 14, 1861; first sergeant; second lieutenant, April 21, 1862; captain, Co. 1, Oct. 3, 1864; lost leg at Fort Fisher; discharged June 26, 1865.

The personal record of its non-commissioned officers and privates will be found in the Newburgh list of volunteers.

EIGHTEENTH REGIMENT.

This regiment is described in the official reports as having been organized at Albany to serve two years. The companies of which it was composed were raised in the counties of Albany, Schenectady, St. Lawrence, Ontario, and Orange. It was mustered into the service of the United States May 17, 1861, and mustered out May 28, 1863, by reason of the expiration of its term of service. The portion of this regiment enlisted in Orange County consisted of Company D,—John C. McGinnis captain, George Barry first lieutenant, and Roswell M. Sayre second lieutenant. It was formed at Middletown immediately upon the call of the President for seventy-five thousand volunteers. One of the commissions bears date April 22d, and the rank of quite a number of the commissioned officers dates back from that time.

There were so many enlistments in the company that on reaching Albany, besides organizing Company D, about thirty of the men were taken to assist in organizing Company H. The company which went from Orange County was mostly composed of railroad men.

The Eighteenth, after its organization, left Albany for Washington. They encamped for about two weeks on Capitol Hill. They were at the battle of Bull Run and supported a battery, but did not share to any extent in the actual fighting. They remained at Centreville the next night, and then marched back to Washington.

The regiment remained in that vicinity and in winter-quarters near Alexandria until the spring of 1862. At the opening of that year's campaign they were sent out to Bristow's Station, were snowed in, and soon after returned to Alexandria. They then went on board transports, and went to the Peninsula. They shared in the McClellan campaign against Richmond, through the final Seven Days' fight, and encamped at Harrison's Landing with the army. After that they were detailed as a guard at various points. Their winter-quarters 1862-63 were at White Oak Church. Early the following spring they were transported to Albany and discharged according to terms of their enlistment. The date of the mustering out was May 28, 1863.

Many of the members of the Eighteenth re-enlisted and did good service during the remainder of the war.

Promotions among the men who went from Orange County in the Eighteenth :

Thomas S. Lane, commissioned as second lieutenant Dec. 2, 1861, and his rank dating from Nov. 6th; was promoted to first lieutenant Nov. 10, 1862. He was mustered out with the regiment May 28, 1863.

Roswell M. Sayre, commissioned as second lieutenant July 4, 1861, and his rank dating from April 30, 1861; was promoted to first lieutenant Dec. 21, 1861, and to captain Nov. 10, 1862, his rank in the latter position dating from June 26, 1862. He was mustered out with the regiment May 28, 1863.

John S. King was commissioned as first lieutenant Nov. 10, 1862, his rank dating from June 26, 1862, and was mustered out with the regiment May 28, 1863.

George Barry, commissioned as first lieutenant July 4, 1861, and his rank dating from April 30, 1861; was promoted captain Dec. 2, 1861, and was killed in battle at Gaines' Mills, Va., June 27, 1862.

John C. McGinnis, commissioned as captain July 4, 1861, and his rank dating from April 30th; was promoted to major Dec. 2, 1861, and to lieutenant-colonel Oct. 14, 1862. He was mustered out with the regiment May 28, 1863.

THIRTY-SIXTH REGIMENT CO. B.

Immediately after the close of his connection with the recruitment of Co. B, Third Regiment, James A. Raney, of Newburgh, at that time captain of Co. F, 19th Militia, obtained authority to recruit a company for the Thirty-sixth Regiment of volunteers, then being organized in the city of New York. Sergt. Timothy Donoghue, also of Co. F, united in the enterprise and rendered very material assistance. Recruiting was commenced on the 13th of May, 1861, and the company was mustered into the service of the United States on the 17th of June following, with seventy-seven members. The regiment left Riker's Island July 12th, and arrived in Washington on the 14th; remained in camp until the 24th of March, 1862, when it was brigaded under Brig.-Gen. Couch in the division commanded by Gen. D. C. Buell, and subsequently by Gen. Keyes. From that time the history of the regiment was blended with the movements under Gen. McClellan on the Peninsula. Capt. Donoghue and sixteen of his company were the first of the army to cross the Chickahominy at Bottom's Bridge, May 22, 1862. At the battle of Fair Oaks, on the 31st of the same month; at Seven Pines, June 25th; at Gaines' Mill, June 27th; and at Malvern Hill, July 1st, the regiment made a brilliant record. At Malvern Hill Co. B was particularly distinguished, and won the approbation of the general commanding.

Returning to Yorktown Aug. 29th, the regiment embarked for Alexandria, where it arrived on the 30th, and was pushed forward to Chantilly, where it was again under fire (Sept. 1st). Crossed into Maryland and (Nov. 3d) into Virginia, and advanced to Fredericksburg, where it was in Gen. Devens' brigade, which was the first of the left grand division to cross the Rappahannock, Dec. 11th, and covered the retreat of the army on the 15th, Co. B being detailed to collect stragglers, and finally crossing under a shower of balls from the enemy. On the 3d of May following the regiment led the centre column of attack on Marye's Heights, where Co. B captured a battery from a Mississippi brigade, and was the first to plant its colors on the heights. In the afternoon of the same day the regiment was detailed, as a part of Sedgwick's corps, in the assault on Salem Heights, and performed most excellent service. The records of the regiment were destroyed June 30, 1863, at Westminster, Md., to prevent falling into the hands of the enemy, but Capt. Donoghue determinedly preserved his descriptive book, from which records of his men will be found in the list of Newburgh volunteers. The last service of the regiment was in Hooker's campaign. At the commencement of the "mysterious movements of Gen. Lee" which culminated at Gettysburg, the regiment was again sent over the Rappahannock, where three divisions of the enemy were found, but no action ensued. Falling back towards Centreville, the regiment crossed the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry, and its term of service being more than filled, it was ordered home. No braver, better, or more gallant men served in the volunteer force than Co. B. Its officers were:

James A. Raney, captain, June 15, 1861; promoted major Dec. 21, 1861; resigned Oct. 15, 1862.

Timothy Doughline, first lieutenant, June 15, 1861; promoted captain Nov. 12, 1861; mustered out with regiment July 15, 1863.

John M. Lewis, second lieutenant, June 15, 1861; promoted first lieutenant Dec. 2, 1861; mustered out with regiment July 15, 1863.

Charles E. Lewis, first sergeant, Oct. 1, 1861; second lieutenant, Nov. 12, 1861; first lieutenant, Aug. 29, 1862; mustered out with regiment July 15, 1863.

FIFTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

This organization was popularly known as the Tenth Legion. It was organized at Newburgh, mostly in the month of August, though the rank of some of the officers dates from July.

The Fifty-sixth was composed of companies raised in Ulster, Orange, Sullivan, and Delaware, and it was mustered into the service of the United States between July 31st and Dec. 10th. As elsewhere stated, the companies recruited in Orange were A, B, D, and E, with scattering men in other commands. The Seventh Battery and Co. C, First Mounted Rifles, were also recruited for it but subsequently detached. It left for the seat of war Nov. 7, 1861, eleven hundred and forty-three strong. It was formed as a three years' regiment, but by re-enlistments the organization was continued, and was not mustered out until Oct. 17, 1865, making a period of four years' service.

By the adjutant-general's report of 1868 this regiment was entitled to inscribe upon its banners the following battles:

Lee's Mills, Va.; Williamsburg, Va.; Honey Hill, S. C.; Devaux Neck, S. C.; John's Island, S. C.; White Oak Swamp, Va.; Fair Oaks, Va.; Yorktown, Va. (siege); Chickahominy, Va.; Coosawhatchie, S. C.; Malvern Hill, Va.; Carter's Hill, Va.; Bottom's Bridge, Va.; Dingle's Mills, S. C.

SEVENTIETH REGIMENT.

The town of Deerpark furnished nearly all the members of Company F in this organization. The regiment was raised and organized in New York City to serve three years, and was mustered into the service of the United States from June 20 to June 29, 1861. The original members, except those re-enlisting as veterans, were mustered out of service July 1, 1864. The veterans remaining were transferred to the Eighty-sixth, which was the regiment so long brigaded with the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, and intimately associated with the latter in the most important battles of the war.

The Seventieth Regiment was officially recognized as sharing honorably in the battles of Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, Charles City Cross-Roads, Malvern Hill, White Oak Swamp, Bristow Station, Second Bull Run, and Fredericksburg.

The regiment went out under command of Col. Daniel E. Sickles. His commission as colonel was dated Jan. 16, 1862, but his rank was from the 29th of June, 1861. He was promoted brigadier-general Sept. 3, 1861, and Lieut.-Col. William Dwight, Jr., succeeded to the colonelcy of the Seventieth. The latter was also promoted brigadier-general Nov. 29, 1862, and the command of the Seventieth devolved upon Col. J. Egbert Farnum.

Among the promotions occurring in Company F from Deerpark may be mentioned that of Thomas Holt. He was commissioned captain Jan. 16, 1862, his rank dating from June 20, 1861. He was promoted major Dec. 1, 1862; lieutenant-colonel Jan. 14, 1863; and mustered out with the regiment July 1, 1864.

Robert Blything (Blighton) was a second lieutenant, his rank dating from June 20, 1861. He resigned Nov. 28, 1861. Nine commissioned officers were killed in battle.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

The following account of the organization of this regiment, of its participation in the various campaigns, of its heroic sacrifices, of its tedious marches, and of its brave conduct on the field of battle, is condensed from the interesting volume published in 1877 by Col. Charles H. Weygant, of Newburgh. As a participator in nearly all of its struggles, as an eyewitness of the fierce fights into which it entered, as a careful student of public documents published since the war, it is evident that he possessed peculiar qualifications for the task, and that he executed it with a just pride in the fame of this gallant regiment and with a loving regard to the memory of his comrades. In editing this chapter, derived from his work, most of his personal allusions, his interesting anecdotes, and his general descriptions have necessarily been omitted. It is due to him to further say that not only is the thread of the following account his, and the dates his, but oftentimes his exact words are used without quotation, all of which is intended to be covered in this preliminary general acknowledgment.

The call of the President for three hundred thousand three years' men was dated July 1, 1862, and on the following day Governor Morgan issued his stirring and patriotic appeal to "each citizen" of the Empire State. The work of preparation was immediately pushed with vigor by the State authorities, and Governor Morgan ceased not day or night in his efforts to arouse the people.

The State was divided into military districts, in each of which a place of rendezvous was designated, and a committee of loyal influential citizens appointed to superintend the work of enlistment, and to select and recommend suitable persons to command the regiments to be raised. Special appeals were made to nearly every town and county board, and circulars of instruction were sent broadcast over the State. The military committee appointed by His Excellency for the district comprising the counties of Orange and Sullivan was composed of the following-named gentlemen: Hon. Robert Denniston, of Blooming-Grove; Hon. Ambrose S. Murray, of Goshen; Hugh S. Bull, Esq., of Montgomery; Alexander Moore, Esq., of Washingtonville; Alfred Post, Esq., of Newburgh; James M. Barrett, Esq., of Cornwall; Morgan Shuit, Esq., of Monroe.

On the 11th of July this committee held its first regular meeting at the United States Hotel in Newburgh, at which they decided to recommend Capt. A. Van Horne Ellis, of New Windsor, for the colonelcy of a regiment it was proposed to attempt to raise in the county of Orange. Capt. Ellis was then in the service. His company (Co. I), composed principally of men recruited in Newburgh, who had served under him in the Seventy-first New York State Militia at Bull Run, had a few weeks before been called together at less than twenty-four hours' notice for a second term of active service, and were then stationed in the fortifications near Washington.

The captain was at this time temporarily at home, and on being notified of the action of the committee, promptly accepted the proffered position. Within an hour thereafter he had telegraphed his resignation as captain to the commander of his regiment at Washington, and was on his way to Albany for instructions and the necessary credentials.

At Albany, the traditional "red tape" of departments had given way before the pressure of public necessity. In a short time Capt. Ellis had received the requisite documents, and the same evening found him back in Orange County hard at work upon his patriotic mission.

The work of enlistment was slow and difficult at first. The enthusiasm of April, 1861, when the flag had just fallen at Fort Sumter, was to some extent gone. The fearful truth that a long and bloody war was in progress, now clearly perceived, gave to every movement a serious tone, far different from the feeling of fifteen months before. The prospect of victory "in ninety days" had long since vanished.

The Seven Days' battles, the retreat of McClellan's forces, the call for two hundred thousand men, all told of the desperate struggle which was in progress. On the first day of August but eight men had been enrolled, and the prospect of raising a regiment was anything but encouraging.

To the general war committee there had been added E. A. Brewster, of Newburgh; William Fullerton, of Newburgh; C. H. Winfield, of Goshen; Thomas Edsall, of Goshen; Silas Horton, of Goshen; James Cromwell, of Cornwall; William Avery, of Cornwall; Daniel Thompson, of Crawford; C. C. McQuoid, of Wallkill; Halstead Sweet, of Wallkill; John G. Wilkin, of Wallkill; John Cummings, of Wallkill; Charles St. John, of Port Jervis; John Conkling, of Port Jervis; C. M. Lawrence, of Port Jervis; C. B. Newkirk, of Monroe; A. S. Dodge, of Mount Hope; Dorastus Brown, of Greenville; A. F. Schofield, of Montgomery; A. G. Owen, of Blooming-Grove; John Cowdrey, of Warwick; Thomas Welling, of Warwick.

The doubtful, hesitating condition of affairs soon gave way before the threatened invasion of the very fields of the North, and before an uprising tide of patriotism that nearly silenced for a time all opposing voices. The enthusiasm of April, 1861, was again rekindled, and August, 1862, witnessed scenes of heroic self-sacrifice such as the world has seldom witnessed. The strong under-current of national feeling swelled upward to the surface, and men rushed forward ready to do, and die if need be. Public meetings were held almost nightly in every hall, church, and school-house in the State. Private bounties were offered, and funds began to be raised for the support of the needy families of those who should volunteer. The national capital was once more in danger. The government was in earnest, the people were in earnest; the hardy sons of the North sprang to arms crying, "We're coming, Father Abraham, three hundred thousand more." Up to the 8th of August not more than a score of volunteers had reported at Col. Ellis' headquarters in Goshen. Fifteen days later the regiment was fully organized and ready for the field. Its field-officers were A. Van Horne Ellis, colonel; Francis M. Cummins, lieutenant-colonel; James Cromwell, major. The staff-officers were John H. Thompson, major and surgeon; T. Scott Bradner, captain and chaplain; Augustus Denniston, lieutenant and quartermaster; G. De Peyster Arden, lieutenant and adjutant; Edward Marshall, lieutenant and assistant surgeon; R. V. K. Montfort, lieutenant and second assistant surgeon. The ten captains were Charles H. Weygant, Co. A; Henry S. Murray, Co. B; William Silliman, Co. C; James W. Benedict, Co. D; William A. McBirney, Co. E; Ira S. Bush, Co. F; Isaac Nicoll, Co. G; David Crist, Co. H; Leander Clark, Co. I; William A. Jackson, Co. K. Musicians: William B. Wood and Moses P. Ross, Co. A, buglers; Mr. Hart, drum-major;* John G. Buckley, Charles Whitehead,

* Hired by Col. Ellis, not enlisted.

Arthur Haigh, Co. H, George W. Dimmick, Co. D, Henry C. Payne, Co. B, five; Robert L. Davis, Co. F, A. A. Millspaugh, George W. Camfield, Co. K, John W. Cole, Co. I, R. L. Stephens, Co. E, Charles W. Bodle, Henry M. Cannon, Co. A, William Hamilton, Co. B, Henry Hoofman, Co. C, C. H. Van Gordon, Co. G, Jehiel Price, Co. F, J. M. Merritt, Co. G, W. Johnston, James H. McElroy, Co. D, drum; Samuel M. Weeden, Co. D, bass-drum.

The names of the rank and file of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth are given in the lists at the close of the town chapters.

On the 24th of August orders were received from Washington directing Col. Ellis to hold his command in readiness to move on the 27th instant.

Thursday, the 26th, had been designated by the ladies as the day on which they would present to the regiment that stand of colors beneath which he whose hand should receive them and so many of the brave men over whose heads they were that day to be unfurled should suffer, bleed, and die that the Union and liberty might live.

It was a clear, bright day, and with the rising of the sun the friends of the "American Guard" began to arrive, and for hours there poured into the village of Goshen such a throng of men, women, and children as had seldom before been seen in its streets. At 3 P.M. the regiment was formed, and Col. Ellis having placed himself at the head of his field and staff in front of it, the Hon. Charles Winfield stepped forward, and, at the close of a most patriotic speech on behalf of the donors, handed the colors to Col. Ellis, who, loosing them to the breeze, promised the multitude there assembled they should never be disgraced, concluding with these words, "If you never again see these colors, you will never again see those who bear them from you."

After this Miss Charlotte E. Coulter stepped forward, and, with a modest but grand little speech, presented a pair of embroidered silk guidons, a gift from the fair daughters of the little town of Wawayanda.

The departure of the regiment had been expected for the 27th, but delays occurred, and it was not until the 5th of September that an order was received positively fixing the departure for the next day, the 6th.

In accordance with this order, at 1 o'clock P.M. on Saturday, Sept. 6, 1862, the regiment bid adieu to its first camp in Goshen, and, with banners flying and drums beating, marched through throngs of weeping friends to the depot, where the last hand-shakings and final adieus were given. At 2 P.M. the heavily-laden train, with wild shrieks to warn away the clinging multitudes, moved off, and the American Guard, as the regiment was known, was on its way to the seat of war. At every depot crowds with loyal hearts sent after them shouts of approbation, and ever and anon, as the train shot along, there were heard from sweet voices familiar notes of patriotic songs.

One impressive tableau could never be forgotten by those who saw it. High up on a projecting rock stood an old man, dressed in a military suit of Revolutionary times, the thin locks of his long, white hair floating in the breeze, leaning with one hand on his staff, and with the other feebly waving the "Stars and Stripes," while two little girls, dressed in the purest white, knelt, one on either side of him, their little arms stretched out and their eyes turned heavenward, as if in earnest prayer to the God of nations for the preservation and success of the defenders of the Union, which their great-grandfathers had fought to establish.

At New York, the regiment was marched to the Park Barracks, and slept that night upon the pine-mattresses furnished to them.

The regiment was supplied with arms in the city,—heavy Austrian guns with sword-bayonets.

Sunday afternoon the regiment left for Philadelphia. Arriving there late in the night, the soldiers were soon found resting, with sidewalks for beds and knapsacks for pillows. But very early they were invited to a sumptuous breakfast furnished by the ladies of Philadelphia. At noon they were in Baltimore, and in the hot march across the city a number of the men fell from sun-stroke and had to be left behind. At two o'clock Tuesday morning the regiment might have been seen sleeping soundly on the ground and on the stone blocks in front of the Capitol at Washington.

In the afternoon of that day they marched to Camp Chase, on Arlington Heights. There they remained two or three days, when their encampment was changed to another point about four miles away, which the soldiers christened Camp Ellis. Here the regiment was attached to Pratt's brigade of Whipple's Division, Heintzleman's corps, and they remained until the 25th in this camp, engaged in active drill, learning the actual duties of a soldier's life.

At 2 P.M. Thursday, September 25th, the regiment again broke camp and moved off some six miles, to a piece of woods on the west side of Miner's Hill, where they built huge log-fires and bivouacked around them for the night. The next morning about a hundred of the men were ordered to report for picket duty.

During the afternoon of the 26th the regiment moved to the opposite or eastern slope of Miner's Hill, where they named their new grounds Camp Cromwell. In these moves sixteen four-mule teams were employed to transfer tents, traps, and the baggage of the officers. This was in strong contrast with the simple work of a few months later, when officers of the line were only allowed transportation for a small valise each, while the field and staff were obliged to crowd their baggage, tents and all, into a single wagon.

The regiment remained at Miner's Hill for several weeks engaged continually in the various drills required for army movements.

On the 16th of October orders were received to break camp. This was immediately done; but the regiment passed a long and uncomfortable night, a part of the time in the rain, the order to march being delayed until morning. At six o'clock the orders to march came, and the regiment moved off at a rapid gait towards Washington. It was a wet morning, and with wet blankets from the storm of the night before, the marching was difficult, and a number of men gave out and were picked up by the ambulances following. The regiment halted at the entrance to the Aqueduct bridge, Georgetown. The sun came out; blankets were dried on the fences and the grass-plats. About four in the afternoon they marched into Washington and halted in front of the Capitol. About midnight they took the cars, and at the end of a tedious ride of eleven hours found themselves at Knoxville, Md.

The regiment was now transferred from "the Army of Defense" around Washington to the "Army of the Potomac."

The regiment first halted for a while on a hillside, where it was so steep that anything convenient was thrust into the ground to keep it from sliding down-hill. There was a lovely view, but there was little chance to admire the beauties of nature or of cultivated fields. The soldiers were sore and tired after their wet march and their sleepless ride in the cars. Wrapped in their blankets they lay down to rest early, and slept soundly.

Sunday afternoon, October 19th, they moved about three miles, and encamped in a large field on the farm of a crusty old "secesh," who, not satisfied with having guards placed over all his movable property, objected even to drawing the cool water from his well.

Monday afternoon, the 20th, they marched to a more congenial spot near Burkettsville, where they remained several days. Here they had an opportunity to visit South Mountain, where the great struggle of Antietam had occurred only a few weeks before. It was full of sad suggestions as to the fierceness of the battles in which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was not many months later to engage.

On the evening of October 24th, at half-past nine o'clock, the regiment left camp, and at midnight bivouacked near Berlin, on the banks of the Potomac, across which a pontoon-bridge was being laid. This bridge consisted of sixty-two scow-built boats, anchored some twenty feet apart, and connected by large beams, across which were laid strong planks. Pleasanton's cavalry dashed across this, followed by the Army of the Potomac, one hundred thousand strong.

Towards night, Sunday, October 26th, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth crossed, and a march of three miles brought them to Lovettsville, where they halted for the night in a cornfield. The wind blew, the rain fell; there were no fires. It was a night of severe suffering, disabling thirty or more.

Thursday, October 30th, they marched away towards Winchester, and bivouacked near Hillsborough. Sunday afternoon, November 2d, the regiment advanced twelve miles to near Snicker's Gap. On the 3d they again moved three miles to Bloomfield, and on the 4th to Upperville, where the camp-fires of the enemy were still smouldering. On the 5th to near Piedmont, where they halted thirty minutes, and then moved on for Manassas Gap. That night, in near proximity to the enemy, they passed without fires and with no rations. Resuming march the next morning, they shared in the crossing of the mountains for the purpose of cutting off the retreat of a portion of the rebel infantry, but the latter had escaped. Soon after the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was ordered back to Piedmont. On the 8th they marched to Orleans, where they stayed three days. On the 10th, Lieut.-Col. Cummings went out on a foraging expedition, and secured fresh meat for the regiment. On the 11th the regiment moved about six miles to near Waterloo.

On the evening of the 15th a squad of the enemy ran into the picket line. Lieut. Weygant and his men captured two of the enemy, which seems to have been the first actual contact with the rebel forces by the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth.

On the morning of the 16th the regiment moved again, not towards the front, but to the left, and after a four hours' march they encamped at Warrenton, and became a part of Hooker's grand division.

On the 17th they resumed their march and halted at Libertyville; on the 18th to Hartwood Church; from the 19th to the 23d to near Falmouth, within four miles of Fredericksburg. On the morning of the 24th they were able once more to arrange a regular encampment. The recent march had been a fearful one in rain and mud, exposure costing many precious lives. The regiment remained nearly two weeks at or near this spot. This was the delay in the movement of Gen. Burnside against Richmond via Fredericksburg which doubtless prevented the success of the enterprise. The delay, Mr. Weygant states, was due to the non-arrival of the pontoon-train, which only reached the required point December 10th. This delay gave Gen. Lee time to fortify in the rear of Fredericksburg.

The story of the battle that followed cannot here be given in detail. After the bombardment of the place, under cover of which the pontoon-bridges were finally laid, and the routing of the rebels from the ruins of the town, a night intervened before the crossing of the main body of the army.

In the general movement on Friday, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth attempted to cross about ten o'clock, but the bridge became blocked, farther progress for the time was impossible. While standing there the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was for the first time under fire, the fog and smoke, lifting a little, had disclosed the bridge with its massed forces and the rebel battery on an adjacent height. There were none injured, however, in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, and soon after the regiment was ordered back. At six o'clock Saturday morning the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth crossed, and with the rest of the brigade halted on a level strip of ground a few rods up from the southern shore under cover of a steep bank.

Once during the fearful battle of that day the brigade was ordered to storm a battery, and moved to the point designated for forming the line. The order to charge did not come, and they remained virtually spectators of the battle of Fredericksburg. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth passed the night on the field. Sunday afternoon they returned to the river-bank, and in the retreat of the following night the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was among the last regiments to recross the river,—a retreat so successfully conducted that the rebels evidently did not suspect it until the Union army was nearly back to its old camping-ground at Falmouth.

During the movements of Saturday, Companies E and F of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, under command of Capt. McBirney, were sent to the Kenmere House, in the southern part of the city, to support a battery, and were for a time under fire, but none of the regiment were injured.

The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth now lay with the Army of the Potomac nearly four months at Falmouth. During this time, however, there are various items to be mentioned in the history of the regiment. In January new rifles were received—the Enfield—in place of the old Belgians.

January 20th an order to again advance against the enemy, and the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth shared in the cold, wet wintry march of the next three days, in the rain and in the mud, only to return, the weather, the roads, everything conspiring to render the advance impossible. Jan. 26, 1863, the Army of the Potomac had a new commander, Gen. Joseph Hooker. The winter-quarters were now made tolerably comfortable. The 6th of April a grand review took place, and also on the 7th. In the order of Brig.-Gen. Whipple of the 9th, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New York, Twelfth New Hampshire, and the United States Sharpshooters are mentioned as having been deemed worthy of especial praise by the President and the commander-in-chief of the Army of the Potomac.

April 27, 1863, the Third Corps, of which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was a part, was reviewed, and on the 28th marching orders reached this regiment. Each man carried eighty pounds of ammunition. Leaving camp about 4 P.M., they found that the whole Army of the Potomac was in motion. About midnight they bivouacked near the Rappahannock not far from Belle Plains. These were a part of the movements preliminary to the battle of Chancellorsville. May 1st the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth crossed the Rappahannock at the United States Ford, and moved off in a northerly direction about three miles and halted in an oak wood. They had laid in the woods but a short time when skirmishing was heard, and then heavy infantry firing from the direction of Fredericksburg. The Union army had gained an important ridge which Gen. Lee had very much desired to hold, but for some inexplicable reason Gen. Hooker then ordered a retreat. The details of the battle, which has received the name of Chancellorsville, can only be dwelt upon here as they affect the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. Gen. Lee engaged the attention of Gen. Hooker in an attack of considerable vigor in front, while Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson executed one of the boldest and most successful flank movements of the war.

During the progress of this movement the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was detached and ordered to hasten to a thickly-wooded hill and support some troops posted there. They soon reached the hill, but did not find the troops they were to support. They were, however, hailed by an aide from Gen. Sickles with orders to remain where they were and await the conduct of another aide who should arrive. The next moment the sound of musketry-firing attracted the attention, and a portion of the division was discovered actively engaged with the enemy. Without waiting for orders, Col. Ellis hurriedly formed the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth into line of battle and ordered a charge. As the regiment rushed down the slope and reached the level ground, Gen. Whipple, in person, ordered a halt, informed Col. Ellis that their division was falling back, and ordered them to retire with it. They had not fallen back more than a mile when news of a terrible disaster came pouring in upon them by fugitives, who reported that the enemy had turned the Union right, routed the Eleventh Corps, and was even then between the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth and headquarters.

The offensive movement had changed to one of defense, and twenty-five thousand Union troops met the attack of full fifty thousand Confederates. Forty-five thousand Union troops stood idly looking on simply because they were not ordered forward.

In the darkness of the night the battle raged fiercely. "Stonewall" Jackson of the rebel forces received his death-wound, probably from the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth.

At one time two companies of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth—F and A—formed a skirmish line close upon the enemy's front, and barely escaped capture or death by a sudden flight to a ravine.

The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was really caught between the lines, and the terrible Sunday morning battle of Chancellorsville followed.

Says Weygant's History,—

"Turn right or left grim death stared at us. The heavens above seemed filled with hot-breathed shrieking demons. Behind us was an advancing sheet of flame, and the hills in front opposed an angry line of fire and smoke. . . . The battle was now at its height, and the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was in the thickest of the fray; but not a son of Orange County was on to show the white feather, not a man failed, deliberately they armed and rapidly fired."

"Backward—forward, down, down our brave men fell, thinner and yet thinner grew the ranks, but not a foot of ground was yielded."

"About twenty feet behind the colors stood Col. Ellis with folded arms and cap front turned up."

"Not a Union soldier was to be seen on our right, the long line on our left had fallen back."

Reluctantly came the order for the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth to fall back. Still more severe fighting followed, and while thousands of fresh troops lay in the woods not far away the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth with its wasted ranks was ordered to picket duty during the night. Monday morning they were relieved, but only to be put to work in the rifle-pits, where death still hunted them down in the shape of stray shots from distant rebel sharpshooters. Monday night those who remained in line were allowed to sleep. The battle of Chancellorsville was over, Hooker's magnificent army was in full retreat, and by the afternoon of Tuesday were back to their old camp at Falmouth.

June 6th the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth left its encampment at Falmouth, and after various experiences on the march reached the vicinity of Beverly Ford on the evening of the 8th. The next morning they crossed the river, wading it though it was breast-deep, and found themselves in the rear of contending battle-lines. Up to that time only cavalry had been engaged, and the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was the first infantry in the field. In this battle it had a sharp fight,—an almost hand-to-hand contest in Indian style, each man behind a tree,—and lost two killed and fifteen wounded.

The capture of correspondence at Beverly Ford had revealed Lee's plan of invading the North. Sunday afternoon, June 14th, there commenced a series of marches which finally led the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, with the rest of the Army of the Potomac, to the battle-field of Gettysburg. At 11 P.M. they had made twelve miles and encamped at Catlett's Station. At six o'clock in the morning of the 15th they were off again, and marched sixteen miles to Manassas Plains. On the 16th they moved a few miles, and halted on the battle-ground of the first Bull Run fight. Here they had the opportunity of bathing in that historic stream, washing up and resting until the next morning. The 17th they reached Centreville, and bivouacked at that point for two days. On the afternoon of the 19th they were off again. The Potomac was crossed at Edwards' Ferry on pontoons, and the regiment bivouacked the night of June 25th in the woods near Poolesville.

On the 27th they halted near Middletown, and on the 28th passed through Frederick. On the 30th they reached Emmetsburg. They were now nearing the fatal and yet decisive days of Gettysburg.

The first day of July sharp bugle-blasts from every direction called the men into line. The first day's fight at Gettysburg had begun, and two-thirds of the Army of the Potomac were not yet on the field. From Emmetsburg began the forced march. Men fell fainting and sunstruck along the route, but ever and anon amid the clouds of dust came the officers' shout, "Forward! Forward!"

Reaching the heights of Gettysburg, the men slept that night with their loaded weapons at their side. Most of the men who had fallen out on the march came in, and at eight o'clock on the morning of the 2d of July the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth numbered about two hundred and forty.

Weygant's History states the position as follows:

"Sickles' corps did not number that morning more than nine thousand men present for duty. It was composed of two divisions, of three brigades each. Birney's division formed the extreme left of the main line, which was drawn up, nearly in the form of a horse's shoe or capital U, on a ridge about three miles in extent. Ward's brigade was on the left of the division, and occupied the southern slope of a rocky eminence just beyond a small stream called Plum Run, and about one-eighth of a mile northwest of Round Top. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth held position in the right centre of the brigade. There were, when the battle began, no troops to the left of our regiment except the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania. A few minutes after the battle opened the Eighth New York moved up and took position on the left of the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania. The Eighty-sixth New York was posted in a piece of woods to the right of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, but between them was a space of about a hundred yards. Smith's battery was posted behind Ward's brigade; its right section stood on high ground several yards in rear of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth."

Of the actual fighting by the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth we quote at length:

"When the enemy's advance line drew near the base of the hill we were on, it appeared to almost halt for a minute and then started rapidly forward again, and with fierce yells began ascending the slope; and there was heard an opening crash of riflery all along our front, which was the death-knell of hundreds; yet on they came, but very slowly,—only a few feet at a time. Now Cromwell hurries to Col. Ellis, who stands behind the color company, and asks him to order a charge, but the colonel shakes his head and tells the major to go back to his place again. Now the enemy has been brought to a stand, but he is only a few rods away. Again Cromwell walks towards Ellis. This time he is accompanied by Adjutant Ramsdell. Once more he requests the colonel to charge, and is again told to go back to the left of the regiment; yet a moment later their horses are brought up, and against the remonstrances of Capt. Siliman and others they mount. The major's only reply is, 'The men must see us to-day,' and he rides slowly to and wheels his horse about in the rear of the centre of the left wing, where, with drawn sword and eyes fixed on the colonel, he impatiently waits his superior's pleasure.

"Presently Ellis by a simple nod gives the desired permission, at which Cromwell waves his sword twice above his head, makes a lunge forward, shouts the charge, and putting spurs to his horse, dashes forward through the lines. The men cease firing for a minute, and with ready bayonets rush after him. Ellis sits still in his saddle and looks on, as if in proud admiration of both his loved major and the gallant sons of Orange, until the regiment is fairly under way, and then rushes with them into the thickest of the fray.

"The conflict at this point defies description. Roaring cannon, crashing riflery, screeching shots, bursting shells, hissing bullets, cheers, shouts, shrieks, and groans were the notes of the song of death which greeted the grim reaper as with mighty sweeps he leveled down the richest field of scarlet human grain ever garnered on this continent.

"The enemy's line, unable to withstand this our fierce onset, broke and fled, and Cromwell, his noble face flushed with victory, and his extended right arm waving his flashing sabre, uttered a shout of triumph.

"But it had scarcely escaped his lips when the second line of the foe poured into us a terrible fire, which seemed in an instant to bring down a full quarter of our number. Once more we hear Cromwell's shout, and once again we see amid the fire and smoke his noble form and flashing blade; but the next instant his brave heart is pierced by a rebel bullet, his right arm drops powerless, his lifeless body falls backward from his saddle, and, loud above the din of battle, we hear Ellis shout, 'My God, men, your major is down; save him! save him!' Again the onset of Orange County's sons becomes irresistible, and the second line of the foe wavers and falls back, but another and more solid line takes its place, whose fresh fire falls with frightful effect on our now skeleton ranks. So terrible is it that two-thirds of the artillery-men in our rear are either killed or wounded, and the balance driven from their guns by the shells and bullets which pass over and through our line.

"Lieut.-Col. Cummins, with the experience and eye of an old soldier, realizes that a skirmish line without reserves, be the men who compose it ever so brave, must eventually be swept away by a continually-renewed solid battle-line, and unwilling the regiment should be disgraced by the loss of the guns it is expected to protect attempts to get them started to the rear, but while in the act is so badly injured by a shell, which striking a gun-carriage hurls it against him, that he is carried from the field. But our brave Ellis yet remains, now seen in bold relief, now lost amid the clouds of powder-smoke. A moment longer, the central figure, he directs the regiment. Again the rebel line begins to waver, and we see his proud form rise in his stirrups, his long, sharp sword is extended upward, a half-uttered order escapes his lips, when suddenly his trusty blade falls point downward, his chin drops on his breast, and his body with a weave pitches forward head foremost among the rocks, at which his wounded beast rears and with a mad plunge dashes away, staggering blindly through the ranks of the foe, who is now giving ground again, firing wildly as he goes.

"But we are too weak to follow them; yet with desperate effort the Orange Blossoms struggle forward and gather up such as they may of the wounded, and with them and the bodies of Ellis and Cromwell we fall slowly and mournfully back to the main line, from which we should never have advanced, and there reform our shattered ranks and prepare to receive as best we may the next onset of the foe.

"Three times we have beaten him back, but now we are exhausted. For forty minutes the brigades of Ward and De Trobriand, at first scarce three thousand strong, and now reduced to but little more than half that number, have held their ground against Longstreet's entire corps."

The situation was fearful. Gen. Sickles was severely wounded. Birney now commanded the corps, Ward the division, Berdan the brigade. Of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment, Col. Ellis was killed, Lieut.-Col. Cummins carried to the rear wounded, Maj. Cromwell dead, and Capt. Charles H. Weygant, of Company A, who had been only fourth in command when the battle commenced, was now in charge of the wasted ranks of the regiment. The ten little companies, now numbering a trifle over a hundred men, are gathered together in squads, like picket posts along the front they are yet expected to hold.

"But the gallant boys fought on. Every few moments a man would drop a rifle which had become clogged or so hot that he could not hold it steadily, and bidding those beside him be careful when they fired, rush forward and pick up in place of it one that had fallen from the hands of a dead or wounded comrade. The active part that the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was to play in this great three days' battle had now been performed. Moving to a piece of wood about a mile in the rear of the Union line, we prepared and with saddened hearts and gloomy thoughts partook of our evening meal."

On the 7th of July the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth marched away from the hills of Gettysburg. Only one hundred and fifty men were left, and nine commissioned officers. They halted for the night at Mechanicstown, twenty miles or more from Gettysburg. On the 8th they went twenty-three miles more, and were south of Frederick, in Maryland; on the 9th twelve miles down the Hagerstown road; the 10th, twelve miles to Millpoint; and the 11th to Roxbury Mills, where the regiment, with loaded pieces, was placed in line of battle, ready for an expected force of the enemy. But Gen. Lee was only too glad to get his forces over the Potomac without any more fighting.

The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth crossed the river on the 17th, and on the 18th were at Hillsborough. Sunday, the 19th, they moved about seven miles in the direction of firing, heard at Snicker's Gap. The 20th they marched eighteen miles and encamped near Upperville. On the 22d they moved to near their camp-grounds of nine months before at Manassas Gap. The regiment shared in the movement of Gen. Meade on the 23d, to fall upon an isolated detachment of Lee's army reported to be at Front Royal, on the opposite side of the mountain. Little was however accomplished, though the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, as usual, made a good record for bravery and promptness. The Gettysburg campaign was over; Lee and his army were again on the south side of the Rappahannock, Meade and the Union army on the north.

Lieut.-Col. Cummins (now colonel), injured at Gettysburg, was away from the regiment but a brief time, taking command July 28th. The regiment shared in very important movements for some weeks.

At the time Lee's army threatened Washington in the fall of 1863, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was moved from Culpepper to Centreville, arriving at the latter place on the evening of October 14th. The series of movements by which Lee forced Meade to fall back to Centreville, and Meade in turn forced Lee to retire once more to the southern shore of the Rappahannock, lasted several weeks.

During November there were various movements that involved the battle of Kelly's Ford, in which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth participated, and lost two killed and several wounded.

The battle of Mine Run occurred soon after the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth had reached the side of the run opposite from the enemy, on Sunday, the 29th, and had passed the day in full view, though distant of the frowning heights, along which ran a line of the enemy's works.

At two o'clock Monday morning the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, with other regiments of the brigade, were ordered out to relieve a line of pickets which had, during the early hours of the night, been pushed up to within two hundred and fifty yards of the Confederate works. The regiment crossed the run with the difficult marshy lands adjacent, and at three o'clock reached the picket line. About seven o'clock in the morning the long line of Union forces moving to the attack began advancing over the cleared fields, through the valley below, and around the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. The latter was ordered to bring up the reserves and form a skirmish line. Col. Cummins gave the order, "Forward, men! forward!" and as the men sprang to their feet the enemy opened a furious cannonade. It was a critical point, and several casualties occurred. Having advanced about fifty yards they were ordered to halt, and threw themselves flat on the ground. The orders to assault were soon after countermanded, and the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth returned to its position of the morning.

Following this affair the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth and the Army of the Potomac generally encamped on the north bank of the Rapidan, while Lee's army was on the south side, and there was a pause of nearly five months in actual hostilities, at least on a scale of any magnitude. Log cabins were erected, soldiers made themselves as comfortable as possible, and the months wore away in picket duty, occasional foraging expeditions, now and then a brief skirmish.

In the month of April the movements for the great campaign of 1864, under Gen. Grant, began. On the 12th all surplus clothing was ordered to be packed and sent to Washington; on the 16th all sutlers were ordered to leave the camp; on the 22d there was a grand review; on the 26th the army vacated its winter-quarters, moved out, and pitched its tents on an open field.

At eleven o'clock on the night of May 3, 1864, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth struck its tents and bade adieu to the camping grounds at Culpepper. The next morning, after a march of twenty miles, they reached the Rapidan at Ely's Ford, and crossed on pontoons to the southern shore. At 2 P.M. of the 4th they were encamped on the old battle-field of Chancellorsville. Hancock had been ordered to halt there and await the arrival of Meade's entire train, which is said to have consisted of four thousand wagons, all of which had been ordered to follow the Second Corps across the river by way of Ely's Ford. This would seem to indicate that, unlike his predecessors, Grant had determined under no circumstances to return to the old camping grounds north of the Rapidan.

At 4 P.M. on the 5th of May the Army of the Potomac was awakened from its slumbers. It had crossed the Rapidan without opposition, and had spent the night quietly resting on the edge of the tract known as the Wilderness.

The details of the fearful struggle must be omitted, and only such detached portions of the account given as include the movements of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. This regiment came into action about four o'clock on the afternoon of the 5th, and shared in the fearful struggle which ended with both armies mutually ceasing firing for the night. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth lost about twenty-three severely wounded. They had taken thirty-two prisoners, including one commissioned officer. On the morning of the 6th the Union line faced to the southwest, and was about five miles long. It was confronted by Lee's lines, well formed. Grant's order had been, "Attack along the whole line at five o'clock in the morning." That order was obeyed.

The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth formed part of Hancock's advance line, and shared in the fighting which immediately followed with Heth's and Wilcox's divisions of the enemy. Here Col. Cummins was wounded, supposed to be at that time mortally, and was carried to the rear. The command devolved upon Lieut.-Col. Weygant. After a short lull in the tempest, and during which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth had partially succeeded in eating their breakfast, there came Gen. Longstreet's great flank movement, before which the Union lines gave way, and more than twenty thousand men (among them the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth) were in full retreat. The tangled "wilderness" was a "vast, weird, horrible slaughter-pen," and the rout continued for more than two miles. What might have happened had not the firing of the enemy and their hot pursuit suddenly ceased few can tell. Lieut.-Col. Weygant, in command, with only Corp. Edwards, now made a stand along a wood-road, loosened the colors, and the men of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth flocked once more around the standard, and soon after the retreating forces were rallied and formed the lines again, now in the rear of a long line of temporary breastworks that had been hastily thrown up. This became an impregnable wall that shielded the Union troops, and against which the charges of the rebels were hurled in vain.

Darkness closed the fighting of this fearful day. The battle was not renewed on the 7th. At eight o'clock on the morning of the 8th the command was again on the march.

The passage of the Po River on the 9th cost something of a skirmish, in which the Twentieth Indiana and the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New York engaged. On the 10th the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth moved back over the Po River, and formed part of the new line which Grant had formed before Spottsylvania. They shared in the unsuccessful assault by Hancock's corps on the afternoon of the 10th, in the forward movement during the next night (the 11th), which preceded the great battle of Spottsylvania.

That battle opened with Hancock's great success in capturing Johnston's whole division, including Brig.-Gen. George H. Stewart and about three thousand prisoners. This made the rebels rally, however, with desperate energy, and the advance movement was not carried further. The rebels made five distinct assaults to recapture the works taken by Hancock's forces, but failed after the most terrific slaughter.

In the surprise and success of the morning, in the fierce fighting of the day, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was steadily engaged. They went with the advancing line over the enemy's works, were in the hand-to-hand fight that followed, and shared in the desperate resistance it was necessary to make to the desperate assaults. Col. Weygant was wounded and borne to the rear, the command devolved on Maj. Murray, and so the day wore away with its horrible carnage. The wonderful eighteen hours' struggle ended at midnight by the Confederates abandoning the impossible task of retaking the works.

As to the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, at the close of the battle Lieut. Robinson with twenty men was ordered out on picket duty, and the remainder managed to get some refreshment, after which, with weapons loaded, two-thirds only were allowed to sleep at the same time.

On the morning of the 13th the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth could not muster more than one hundred and twenty men, and two of these were killed during the day.

For several days after the battle of May 12th the Union army attempted no direct attack. On the morning of the 18th, Hancock's command made an assault upon the works, but deeming them too formidable to be carried, the forces were withdrawn. At this time the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was in the second line, which was not ordered forward, as the movement was abandoned. Then followed another attempt at a grand turning movement.

Gen. Meade's trains were parked on the Fredericksburg road, and Tyler's division was sent to guard them. This force was attacked on the 19th. Tyler repulsed the enemy, while the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, with a brigade of the Fifth Corps, dashed after the flying foe and captured a large number of prisoners.

About this time the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was so reduced that it was consolidated into three companies; the Eighty-sixth and One Hundred and Twenty-fourth were united into one regiment for field service. This regiment shared in the assault which captured the bridge over the North Anna known as Chesterfield bridge, and lay in the works taken during the night of the 23d of May.

The whole army now moved over the Pamunkey River, but found the rebels in too strong force before them. While Birney's command was erecting works near the Elliott House, many casualties occurred. They were bloody days, though no general engagement took place. Capt. Crist was killed while directing the staking out of a new line of defense. In the battle of Cold Harbor, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, as a part of Birney's command, was in the reserve, and for the first time in this long series of bloody battles were simply spectators.

Then followed a period when picks and shovels were brought into requisition, and the army made itself ready for a long campaign. It was evident by this time that the great commander at their head had no thought of retreat, but that a steady, persistent movement was to be kept up until Richmond was captured or the Union army had perished on the way. Gen. Grant finally resolved to transfer the army by a bold and rapid movement to the banks of the James. This was effected during several days following the 12th of June. Several skirmishes occurred during this movement; as usual, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was engaged, and it frequently lost one or more men.

Finally the regiment settled down to its place in the main line before Petersburg. At this time it was reduced to less than a hundred men. Lieut-Col. Weygant having nearly recovered from his wound rejoined the regiment on the 4th of July.

The morning report of August 11th showed that there were remaining on the rolls of the regiment four hundred and twenty men and twelve officers, but only one hundred and forty-two men present for duty.

The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was a part of the force engaged in the movement up the river to Deep Bottom, August 13th. The landing was effected at daybreak, and the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, the Seventy-third, and the Eighty-sixth New York, which had been transported on the same boat, threw out a strong picket line and awaited the arrival of the balance of the corps. At nine o'clock two regiments deployed as skirmishers, and followed by a supporting force moved forward through the woods. About a mile distant the skirmishers met those of the enemy, and the two lines were soon hotly engaged.

The Confederates soon gave way, and retired to a strong line of earthworks on the brow of a commanding ridge. In front of these works the Union skirmishers were formed into a strong picket line, while the main body was massed a short distance in the rear. Presently the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was ordered to advance to the support of a section of the Fourth Maine Battery, which had taken position just behind the picket line and opened on the enemy's works. The Union battery did some excellent work. It was here that Capt. W. E. Mapes was wounded by the ball of a sharpshooter passing through his thigh, carrying with it a small piece of bone that adhered to his pants just below the wound. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was soon after relieved from this point.

The next day, the 15th, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth performed a great amount of picket duty, and just after they were relieved, at eight o'clock in the evening, were again ordered out to prolong the picket line to the left. In this movement they became exposed to the fire of a Confederate squad ambushed in a field of grain. It was finally necessary to charge on the unseen foe and drive them out. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was not relieved from this tour of picket duty until nine o'clock on the evening of the 17th. Twenty-four hours later Hancock's entire command was on the way back to Petersburg. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was now stationed about three miles to the left of the place from which it had moved on the 12th. Weeks and indeed months now passed away in the trenches before Petersburg and on picket duty, the latter much of the time dangerous to the very last degree. Several of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth were wounded and others killed in this line of service.

On the last day of September offensive operations against the enemy at Deep Bottom were renewed, and for several days there was severe fighting at different points along the Richmond and Petersburg lines, but the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth did not become actually engaged. October 1st, their division was hurried out of camp, and, taking the cars, were conveyed to the extreme Union left, where Warren with a heavy force had succeeded in extending his lines across the Weldon Railroad, which was one of the enemy's main arteries of supply. Warren was having a hot time to hold what he had secured. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, with six other regiments, were set to work cutting drive-ways through a strip of woods, and building a strong redoubt in front of a Confederate mansion, called the Clement House. After spending three days and nights at this work, they were relieved by Gen. Ferrero's division of colored troops. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth moved back to the Jerusalem plank-road, and encamped in the second line near Fort Sedgwick, but they were still under fire. Grant B. Benjamin and Lieut. Jonathan Birdsall were killed about this time, and others were wounded.

The regiment had, however, filled up somewhat its wasted ranks. Convalescents had returned, a few new recruits had been received, and the roll showed two hundred and thirty men with sixteen officers present for duty.

In this movement the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth had a part. Within a half-mile of Hatcher's Run a brisk skirmishing fire broke out in front of the ford. This was when Gen. Eagan's command were forcing the passage of the stream. When this was accomplished the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth crossed without difficulty, and moved on in column with flankers on the left. It was thus in the rear of Eagan's battle-line. Presently an order came directing the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth to relieve the brigade on the left. In this advance considerable fighting occurred, but the whole line reached the Boydton road. Here a halt took place by order of Gen. Meade.

Omitting the details of the battle, we trace the movements of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. While holding the road a flanking company of rebel dismounted cavalry with a battery of rifled guns came thundering down until halted by the fire of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. Then hastily creeping up to the woods which were beyond an open lot in front of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, they opened a severe fire.

At this juncture an aide of Gen. De Trobriand rode up and asked Col. Weygant if he did not think his command could capture that battery. The reply was, "We can try," but the assistance of another regiment was very desirable. A company of sharpshooters immediately came up. Just as the leader tendered his services to Col. Weygant a bullet tumbled him from his horse dead, but his men joined in the assault with a will, as if to avenge the death of their leader. Col. Weygant was wounded and borne from the field. The charge was not made, but the attempt of the Confederates to pass down the road was steadily resisted by the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, by the company of sharpshooters, and by Kirwin's powerful regiment sent to their aid.

Capt. Benedict, the senior officer, in the absence of Lieut.-Col. Weygant, was now in command of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth until the latter returned to the regiment November 22d. A large reinforcement was now received. Capt. Malone, of Middletown, brought an entire company. November 25th the muster-roll showed nineteen officers, and three hundred and sixty-two men present for duty. About the last of the month, and during the early days of December, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment shared in the new attack on the Weldon Railroad, which destroyed a portion of it further to the south, still more embarrassing the receiving of supplies by the rebel army.

The year 1864 had now drawn to a close. The great campaign which was to be fought "out on this line if it took all summer" was still in progress, the summer and the fall had passed away, and yet the desired victory had not been won. Still with unyielding persistency the Union army maintained the siege. Daily the lines around Richmond tightened.

The month of January, 1865, was devoted to thorough preparation for a spring campaign. February 4th the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth received orders to be ready for a march. Another demonstration against the enemy's right had been ordered, and the next morning the Fifth and Second Corps, preceded by Gregg's division of cavalry, pushed out to Reams' Station, and thence to Dinwiddie Court-House, the Fifth Corps being directed to turn the rebel right while the Second assailed in front. At seven o'clock on the morning of the 5th the brigade column, which included the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, marched to the left about two miles, and halted in the rear of Meade's most advanced picket-posts.

After a regiment had been deployed as skirmishers they moved beyond the Union picket line, drove in the rebel pickets a mile or more to the small stream known as Hatcher's Run. On the further side of this stream a small rebel force behind a line of earthworks held the Union skirmishers at bay until assistance came up, when the Confederates were quickly dislodged, and the brigade forded the stream in battle line. They pushed on about three-quarters of a mile until they were near the enemy's main line. Here Gen. De Trobriand took up a strong position and set his men to building a corresponding line. The brigade worked all day unmolested, and at night lay down to rest behind formidable earthworks. The remaining brigades of Mott's division had moved up on the left and also intrenched themselves. About dark Mott's line was assaulted by a heavy rebel force that were elated with having forced back Warren's command during the day. This was quickly repelled by McAllister's New Jersey brigade. About three in the morning of the 6th the brigade of which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was a part being relieved, moved to the left about half a mile and massed themselves in a ravine in the rear of McAllister's line. That night it was learned that Hancock's command had held every foot of ground gained in spite of the most determined assaults, and that the Union lines were permanently advanced beyond Hatcher's Run. On the morning of the 9th the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was able to get into position on the new line, and for three weeks or so was once more in winter-quarters. During the first half of March, 1865, many signs indicated that a final campaign was about to open which would end in absolute triumph. Sheridan's victories in the Valley, and Sherman's in the Carolinas, became known in the ranks of the Army of the Potomac. From the 14th to the 23d of the month the time was fully occupied in pushing to completion every detail of preparation.

On the morning of the 24th everything was ready in the camp of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth for marching on five minutes' notice. There was not long to wait. Orders had already been issued by Gen. Grant directing an advance on all parts of the line on the morning of the 29th. Sheridan with his ten thousand troopers, flushed with their victories in the Valley, were now with the besieging army waiting to move once more against their old enemy, Lee's grand Army of Northern Virginia.

The Confederate leaders did not wait for Gen. Grant to commence. On the morning of the 26th of March they made a vigorous assault on Fort Stedman, the capture of which would have cut the Union lines in two and opened up a chance for Lee to move south and unite with Johnston to overwhelm Sherman. The movement was partially successful, the Union troops were driven out of the fort, but the rebels could not follow up their success. Their supporting columns failed to come up; they could not seize the crest of the hill which was held by the Union troops in the rear of the fort. The Confederates, too, were soon between two lines of Unionists, and two thousand were forced to surrender or be cut to pieces. Gen. Meade, too, ordered an advance at other parts, and wrested away a portion of their intrenched line, which the rebels never recovered. This action was simply heard by the brigade in which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was enrolled. They had no share in the movement. Yet they were soon ordered to strike their tents, and during that day they assisted in holding important positions, but were not engaged until just dark. They had secured themselves in a line of earthworks which a New Hampshire regiment had just vacated, and which was now strengthened by the materials of some small buildings torn down for the purpose. Col. Weygant had videttes carefully posted and instructed in case of attack to reserve their fire until the enemy was within fifty yards, then empty their pieces as deliberately as possible, and hurry back to the lines. A force of the enemy, perhaps five hundred in number, soon emerged from the thicket on the road at the foot of the slope, just in front of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. They evidently had seen the New Hampshire men leave these works, and did not know of their occupation by other Union men. The videttes obeyed orders, the enemy, disregarding their fire, lowered their bayonets, and started up the hill on a charge. As soon as the videttes were in, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, from behind their intrenchments, poured upon the enemy a most destructive fire, completely demoralizing the charging line. The Confederates threw themselves upon the ground or piled into the picket-pits, and the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, pouring over the works, made a sudden charge upon them. The Confederate commander, Col. D. S. Troy, grasped from his standard-bearer the colors of his regiment, and waved them frantically in vain efforts to reform his lines; but ere twenty of his followers could rally around him a bullet pierced his breast. George W. Tompkins grasped from his hands the standard, and trailed it beneath the colors of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. One hundred and sixty-four men were captured and six officers, while volley after volley was hurled after the remainder as they rushed pell-mell down the hill. Not a man of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was killed or wounded,—a circumstance scarcely paralleled in the history of the war. Private Tompkins received a medal from the Secretary of War for his capture of the enemy's colors.

The original order of Gen. Grant was not apparently changed or its execution delayed by the Confederate attempt upon Fort Stedman. On the 29th, 30th, and 31st occurred the grand advance which ended with the victorious battle of Five Forks, on the 1st of April, when Sheridan held the place with five thousand prisoners, and the entire right wing of Lee's army was fleeing westward,—in the language of Pollard,—“routed, demoralized, and past control.” In this decisive action the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was not engaged, but it had borne an important part in the three days' operations, holding perilous positions, and at one point, in a skirmish of some magnitude, silenced a Confederate battery.

That same night, while the defeat at Five Forks was carrying consternation through all the Confederate lines, Gen. Grant ordered the bombardment of Petersburg by all the available artillery in the grand circle of forts surrounding the doomed city.

At a quarter of twelve that night the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was ordered by Gen. De Trobriand to advance up to within two hundred and fifty feet of the enemy's works in their immediate front, open a vigorous fire, and maintain their position, if possible, for half an hour, but not to assault their lines. This strange order (as it then appeared), and one full of peril, was promptly executed. A sharp midnight struggle ensued, so fierce that the commanding general sent the Seventy-third New York and the One Hundred and Tenth Pennsylvania to the assistance of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. An aide soon after recalled the force. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth had several men wounded, and Capt. Edward J. Cormick, of Company F, was killed.* A few hours later the officers of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth learned that this midnight engagement was of great importance to the general movement, and that its object had been fully accomplished. Gen. Grant intended a general assault on the lines to the south and east of Petersburg for the next morning. Gen. Lee, supposing Grant's intention was to throw his forces next against the right wing, had withdrawn his army considerably from Petersburg, and night attacks like that made by the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth were to engage the enemy's attention and prevent the return of his forces to the defense of Petersburg. This strategy was successful.

Early on the morning of April 2d the grand assault upon Petersburg was made as Grant intended. Parke on the Union right carried the enemy's outer lines, capturing several guns and a few prisoners, but found the inner lines so strong that he despaired of carrying them without additional forces, and therefore deserted. Wright with his own corps, the Sixth, supported by two divisions of Ord's, made an impetuous advance, losing heavily but carrying everything in his front, capturing a large number of guns and taking several thousand prisoners. Ord's remaining division forced the enemy's line at Hatcher's Run, and with the main body under Wright swung around and pressed forward from the west towards Petersburg. At length, about nine o'clock A.M., Humphrey advanced with the divisions of Mott and Hays, carried a redoubt, scaled the enemy's works in his front, and closing in on the left of Ord's men, pushed on with the victorious lines towards the fated city. In this advance a portion of De Trobriand's brigade, led by the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, moved at a double-quick over one of the main roads leading into Petersburg. Ahead was a demoralized, fleeing body of Confederates, whose pace was occasionally quickened by hurling into them a few bullets. Several times a squad of the hindmost wheeled and returned the fire, but in so wild a manner that the Union men were not injured by it. The enemy was driven within his inner line of intrenchments, which it was no part of Grant's plan to assault at a fearful waste of life.

The beginning of the end had come. Gen. Lee made a re-disposition of his forces about Petersburg that same afternoon in full sight of the Union army, but he was only covering his purpose to allow the Confederate leaders to evacuate Richmond. He knew he could hold neither Petersburg nor Richmond many hours longer. This was the day when he sent the famous dispatch to Richmond, which was carried to Jefferson Davis seated in church; and then followed that wild scene never paralleled on this continent: of a fleeing government, a city given up to riot and mob law, ending with a fearful conflagration, the last legacy of the dissolving Confederacy to its ill-fated capital. During the night following the 2d of April the Confederate forces stole silently out of Petersburg over muffled bridges, and on the morning of the 3d, Gen. Grant, pausing in his victorious career only to send a governor and a provost-guard into the city, set his army in motion after Lee's fleeing veterans.

The Confederate forces, after their hasty flight from the lines which they had so long defended around Richmond and Petersburg, concentrated at Chesterfield Court-House, about eight miles west. From that point the Army of Virginia, still forty thousand strong, moved rapidly westward along the northern shore of the Rappahannock River some thirty miles, to Amelia Court-House. By a misunderstood dispatch, three long trains of supplies, which had been telegraphed to meet Gen. Lee at Amelia Court-House, were sent forward to Richmond the very day of the evacuation, and were burned in the great fire set by the Confederates as they were leaving.

In the pursuit which Sheridan with his cavalry began on the morning of the 3d before the sun was up, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth took a part, their brigade having the advance of the Second Corps. During the day they marched about twenty miles, capturing two hundred dismounted Confederate cavalry and one brass field-piece.

On the morning of the 4th they were aroused from slumber at three o'clock and were on the march at four. About ten o'clock a halt of Gen. Humphrey's corps was ordered, and Gen. De Trobriand sent the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth out to forage a meal for the brigade. They were successful, notwithstanding the war-swept condition of the neighborhood, in finding a mill, which they set to grinding grain found there, and which stopped finally by the upper millstone being hurled from its spindle and thrown through the side of the building. They also secured fowls, cattle, sheep, and pigs, though most of them were fearfully lean. The foraging and eating used up most of the day, but they moved three miles farther just at night. At three o'clock in the morning of the 5th they were on the march again; a very welcome supply-train overtook them with three days' rations. At dusk the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth joined Sheridan at Jettersville, where he held the Danville Railroad, cutting off one more of Lee's lines of communication. During the day a severe engagement had taken place there, resulting in a loss to the Confederates of a foraging train of one hundred and eighty wagons, together with a battery of artillery and a hundred prisoners.

On the morning of the 6th the pursuit was resumed, the brigade of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth again leading the advance of the Second Corps. They soon came up with Lee's rear-guard at a point where the road crossed a small stream. The Twentieth Indiana was deployed as a heavy skirmish line, and soon became hotly engaged. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was ordered to the front, and moved off on a run. Gen. Mott added, "Deploy as soon as you cross and take that train." The train was not in sight. As Gen. Mott rode up to the colonel of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth and commenced to give an additional order, he was wounded and borne from the field. A delay of ten minutes occurred, when the advance was resumed, with the entire division to which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth belonged in battle line, but the enemy had fled. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was sent to relieve the Twentieth Indiana, and that brought the Orange County boys to the front and in sight of the wagon-train which Gen. Mott had directed them to take. They were soon able to open an effective fire on the teamsters, and compelled the abandonment of fifteen or twenty wagons and two brass guns, which were being moved with them. The regiment was now wildly enthusiastic; the colonel was obliged to force his horse into a trot to keep up with the excited men. They soon came in sight of a line of rebel earthworks, which Capt. Travis would have charged immediately with his single company of thirty men had not the superior officers recalled him. The main line soon came up, a charge was made, and the enemy was driven from his works, losing a large number of men captured by the Union forces. Two hours later the advance came up with another Confederate battle line, and this proved to be held by a considerable body of Lee's main army. The works were manned by a solid battle line, studded at intervals with artillery, and gayly decked with Confederate battle-flags. In a few moments the main line again came up. The entire division of which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was a part made one general charge, swept over the works, capturing several hundred prisoners, together with a number of battle-flags and five or six pieces of artillery. The Sixth Corps and Sheridan's cavalry were having severe fighting on the left; they met with strong opposition, were repulsed twice with serious loss, but eventually captured nearly two-thirds of Gen. Ewell's corps, including Ewell himself and five of his general officers. After this engagement, known as the battle of Sailor's Creek, in which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment took twenty-eight prisoners and lost several men, there was a halt of nearly an hour. But when once under way again the enemy's rear-guard was soon overtaken. It was driven from hilltop to hilltop, prisoners by the hundred being taken, guns and wagons being abandoned, and this was only suspended by the darkness of the night. Lee had lost during the day nearly six thousand prisoners, four hundred wagons, and upwards of thirty pieces of artillery.

The pursuit on the 7th was continued. About eight o'clock in the morning they reached Highbridge, a small place six miles east of Farmville, and where the Appomattox is crossed by both a wagon road and a railroad bridge. The rebels had fired the bridges, and had quite a formidable force to resist the passage. Gen. Barlow's division, then in the advance, dashed over the burning wagon bridge, scattered the defending force, and captured, with a number of prisoners, eighteen pieces of artillery. Barlow then moved off in the direction of Farmville on similar service. From Highbridge, Humphrey's division and De Trobriand's, including the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, moved on over the old stage road towards Appomattox Court-House. About five miles beyond the river they came up to the main body of Lee's army, so strongly posted that it was not deemed prudent to attack. A short time afterwards, on the supposition that Lee was again retreating, an attack was made by several regiments of Miles' division, which was repulsed with a Union loss of six hundred.

But the end had come. Lee was surrounded. Sheridan's cavalry and the Sixth Corps had swept around his lines far to the west, and now held Appomattox Station on the Lynchburg Railroad, extinguishing Lee's last hope of escape. At eight on the morning of the 9th of April the order to renew the advance was obeyed by a slow but steady march, but at noon orders were passed down the column to move from the road and rest. The now famous and historic interview between Grant and Lee was being held, and the terms of surrender adjusted.

The paroled rebels disappeared, the Army of Northern Virginia was no longer in existence.

The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth soon afterwards moved to Burkesville Junction, where it received the news of Lincoln's assassination. Resuming soon after their northern march, they moved leisurely along. About the middle of May they were again in sight of Washington. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was in the grand review, and immediately left for home. They were delayed about a week on Hart's Island, after which they took the steamer "Mary Powell" for Newburgh.

Well might the Newburgh Daily Union, a few days previous, say,—

"This regiment of heroes, for such they have proved themselves to be, are expected home soon. They have made as noble a record as any regiment in the field. They have poured out their blood on dozens of historic fields, and have a roll of heroic dead whose memory should be precious to old Orange forever."

From the Newburgh Daily Union of June 14th we take the following paragraphs relating to the welcome in that city:

"When the cannon on the long dock began to roar, the boys involuntarily set up a shout of delight, as if they recognized the tones of an old friend. But the belching, bellowing tube sent out no missiles of death among them this time, - nothing but the notes of a glorious welcome. The sight that greeted the eyes of those who were on the 'Powell' as she neared our village can hardly ever be forgotten by them. Every place which commanded a view of the river seemed to be crowded with eager spectators. Flags were flying, bells ringing, cannon booming, innumerable handkerchiefs waving, and the whole village seemed bent on making itself seen and heard. The boys looked on all this display with undisguised delight, and gave vent to their feelings in repeated cheers. They were marched to the corner of First and Front Streets, through the immense throng which had assembled to do them honor, and between open files of the firemen and Union League, who stood with heads uncovered. The procession then formed in the following order: First the firemen; then the trustees of the village and distinguished citizens; then the Union League, accompanied by Eastman's splendid band of Poughkeepsie; then came the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth. The procession moved up Front Street to Water, up Water to South, up South to Grand, down Grand to Western Avenue, up Western Avenue to Liberty, down Liberty to Washington's headquarters. Every flag was out all along the route, and the sight of the bullet-torn battle-flag of the regiment seemed to be regarded with intense interest. Before the boys got around the route they were well furnished with bouquets from the hands of the fair ladies of Newburgh. Every soldier had a bouquet in the muzzle of his rifle. What a change! The weapons from which, for the past three years, had been issuing the death-dealing bullet now decorated with the floral tribute of victory and peace. They were distributed by a flower brigade, led by Miss Travis, and organized by Mr. J. T. Sloan.

"The firemen and Leaguers on reaching the headquarters formed in front of the stand in a hollow square, into which the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth marched. The crowd on the ground was immense, entirely covering the lawn from the house to the eastern limits. There could not have been less than ten thousand persons present.

"The regiment was welcomed by Judge Taylor in an eloquent address, of which we can only quote detached passages:

"On behalf of the citizens of the county of Orange, I bid you a warm and cordial welcome to your homes again. You come to us war-worn and scar-worn from the hundred battles of the Army of the Potomac, and you come to us too at a time when peace rests upon our beloved country. With proud hearts we welcome you. But that pride is mingled with somewhat of sadness when we remember the thousand comrades whom you have left upon the battle-fields of the sunny South. . . . But, my friends, you come home to us having completed your work and completed it nobly. To-day our beloved country, which for four long years has been threatened with destruction, is saved by the valor of your arms, and those glorious institutions which our fathers purchased for us with their blood, have been preserved, though threatened by traitorous hands and rebel foes. . . . You have presented to us anew our glorious Union, more pure, more elevated, more perfect than before. You will have enabled us on the ensuing Fourth of July, the anniversary of our national independence, to celebrate the absolute fact that all men are 'born free and equal,' that the 'Stars and Stripes' wave over none but freemen, and that the contradiction which has existed for the last three-quarters of a century that four millions of bondmen were held under the starry flag no longer exists, but that all, of whatever color, birth, or nationality, when they come upon the soil of the United States, under the shadow of that glorious banner are freemen, and entitled to its protection under all circumstances."

"The address of welcome was appropriately responded to by Col. Weygant. The great assembly dissolved, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth was disbanded, and the record of its glorious achievements passed forever into the archives of history."

The report of the adjutant-general for 1868 presents the following summary statement of the battles which the regiment was authorized to inscribe upon its banners:

Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Kelly's Ford, Mine Run, Wilderness, Po River, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Tolopotomy, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Strawberry Plains, Boydton Road.

Col. Weygant's history does not show that they participated to any extent in the battle of Cold Harbor, while Boydton Road, Deep Bottom, and others in which they did participate are not named in the above.

We add the following official record of the commissioned officers, also from the adjutant-general's report of 1868; the date of commission being first given, followed by the date of rank.

Colonels.

A. Van Horn Ellis, Sept. 10, 1862; Aug. 23, 1862; killed in action at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, 1863.

Francis M. Cummins, Oct. 10, 1863; July 2, 1863; discharged Sept. 19, 1864.

Charles H. Weygant, Jan. 11, 1865; Sept. 19, 1864; not mustered.

Lieutenant-Colonels.

Francis M. Cummins, Sept. 10, 1863; Aug. 16, 1862; promoted to colonel Oct. 10, 1863.

Charles H. Weygant, Oct. 10, 1863; July 2, 1863; mustered out with regiment June 3, 1865 (brevet colonel, U.S.V.).

Henry S. Murray, Jan. 11, 1865; Sept. 19, 1864; not mustered.

Majors.

James Cromwell, Sept. 10, 1862; Aug. 20, 1862; killed in action at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, 1863.

COL. WILLIAM SILLIMAN was born at Canterbury, Orange Co., on Oct. 18, 1837, and was the only child of Rev. Jonathan Silliman, for nearly thirty years pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Canterbury. His childhood was mostly passed in the society of his parents, his weak physical constitution precluding his attendance upon the schools of his day for any length of time. His early education was received at home. He acquired knowledge with great facility, and his memory was so tenacious that what he once learned he seemed never to forget. His mind was inquisitive, active, and discriminating, and he was interested in almost every branch of art and science.

When he was about fourteen years of age his father purchased a farm in the neighborhood with a view of where he acquired considerable reputation for his knowledge of the principles of the law, and for his skill in managing his causes.

It was at this time that the civil war of 1861 broke upon the country and stirred to the bottom the patriotism of the young blood of the North. An ardent Republican, feeling a warm interest in the preservation of the institutions of his country, and a devotion to the cause of liberty, the first gun that opened upon the walls of Sumter seemed to arouse all the latent fire of patriotism that burned in the bosom of young Silliman, and made him eager to enter the ranks of the Union army to battle for his country's rights. The battle at Bull Run made him still more restless, and he soon after participated with others in raising a company for service under Col. Morrison in the Second New York Cavalry. The work of recruiting was commenced Sept. 15, 1861, and on October 9th, Mr. Silliman went into camp with the rank of second lieutenant. The captain of the company, James Cromwell, a friend of his boyhood days, being taken ill, the labor of drilling fell upon Lieut. Silliman. He was very prompt and active in the performance of his duty, and on Oct. 31, 1861, received a commission as first lieutenant of the company. Soon after the regiment entered the field, but after lying in camp for several months at Washington, was disbanded, owing to the reduction of the cavalry force, and the officers returned home. Lieut. Silliman resumed the practice of law, this time in his native village. He continued his business until the President's call for three hundred thousand volunteers, in July, 1862, when he accepted the adjutancy of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New York Volunteers, then being recruited by Col. A. Van Horne Ellis in Orange County. Capt. Cromwell, of Company C, having been promoted to be major of the regiment soon after, Adjut. Silliman was made captain of that company, but continued to discharge the duties of the adjutancy until the regiment left for Washington, on Sept. 6, 1862.

It is not the purpose of this paper to detail all the movements of the regiment to which Capt. Silliman belonged, nor how at Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Beverly's Ford, Gettysburg, and on other bloody fields its members distinguished themselves for bravery and personal courage. In all the engagements in which Capt. Silliman participated he manifested the courage of a brave and efficient soldier, and frequently elicited the warmest commendations of his superior officers. Of his conduct at the battle of Chancellorsville Weygant's "History of the New York State Volunteers" says, "Capt. Silliman, conspicuous for his height, displayed great gallantry; waving his sword above his head he ever encouraged his men, and kept his eye on the colors, of which he had charge, his being the color company." Farther on, the same authority adds, "A braver officer than he showed himself to be on the battle-fields of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg has seldom drawn a sword." At the battle of Gettysburg educating his son as an agriculturist, and two years later the family took up a residence upon the farm. After some time spent in agricultural pursuits Mr. Silliman formed a desire to study engineering, and he spent two winters in the pursuit of that branch of science at the school of Rev. A. C. Roe, in Cornwall. He afterwards spent a term in the normal school at Montrose, Pa., and later engaged in school-teaching for a time. Having finally determined to make the practice of law his life-work, he entered the Yale Law School at New Haven, Conn., in the fall of 1858, and spent one year at that institution. The following year he entered the Albany Law School, with a view of admission to the bar in New York State, and continued a regular and diligent scholar until his graduation in 1860. He subsequently located at Newburgh, Capt. Silliman commanded his regiment, the colonel and major having been killed, and the lieutenant-colonel wounded. He manifested great coolness and courage, and assisted by his lieutenant, James Grier, virtually saved the fortunes of the day.

On July 22, 1863, Capt. Silliman was detailed to proceed North for the drafted men who should be assigned to his regiment, and was stationed on Riker's Island, near New York City. He was subsequently detained by the post-commandant, because of his usefulness in organizing the new material for the army, and first drilled some of the white conscripts, and when the Union League of New York City began to send their colored recruits to Riker's Island, he asked and obtained permission to drill them. He continued in this occupation until the middle of January, 1864, when he was ordered back to his regiment. He remained with the regiment until February 5th following, when he received a commission as colonel of the Twenty-sixth United States Colored Troops, having previously passed a creditable examination before the examining board at Washington. He at once repaired to New York and spent several weeks in drilling his regiment. On March 18, 1864, he was married to Mary L., daughter of Hugh F. Randolph, of Bloomfield, N. J., and a short time later went into camp, first at Annapolis, Md., and finally near Beaufort, S. C. The regiment subsequently engaged in the campaigns near Hilton Head, and in one engagement, while at the head of his regiment, Col. Silliman was stricken down by sun-stroke and carried from the field. He obtained a short furlough soon after and made a visit to his home, returning to his command on Aug. 18, 1864. He participated in the further movements of the army in South Carolina, a part of the time in command at Beaufort, and ever performing the part of a gallant and true soldier, until Dec. 9, 1864, when he received a severe wound in the thigh while commanding the attacking brigade dispatched to cut the Charleston and Savannah Railroad near Pocotaligo. He was carried to the rear, his leg amputated, and was finally removed to Beaufort, where he soon after died from the effects of his wound. His young wife was near him to the last, and as the strong soldier bade adieu to life a smile of triumph illumined his face, and he passed quietly away to join the shadowy army of heroes who had preceded him to the peaceful realms of the far beyond.

It is the record of this young soldier that he performed his duty; his glory belongs to the Republic, in whose service he died and in whose story he must ever live. His death caused great grief in his regiment, so highly did his men appreciate all that he had done in their behalf. His remains were accorded military honors in the field, and were finally brought North and, in accordance with the wishes of his widow, interred at Bloomfield, N. J., where a simple white monument marks the last resting-place of a mother's gift to her country. His aged and afflicted parents still live to mourn the loss of an only child, the hoped-for comfort of their declining years, and a faithful wife still mourns in solitude the loss of a kind and dear husband.

The following extracts are made from a letter written to his widow on March 14, 1865, by Brevet Maj.-Gen. Rufus Saxton, under whom he served at the time of his death:

"During nearly the whole of his service in this department as colonel of the Twenty-sixth United States Colored Troops he served with me and under my command. I loved him very dearly as a friend, companion, and counselor, honored him as a brave, skillful, and accomplished soldier, and sorrowed deeply for his loss. He was one of those gifted men who are equal to any position they may be called to fill. He was one of the most efficient colonels I have ever known in service, as the bearing and deeds of his splendid regiment have ever borne evidence. His acts bear witness to his faith in God and humanity, and that black muster-roll which he headed in her cause shall be to him a crown of glory. I have seen him in battle when the danger was most imminent, and he ever seemed as collected as if upon ordinary duty. He fell at his post in action, with his face to the foe, bravely battling for the freedom and country that he loved, and soon another hero had gone. Of all that long muster-roll of heroes whose lives this war has cost the nation, there was no braver, truer, or more worthy one than Col. William Silliman. A grateful country should cherish his memory, for he served her faithfully and honorably, and at last gave up his noble life to her cause."

SEVENTY-FIRST MILITIA—CO. I.

Company I, Seventy-first Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., was recruited in Newburgh, principally from Company L, Nineteenth Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., between the 20th and 31st of May, 1861, by Capt. A. V. H. Ellis. There was, of course, the usual red-tape connected with the organization. Col. Brown, of the Nineteenth, readily gave his consent, but Governor Morgan refused to permit the company to leave the State. Capt. Ellis thereupon took the company on his own responsibility to New York. Col. Vosburgh, of the Seventy-first, with whom Capt. Ellis had made his arrangements, having died, it was for some days a matter of doubt whether the company would be accepted. The company was furnished transportation to Washington, however, and after its arrival, through the efforts of Secretary Seward, it was accepted, and mustered in the service for three months. After being stationed at the navy-yard at Washington until June 28th, it was sent with Company F, of same regiment, to Chapel Point and Port Tobacco, but returned without encountering the enemy. The company had in the mean time been furnished with U. S. rifles, Harper's Ferry, 1850, pattern. Left navy-yard July 16th, arrived in Washington, and was brigaded with the First and Second Rhode Island Infantry, Second Rhode Island Battery, and Second New Hampshire Infantry, under Col. Burnside. The company was placed in charge of two twelve-pound boat howitzers, July 4th. To these guns prolongs were attached, and they were drawn all the way by hand (twenty men to each) to Bull Run battle-field, and eight miles on the return march. Crossed Long Bridge July 16th, and reached Ball's Cross-Roads; on the 17th reached Fairfax Court-House; 18th, reached Centreville; arrived on Bull Run battle-field at 11 A.M. on the 21st, and entered action supported by Second Rhode Island Battery and Seventy-first Infantry; fired 232 shots (shrapnel and canister); drew out of the conflict on order at 3 P.M. with the loss of one man killed, private Samuel O. Bond; two wounded, James C. Taggart and John W. R. Mould, the latter taken prisoner. At 5 P.M. ordered to leave the field; reached Centreville at 10 P.M., and marched thence for Washington. Left Washington for New York July 24th, with rifles; arrived at Newburgh 27th, and mustered out on the 30th. The officers of the company on this service were:

A. Van Horne Ellis, captain; George W. Hawkins, second lieutenant; Wm. H. Garrison, second sergeant; John McMeekin, third sergeant; James D. Hamilton, fourth sergeant; Charles Decker, first corporal; Marshal M. Van Zile, second corporal; Henry F. Travis, third sergeant; Thomas Riley, fourth sergeant.

May 28, 1862, the company was again recruited, only seven hours being required for the purpose. Its period of service was again three months, spent on guard duty in and around Washington. The officers were:

A. Van Horne Ellis, captain; Wm. H. Garrison, first lieutenant; James C. Taggart, second lieutenant; John W. Forsyth, first sergeant; Henry F. Travis, second sergeant; John McMeekin, third sergeant; Jas. B. Montgomery, fourth sergeant; Thos. Riley, fifth sergeant; Robert Acheson, David M. DeWitt, Wm. M. Verplanck, Edward J. Hall, corporals.

Capt. Ellis resigned, and came home to organize a regiment in 1862, when Garrison was promoted captain; Taggart, first lieutenant; Acheson, second lieutenant, and Edwin J. Marsh, corporal.

One of the most remarkable features in the history of the company was the large number of officers and privates who went from it to more extended terms of service. Capt. Ellis became colonel of One Hundred and Twenty-fourth; Travis, captain One Hundred and Twenty-fourth; Richard M. and Frank Hines, captains in Fifty-sixth; Chas. B. Wood, captain One Hundred and Twenty-fourth; James A. Grier, lieutenant One Hundred and Twenty-fourth; B. F. Chamberlain, major First Virginia Cavalry; Van Zile, captain One Hundred and Sixty-eighth; Geo. C. Morton, captain Ira Harris Cavalry. But the list is too long for further repetition. The enthusiasm of its members continued from May, 1861, to the close of the war, quenched only in many by an honored death on the field of battle.

NINETEENTH REGIMENT MILITIA—ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SIXTH REGIMENT—ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT—ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

On the 26th May, 1862, Col. William R. Brown, commanding the Nineteenth Regiment Militia, received orders to march with his regiment to Washington, D. C. Many of the members having previously enlisted in volunteer regiments, it was found necessary to recruit the ranks of the regiment, which was done, and the regiment left Newburgh for the seat of war on the 4th of June, by way of Jersey City, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. On its arrival in Baltimore (June 6th) the regiment was ordered to Mount Clare. The next day orders were received to proceed to Stuart's Hill, and to establish a camp at that place on the grounds previously occupied by the Seventh N. G. S. N. Y. The regiment remained here until the 2d of July, when orders were received from Maj.-Gen. Wool for two companies to proceed to Fort McHenry, and the remainder to go to Fort Marshall. On the 14th of July four companies were ordered from Fort Marshall to Fort Delaware, where they remained until the 10th of August, when they returned to Fort Marshall. Orders were then received for the companies at Fort Marshall to proceed to Havre de Grace, Md., for the purpose of guarding the railroad from that place to Baltimore. On the 28th of August the companies at Fort McHenry were ordered to report to Col. Brown, when the whole regiment proceeded to Newburgh, where it arrived on the 30th of August, and was mustered out of the service of the United States on the 6th of September. The officers were:

Field and Staff.—William R. Brown, colonel; James Low, lieutenant-colonel; David Jagger, major; George Waller, quartermaster; Wm. M. Hathaway, adjutant.

While in the field the officers of the regiment learned that the quota of the county under the July call had not been filled, and that nine months' men would be accepted. On the 14th of August Col. Brown left Havre de Grace and proceeded to Albany, and there tendered to Governor Morgan the services of the regiment for nine months. It was not accepted. On the arrival of the regiment at Newburgh (August 30th) the tender was renewed and again refused. On the 17th of September Col. Brown made a third tender, which was formally accepted on the 18th. In the mean time Governor Morgan gave an acceptance and an authorization to Isaac Wood, Jr., of Newburgh, to raise a regiment—to be known as the One Hundred and Sixty-sixth—for three years' service. Thus authorizations were given for the raising of two regiments in the same district,—one under Col. Wood for three years, and one under Col. Brown for nine months. Col. Wood and his friends thinking that he could meet with better success if the term of his regiment was reduced to nine months, made application to the Governor and received an order to that effect, which still further complicated the situation and made the rivalry more complete. It soon became evident that both could not succeed, and Col. Wood, after recruiting two hundred and seventy-two men, abandoned the field, and his volunteers were consolidated with the "Iron-sides," or One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Regiment, and mustered into the service of the United States at New York City, Nov. 20, 1862.

Recruiting for the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth began Sept. 18, 1862, and ended Feb. 11, 1863. In December, 1862, it barely escaped consolidation with some other regiment, and but for a change in the State administration would never have taken the field. The regiment left Camp Sprague, at Newburgh, Feb. 2, 1863, with seven hundred and fifty men, and left Park Barracks, New York, Feb. 13, 1863, with eight hundred and thirty-five men. It reached Yorktown, Va., February 18th, where it was assigned to the Fourth Army Corps, Maj.-Gen. Keyes; Gen. Richard Busted's brigade; Second Division, Gen. Rufus King. It remained at Yorktown on garrison and provost duty during nearly the full term of its service. In June one hundred and forty men under Capt. Daniel Torbush, in company with detachments from other regiments, proceeded on a gun-boat up the York River to West Point, and from thence to the Mattaponi River, and landed at Walkertown, where the detachment from the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth was ordered to a position on the Richmond road and ordered to hold it under any circumstances, while the remainder of the force went in another direction. As anticipated, the detachment was attacked by a company of cavalry and infantry, who were repulsed with a loss of fourteen killed. The detachment lost one killed (William S. Avery, of Co. A), five wounded, and two taken prisoners. The other portion of the expedition did not meet the enemy, but having accomplished the object in view, the whole party returned to Yorktown.

On the 26th September as part of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Eleventh Army Corps, the regiment was placed en route for Chattanooga; reached Bridgeport, Ala., where it remained on picket and guard duty until October 14th, when it left Bridgeport en route for Newburgh, where it arrived on the 20th, and was mustered out on the 31st. The casualties of the regiment were as follows:

Killed in battle.....	1
Died of sickness.....	18
Discharged for disability.....	15
" by civil authority.....	2
" " court-martial.....	1
Resigned.....	1
Taken prisoners.....	13
Deserters.....	184
Mustered out.....	600
Total.....	835

The large number of deserters was accounted for by the fact that many claimed that their period of enlistment had expired. Many of the men were in camp and field duties nearly or quite one year, and some for a longer time.

Following is the roll of commissioned officers, from the adjutant-general's report of 1868, the date of commission being first given, followed by the date of rank:

 George W. Hennion, Feb. 2, 1863; Jan. 21, 1863; died Sept. 21, 1863, at Manassas Junction, Va.
 Daniel Low, Jr., Feb. 2, 1863; Nov. 26, 1862; mustered out with regiment Oct. 31, 1863.
 George R. Branstetter, April 27, 1863; Feb. 11, 1863; promoted to first lieutenant Sept. 14, 1863.
 Bartley Brown, Sept. 14, 1863; July 1, 1863; mustered out with regiment Oct. 31, 1863.
 Lester Genung, —; July 1, 1863; mustered out with regiment Oct. 31, 1863.

The records of the three regiments (One Hundred and Sixty-sixth, One Hundred and Sixty-eighth, and One Hundred and Seventy-sixth) are made more complete by adding that the One Hundred and Seventy-sixth was sent to the Department of the Gulf as part of the Nineteenth Corps, and participated in the Red River campaign in 1864; subsequently in Gen. Sheridan's campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., in the summer and fall of the same year, and in Georgia and North Carolina in the winter and spring of 1865. Its nine months' men were mustered out in November, 1863, and the regiment finally April 27, 1866, having been kept in the field by its three years' men and drafted men and substitutes. A considerable percentage of the Orange County men were for three years. T. Henry Edsall, of Goshen, adjutant, was mustered out in November, 1863, but, with his comrades from the county, had some rough experiences in Louisiana. A letter of June 26, 1863, states that after remaining at Brashear City for a month, the regiment was sent to Thibodeaux, where it was attacked by a force of cavalry, and lost ten killed and twenty wounded. They had the satisfaction of routing the enemy (the Second Texas) and capturing thirty prisoners. The day succeeding this action (June 23d), learning of the approach of a vastly superior force of the enemy, the regiment fell back to Brashear City, retreated from that place, and barely escaped to New Orleans without annihilation, one hundred and forty men only reaching the point of safety, the remainder having been taken prisoners. The casualties in Company D at Thibodeaux were Nelson Smith, corporal, of Chester, mortally wounded and taken prisoner; J. E. Redner, private, of Chester, wounded through the wrist; William H. H. Hall, of Chester, wounded and taken prisoner; George Slauson, of Monroe, wounded and taken prisoner; S. K. Wood, sergeant, of Newburgh, accidentally wounded in jaw.

As in other cases, the names of the volunteers in the regiments named will be found in the town lists. In the official roster we recognize the names of the following officers:

T. Henry Edsall, adjutant, Dec. 18, 1862; mustered out by expiration of term Nov. 16, 1863.
 Sprague K. Wood, sergeant; promoted second lieutenant Dec. 21, 1863; first lieutenant, April 13, 1865; captain, May 29, 1865; mustered out with regiment April 27, 1866.
 Joseph Goodsell, second lieutenant, Dec. 19, 1862; first lieutenant, Sept. 29, 1863; captain, Feb. 23, 1864; dismissed June 22, 1864; disability removed Jan. 17, 1865; resigned.

FIRST MOUNTED RIFLES—CO. C.

This company, known locally as the "Middletown Cavalry," was recruited by Morris I. McCornal, at Middletown, as part of Col. Van Wyck's "Tenth Legion," in the autumn of 1861. It was detached from the Legion and mustered as Co. C, First Mounted Rifles, with ninety-five men. The officers were: Morris I. McCornal, captain; Charles F. Allen, first lieutenant; Arthur Hagen, second lieutenant; Ardice Robbins, orderly sergeant; C. R. Smith, quartermaster sergeant. The company served its term of three years, and quite a number of its men re-enlisted. Lieuts. Allen and Smith resigned, and died in civil life since the war. Quartermaster-Sergeant Smith was promoted lieutenant, as were Sergts. James Eaton, Frank Mills, and Fred. Penney. Capt. McCornal resigned in 1862, and re-entered service in Fifteenth Cavalry in 1863.

SECOND REGIMENT CAVALRY (HARRIS LIGHT).

This regiment was organized at New York City to serve three years. The companies of which it was composed were raised in the counties of New York, Queens, Rensselaer, Washington, and Orange, in this State, and the regiment also included two companies from Connecticut and two from Indiana. The volunteers from Orange were mainly in Company B, of which Charles E. Morton, of New Windsor, was first lieutenant.

It was mustered into the United States service from Aug. 9, 1861, to Oct. 8, 1861. The original members were mustered out Sept. 10, 1864, and the veterans and recruits organized into four companies. During the months of September and October, 1864, eight new companies were raised in the central part of the State to serve one year. The regiment was mustered out June 5, 1865.

The regiment was first known as the Seventh (Harris Light) New York State Volunteers, and was changed to Second Regiment (Harris Light) Cavalry, New York Volunteers, Dec. 31, 1862. Alanson M. Randall, U.S.A., was colonel of the regiment from November, 1864, to muster out in 1865. He was a native of Newburgh.

The names of those from Orange County who belonged to this regiment may be found to some extent in the soldiers' lists at the close of the chapters upon the several towns.

FIFTEENTH CAVALRY.

This regiment received some of its members from Orange County, but was largely from other parts of the State, the list of counties represented comprising Onondaga, Ontario, Orange, Oneida, Chataqua, Cattaraugus, Genesee, Tompkins, and Erie. It was mustered into the service of the United States from Aug. 8, 1863, to Jan. 14, 1864. It was consolidated with the Sixth New York Cavalry June 17, 1865, and the consolidated force was designated the Second New York Provisional Cavalry.

Recruits were obtained for the regiment in the fall and winter of 1863-64 by Capt. Morris I. McCornal, of Middletown, who had recruited the Middletown Cavalry, in 1861, for the Tenth Legion, and which was made a company of the First Mounted Rifles; and also by Lieut. Charles H. Lyon, of Newburgh. McCornal was first lieutenant, Jan. 6, 1864; captain, Nov. 9, 1864; discharged by consolidation, June 17, 1865. Lyon was first lieutenant, Jan. 6, 1864; promoted adjutant, June 7, 1865, but not mustered; discharged by consolidation, June 17, 1865. For names of volunteers see town lists.

FIFTEENTH HEAVY ARTILLERY—CO. M.

This company was recruited in the winter of 1863-64, mainly in Orange County. It was mustered into service at Fort Lyon, Va., Feb. 3, 1864, with the following officers: William D. Dickey, of Newburgh, captain; Alfred Newbatt and Julius Niebergall, first lieutenants; John Ritchie and Robert B. Keeler, of Newburgh, second lieutenants. It remained in Fort Lyon until March 27th, when it was ordered to Brandy Station, reported to the commanding officer of the Army of the Potomac, and was assigned to duty in the Artillery Reserve. The regiment was brigaded with the Sixth Heavy Artillery. They moved with the army on the 4th of May, acting as guard for the ammunition train until May 5th,—just one day,—when the regiment volunteered to "go in," and accordingly on the 6th it "went in," and participated in the battles of the 6th and 7th.

At this time the brigade was made a flying column, for the purpose of reinforcing any part of the line needing assistance. In this capacity it passed through the sanguinary battles around Spottsylvania, at Laurel Hill, Todd's Tavern, and Haines' Tavern, and for its gallant conduct in this last engagement was complimented by Gen. Meade in a general order. At the crossing of the North Anna River the regiment, though not actually engaged, yet sustained a very heavy fire, and lost severely in killed and wounded. At Bethesda Church and Tolopotomy Creek it was engaged, and its numbers were here again greatly reduced.

While near Cold Harbor the brigade was permanently attached to the Fifth Corps, and led the advance of the army until the Chickahominy was crossed, and then acted as rear-guard from that river until the James River was reached. On June 17th it arrived in front of Petersburg, and took part in the numerous engagements which occurred near that city. On the 15th of August Capt. Dickey was placed in command of the Third Battalion, its commanding officer being incapacitated by sickness, and the command of Company M fell upon Lieut. Ritchie, who led it through the bloody engagements that took place in the struggle for the possession of the Weldon Railroad, in one of which the company lost one-third of its men in killed and wounded. The regiment was again complimented by Gen. Meade for gallant conduct. The following are some of the engagements in which Company M specially participated: Peebles' Farm, or Poplar Spring, Chapel House, Hatcher's Run, the famous raid down the Weldon Railroad, Dabney's Mill, etc. The loss of the company in killed, wounded, and prisoners in their year of service was three officers and ninety-five men,—over half their number. It was mustered out in July, 1865.

The following promotions of members of Company M were made, viz.: Capt. William D. Dickey, to be major; Second Lieuts. Keeler and Ritchie, to be first lieutenants; Serjts. Joseph M. Dickey and Riemann, to be second lieutenants.

SEVENTH INDEPENDENT BATTERY.

The Seventh Independent Battery was recruited by Capt. Peter C. Regan as a part of the "Tenth Legion." It left Newburgh with the Legion on the 7th of November, 1861; arrived in Washington on the 11th; was organized as an independent battery Jan. 10, 1862, and assigned to Casey's division, subsequently Peck's division, and afterwards to the Seventh Corps. When the Eighteenth Corps was organized the battery was included in it as part of the Second Division. It served also a short time in the Tenth Corps at Bermuda Hundred. When mustered out it formed part of the artillery brigade of the Twenty-fourth Corps.

The battery participated in the siege of Yorktown, battles of Williamsburg, Savage's Station, Fair Oaks, and Malvern Hill; sustained the fire of a rebel battery at Harrison's Landing; was engaged in the siege of Suffolk, at Bermuda Hundred, and in action at Petersburg, Dutch Gap, Fort Harrison, Hatcher's Run, and Port Walthal. It was on garrison duty at Norfolk eighteen months; also at Fort Drewry, Manchester, and Suffolk, and in the investment of Petersburg and Richmond. Its first active service was on the 24th of May, 1862, near Seven Pines, where it was engaged with the batteries of the Washington (New Orleans) Artillery, and lost one man wounded, and one horse killed. The enemy were exposed, and lost a considerable number in killed and wounded. At Fair Oaks, May 31st, after Casey's division had been engaged and driven back, and after Battery A, First N. Y. Artillery, had lost all its guns, and another battery two guns, the Seventh was brought up and held the road for more than an hour without support.

Here it had ten men killed and wounded, and thirty-seven horses killed, and lost a battery-wagon, forge, and one caisson, but recovered them the next day.

The battery was three times recruited by transfers from other organizations, veteran re-enlistments, and new recruits, and maintained an honorable record until the war closed. It was mustered out July 22, 1865. Its members from Orange County will be found in the town lists. The official roll of its commissioned officers is as follows, the first date given being that of commission, followed by the date of rank:

Captain.

Peter C. Regan, Jan. 10, 1862; Oct. 1, 1861; mustered out with battery July 22, 1865.

First Lieutenants.

Eugene Sheibner, Jan. 10, 1862; Nov. 15, 1861; resigned June 25, 1862.

Abram Kniffin, Dec. 30, 1862; Nov. 1, 1862; mustered out on expiration of service Oct. 26, 1864.

Martin V. McIntyre, June 14, 1862; Feb. 14, 1862; mustered out with battery July 22, 1865.

John S. Bennett, enlisted Aug. 15, 1861; served two years; re-enlisted Oct. 23, 1863; promoted to first sergeant May 1, 1864; first lieutenant, Jan. 9, 1865; mustered out with battery July 22, 1865.

Second Lieutenants.

Abram Kniffin, Jan. 10, 1862; Oct. 1, 1861; promoted to first lieutenant Dec. 30, 1862.

Charles S. Harvell, Dec. 30, 1862; Nov. 1, 1862; mustered out on the expiration of his term of service Jan. 19, 1865.

Abram Smith, March 14, 1865; Feb. 25, 1865; mustered out with battery July 22, 1865.

William H. Lee, Jan. 10, 1862; Oct. 2, 1861; resigned May 14, 1862.

Edward Kelly, June 20, 1863; March 1, 1863; dismissed April 18, 1865.

John B. Brosen, Jr., Dec. 29, 1864; Dec. 1, 1864; mustered out with battery July 22, 1865.

FIRST REGIMENT OF ENGINEERS.

This regiment, known as Serrell's, was organized in New York City to serve three years. It was mustered into the service of the United States from Sept. 10, 1861, to Feb. 12, 1862. The original members, except veterans, were mustered out by detachments on the expiration of their terms of service, and the regiment, composed of veterans and recruits, retained in service until June 30, 1865, when it was mustered out in accordance with the orders of the War Department.

This was a large and important regiment in a necessary department of the service. It is said to have had from three hundred to four hundred men from Orange County. Some of their names may be found in the lists accompanying the chapters upon the several towns.

NINETY-EIGHTH REGIMENT—CO. C.

Company C, Ninety-eighth Regiment of infantry, was recruited mainly in Newburgh, in the winter of 1863-64, by Capt. James H. Anderson and Lieut. J. K. R. Oakley, then recently returned from a term of service in the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Wead, then commanding the Ninety-eighth, proposed that a person should be selected for second lieutenant and a full company raised. Joseph A. Sneed, formerly of Company B, Third New York Infantry, was accordingly selected for second lieutenant, and early in February, 1864, over eighty men reported for duty at Riker's Island.

On arriving at the rendezvous of the regiment, however, a difficulty arose. Col. Wead had intended to consolidate his smaller companies to make room for the new ones. To do this it was necessary to procure an order from department headquarters. This order he was unable to obtain in time to take the field, and hence sixty of the Orange County recruits were assigned to Company C, making, with the thirty-five already in the company, ninety-five men, under command of Capt. Anderson and Lieuts. Oakley and Sneed, and twenty-four men were assigned to Company I, Capt. E. M. Allen.

The subsequent history of the company is, of course, blended with that of the regiment. At Drury's Bluff the regiment saved, by its coolness and firmness, the right wing of Gen. Butler's army from a very dangerous flank attack, which had already demoralized one brigade; at Cold Harbor, from June 1st to 12th, it was constantly under fire, and in the charges of the 1st and 3d lost over one hundred men in killed and wounded. At Petersburg, June 15th, it charged and captured the outer line of works defending that city, and from that time until August was almost constantly under fire. The colors of the regiment were the first to be planted on Fort Harrison, September 29th, and it was the first regiment to enter Richmond after the evacuation by Lee's army, April 3, 1865. After the surrender it was on post and garrison duty at Richmond, Manchester, Burkesville, Danville, and other points in Virginia, until the 31st of August, when it was mustered out of service at Richmond.

Out of the eighty-four men who went out with Capt. Anderson, thirteen were killed or died of wounds received in action, twenty-three were wounded, more or less severely, and five died of disease contracted in the service. Capt. Anderson resigned, and was honorably discharged in September, 1864, on account of physical disability. Lieut. Sneed, having suffered some months from fever, resigned in January, 1865. From May 24th until November 19th the company was under command of Lieut. Oakley. He was then appointed adjutant, and the command fell upon Orderly Sergt. Clark B. Colwell, who, on the 2d of December, received a commission as first lieutenant,—a well-earned promotion, and one that gave the greatest satisfaction. Lieut. Oakley was commissioned captain at the same time, but, preferring the position of adjutant, did not muster.

The personal record of a very large percentage of the officers and privates of the volunteers under Capt. Anderson will be found in the Newburgh list.

MONEYS EXPENDED BY THE TOWNS AND BY THE COUNTY FOR WAR PURPOSES.

The following is an abstract of reports from supervisors of towns and treasurer of county, showing amount of moneys received for bounties and war expenses, and from what sources received, in the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865.

Wawayanda.—From town loans 1864, $26,800; 1865, $12,450; from State, cash $4500, bonds $8000; total, $51,750.

Total for all the towns.—From town taxes 1862, $31,931; 1863, $2000; 1864, $348,634.95; 1865, $166,932.32; from town loans 1862, $31,950; 1863, $35,318.70; 1864, $692,761.82; 1865, $229,278.41; from State, cash $76,900, bonds $252,066.53, interest on bonds $3473.51, other sources $105; total, $1,871,352.24.

By the County.—From taxes 1864, $1800; 1865, $90,649.50; from loans 1864, $421,000; total, $513,449.50.

Towns and County.—From taxes 1862, $31,931; 1863, $2000; 1864, $350,434.95; 1865, $257,581.82; from loans 1862, $31,950; 1863, $35,318.70; 1864, $1,113,761.82; 1865, $229,278.41; from State, cash $76,000, bonds $252,000.53, interest on bonds $3473.51, other sources $105; final total for towns and county, $2,384,801.74.

All these sums were raised by official action. The donations of supplies and the cash subscriptions (the latter especially heavy the first year) are not included in the statement.

The draft exemption of three hundred dollars, paid by a large number, may also be taken into the account, swelling the aggregate of the moneys expended for war purposes by the people of Orange to an immense sum.

CHAPTER IX.

COMMERCIAL HISTORY—ORIGINAL ROADS—TURNPIKES—RAILROADS AND CANALS—PLANK-ROADS—BANKING—AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL STATISTICS, ETC.

COMMERCIAL HISTORY.

FROM a very early period in its history the commercial business of the river towns of the county has been a feature of no small importance, although, viewed from the stand-point of a large commercial port, it would perhaps be regarded as scarcely worthy of notice. Introduced by the skippers of Holland, in the exchange of rum and trinkets for the beaver-skins of the Indians, it was subsequently prosecuted with advantage by the West India Company for half a century. From New York to Albany—New Amsterdam to Fort Orange perhaps we should say—this company had but one trading-post, that at Wiltwick or Kingston, although there were no doubt points along the Hudson at which their trading vessels stopped for traffic. At a later period, and especially during the early years of English colonial administration, individual ventures were made in trading posts, which were conducted in form and manner familiar to many in connection with the present Indian tribes of the West, and perhaps with quite as much fraud and debauchery. In 1686, David Toshack and his servant, Daniel Maskrig, from Scotland, established one of these posts at the mouth of Murderer's Creek, and continued it until Toshack's death, ten years later. It is not improbable that this post became the foundation of the subsequent commercial business of the Ellisons at New Windsor. John Ellison, an immigrant from England in 1688, established himself as a merchant in New York, where, in 1703, he built a store and wharf at the foot of Little Queen Street. With sloops constructed for the purpose, he sent his goods up the Hudson for trade with the European settlers as well as with the Indians, very much in the manner pursued by the Holland merchants who had preceded him. The old Murderer's Creek post was regularly visited, and at a later period the European settlers united in erecting, at what is now New Windsor village, a store-house for their mutual accommodation. Here they brought whatever they might have to sell or exchange and deposited it until such time as the trading sloop should arrive, which may have been three or four times in a year or oftener. To a certain extent a banker as well as a merchant, Ellison loaned money to his customers, and among others to William Sutherland, in 1718, and took a mortgage on Sutherland's land, and soon after came into its possession. On the property thus acquired his son, Thomas Ellison, built a dock and store-house as early as 1725, and established a regular sloop line from thence to his father's wharf at the foot of Little Queen Street. Similar ventures were made by others at different points in the limits of the present county, and especially at Newburgh, where a union store-house was erected in 1730, and a sloop line established by Alexander Colden. Precisely what constituted the products of the people of the county at that time is a matter of conjecture. Butter, pork, and grain, so many years staples, were probably the principal part of the yield of the farmers. The great business of the period, however, was lumbering, for which avocation the dense woodlands in the vicinity of the river gave abundant opportunity for saw-mills and sturdy woodsmen, whose pathway is still marked by deserted mill privileges, and who found little difficulty in obtaining advances from the merchant traders. Very large for its times was the trade of Cadwalader Colden, Jr., of Coldenham, in this field of commercial enterprise. In 1767 it is written of the commerce of Newburgh that "many people from the back parts of the country bring their produce to send to New York, having at least three boats belonging to the place that constantly go from thence to New York and return back again with goods, which creates a very considerable trade."

From the small beginnings thus briefly referred to local traffic accumulated until Newburgh Bay was white with the sails of vessels bearing to the sea-board the products of farmers, not only of Orange County, but of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Western New York, who found through them the most direct route to a market. For over a hundred years New Windsor was a chief mart in this traffic; for over one hundred and fifty years Newburgh was, and still is, largely engaged in the carrying trade, while Cornwall for a time was a successful competitor. And there were other commercial ventures. Newburgh was a port of some importance in colonial days in the whaling trade, in coasting, and in traffic with the West Indies. All this went down during the Revolution. After the war ships were built and manned for the Liverpool trade and cleared through the New York custom-house,—the "Liverpool Packet," the "William Penn," and the "Ontario," the latter of five hundred tons, and the largest ship cleared at New York at the time of her construction. Under the embargo and the war of 1812 these ventures were closed, and though whaling was renewed at a later period by the Newburgh Whaling Company (1831), and a lumber trade carried on with Liverpool and Australia as late as 1877, no ocean trade is now prosecuted.

Adverting more particularly to those who have been engaged in commercial undertakings, it may be remarked that although Col. Thomas Ellison, of New Windsor, was the first to establish himself there, he was not without early contemporaries. Joseph Sackett, Jr., had there a dock and store-house as early as 1742; Matthew DuBois was similarly located prior to 1765, and in that year united with Ellison in resisting the order of the officers of customs requiring all sloops trading on the Hudson to enter and clear at Albany or New York, while the name of William Jackson stands associated with the era of the Revolution. The business of the Ellisons, however, was for many years far in excess of that of their contemporaries. After the Revolution, among those in the trade may be noted the names of Ellison, Isaac and Abraham Schultz, Gillespy & Scudder, Isaac Schultz & Son, Joseph Morrell, Samuel M. Logan, William Walsh, Reuben Reynolds, Samuel Floyd, and Daniel Borden. In 1832, Knapp, Dalson & Co. sailed the steamboat "Norfolk," Capt. Jacob Wandell, and the sloop "Spy," Capt. George L. Sherwood. The barge "Experiment," built as a steamboat at New Windsor in 1828, for the Cornwall trade, subsequently sailed from New Windsor under command of Capt. Dyer Brewster. The latest advertised enterprise (1850) was that of Joseph Carpenter, who sailed the "Norfolk," Capt. Lewis O. Carpenter. Though at one time the trade at that place was drawn from a large section of country, it steadily decreased under the influence of the superior roads leading to Newburgh, and was wholly destroyed by the construction of the Erie Railroad and the Newburgh branch.

From Newburgh the first shippers were Alexander Colden, who came to be the owner of the old union store-house and wharf as early as 1740. At a later date Maj. Isaac Belknap, Capt. Donaghy, William Harding, Nehemiah Denton, Richard Buckingham, and

Lewis Clark were probably engaged in sailing sloops to New York. Belknap was the successor of Colden, and Nehemiah Denton sailed from a wharf near Balmville, where he had a grist- and flour-mill. Their business was suspended during the Revolution, as well as that of Capt. Coleman, who was engaged in trade with Nantucket. From 1798 the record is more complete. From the Colden Wharf—George Gardner, 1798 to 1809; George Gardner & Son, 1810–22; Henry Robinson, 1823–26; T. Powell & Co., 1835–44; Reeve, Moore & Co., 1845; Powell, Ramsdell & Co., fall of 1845–57; H. Ramsdell & Co., 1858–65. From Walsh's Wharf—Hugh Walsh, Derick Amerman, Crawford & Harris, and others, until 1808; F. Crawford and C. Belknap & Co., 1809–17; F. & D. Crawford, 1817–30; D. Crawford & Co., 1831–37; Crawford, Mailler & Co., 1838–54; W. K. Mailler & Co., 1855–57; W. K. Mailler & Son, 1858–59; W. O. Mailler, 1860–69; W. O. Mailler & Co., 1870–73.* From Anderson's Dock, foot of Third Street—John Anderson, 1798 to 1803. From Ludlow's Dock† (formerly John Anderson's)—

1843–44.‡ From dock foot of Fourth Street—Farmers' Company,§ 1806–13; B. & I. Case, 1814–20; Abm. Stagg & Co., 1820–24; John Mount & Co., 1825–26; and by Oakley & Davis, 1827–39. From Carpenter's Dock, south of Second Street—Caleb Coffin, 1800; Jacob and Leonard Carpenter and B. Carpenter & Co., 1802–64; Homer Ramsdell & Co., 1865–76. From Balmville—Daniel Smith and others until 1818; H. & J. Butterworth, 1819; Selah Tuttle & Son, 1820, who were the last occupants. In 1845 the firm of Wardrop, Smith & Co. was organized and commenced business from a dock and store-house erected by J. Beveridge & Co. at the foot of Fifth Street. This firm was continued until 1858, when C. C. Smith sold his interest to Hiram Falls. On the death of Mr. Wardrop the firm was dissolved, and Falls & Johnston became its successors. On the death of Mr. Falls, Johnston & Alsdorf continued the business until 1870, when it passed to Alsdorf & Skidmore, who sold to Homer Ramsdell in February, 1872, and retired from the trade. Homer Ramsdell bought the dock property and barge of B. Carpenter & Co., and consolidated the business of that firm with the firm of Homer Ramsdell & Co. During the season the large store-house of the firm was removed to a new foundation, and the store-house of Ramsdell & Co. removed and united with it, forming by far the largest and most complete structure on the Hudson. The firm of Homer Ramsdell & Co. is now the only freight line between Newburgh and New York; their barges have a carrying capacity of five hundred tons each; their daily freights probably exceed the weekly freights of twenty years ago, being greatly augmented by the trade of the entire eastern division of the Erie Railroad.

* The barge "Newburgh," then owned by this firm, together with a full cargo of freight, and also their store-house, etc., were destroyed by fire in June, 1873, and at the close of the season the firm retired from the freighting business.

† Robert Ludlow, father of Charles, Robert C., and Augustus C. Ludlow, of the United States navy, and of Mrs. Thomas Powell, bought the property from Water Street to the river in 1796, and built a store on Water Street and a new dock in the rear. During its ownership by the Powells it was called Powell's Dock, and subsequently Reeve's Dock. The old store-house was moved to Crawford's Dock and consolidated with that of D. Crawford & Co., and was destroyed in the fire of 1872.

§ This company appears to have been a regularly organized association; its business was conducted by directors who were generally changed annually. After the dissolution of the company, a similar association was organized by an act of incorporation, passed by the Legislature, April, 1825. This company originated, it is said, with Mr. Jonathan Hasbrouck who was its principal manager. The "Chancellor Livingston" was run for a few trips, in the name of the company, from the old red store-house and then the project was abandoned.

The business was conducted entirely by sloops until 1830. The introduction of steam vessels, however, was proposed in 1825, at a meeting of sloop-owners (June 6th), and a committee appointed for the purpose of making inquiry "relative to the building of a good and sufficient steamboat or boats, for the purpose of conveying freight or passengers from this village and landings adjoining."* This action was doubtless intended to allay the feeling against sloop navigation which had grown out of the disaster of the "Neptune," in November of the previous year.† Here the matter rested until the winter of 1829-30,

* "A meeting of sloop-owners was held June 6, 1825,—Selah Reeve, chairman, and David Crawford, secretary,—to consider the expediency of placing a steamboat on the Newburgh line. After discussion, it was 'Resolved, That a committee, consisting of James Wiltzie, John P. DeWint, Uriah Lockwood, John Wiltzie, Christopher Reeve, and David Crawford, be authorized to make the necessary inquiry and obtain all the information in their power relative to the building of a good and sufficient steamboat or boats, for the purpose of conveying freight or passengers from this village and landings adjoining.'"—Index, June 7.

† "LOSS OF THE SLOOP NEPTUNE.—On November 24th, about noon, the sloop 'Neptune,' on her way from New York to this village, a short distance below Pallopel's Island, was upset, filled, and sunk. At the time of this melancholy event it is understood she had on board from fifty to fifty-five passengers, a majority of whom were drowned. It appears that the vessel left New York under command of her first hand, Mr. John Decker (Captain Halstead being detained in the city), with from forty to fifty tons of plaster and some eight or ten tons of merchandise on board. About half of the plaster was put in the hold and the remainder piled on the deck. In the Highlands the wind was high, which induced the commander, when below West Point, to take a double reef in the mainsail and other measures of caution for the safe delivery of his charge. When off Little Stony Point, with very little way on the vessel, a flaw struck her and hove her down. This caused the plaster on deck to shift from windward to leeward. Most of the male passengers were on deck, and one or two of the females, and some ten or twelve women and six or seven children in the cabin. The shifting of the plaster created the utmost confusion on board. The water rushed into the scuttle of the fore-castle, which was to leeward, then into the cabin, and consternation, dismay, and death presented their appalling features to all on board. In a few minutes she filled and plunged headlong to the bottom. All in the cabin perished. Those on deck were plunged into a cold and turbulent element or had been carried down with the vessel. The boat was afloat, and when the sloop was going down was occupied by Decker and Woolsey, but without oars,—they were supplied by Mr. Storm, whose oyster-boat was just ahead of the sloop, and they made utmost exertions to save the unfortunates. Seventeen persons were rescued by them and the other boats which came to their assistance, but the rest perished.

"The following are the names of those who were saved: John Decker, Levi D. Woolsey, Mr. Thorne, of Newburgh; Joseph Mullock, A. Carey, Jesse Green, of Minisink; Alfred Crawford, Alexander Crawford, John Rose, of Crawford; Mr. Sprague, Mrs. Bowers, Mr. Smiley, Mr. Anderson, of Sullivan County; Lewis Broom, Patrick Kelley, of Wallkill; A. Pierson, of Montgomery; and a lad from Blooming-Grove. Total, 17.

"The following persons were known to have been on board the sloop: Mrs. Couch and two children, J. Loveland, and J. Smiley, of Sullivan County; Mrs. Graham and two children, of Crawford; John Lealer, of Blooming-Grove; Samuel Carlisle, Jacob Polhemus, Mrs. McClaughery, of Newburgh; Mrs. Rush, of Wallkill; Messrs McCurdy, Weed, Hensler, Mrs. Churchill and Cochrane, of Montgomery; John Greenleaf, George Evertson, Matilda Helms, William Kelley and child, of Minisink; Mrs. Dean, of Cornwall; F. W. DeCoudres and Mrs. Trout, of New York. Total, 26. It is supposed that a number of others were on board, which would make the whole equal to the number stated, whose names and connections have not yet been discovered. The sloop sunk in fifty or sixty feet of water. The owners, Messrs. Miller & Smith, succeeded in raising her."—Index, Nov. 1824.

when Mr. Christopher Reeve purchased the steamer "Baltimore," which was placed on the Newburgh line in the spring of 1830,‡ and ran from the wharf of the Messrs. Reeve and that of D. Crawford & Co. Rude in model as was this steamer, her appearance was hailed with every demonstration of popular regard; the newspapers recorded her advantages, and the brush of the painter traced her outlines on many sign-boards. But her triumph was short; her purchase had not been made when Mr. Benjamin Carpenter laid the keel at the ship-yard of Cornelius Carman, Low Point, of the steamer "William Young." This vessel was launched July 17, 1830, and commenced running in September of the same year.§ Though of nearly the same appearance as the "Baltimore," she was regarded as of better model, and her owner claimed that she had "power sufficient to make her average trips in about six hours;" but his anticipations were very far from being realized.

Messrs. Reeve and Crawford continued the "Baltimore" one year, when, some dissatisfaction arising, Mr. Reeve sold his interest to Mr. Crawford, who continued her on the line until 1835, when she was transferred to the route between Newburgh and Albany. The Messrs. Reeve (1832) supplied the place of the "Baltimore" in their line with the steamer "Legislator;" and during the same season Oakley & Davis put on their line the "Providence."|| In the summer of 1833, D. Crawford & Co. built the steamer "Washington," and commenced running her in November of that year.¶ This boat was far superior to any in the trade, and the competition which she created aroused the energies of Mr. Carpenter, who built in 1835 the "James Madison," a boat superior in many respects to the "Washington;" she was the first beam-engine steamer in the trade. During the same season Oakley & Davis changed the "Providence" for the "Superior;" and Mr. Powell, who for several years had been living in retirement, now again entered the list of competitors, and built the steamer

‡ "Half of the excellent steamboat 'Baltimore' has been purchased by D. Crawford & Co., and we understand that she will start alternately from Reeve's and from Crawford's Docks, towing a sloop and taking passengers from each dock twice a week. We have already spoken of a steamboat in a state of forwardness, owned by Benjamin Carpenter; and probably the other sloop-owners will make similar arrangements."—Gazette, Feb. 7, 1830.

§ Though not the first steamboat in the Newburgh trade, as has been claimed, the "William Young" was the first built expressly for that trade. She was more complete in her accommodations for passengers than her predecessors, the "Baltimore," and had more of the character of what was then regarded as a first-class steamer.

|| "Farmers and freighters will be abundantly accommodated with steamboats this season. In addition to the 'William Young,' which will continue to run from Carpenter's, and the 'Baltimore,' which will run this season from Crawford's Dock, will be added the 'Legislator,' which will tow from Reeve's Dock, and the 'Providence,' from Oakley & Davis's. We understand vessels will depart from this village on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays. The enterprising spirit evinced by these arrangements deserves, and we confidently hope will meet with, a corresponding liberality from the public."—Gazette, Feb. 26, 1832.

¶ "The 'Baltimore' and the 'Washington' were run by this firm during the season of 1834.

"Highlander," which commenced running in September. She was a boat of the first class in speed, her only rival being the "Rochester," then on the New York and Albany line. As their days of sailing from New York were the same, racing was always in order; and the story is that in order to settle the point of speed a bet of one thousand dollars a side was made. The race came off, and the "Highlander" lost by half a minute on a straight run from New York to the Newburgh wharf. The "Osceola," a neat and swift craft, next attacked the "Highlander." Both boats ran on the morning line,—the former from Poughkeepsie, and the latter from Newburgh and Fishkill; but the "Highlander" was victorious. In 1846, Powell, Ramsdell & Co. built the "Thomas Powell," and placed her on the morning line.* She was subsequently sold to Capt. Anderson and placed on the morning line between Rondout and New York, and was the last of the Newburgh steamers.

The first barge—the "Minisink"—was placed on the line by Crawford, Mailler & Co. in 1841, in lieu of the "Washington," which was put on the New York and Albany line as an opposition boat, and subsequently sold to the People's line. In 1842, Christopher Reeve re-entered trade with the barge "Union." In 1845, Wardrop, Smith & Co. put on the steam-barge "Caledonia," and in 1851 the barge "Wallkill." Johnston & Falls took out the boilers and engine of the "Caledonia," and changed her name to "Union," and Alsdorf & Skidmore exchanged her for the propeller "Thomas McManus," and made three trips a week during the season of 1870–71. B. Carpenter & Co. sold the "James Madison" in 1846, and purchased the barge "Superior." In 1848, Powell, Ramsdell & Co. built the barge "Newburgh," and substituted her for the "Highlander;" in 1851 they built the barge "Susquehanna," and ran her in connection with the "Newburgh." Subsequently the "Newburgh" was transferred to Wm. K. Mailler & Co., and the "Minisink" to B. Carpenter & Co. In 1870, Homer Ramsdell added the barge "Charles Spear" to the line of Homer Ramsdell & Co., who ran her in connection with the barges "Susquehanna" and "Minisink," each boat making two trips a week, forming a daily line. The latter was withdrawn in 1873, and daily trips made with the "Spear" and the "Susquehanna."

The early steamboat captains were: "Baltimore," Robert Wardrop, 1830–32, Samuel Johnson, 1833; "William Young," Seth Belknap, 1830, Whitehead Halstead, 1831, Charles Halstead, 1833; "Providence," Levi D. Woolsey, 1831–33, Samuel R. Logan, 1834; "Washington," Robert Wardrop, 1834; "Superior," James H. Leeds, 1835; "Madison," Eli Perry, 1835; "Highlander," Robert Wardrop, 1835. In nearly all cases the persons named were previously in command of sloops.

Trade from Cornwall was probably early centred with the Ellisons of New Windsor, and with the Hazards at Orangeville (now Moodna). The latter was perhaps on the precise site which was occupied by Toshack in 1686. The land was subsequently patented to Mary Ingoldsby, from whom it was purchased (1728) by David Mandevill, who sold a portion of it to Samuel Hazard, who, in company with his brother Nathaniel, laid out a township plot under the name of Orangeville, erected a flouring-mill and store, and constructed a wharf at Sloop Hill (in Cornwall), from which sloops were sailed. Large quantities of grain, converted into flour at their mill, found its way to New York by their sloops. Indeed, flour was one of the staple products of the county for many years. The Hazard mill, Hasbrouck, Denton, and Belknap mills at Newburgh, and the Ellison, Schultz, and Trimble mills in New Windsor, were quite as celebrated in their day as some of the favorite Western brands of the present time.

The freighting business at Cornwall proper began at about the commencement of the present century, when Capt. Daniel Tobias sailed a sloop and kept a store. His brother, Isaac S., continued the business after 1807, and constructed a dock and built the sloop "Hector." Capt. Nathaniel Ring was Tobias' contemporary. In 1810, Capt. Reuben Reynolds, of New Windsor, removed to Cornwall, and built, in company with Tobias, the sloop "Hamlet." In 1812, Capt. Tobias sold out to Isaac Van Duzer, who sailed the sloop "Exchange," Capt. John Gifferth. In 1828, Mr. Van Duzer built the first steamboat for freighting purposes ever constructed on the river. She was built by Silas Corwin, of New Windsor, and her boiler and engine were furnished by Isaiah and John Townsend, of Albany. She was named the "Experiment," run for several years by Mr. Van Duzer, and then sold to Weeks & Griffin, who sold her to Henry Bertholf & Co., who ran her four or five years. She next became the property of Hudson McFarland, Mr. Mitchell, Dr. Morrison, and Captain Tobias. The latter ran her for a year, when her engine became broken, and she was dismantled of her machinery and converted into a barge, and was sailed as such from New Windsor by Capt. Dyer Brewster. The steamboat "Wave" succeeded the "Experiment," and subsequently the "Union" was put on and officered by Capt. Tobias. Then came the "General Jackson," followed by the "Gazelle" and the "Caledonia," the two last named merely stopping at Cornwall for freight. About 1856, Henry Clark bought the propeller "Orange County," and put her on the line under Capt. Joseph Ketchum. Her trips were continued until 1864, when the commerce of Cornwall, except by river boats of other lines and by the branches of the Erie road, was numbered with that of New Windsor.†

ORIGINAL ROADS.

The early carrying trade from New Windsor, Newburgh, and Cornwall was due to their positions as natural entrepôts. They were the most accessible points through which New York could be reached by the people of the district, as well as by those residing in northeastern New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and in their direction all the early roads tended. These roads were, first, the king's highway or public road,* from Kingston to New Paltz, and from thence to Shawangunk "and the neighborhoods annexed to New Paltz," and from New Paltz to the Palatine parish of Quassaick, and from thence through New Windsor, Cornwall, the Clove, and northeast New Jersey to Fort Lee;† second, the old Goshen road, which intersected the road last described and ran from New Windsor to Goshen, and from thence west to the Peenpack settlements on the Delaware, where it intersected (third) the old Mine road from Kingston to the Minisink country of New Jersey and Pennsylvania; fourth, the king's highway from Shawangunk through Montgomery to Goshen, and thence through Florida and Warwick to Sussex, N. J., intersecting the king's highway to Fort Lee; fifth, the Little Britain road, running almost directly west from New Windsor to the Wallkill, and intersecting the road from Shawangunk to Goshen, and with a branch on its eastern extremity, called the Wallkill road, to Newburgh. From four points of the compass, covering an arc of not less than three hundred miles, these roads all came together at New Windsor on lines almost as direct as a bird would fly. Newburgh, lying north of this centre, shared only in the travel of the routes to the north and northwest, with a single road running west through Coldenham to Montgomery, which had been constructed by the Coldens. To these facts New Windsor was indebted for its early commercial supremacy.

At what precise period the main lines described were opened it would be difficult to determine; it is fair to presume, however, that they did not antedate settlement, and it is also fair to presume that they were substantially based on trails which had been followed by the Indians for ages, except, perhaps, the Little Britain road. A crude network of main and divergent paths through the forests these Indian trails were, but in the absence of better routes they were traveled by the first settlers until they became well known, and ultimately lost their original character by enlargement and improvement. The "old Mine road," to which reference has been made in another chapter,‡ may be cited as an example. It was originally the great trail from the Minisink country to Esopus, with thousands of intersecting paths. Whether the trail was known to the Dutch settlers of Esopus at the time of the last Indian war (1664) is not a question which can affect its title to antiquity, nor the fact of its early travel, of which its "Yagh houses," or resting-places, are sufficient evidence, and which were in existence in 1704. Between 1704 and 1734 it became a king's highway under colonial law, and as such was the subject of petition to the General Assembly, of which it is said in the journal of proceedings: "The petition of Jacobus Swartwout, William Provost, William Cool, and others, freeholders and inhabitants residing and living in Minisink, in the county of Orange and Ulster, was presented, setting forth that several persons in West New Jersey and Pennsylvania having no other way to transport their produce than through the Minisink road, and there being about forty miles more to repair before they came to Esopus, that they (the persons referred to) be compelled to work on said road and assist in repairing it to the house of Egbert DeWitt, in the town of Rochester, in the county of Ulster." In other words, the petitioners intended no doubt to have it understood that as they had made the road, it was but just that those who used it should help to maintain it. It was an important road, and the link which was made to intersect it from Goshen was also an important one, as it shortened by many miles the route to tide-water. That the king's highway from Kingston to New Paltz and Newburgh, and thence to Fort Lee, was substantially on an original Indian trail is presumed from the fact that it was a line of travel by the Indians. Throughout the entire district all the trails ran to the Dans Kammer, the temple in which the Indians worshiped their god Bachtamo. The branch from New Paltz to Goshen, or Shawangunk to Goshen,§ was substantially the "Chawangon trail," which is met in some early deeds. The line from Sussex was as clearly one as any of the others, and also its intersecting line to Goshen. The known points in communication are the guides to this conclusion,—the Wawayanda castles, and that of Maringoman on the Schunemunk. That Sarah Wells, the traditional first white woman on the Wawayanda Patent, passed over the bed of the old Goshen road, or substantially so, we have little doubt.

Whatever may have been their connection with original trails, or whatever the date of their construc-

† See Chapter II.

* A king's highway was simply a road opened and worked according to law as public roads now are.

† A branch from this road ran from Fort Lee to Stony Point, where the Hudson was crossed by the king's (public) ferry to Peekskill. The road then ran down through Westchester and crossed the king's (public) bridge at Harlem. Before the Revolution it was a much-traveled route to Philadelphia from New England, and it was this fact that led to the fortifications at Verplanck's and Stony Point.

§ This road was opened in 1735 by Zacharias Hoffman, Benjamin Smedes, and Johannes Decker, commissioners of highways "for the precinct of Shawangunk and the neighborhood of Wallkill." It ran "by or near" Goodwill church, and through Neelytown to the Goshen line, or "until it meets the road laid out by the inhabitants of Goshen to the south line of the said county of Ulster." It was laid out under an act of the Assembly, entitled "An act for the continuing of an act entitled an act for the better clearing, ascertaining, and further laying out public high roads in the county of Ulster."

tion, they were famous old roads in their day. The militia moved over them in the French and Indian war, and they were traversed by them and by the "ragged Continentals" during the Revolution. Mrs. Washington, with her carriage, servants, and escort, en route for New Windsor and Newburgh, Morgan and his riflemen en route for Boston in 1774, congressmen from New England en route for the Continental Congress,* prisoners en route for Easton, passed over the line from New Windsor or Newburgh to Sussex Court-House, and from thence to their destination, while the first mail-routes through the district ran over the king's highway from Rhinebeck and Kingston to New Paltz, and from thence via Shawangunk, Goshen, and Warwick to Sussex. "The establishing of this post-road," wrote Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, who then (1792) represented the Orange and Ulster district in Congress, "will, I am in hopes, conduce much to the circulating of newspapers and other useful information through our State on the west side of the Hudson, the inconvenience attending which we have long experienced." Surrounded by the facilities of the present era, and educated to their conveniences, it is difficult to realize that it was not always so,—that mail matter was first delivered to the people of Newburgh at Ward's Bridge, in the town of Montgomery, and continued to do so until some time in 1795.† From whatever point they may be viewed, these old roads are clothed in a halo of local historic interest,—even their roughest stones have sermons in them. Our reference to them here, however, has a definite purpose, and that accomplished, we may not wander into other fields.

"Nov. 7th.—Breakfasted at Adriance's, and sat off for Fishkill where we arrived at noon. Could get no provender for our horses, but at the Contl (Continental, i.e., military) Stables. Waited upon Gen. Putnam who was packing up and just about setting off for White Plains. Chatted with him a while, and then put off for the Contl Ferry at the North River. (Fishkill is eleven miles from Adriance's, and the ferry six miles from Fishkill.) In our way to the Ferry we met President Hancock in a sulkey, escorted by one of his Secretaries and two or three other gentlemen, and one Light-horseman. This escort surprised us as it seemed inadequate to the purpose either of defence or parade. But our surprise was not of long continuance, for we had not rode far before we met six or eight Light-horsemen on the canter, and just as we reached the Ferry a boat arrived with many more. These with the Light-horsemen and the gentlemen before mentioned made up the escort of Mr. President Hancock.—Who would not be a great man? I verily believe that the President, as he passed through the Country thus escorted, feels a more triumphant satisfaction than the Col. of the Queen's Regiment of Light Dragons attended by his whole army and an escort of a thousand Militia. We had a pleasant time across the Ferry, and jogged on to Major Dubois a Tavern about 9 or 10 miles from thence, where we put up for the night. We were well entertained, had a good dish of tea, and a good beef-steak. We had neither ate nor drank before since we breakfasted. Dr. Cutter invited us to dine with him at Fishkill; but it was not then dinner-time and we were anxious to pass Hudson and get on."

"Travels in North America," by M. de Chastellux, may also be referred to.

† The date of the establishment of the post-office at Ward's Bridge has not been ascertained. From an advertised list of letters it appears that John McKinstry was postmaster in 1793.

TURNPIKES.

With the opening of the present century came a new era in roads,—the construction of turnpikes, of which the Orange turnpike was the first (1800). The incorporators to the company were William Wickham, John Steward, James Everett, James Carpenter, Thomas Waters, James W. Wilkin, David M. Westcott, Anthony Dobbin, Jonathan Sweezy, John Wood, Solomon Smith, and John Gale, Jr. Its capital stock was $6250, and its line ran "from the house of Moses Cunningham, in the town of Cheesocks (Monroe), to the intersection of the roads leading from Stirling Iron-Works, near the house of Stephen Sloats," running in the bed of the old road as far as circumstances permitted. By act of 1806 the capital was increased $46,750, and permission granted to the company to extend the road "southerly to the line of the State of New Jersey, on the route to the city of New York, and also to construct a new road from the northerly part of said turnpike-road to the intersection of the Warwick road, near the village of Chester, on the route to the city of Albany," the entire two taking the name of the Orange turnpike.

An undertaking of greater magnitude followed in 1801,—the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike. In reciting the history of this enterprise some traditional errors may be repeated, but in the main our gleanings will be found substantially correct. At the time of its incorporation there had grown up in Newburgh a body of active and enterprising men, who, finding themselves in the possession of advantages which New Windsor did not enjoy, determined to make the best possible use of their opportunities. In this they were favored by circumstances in a remarkable degree. The ancient rivals of their town—Kingston and New Windsor—had grown fat in trade, and became sluggish and indifferent, while they were fresh and ready for venture. In the western part of Ulster were large unoccupied sections of the Minisink and Hardenburgh Patents. In these lands John DeWitt, of Dutchess, became interested, and, after examining them with a view to their sale, resolved upon the expedient of opening them to market by means of a turnpike-road to tide-water. Failing to enlist the people of Kingston in his plans he came to Newburgh, where he met with that encouragement which induced him to remove his family thither and to embark in the undertaking, in which he was especially joined by Johannes Miller, of Montgomery, who was also a large holder of lands in the new district. Under their efforts a company was organized and application made to the Legislature for a charter, which was granted March 20, 1801, constituting Robert Bowne, John DeWitt, William Seymour, Levi Dodge, Johannes Miller, Hugh Walsh, George Clinton, Jr., William W. Sackett, Jacob Powell, John McAuley, Charles Clinton, Samuel McCoun, George Gardner, and all such others as should associate for that purpose, a body corporate and politic by the name of "The President, Directors, and Company of the Newburgh and Cochection Turnpike Road," with a capital limited to $80,000, and authority to construct a turnpike-road "in the nearest, most convenient, and direct route from the village of Newburgh, on Hudson's River, to Cochection, on the Delaware River." The stock was soon taken and the road constructed, running a line of sixty miles, with substantial bridges, and all the appointments of a good road. Though for a time unprofitable to the holders of its stock, who were ready to sell at a loss of fifty per cent., though DeWitt lost his life in the work, and Miller became financially crippled, the road ultimately resulted in immense advantages to Newburgh and to the district which it opened. It may have been the outgrowth of a land speculation, but it gave population and legal being to the county of Sullivan (1809), as well as birth to other undertakings of a similar character, which as justly deserve the title of internal improvements as the most substantial of modern railroad systems.

The Cochection turnpike was followed, in 1805, by an act incorporating "The President and Directors of the Newburgh and Chenango Turnpike Road Company." Its incorporators were Richard B. Church, Asa Stowel, Nathaniel Locke, David Cooper, Anson Carey, Elijah Stowel, and all such others as should be associated with them, who were authorized to issue stock to the amount of $162,000, and to construct a turnpike-road "from the village of Oxford, in the county of Chenango, and run by the most direct, practicable route to the Susquehanna River, at the place designated by law for the Jerico toll-bridge; thence across the same to the road leading to the court-house; thence to the west branch of Delaware River, at or near the house of Coenrad Edict, and from the opposite side of the said branch to the east branch of said river, and from the opposite side thereof by the most direct practicable route to intersect the Newburgh and Cochection turnpike-road." The object of the projectors of this road, who were residents of Chenango County, was to open to settlement the military tracts, and especially the "twenty township" tract, purchased for the State from the Indians in 1788. We include it in this review as a part of the connecting road of the Cochection.

And it may be noted here that the opening of the military tract to settlement was a matter in which there were many interested parties. As a reward for services in the Revolution, these lands had been given to officers and soldiers, to many of whom they were practically worthless, and who sold their locations for merely nominal sums. Gen. James Clinton, of New Windsor, was a large original holder, as well as a subsequent purchaser, as well also his nephew, Surveyor-General Simeon DeWitt, and there were not a few Newburgh capitalists who had made similar investments. Clinton had had large experience in bringing lands into market in Orange and Ulster, and from that experience he had, long previous to the Chenango extension, advocated a similar project. When the Cochection road was nearly completed, he obtained a hearing from his Newburgh neighbors. His proposition embraced a road crossing Sullivan County to Oxford, Chenango Co., and thence westward, to be known as the "National Appian Way." In 1807, Newburgh sent John DeWitt, Francis Crawford, Samuel Sackett, and Daniel Stringham to explore the route, at least in part, and report upon its feasibility. After performing their tasks, the committee submitted a favorable report;* but it was deemed that the county was then too weak to engage in a work of such magnitude, and its further prosecution was dropped, although by the Cochection and its subsequent connections it was partially accomplished.

Aroused from their indifference to progress, parties in Kingston determined if possible to counteract the enterprise of Newburgh, and to that end obtained incorporation for the "First Southwestern Turnpike Company." But scarcely was their undertaking under way when the "Ulster and Orange Branch Turnpike Company" was chartered (April 11, 1808), the act for the incorporation of which authorized Walter Burling, Elnathan Sears, Henry Patmore, Jr., David Miliken, Elias Miller, Charles Johnston, John Crosby, Alexander Thompson, Jr., and their associates to build a turnpike-road from the Newburgh and Cochection, in the town of Montgomery, to the "Great Southwestern," in Liberty, by the way of Newkirk's Mills, on the Shawangunk River, Roosa's Pass, and the falls of the Neversink. The capital was fixed at $30,000. With the "Great Southwestern" as the objective-point, the "Newburgh and Sullivan Turnpike Company" followed in 1810, with a capital of $35,000. James Rumsey, Cornelius Bruyn, Abraham Jansen, John D. Lawson, John McAuley, Moses Rosenkranse, Nicholas Hardenburgh, and Johannes T. Jansen, its incorporators, and their associates, were authorized to construct a turnpike "from the northern part of the village of Newburgh," on the most direct and convenient route, "through Rocky Forest and New Hurley, crossing the Wallkill at or near Bryan's bridge, thence on either the southerly or northerly bounds of lot No. 2, granted to Gerardus Beekman, where the ground will admit, to the Hoag-bergh road; thence to the Shawangunk Kill, crossing the same at or near Nicolas Jansen's saw-mill; thence on to Shawangunk Mountains, crossing the same at or near Sam's Point, or pass thence through Wawarsink, to a point at or near Neversink Falls." The expressed object of the company was "to open a communication through the western country," but its true purpose was to tap the "Great Southwestern," which had been extended to Chenango Point, where a bridge was to be constructed.

In 1809 an important connection with the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike was chartered under the name of "The President, Directors, and Company of the Minisink and Montgomery Turnpike Road." Its incorporators were James Finch, Jr., Reuben Neely, Benjamin B. Newkirk, Benjamin Woodward, David G. Finch, Jacob Mills, Alsop Vail, Jr., Jacob Cuddeback, Richard Shinser, and their associates, and its capital $35,000. The line of the road began "at the New Jersey State line, near the house of Benjamin Carpenter, in the town of Minisink," and from thence ran "across the Shawangunk Mountains to the house of David G. Finch, in the town of Deerpark; from thence to or near the house of Benjamin Woodward, in the town of Walkkill, and thence on the most direct and eligible route to intersect the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike-road west of the eastern line of Union Street, in the village of Montgomery."

A northwestern branch or connection with this road was chartered in 1812, under the name of the "Mount Hope and Lumberland Turnpike Company." The capital of this company was $35,000, and its incorporators were James Finch, Jr., Elisha Reeve, William A. Cuddeback, William Young, Jr., Richard Penny, Charles Murray, Thomas Everson, and Lebius Godfrey. The line of the road began "on the Minisink and Montgomery turnpike, between the dwelling-house of Dr. Benjamin B. Newkirk and the store occupied by Benj. Dodge, in the town of Walkkill," and ran thence across the "Shawangunk Mountains at the pass near Jonathan Sares', in the town of Deerpark; thence to the Bush Kill landing on the Neversink River, in the county of Sullivan; and thence to the Big Eddy, or Narrows, on the Delaware River, or to intersect the contemplated road from Big Eddy to Snooks' bridge over the Neversink River." Mr. Quinlan states that George D. Wickham, of Goshen, who owned three-fourths of the land in the present town of Tusten, was the father of this road, and himself and John Duer, of Goshen, Benjamin Woodward, Benjamin Dodge, and Benjamin B. Newkirk, of Mount Hope, and William A. Cuddeback and Abraham Cuddeback, of Deerpark, were its directors. Work was not commenced until after the war of 1812 had closed, when the road was completed as far as Narrowsburgh, and under an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania was extended to Honesdale. Two years previous to its charter (1810) a charter was granted to the "Narrowsburgh Bridge Company,"—Jeremiah Lillie, Jonathan Dexter, Chauncey Belknap, Thomas Belknap, Samuel F. Jones, William A. Thompson, William W. Sackett, Samuel Preston, and Francis Crawford, directors. The company was authorized to build a substantial bridge, twenty-five feet wide, "across the Delaware River at the Narrows, in the Big Eddy, in the county of Sullivan," and to collect tolls. It was the connecting link between the Mount Hope and Honesdale roads, and although both have ceased to be turnpikes the bridge company and its bridge remain, the present structure having been erected in 1847. "These improvements," Mr. Quinlan adds, "were for the double purpose of providing an outlet for a territory of Sullivan rich in valuable timber, and to bring towards the Hudson the agricultural products of the county between the Delaware and the Susquehanna, to be exchanged for merchandise."

The construction of turnpikes was by no means confined to the Sullivan County lines. "The New Windsor and Blooming-Grove Company" was chartered April 3, 1801,—capital $7500. Its incorporators were John Chandler, Richard Goldsmith, William Adams, James Carpenter, William A. Thompson, Abraham Schultz, Hezekiah Howell, Johannes Decker, Jonathan Brooks, Jr., Thomas A. Thompson, Isaac Schultz, and John Gale, Jr. The line of the road was "from the village of New Windsor to the intersection of the Goshen and Warwick road." In 1809 the "Goshen and Minisink Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $20,000. Incorporators, William Thompson, William Wickham, Reuben Hopkins, George D. Wickham, Peter Gale, James Eldred, Increase B. Stoddard, and Benjamin Sawyer. The line of the road "began at the Delaware River, near the house of Benjamin Carpenter, in the town of Minisink, and ran from thence to or near the house of Increase B. Stoddard, and from thence on the most eligible route to the court-house in Goshen, intersecting the Walkkill River near the outlet bridge." June 1, 1812, the company was authorized to extend the road from Goshen to the New Windsor and Blooming-Grove turnpike. In 1816 the "Blooming-Grove and Gray Court Turnpike Company" was incorporated,—capital $60,000. Incorporators, Hector Craig, Samuel Moffatt, Selah Strong, John Brooks, and their associates. The road ran from the Blooming-Grove and New Windsor turnpike, "near the dwelling-house of Samuel Moffatt; thence to or near the Blooming-Grove church," etc., "keeping the track of the present road as nearly as may be convenient," to the dwelling-house of Joseph Brewster; thence to the grist-mill of Hector Craig, and thence to the Warwick road. In 1810 "the Warwick and Minisink Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $22,500. Incorporators, John Hathorn, John Wheeler, Jacobus Post, Robert Farrier, Cornelius Lezeur, Jeffry Wisner, John Wisner, Jr., Increase B. Stoddard, David Christie, Richard Whitaker, and their associates. The line began "between the twenty-ninth and thirtieth mile-stone" on the boundary line of New York and New Jersey, and ran thence northwesterly through the village of Amity to the Pochuck bridge; thence to the southerly margin of the Drowned Lands; and thence "on the most eligible and direct route to intersect the Goshen and Minisink turnpike-road on the east side of the Shawangunk Mountains, between the house of Increase B. Stoddard and the great bog-meadow, commonly called Green's bog-meadow." In 1812 the "Goshen and Westtown Turnpike Company" was incorporated,—capital $17,500. Incorporators, Reuben Hopkins, Freegift Tuthill, Benjamin Strong, Stephen Jackson, James Carpenter, David M. Westcott, John G. Hurtin, and their associates. The line began "at the line which divides the States of New York and New Jersey, between the fortieth and forty-first mile-stone," and extended thence to the village of Westtown; thence to Rutgers' Kill, near the mill of Jones & Van Cleft; thence to Pellet's round hill, near the edge of Wallkill; and thence on the most eligible route to intersect the Goshen and Minisink turnpike near the village of Goshen." It will readily be observed by those familiar with the lines described that the New Windsor and Blooming-Grove turnpike, through its connections, became a trunk line from Minisink to the Hudson, with intersecting branches traversing an extensive district in the western part of the county.

The "Newburgh and New Windsor Turnpike Company" was chartered April 2, 1806,—capital $5000. Charles Clinton, Daniel Stringham, John McAuley, George Monell, Hugh Walsh, Isaac Hasbrouck, Selah Reeve, Joseph Morrell, Abraham Shultz, Richard Trimble, Jonas Williams, John D. Nicoll, and Samuel Lockwood were its incorporators. The road ran from the south side of Renwick Street, in the village of Newburgh, "along the margin of Hudson's River," to the village of New Windsor, with a toll-bridge over Quassaick Creek. In 1809 the "New Windsor and Cornwall Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $30,000. Its incorporators were Michael Smith, William A. Clark, William Jackson, Nathaniel Sands, Joseph Morrell, Zebulon Townsend, John Coffey, and those who should be associated with them. Its line ran "from the south end of the Newburgh and New Windsor turnpike, in the village of New Windsor; thence crossing the Murderer's Creek at or near where the toll-bridge now stands; thence through the village of Canterbury, near the house of Stephen Crissey; thence through the town of Monroe, passing near the mills of Zebulon Townsend, till it shall intersect the Orange turnpike-road at or near the house of Adam Belcher, in the said town of Monroe." For the connection which this road established reference can be made to the Orange turnpike, the Goshen and Monroe turnpike, and the Monroe and Haverstraw turnpike.

In 1810 the "Newburgh and Plattekill Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $14,000. Jacob Powell, Daniel Smith, John Wells, Jonathan Bailey, Justus Cooley, and Henry Butterworth were its incorporators. Its line ran north from Newburgh to Plattekill, in Ulster County, where it was connected with the New Paltz and Plattekill and the Marlborough and Plattekill turnpikes, the main line through New Paltz extending to Kingston.

In 1815 the "Snake Hill Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $14,000. Jonathan Hasbrouck, William Taylor, Hiram Wheeler, Nathaniel DuBois, and Jonathan Hedges were its incorporators. Its line ran from the Cohecton turnpike to DuBois' grist-mill at West Newburgh, and thence along the foot of Muchattoes Hill to the New Windsor and Blooming-Grove turnpike. In 1819 its line was extended by the "Clove Turnpike Road,"—capital $3000; incorporators, Nathaniel DuBois, Jacob Carpenter, Jonathan Hedges, and Jonathan Hasbrouck,—which ran from the point where the Snake Hill turnpike-road intersected the New Windsor and Blooming-Grove turnpike-road, and thence to the New Windsor and Cornwall turnpike-road at the foot of the mountain, near the house of Samuel Seaman. The entire line crossed every road from the west to the village of New Windsor. Its special object was to develop the lands of Nathaniel DuBois and Jonathan Hasbrouck, who were incorporators in both companies.

In 1809 the "Dunderberg and Clove Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $20,000. Incorporators, Alexander McComb, William Bell, John Coffey, Thomas Donavan, Robert Lamoreux, and Zebulon Townsend. Its line began "at Joshua Caldwell's ferry, at the east point of the Dunderberg Mountains," and ran along the west side of Hudson's River to or near Doddletown; from thence to Queensborough Furnace; and from thence northwesterly to the road running through Smith's Clove at or near the house of Robert Lamoreux, in the town of Monroe. By subsequent legislation the company was authorized to extend the road "from the northwest end thereof to the stage road leading from Albany to the city of New York, to intersect the said stage road at or near the dwelling-house of John Smith, in the town of Monroe."

The "Fort Montgomery Turnpike Company" was chartered April 9, 1814. Its incorporators were Nathan Smith, Benjamin Roosa, Selah Smith, Robert Davenport, David Havens, and James Davis. Its capital was $10,000, and its road began "at or near Fort Montgomery, and near the landing" then "occupied by Nathan and Selah Smith," and ran from thence northwesterly "to the Forest of Dean mire-hole; thence southwesterly to the Dunderberg and Clove turnpike, near or at the house of Isaac Hollet, in the town of Monroe."

In 1810 the "Bellvale and Monroe Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $9000. Incorporators, William Noble, Isaac Vander Zer, Joel Wheeler, Stephen Bartholf, and associates. The line of the road began "at or near Bellvale mills, in the town of Warwick, and from thence on the most eligible route to the Orange turnpike, to intersect the same at or near the dwelling-house of Benjamin Bennett, in the town of Monroe."

In 1812 the "Merritt's Island Turnpike Company" was incorporated,—capital $10,000. Incorporators, John Wheeler, William Thompson, Joshua Sayre, George D. Wickham, Michael A. Jones, Robert Ferrier, Moses Wisner, and those who should be associated with them. The line of the road began "on the east side of the Drowned Lands, in the town of Warwick," and ran from thence to Pine Island; thence to Pochuck Creek, near the house of Moses Wisner; thence to Merritt's Island; and thence across the Wallkill to the mainland on the west side of the Drowned Lands, in lot No. 4 in the first division of the Drowned Lands.

April 9, 1813, the "Great Island Turnpike Company" was chartered. Its capital stock was $15,000. Incorporators, Reuben Hopkins, Gideon Jennings, Daniel Millspaugh, Archibald Owen, and Nathaniel Wheeler. The line of the road began "on the road leading from the Goshen court-house to Florida, at or near the place where the south line of the Goshen town-lots cross the same, and ran "from thence across the Little and Great Islands, and from thence to the line of the State of New Jersey, to intersect the same between the thirty-fourth and thirty-eighth milestone."

In 1818 the "White Oak Island Turnpike Company" was chartered,—capital $5000. Its incorporators were Samuel S. Seward, Jesse Jayne, Thomas Sweezy, Samuel Tuthill, John Curtice, James Vail, John W. Vanderolf, Robert Carr, William A. Smith, and Horace Dibble. Its line began "at or near the church in the village of Florida," and ran from thence to the northwest point of Round Hill, and from thence to the Great and Merritt's Islands turnpike, on White Oak Island. The "Gardner's Island Turnpike Company" was chartered the same year,—capital $15,000. Incorporators, William Thompson, John Bradner, Jesse Woods, Roger Howell, and George D. Wickham. The line of the road began "at or near the intersection of the Merritt's Island and Great Island turnpike on Pine Island," and ran from "thence across the Drowned Lands and Pochuck Kill to Gardner's Island, and from thence across the Drowned Lands, by or near the house of Jesse Woods, to the Jersey line."

In 1823 and '24 two additional connections were made with the Orange turnpike. First, the "Goshen and Monroe Turnpike Company," chartered in 1823,—capital $7000. Its incorporators were Roger Parmele, John Wallace, Thomas G. Evans, Lewis H. Roe, Nathaniel Roe, Cornelius Board, and those who should associate with them. The line of the road began "at the court-house in Goshen," and ran thence to Chester; thence to the "Orange turnpike between the first and second mile-stones." The second, "The Monroe and Haverstraw Turnpike Company," was incorporated in 1824, capital not stated. Its incorporators were Roger Parmele, Joseph Blackwell, Henry McFarland, George Kyle, Robert Parkinson, Sampson Marks, Abraham Gurnee, Abraham Goetchius, George Wyant, Matthew Benson, Walter Brewster, Samuel Brewster, Samuel Goetchius, Samuel Smith, John Suffern, Edward D. Noyelles, Lawrence D. Noyelles, John F. Smith, Adam Dater, Jacob Marks, Elias Gurnee, John B. Secor, John Rose, Jacob Odell, Harman Felter, "and their heirs and assigns." The road ran from the Orange turnpike, "near Parmele's slitting-mill," to the "creek landing on Hudson's River, in the town of Haverstraw."

The list of turnpikes is completed with the "Otisville Turnpike Company," which was chartered Feb. 19, 1828. The capital of this company was $5000. Its incorporators were Stacey Beakes, Isaac Otis, Levi Westbrook, and Abner P. Gillet. The line of the road began "at or near the dwelling-house of Isaac Otis, in the town of Calhoun" (Mount Hope), and ran thence "along the centre of the old road to the dwelling of said Isaac Otis, and from thence to Westbrook's basin on the Hudson and Delaware Canal, in the county of Sullivan."

From this enumeration it will be seen that during the first quarter of the present century, and principally within its first decade, the people of the county invested not less than half a million of dollars in the construction of turnpikes. Viewed from the standpoint of the present, the sum was not large; but considered in connection with the condition of the people and the value of money at the time when the expenditure was made, when the population, ranging from thirty thousand to forty thousand, had scarcely emerged from the poverty entailed by the Revolution, and when they were suffering from the embarrassments of the embargo and the war of 1812, it assumes a different aspect, and clearly establishes the extent of the traffic which demanded the outlay and the energy with which it was undertaken and consummated. As already remarked, the results of the system were largely to the advantage of Newburgh, changing, as it did, the commercial centre from New Windsor, and establishing at Newburgh extensive connection with western New York. In 1819 the trade of Newburgh had reached Canandaigua by turnpikes, over which passed stage-coaches conveying passengers, and freight wagons laden with goods. During the summer of that year a company was organized for the construction of a steamer on Cayuga Lake, with a view to extend the route southward to Ithaca. The first meeting of the stockholders of this company was held at Ithaca, December 20th, when David Woodcock, Oliver Phelps, James Pompelly, Joseph Benjamin, and Lewis Tooker were chosen directors, who appointed David Woodcock, president, Charles W. Conner, treasurer, Charles Humphrey, secretary, and Oliver Phelps, agent. The people of Newburgh were asked to contribute the sum of one thousand dollars to the enterprise. Nineteen hundred dollars, however, were immediately subscribed and paid; and in 1820 the first steamer on Cayuga Lake plied in connection with stage lines from Newburgh, "performing the route to Ithaca in two days." In 1834 the line was extended to Geneva and Buffalo, and the entire route from New York via Newburgh to Buffalo was performed in sixty-five hours, "the shortest and most expeditious route from the Hudson River to the western country."*

This western commerce was materially impaired by the construction of the Erie Canal in 1825, while that which was less remote was similarly affected by the Delaware and Hudson Canal in 1828. The latter, extending from Rondout to Port Jervis, and from thence to Honesdale, crossed the track of all the turnpike connections with Sullivan County west of the Shawangunk Mountains, and was fatal to several of them. The statement made by Mr. Quinlan—"the territory that this road would have accommodated would have supported the turnpike had it not been for the construction of the Delaware and Hudson Canal"—has a more general application than to the Mount Hope and Lumberland road. In common with other residents in the southern tier of counties, the people of Orange felt that injustice had been done to them in the construction of the Erie Canal, and were ready to ask the State for aid to counteract the injurious results of that enterprise which they were experiencing. At this juncture McAdam had satisfactorily demonstrated to many that a stone road was superior to all others, and it was urged that the State should build one from Buffalo to the Hudson. The proposition was favorably considered by the Legislature, and commissioners were appointed to survey the different routes. Perhaps the road would have been built could there have been a satisfactory terminus on the Hudson selected, but Catskill, Poughkeepsie, and Newburgh labored to secure it.† The commissioners reported in favor of Catskill, and the remainder of the story is soon told: the bill authorizing the building of the road was defeated in the Legislature in March, 1826. But the seed planted by Gen. Clinton in his grand "Appian Way," and partially brought to fruit in the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike and its western connections, had not been seconded by McAdam with utterly barren results,—it made the construction of the Erie Railroad possible.

But while commercial relations with the west were impaired by the Erie and Delaware Canals, the territory unaffected by those avenues had received increased development through the turnpikes which had been constructed, and poured its abundant harvests upon the Hudson River entrepôts. The trade of Cornwall and New Windsor‡ was large, while that of Newburgh was unprecedented in its previous history. The years 1835, 1836, and 1837 were especially marked by substantial business activity, as well as by that which formed a part of the unsubstantial ventures of the times. Speaking of this period, the Rev. James R. Willson, in an address delivered before the Newburgh Literary Association, remarked, "The average arrivals and departures daily, estimated together, cannot fall much short of three hundred, or eighty-four thousand in one season. The sections of country in the interior, occupied by these travelers, are generally connected with this village by some commercial ligament. Great numbers of these transact much business here. From late estimates of the daily amount of exports from Newburgh, it would seem that in one season they cannot fall much below four and one-half millions of dollars." But this flood-tide of fortune was practically the close of the old era of trade and commerce, an era which now lives only in traditions of turnpike travel, and of long caravans of farmers' wagons—the Jersey wagons, the Pennsylvania wagons, the county wagons, and the Ulster and Sullivan County wagons—laden with produce for market, or returning with merchandise, many of which stopped short at Goshen when the Erie road reached that village in 1841, and gave to it a temporary activity, and which, as a peculiar feature of that era, few persons now living remember as a reality with which they were familiar, but which many do as the source of the wealth which they have inherited.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

It is not our purpose to discuss the question of the origin of the system of internal improvements in the State, or to attach to any one person the honor due to many in their development. They were eminently the outgrowth of what may be termed natural causes.

† David Ruggles, Selah Reeve, Jonathan Fisk, Ward M. Gazlay, and Thomas Phillips, Jr., were appointed a committee to take charge of the interests of Newburgh in the matter, at a public meeting in January, 1826.

Going back to the colonial era, we find the province peculiarly fortunate in its natural system of water-communication. Then, to the north, at the head of boat-navigation, the Hudson was connected by an easy portage with Lakes George and Champlain, and through them with the St. Lawrence, the great river of the Canadas; whilst to the west the Mohawk, the principal affluent of the Hudson, gave easy access, scarcely interrupted by a few short portages, to the basin of the great lakes and to the magnificent river system of the Mississippi. Like many of our old roads, these water-routes had been followed by the Indians in their canoes for ages. Important beyond present appreciation for the purposes of either commerce or of war during the colonial era, their improvement became a matter of earnest thought before the war of the Revolution came on, nor was it lost sight of during that eventful period, for we find Governor Clinton, in 1780, inviting Washington to a survey, and the latter accompanying him to Albany and Saratoga, that he might, from personal inspection, be able to contribute practical suggestions. In 1792 we have the report of a committee appointed by the directors of the "Western Inland Lock-Navigation Company" to examine the Mohawk River from Schenectady to Fort Schuyler, who found that the uninterrupted lock-navigation could be secured by an expenditure of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. In 1800, Governor Morris suggested a direct canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson, through the centre of the State. His plan was to tap the lakes and have a continuous slope therefrom to the highlands bordering the Hudson, and a series of locks thence to the river. The subject was discussed until in 1808, James Geddes was appointed to survey a canal route. His report excited general attention, and secured the ready approval of DeWitt Clinton, who, through his connection with his uncle, Governor George Clinton, and his conversations with his father, James Clinton, was already thoroughly indoctrinated with the object the accomplishment of which was sought. In 1810 commissioners, of whom DeWitt Clinton was the head, were appointed to explore a canal route through the centre of the State. The commissioners reported in 1811, and presented the importance of the improvement so forcibly that they were continued and authorized to borrow and deposit money and take cessions of land. During the war of 1812 the project was held in abeyance, but in 1816 a definite survey was authorized, and on the 4th of July, 1817, the work of construction was begun at Rome. On the 26th of October, 1825, DeWitt Clinton, then Governor, and who for fifteen years had devoted the best efforts of his life to the accomplishment of the work, entered the canal on his packet-boat at Buffalo, and arrived at New York on the 4th of November, his coming heralded by signal cannon and blazing beacon-fires. But great as was the work which had then been accomplished, it was found crude and imperfect, and improvement after improvement has been added to it, until, with its connections, its original cost has been multiplied many times, but can never exceed the great fund of wealth and development which it has given to the State.

No doubt there were many men who regarded the construction of the Erie Canal as a visionary project; and we are not sure that had we been living at that time we might not have been one of the number, and still less are we sure that we might not have regarded the project of Maurice Wurtz—who proposed to tap the coal-fields of Pennsylvania with railroad and canal and place a hundred thousand tons of anthracite coal on the New York market annually, at a time when six thousand tons would glut all the cities on the Atlantic coast—as a monomaniac; yet Maurice Wurtz, with the aid of his brother William, and some people who are now regarded as eminently sensible and far-seeing, accomplished the task whereunto he was called. Directly touching the county of Orange, the Delaware and Hudson Canal was the first of the system of improvements which now intersect and bisect it in almost all directions—the trunk lines of railroads and their connecting branches, which have revolutionized its commercial avenues and placed it in the first rank of wealth and development. After many fruitless surveys to find a practical route to the Hudson, being debarred from Newburgh by the Shawangunk Mountains, the old Indian trail (the Mine road route) was adopted. The company was incorporated April 23, 1823, with a capital of $1,500,000, with the right to use $50,000 in banking until 1844, and the credit of the State was loaned for $800,000 in stock. The canal was begun in July, 1825, and opened for use in October, 1828. Its length from Rondout to Port Jervis is fifty-nine miles; from Port Jervis to the Lakawaxen, twenty-four miles; from Lakawaxen to Honesdale, twenty-six miles; thence by sixteen miles of railroads to the coal-fields. The original cost of the New York section was $1,424,994, and of the Pennsylvania section (under charter from Pennsylvania), $612,123. The first locomotive engine in America was imported from England, and used on the road from Honesdale. The canal runs through the town of Deerpark, from Port Jervis at the south, on the Delaware, to Cuddebackville, and on to the line of the town on the north, and adds $300,000 to its real estate valuation.

With a view to counteract the detrimental effect of the opening of the Delaware Canal, the people of Newburgh, in 1829, united in the organization of a company for the construction of a railroad to connect with the coal-fields of Pennsylvania, and on the 30th of April, 1830, the Legislature passed an act constituting and appointing David Crawford, Christopher Reeve, John P. DeWint, Thomas Powell, Joshua Conger, Charles Borland, William Walsh, John Forsyth, and their associates, "a body corporate and politic by the name of the Hudson and Delaware Railroad Company," for the purpose of constructing a single or double railroad or way from any part of the village of Newburgh, through the county of Orange, to the Delaware River. The capital of the company was fixed at $500,000, with power to increase the same to $1,000,000, if necessary; and David Crawford, Charles Borland, Peter Cuddeback, Thomas Powell, J. P. DeWint, Joseph Kernochan, Peter H. Schenck, and John W. Knevels were appointed commissioners to open subscriptions. This act, however, became void, no effort having been made to build the road "within three years" after the time of its passage.

Meanwhile, the present New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad was struggling into being. As already intimated, this project was the outgrowth of Gen. Clinton's "Appian Way" and McAdam's stone road; but it may be added that the Baltimore experiment of 1829, of cars furnished with masts and sails and propelled by wind, had not a little to do in finally cradling it. Aroused by a pamphlet issued at that time, in which the writer, advocating an "Atlantic and Mississippi Railway," running at least partially on the present line of the Erie, a convention of delegates from all the southern counties of the State, except Orange and Rockland, was held at Owego, on the 20th of December, 1831, at which it was resolved to apply to the Legislature for a charter for a railroad from Lake Erie to the Hudson. We say a railroad, but not in the sense that the term is now understood, for the proposition was to make a road suitable for the use of horses, so that the inhabitants who lived along the route could employ their own cars and motive-power. "Animal power," said the manager, "may be considered the natural power of the country; and on long routes, where great inequalities in the amount of transport and travel will occur, where the commodities to be conveyed, instead of presenting a regular supply, will probably amount to many times as much some months as others, the use of horses may be expected, for a time at least, to be practically cheaper than steam." A road for locomotives, it was agreed, would cost from twelve thousand to fourteen thousand dollars per mile, while one for animals could be made for five thousand or six thousand dollars, and on the latter the company would be at no expense for engines, carriages, etc. To carry out this magnificent plan one million of dollars was all that was asked. Books of subscription were opened July 9, 1833, and the amount subscribed. Unfortunately, however, a large part of the stock was taken by one William G. Buckner, who, on the last day and at the last moment, took all that was not secured by others. A year passed, during which the company did not receive enough from its stockholders and others to make necessary surveys. In 1834 the Legislature was appealed to to grant fifteen thousand dollars to enable Benjamin Wright and his subordinates to examine the route. The amount asked was granted, and the survey made, but it failed to give vitality to the project. In 1835 the Legislature was petitioned to enable the State to become a stockholder.

It was at this point in the history of the road that, on the 30th of November, 1835, a meeting of the citizens of Newburgh was held at the Orange Hotel (pursuant to a call signed by David Ruggles, John Forsyth, Nathaniel DuBois, Charles H. Bellows, Oliver Davis, and David Crawford), of which Gilbert O. Fowler was chosen president, Nathaniel DuBois, vice-president, and John W. Knevels, secretary. The subjects discussed at this meeting were mainly these two, viz.: What course should be pursued in reference to an application to the Legislature for a subscription on the part of the State to the New York and Erie Railroad Company; and, the feasibility of uniting the Hudson and Delaware road with that of the New York and Erie. The meeting

Resolved, That we will unite in the application to the Legislature for a subscription on the part of the State to the stock of the New York and Erie Railroad Company. That we will also join in a petition to the Legislature for the grant of a charter upon liberal terms incorporating a company to construct a railway from this village to the Delaware River, and that we will bear our proportion according to our several means in subscription to the stock.

Resolved, That a committee of five persons be appointed to communicate with the directors of the New York and Erie Railroad Company, and present to them a proposition (as detailed to the meeting) for uniting the efforts of the inhabitants of this vicinity with that company in the successful prosecution of the project for constructing a railroad from Lake Erie to the Hudson River."

On this committee the following persons were placed, viz.: John W. Knevels, Nathaniel DuBois, Oliver Davis, and G. O. Fowler. The following resolution was unanimously concurred in, viz.:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed whose duty it shall be to give the required legal notice in the public newspapers of our intention to apply for an act of incorporation for the construction of a railway from the village of Newburgh to the Delaware River; to prepare and circulate petitions to the Legislature in behalf of this application; to draft the act of incorporation, and report their proceedings to the meeting at the time to which it shall stand adjourned."

The following persons were appointed upon the last-mentioned committee, viz.: John W. Knevels, Abraham M. Smith, John Forsyth, John Thayer, Benjamin H. Mace.

Now began the struggle to secure the eastern terminus of the Erie at Newburgh; and the interests of the Delaware road, as a distinct project, awaited the issue. We cannot now intelligently review, perhaps, the discussions involved in the proposition; nor is it necessary in view of the experiences of the Erie, which soon demonstrated that neither Newburgh nor Piermont was the proper outlet for the road, and that the line over the Oxford grade should never have been adopted. Practically, the discussion assumed this phase, viz.: the route to Newburgh cut off Goshen from the main line; to run through Goshen made the Piermont outlet a necessity. The adoption of the Piermont outlet settled the controversy, and was at that time, perhaps, the wisest course that could have been pursued, as it at least gave the nearest connection with New York City without passing out of the State, and made the present connections through New Jersey more immediately possible. In the course of time, the line through Goshen, the Oxford grade, and the Shawangunk Mountains will share the fate of Piermont.

When it became known that those who were most active in the Erie Company had decided in favor of the Piermont route, the citizens of Newburgh again took up the Delaware project, and on the 21st of April, 1836, the Legislature passed an act "to renew and amend" the original charter. By this act "David Crawford, Christopher Reeve, Oliver Davis, John Forsyth, Thomas Powell, Joshua Conger, David Ruggles, Benjamin Carpenter, and their associates" were constituted a body politic and corporate, by the name of "The Hudson and Delaware Railroad Company," for the purpose of constructing a road "commencing in the north part of the village of Newburgh, and running from thence along the Hudson River in front of said village as far as the trustees of the said village" should determine, and thence to the Delaware River. The capital stock of the company was fixed at $500,000, and Gilbert O. Fowler, Charles Borland, John Forsyth, Thomas Powell, Benjamin H. Mace, John P. DeWint, Abraham M. Smith, James G. Clinton, and John W. Knevels were appointed commissioners to open subscriptions.

On the 15th of June, 1836, the first election for directors under the amended act was held at the Orange Hotel, when Thomas Powell, John Forsyth, David Crawford, Benjamin Carpenter, John P. DeWint, John Ledyard, Christopher Reeve, Gilbert O. Fowler, James G. Clinton, Nathaniel DuBois, Samuel G. Sneden, David W. Bate, and Oliver Davis were chosen. At a subsequent meeting of the directors Thomas Powell was elected president; David W. Bate, vice-president; John Ledyard, treasurer; and James G. Clinton, secretary.

A survey of the route was made soon after by John B. Sargeant, who reported the length of the proposed road as thirty-eight miles, and the cost as ten thousand dollars per mile. Stock to a sufficient amount having been subscribed, steps were taken to grade the section between Washingtonville and the Quassaick Creek. Ground was broken on the 3d of November, 1836, with appropriate ceremonies, and the auspicious event was celebrated by a general illumination of the village. In response to a petition on the part of the citizens interested in the road, the Legislature, in the early part of the session of 1837, passed an act enabling the trustees of the village to purchase at par one hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of the stock. The subscription was made in accordance with the provisions of the act; and on the 10th of January, 1838, the trustees paid their first and last installment of ten thousand dollars.

The financial reverses of 1837 prostrated the enterprise; and although a considerable portion of the section placed under contract in August, 1836, was graded, the work was not continued. However, in 1840, the Erie Company having asked the aid of the State, the whole influence of the citizens of Newburgh was exerted to compel that company, as a condition of aid, to construct a branch road to Newburgh.* The effort was unsuccessful; the Erie Company received a loan of the credit of the State to the amount of three million dollars. The embarrassment of the Erie Company culminated in 1842, and its affairs were placed in the hands of assignees. In 1845, the company having again applied to the Legislature for aid, the citizens of Newburgh again, and this time with success, pressed the proposition for a branch road. Their efforts led to a conference with the Erie Company, which resulted in the submission of bills to the Legislature,—the first releasing the company from the payment of the three million dollars loan, on condition that a bona-fide subscription to that amount should be secured within eighteen months; the second, requiring the company to construct a branch to Newburgh within six years after the passage of the act. To more certainly secure the latter, a written agreement was made, on the 19th of March, between the directors of the Hudson and Delaware Company and the directors of the Erie Company, by which the former conveyed to the latter "all the grants, lands, immunities, franchises, improvements, rights, privileges, maps and charts, and all of the real and personal estate of every kind whatsoever belonging" to that company under and by virtue of its charter, in consideration of the sum of not less than forty thousand dollars; the Erie Company agreeing as a further consideration that on the passage of the bill, then before the Legislature, authorizing the company to construct a Branch Road to Newburgh, and also the bill releasing the company from the payment of the three millions loaned to it by the State, that then, upon the bona-fide subscription of the Hudson and Delaware Company of one hundred thousand dollars to the capital stock of the Erie Company, the latter would construct the branch to Newburgh and issue to the Hudson and Delaware Company stock to the amount of one hundred and forty thousand dollars. On the payment of twenty-five per cent. of the subscription of one hundred thousand dollars, "the same, together with a sum equal to twice that amount," to be furnished by the Erie Company, was to be "actually expended" upon the branch "simultaneously with and as rapidly" as that company should progress

* At a meeting of the citizens of Newburgh, held March 4, 1840,—Moses H. Belknap, president, and Solomon Tuthill, clerk, it was

"Resolved, That if the Legislature shall grant further aid to the New York and Erie Railroad Company by any former or future law, to be passed for that purpose, in such case the expenditure thereof shall be made under the more immediate supervision of the State; and upon the middle and western sections of said road, where the same would connect with works already constructed, such as the Delaware and Hudson, the Chenango and Chemung Canals, and the Ithaca and Owego Railroad, and yield an immediate profit, which cannot be effected by constructing the eastern end of said road in the first place, as is now being done.

"Resolved, That no such further aid be granted, unless it be accompanied by legislative provision for the construction of a branch of said road terminating at Newburgh."

with its main line; and this ratio of payments and expenditures was to continue until three hundred thousand dollars was expended. In case that sum did not complete the branch, then further subscriptions, by the Hudson and Delaware Company, if made, should "be immediately applied to the construction of said branch and the putting of the same in operation." The interests of the roads being thus harmonized, the bills referred to were passed by the Legislature on the 14th of May following. The stock subscription required from the Hudson and Delaware Company under the agreement was soon raised, and fifteen thousand dollars in addition,—in all, one hundred and fifteen thousand dollars. On the fulfillment of this stock subscription by the citizens of Newburgh, it was their prerogative to be represented in the board of the Erie Company by a local director, and Homer Ramsdell was accordingly nominated by the subscribers, and elected as such director in the summer of 1845. The first contracts made by the Erie Company upon its reorganization under the amended act of 1845 were those for constructing the Newburgh branch and that part of the main line between Middletown and Otisville. The work was carried forward under the agreement until in 1847, when, by reason of enormous expenditures upon the main line between Otisville and Binghamton, and when only about one hundred and fifteen thousand dollars (the amount subscribed at Newburgh) had been expended upon the branch, the Erie Company was so pressed for money that a suspension of the work upon the branch was deemed imperative. To prevent this and to bridge over the necessities of the hour, the Newburgh director agreed to negotiate the acceptances of the company for each successive monthly estimate until January, 1849, at which time all were to mature. During this time the further sum of one hundred and thirty thousand dollars was expended upon the branch.

The opening of the main line of the Erie to Binghamton, on the 27th of December, 1848, was attended by a cost far exceeding the estimates, and the finances of the company were correspondingly embarrassed. Added to this were heavy drains for work then being vigorously pushed upon the Susquehanna division, so that the directory, in January, 1849, deemed themselves forced to discontinue the expenditures upon the branch. At this juncture the Newburgh director proposed to raise the sum of one hundred and forty-five thousand dollars upon the acceptances of the company, to mature May, 1851, and to pay the same to the company, provided responsible parties in Newburgh would indorse the acceptances, and also provided the company would execute a mortgage upon the branch as security for the amount. In view of the compulsory clause in the act of 1845, releasing the company from the payment of the three million dollar loan, conditioned upon finishing the road to Dunkirk and also the Newburgh branch, in May, 1851, and as a financial measure, the board of directors accepted the proposition and adopted the following preamble and resolution:

"At a meeting of the directors of the New York and Erie Railroad Company, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted (Jan. 10, 1849):

"Whereas, There has already been expended upon the Newburgh branch, in conformity to agreement, about the sum of two hundred and forty-five thousand dollars, which, together with the sums necessary to complete the present contracts, say twenty thousand dollars, will nearly make up the amount required to be advanced by this company toward the construction of said branch road, as per agreement of 19th of March, 1845; and whereas, the inhabitants of Newburgh, in order to secure the completion of the said road by the first day of September next, propose to advance upon the acceptances of this company one hundred and forty-five thousand dollars for that purpose; and whereas, upon the extension of the main line of our road to Elmira, if not earlier, said branch road will be of great value if completed; therefore

"Resolved, That the superintending engineer upon the Newburgh branch is hereby authorized to draw upon the treasurer of this company in sums not less than five hundred dollars to an amount in the aggregate of one hundred and forty-five thousand dollars, which drafts shall be payable in May, 1851 (the time prescribed by the law of this State for the completion of said branch road), and bear interest at seven per cent. per annum payable half-yearly; and that Homer Ramsdell be authorized to procure the money upon said acceptances and deposit it with the treasurer to be applied toward the purchase of iron rails and completion of said branch road as aforesaid; and that the president is hereby authorized to issue such orders as shall be necessary to carry out the intention of the foregoing preamble and resolution.

"A true copy, NATHANIEL MARSH, Secy."

"In consideration of and in conformity to" this preamble and resolution, the following persons made written agreement, on the 15th of January, 1849, to indorse the acceptances of the Erie Company for the sums set opposite their names:

These acceptances were also all indorsed by Thomas Powell & Co. On the 23d of February following, Messrs. Powell, Ramsdell & Co. and J. Beveridge & Co. purchased two thousand tons of railroad iron, then in the hands of Davis, Brooks & Co., at forty dollars per ton and duties thereon, for which the notes of Powell & Co. were given for fifty-five thousand dollars, and the notes of Beveridge & Co. for twenty-three thousand dollars. In addition to the iron, Homer Ramsdell purchased the depot-grounds,—embracing the river-front between the Whaling Company's dock and the north line of Western Avenue, and also a lot south of the dock of John W. Wells, fronting one hundred and sixty-five feet on Water Street and the river,—paying for the same twenty thousand dollars. The property of John W. Wells, ninety-one feet on the river, with a quit-claim to one-half of Western Avenue, was condemned and taken on the award of commissioners at forty thousand dollars. On settlement in June, it was found that Powell & Co. were at that time, through indorsements, acceptances, and advances, responsible for two hundred and two thousand two hundred and nineteen dollars. The capital thus furnished completed the branch, and on the 9th of January, 1850, its opening was celebrated with appropriate festivities.

The old Delaware and Hudson Company left behind, as memorials of its existence, a partly-graded track and the stock subscription of the village of Newburgh ($10,000), upon the debt for which the interest was annually paid until the village became a city. The details of its history, as well as those of the construction of the branch, now serve as monuments to the memory of those who were their projectors and supporters. The effort of 1837 is now an accomplished fact: the coal-mines of Pennsylvania are in connection with Newburgh by rail; but the advantages of the earlier enterprise passed away, to a very large extent, with its opportunity.

The time may not be distant, however, when more direct connection with the coal-fields than by the main line of the Erie and the Newburgh branch will be effected through the Warwick Valley Railroad and the Wawayanda Railroad and its connections in New Jersey. The Warwick Valley Railroad was the outgrowth of a proposition, made soon after the completion of the Newburgh branch, to extend its line to the Delaware River, for which a survey and maps were made and there rested. In 1859, Mr. Grinnell Burt and other residents of Warwick practically revived the project by organizing the "Warwick Valley Railroad Company," under the following board of directors: Grinnell Burt, John Rutherford, Thomas B. DeKay, Ezra Sanford, James B. Wheeler, Milton McEwen, James Burt, John H. Brown, John L. Wel-ling, William Herrick, James P. Houston, and Nathan R. Wheeler. On organization, the directors elected Grinnell Burt, president; Milton McEwen, vice-president; James B. Wheeler, treasurer; William Herrick, secretary. The capital stock was $100,000, of which Newburgh furnished $10,500. When the road was completed, the bonded and floating debt amounted to a little over one hundred thousand dollars, forty per cent. of which has since been paid out of the earnings of the road, and a surplus of an equal amount has been expended to extend the road to the New Jersey State line. In consideration of these payments and to create a surplus fund, a stock dividend of one hundred per cent. was declared to the stockholders in 1867. Regular annual dividends of seven per cent. have been paid from the earnings of the road, showing that, aside from the advantages which it has conferred upon the district which it traverses, it has been a pecuniary success. The company was consolidated, in the fall of 1879, with the Wawayanda Railroad of New Jersey, by which its line is extended to McAfee, N. J., on the Sussex Railroad.

The Newburgh and New York Railroad Company was organized in the city of New York, Dec. 20, 1864, —Samuel Marsh, Daniel Drew, John Arnot, Isaac N. Phelps, Robert H. Burdell, Dudley S. Gregory, Ambrose S. Murray, J. C. Bancroft Davis, H. L. Pierson, Alexander S. Diven, Thomas W. Gale, John J. Monnell, Thomas H. Bate, directors; J. C. Bancroft Davis, president; Horatio N. Otis, secretary. The capital stock was fixed at $500,000, of which over one thousand dollars per mile was immediately subscribed and paid up. The project was based on a proposition for a west shore road from New York to Albany, which, by its construction, would only lack sixty miles of completion. Aside from the directors named, who subscribed ten shares (one hundred dollars) each, George Clarke and Enoch Carter, of Newburgh, subscribed one share each; F. A. DeWint, of Fishkill, one; and John Hilton, H. N. Otis, Charles Minot, L. E. Tillotson, J. W. Guppy, William R. Barr, N. Finch, E. W. Brown, and J. D. White, of New York, each one. The road being less than fifteen miles in length, the number of directors was reduced to seven, in conformity with the general railroad law, in December, 1867, when John S. Eldridge, Jay Gould, John C. B. Davis, Daniel Drew, A. S. Diven, Henry Thompson, and Homer Ramsdell were elected. On the 1st of August, 1868, Mr. Ramsdell was elected president. He resigned July 7, 1869, and James Fisk, Jr., was elected. The line was surveyed by John W. Houston, engineer; the contract for construction was awarded to Peter Ward and William Leary, of Newburgh, Aug. 1, 1868, and the work completed Sept. 1, 1869. The road was subsequently leased to the Erie Company, that company supplying the capital required for its construction.

The understood willingness of the company to second any effort to extend the connections of the road gave rise to what have been called "the Newburgh paper railroads," the first of which, the Newburgh and Wallkill Valley Railroad, took the form of a company to construct a road from Newburgh to Walden, connecting at Vail's Gate with the Erie branch and with the Newburgh and New York road. The company was organized in the winter of 1867-68 by the election of directors and officers. In May following (May 9th) the Legislature passed an act making it lawful "for the Common Council of the city of Newburgh to borrow, on the faith and credit of said city, the sum of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars," to aid in the construction of the road, and to issue the bonds of the city therefor,—on condition that the consent should first be obtained, in writing of a majority of the tax-payers of the city, who should also own or represent more than one-half of the taxable real and personal property of the city. At the time the project was undertaken, the disposition of the Newburgh and New York Company to second the enterprise was not generally understood as a tangible agreement, and this fact, coupled with an expressed opposition to the Vail's Gate route on the part of several leading citizens, led to a failure in obtaining the consent required to bond the city, and necessarily to a suspension of the further prosecution of the undertaking.

The second of the series, the Newburgh and Midland Railroad, advanced several steps beyond the point reached by the Newburgh and Wallkill Valley road. The proposition was to construct a road from the vicinity of West Newburgh to Walden and thence to Fair Oaks, there to connect with the New York and Oswego Midland, and took definite form in the organization of the "Newburgh and Midland Railway Company,"—George Clark, president; Odell S. Hathaway, vice-president; Alfred Post, treasurer; John Dales, secretary; George Clark, Abram S. Cassey, A. T. Rand, Bradbury C. Bartlett, Odell S. Hathaway, Seth M. Capron, David Moore, James W. Taylor, Alfred Post, William R. Brown, William J. Roe, Jr., Lewis M. Smith, William O. Mailler, directors. To build this road effort was made to bond the city of Newburgh for five hundred thousand dollars, under the general act authorizing municipal corporations to aid in the construction of railroads. What was presumed to be the consent of a majority of the tax-payers, and also of a majority of the taxable property of the city, was obtained. On examination of the list before Hon. Thomas George, county judge, it was held by him that while the petition for consent to bond was signed by a majority of the tax-payers, the signatures did not represent a majority of the taxable property of the city,—$555,099 of the amount being held by executors, administrators, etc., whose right to thus represent the trusts which they held was denied. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, which, at general term, January, 1872, affirmed the decision of Judge George,—Justices Tappen and Gilbert concurring, Justice Barnard dissenting. This decision ended the undertaking.

After two or three years spent in discussions and surveys the New York and Oswego Midland Railroad Company was formally organized at a convention of delegates from Oswego, Onondaga, Madison, Cortland, Chenango, Delaware, Sullivan, Orange, Otsego, and Ulster Counties, and New York City, held at Delhi, Oct. 4, 1865. At this convention D. C. Littlejohn, of Oswego, reported articles of association organizing the company with a capital of $10,000,000. DeWitt C. Littlejohn, John Crouse, Elisha C. Litchfield, Joseph W. Merchant, Edward I. Hayes, John A. Randall, A. C. Edgerton, Samuel Gordon, Henry A. Low, Edward Palen, Homer Ramsdell, Nathan Randall, and G. P. Kenyon were named as directors. The location of the route, whether by way of Pine Hill to Rondout or Newburgh, or through Sullivan County to Middletown and thence through New Jersey to New York, was subsequently determined in favor of the Middletown and Sullivan line, and, under authority of an act of the Legislature, the towns of Wallkill and Minisink, in common with other towns along the route, issued town bonds in aid of construction,—Minisink seventy-five thousand dollars, and Wallkill three hundred thousand dollars. Sections of the road in Orange were put under contract,—Middletown to Centreville, Sept. 28, 1868; Ellenville Branch, Sept. 28, 1868; Centreville to Westfield Flats, Feb. 3, 1869. On the 9th of July, 1873, near Westfield Flats, the last rail was laid, and the last spike driven by the late E. P. Wheeler, of Middletown, a former vice-president of the company. After a stormy existence of six years the road was sold under foreclosure, Nov. 9, 1879, and its title changed to New York, Ontario and Western Railroad.

The construction of the Midland was the occasion of the building of the Middletown and Crawford and the Middletown, Unionville and Water Gap roads, and at least indirectly of the Monticello and Port Jervis branch of the Erie. The latter project originated, we believe, in Monticello, where it was feared that the Midland would result in disaster to that village unless a road was opened to Port Jervis connecting with the Erie. The project, however, was really much older than the Midland, having had its origin in connection with the Erie Company's efforts to secure a State loan in 1835-36, the loan advocates then promising to construct a branch to Monticello. The company was organized in 1868, and the road opened in 1871. The town of Deepark issued two hundred thousand dollars in bonds to aid the construction. The road was sold, and reorganized as the Port Jervis and Monticello in 1875.

The Montgomery and Erie was the first link in the Wallkill Valley line. It was opened from Montgomery to Goshen in 1867, and constructed by stock subscriptions and bonds of the first election district of Montgomery for fifty-one thousand dollars. The line was continued to Walden and Ulster County as a part of the Wallkill Valley Road, and fifty-one thousand dollars in bonds were issued by the second election district in its aid. It had its inception in a desire on the part of the leading men of Montgomery to secure railroad connection, and after having sought in vain for that assistance from the capitalists of Newburgh which would have given to the line a different direction. This remark will also apply to the Middletown and Crawford road,* for the construction of which the bonds of the town of Crawford were issued for eighty thousand dollars. More detailed information in regard to these and other roads has been solicited without answer. The following abridged statement of the railroads in the county is from "Poor's Manual" for 1880:

New York, Lake Erie and Western.—Jersey City to Dunkirk, 460.03 miles; branches, 100.80 miles; total, 560.83 miles. Its branches leased or owned in Orange County are the Newburgh and New York, 12.59 miles; Newburgh Branch, 18.73 miles; Montgomery and Erie, 10.22 miles; Goshen and Deckertown, 11.65 miles. Connecting roads, Warwick Valley at Gray Court, Wallkill Valley at Goshen, and Port Jervis and Monticello at Port Jervis. Connection is also made with the Stirling Mountain and Southfield Branch in Monroe, and at Middletown with the Middletown and Crawford, Middletown and Unionville, and New York, Ontario and Western.

The company was chartered April 24, 1832. Construction was commenced in 1836, and the same year the credit of the State was granted to the extent of $3,000,000. In 1841 (September) the first section, from Piermont to Goshen, was opened, the connection between Piermont and New York being by steamers and freight barges. The company becoming embarrassed, the undertaking was placed in the hands of assignees, under whose management the road was opened to Middletown, Jan. 3, 1843. The cost to Feb. 1, 1844, had been $1,736,949, of which $2,593,514 had been derived from the State loan. In 1845 the State released the property of its mortgage, provided the company should complete the road to Lake Erie in six years, and the old stockholders surrendered one-half of their stock. Construction was resumed, and the road opened to Port Jervis, Jan. 6, 1848; to Binghamton, Dec. 28, 1848; to Union, Oct. 10, 1849; to Hornellsville, Sept. 3, 1850; and to Dunkirk, April 22, 1851. By act of Legislature the company was also required to construct a branch line to Newburgh, which was opened in 1850. The company was required to run its original line within the limits of the State, and hence its first outlet on the Hudson at Piermont. This part of the line is now operated as a branch, while by lease of the Union Railroad, connecting the main line with the Paterson and Ramapo and the Paterson and Hudson Railroads (Sept. 10, 1852). Jersey City was made the main terminus. In addition to the assignment of 1843, the property went to the hands of a receiver in 1859, and again in 1875. By the last it was sold under foreclosure, and its name changed from New York and Erie to its present title.

Newburgh and New York.—Vail's Gate Junction to Greenwood Junction, 12.59 miles. Organized in 1863, and opened in 1866. Leased to Erie Railroad Company. Capital, $500,000; funded debt, $250,000. Cost of road, $250,000. Hugh J. Jewett, president.

Warwick Valley.—Warwick to Gray Court, 1.16 miles. Chartered March 8, 1860, and road opened April 1, 1862. Earnings, year ending Sept. 30, 1879, —passengers, $5540.54; freight, $28,326.31; other, $3141.27; total, $37,008.12. Operating expenses, $20,967.52. Capital stock, $225,000; funded debt, $60,000. Consolidated in fall of 1879 with the Wawayanda Railroad Company of New Jersey, the new company retaining the same name. Under this organization, the new line extends from Gray Court to McAfee, N. J., on the Sussex Railroad, 22 miles, of which 14.5 is in Orange County, and 7.5 in New Jersey, which was completed in April, 1880. Combined capital stock, $340,000; bonded debt, $210,000. A branch from Warwick to the iron-mines will also be built. Directors, December, 1879, Grinnell Burt, James Burt, John L. Welling, Richard Miner, C. H. Demarest, S. C. Welling, and Ezra Sanford, Warwick; J. H. Brown, Wawayanda; James C. Houston, Bellvale; H. B. DeKay, Vernon, N. J.; W. C. Sheldon and D. B. Halstead, New York City; Homer Ramsdell, Newburgh. Grinnell Burt, president and superintendent; James Burt, vice-president; Norman Burt, treasurer; C. H. Demarest, secretary.

Montgomery and Erie.—Montgomery to Goshen, 10.22 miles. Chartered Jan. 2, 1866; opened in 1867. Leased to and operated by New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company. Capital stock, $150,000; bonds, $170,500. Cost of road, $288,930.83. J. M. Wilkin, president; C. J. Everett, treasurer, Goshen; W. J. Mead, secretary, Montgomery.

Goshen and Deckertown.—Goshen to Pine Island, 11.65 miles. Organized Feb. 22, 1867; opened April 10, 1869; leased to Erie Railroad Company for fifty years. Capital stock, $105,800; bonds, $246,500—total, $352,500. Construction, $291,700.75. James K. Houston, president, Florida, N. Y.; George W. Murray, secretary and treasurer, Goshen.

Wallkill Valley.—Montgomery to Kingston, 33.46 miles. Organized April 26, 1866, and opened in 1872. Operated by Erie Railroad Company to June 6, 1877, when it was sold under foreclosure, and reorganized July 2, 1877. Cost of road, $970,691.96; sold for $128,000; additional construction, $170,798.50—total, $298,798.59. Stock and bonds issued on reorganization, $660,000; sundry assets, $11,893.37—total, $970,691.96. Thomas Cornell, president, Rondout.

Stirling Mountain.—Stirling Junction to Lakeville, 7.6 miles. Organized May 18, 1864; opened Nov. 1, 1865. Capital stock, $80,000; funded debt, $350,000. Cost of road and equipments, $500,857.02. A. W. Humphreys, president, New York City; George C. Clark, treasurer; J. C. Missimer, Stirling Junction, superintendent.

Southfield Branch.—Southfield to Southfield Furnace, 1.5 miles. Built, owned, and officered by same parties as the Stirling Mountain Railroad. Connects with the Erie.

Port Jervis and Monticello.—Port Jervis to Monticello, 23.75 miles. Organized as Monticello and Port Jervis Railroad Company Sept. 3, 1868, and under existing title July 16, 1875. Road opened Jan. 23, 1871. Capital stock issued on reorganization, $724,276.93. Cost of road and equipments, $1,124,080.47. Frederick J. DePeyster, president, New York City; Henry Day, vice-president; Gordon Morrie, treasurer; J. W. Hayward, secretary, all of New York City. M. V. Heller, manager, Port Jervis. Earnings, year ending Sept. 30, 1879—passengers, $9440.24; freight, etc., $16,366.60.

New York, Ontario and Western.—Oswego to Middletown, 344 miles. Organized as New York and Oswego Midland Railroad, January, 1866. The New Jersey Midland and Middletown and Unionville roads were originally leased to complete the line to New York. The road was sold under foreclosure Nov. 9, 1879, and reorganized under present name. The Crawford and Middletown and Middletown and Unionville connections are maintained, as well as that with the New Jersey Midland. A branch of the road from Middletown to Ellenville is also in operation.

Middletown, Unionville and Water Gap.—Middletown, N. Y., to Unionville, N. J., State line, 13.30 miles. Organized May 25, 1866, and road opened June 10, 1868. Leased and operated by New Jersey Midland Railroad Company.† Capital stock, $123,850, and funded debt, $400,000; total stock and bonds, $523,850; cost of road and appurtenances, $350,476.47. Grinnell Burt, Warwick, president; W. H. Clark, Westtown, treasurer; Joseph N. Pronk, Middletown, secretary.

Middletown and Crawford.—Crawford Junction to Pine Bush, 10.22 miles. Chartered Aug. 3, 1868, and road finished Dec. 14, 1871. Leased to New York and Oswego Midland, and subsequently to New Jersey Midland, until March 18, 1875, but now operated on its own account. Capital stock paid in, $122,300; funded debt, $79,300; bills payable, $787.68; total, $202,387.68. Cost of road, etc., $202,387.68; earnings, 1879, passengers, $3694.03; freight, $17,162.94; mail, express, etc., $889.71; total, $21,546.68. Directors, Aug. 12, 1879, E. M. Madden, S. S. Conklin, H. R. Wilcox, and Albert Bull, Middletown; Harrison Bull, Circleville; Samuel Roberson and Horace Bull, Bullville; Daniel Thompson, R. M. Thompson, R. M. Crosby, and Alexander Thompson, Thompson Ridge; I. J. Whitten, H. N. Van Keuren, and J. E. Jansen, Pine Bush. Daniel

* In the final determination of the projection of this road the possibility of ultimately becoming a part of the line, via Poughkeepsie and the Poughkeepsie bridge, from the coal-fields to the Eastern States, was perhaps an important consideration, but had the Newburgh and Wallkill Valley or the Newburgh and Midland been constructed the Crawford connection would have been made with it rather than at Middletown.

Thompson, president and superintendent; E. M. Madden, vice-president and general manager; G. A. Thompson, secretary; Isaac P. Madden, treasurer.

PLANK-ROADS.

The New York and Ellenville Plank-road Company was organized March 24, 1850. The capital stock was $100,000, but only $79,770 was paid in. By special act of the Legislature $44,000 preferred stock was issued, and the whole capital fixed at $124,000. The road was completed to Ellenville Dec. 22, 1851. Charter extended to 1890.

The Newburgh and Shawangunk Plank-road Company was organized in March, 1850, and the road completed in December, 1851. The capital stock paid in was $30,000.

The Middletown and Bloomingburgh Plank-road was constructed in 1853. Capital stock, $30,000.

The Middletown and Unionville Plank-road was constructed in 1853. Capital stock, $30,000.

BANKING.

The Bank of Newburgh—the first bank in this county—was incorporated by act of the Legislature, passed March 22, 1811, on the petition of Jacob Powell, John McAulay, Chaney Belknap, and Jonathan Fisk. The capital named was $120,000, in shares of $50 each, and the State reserved the right to subscribe to the stock any amount not exceeding one thousand shares. The Branch Bank of Newburgh, at Ithaca, was organized 1820, and continued until 1830.

The Bank of Orange County, at Goshen, was incorporated April 6, 1813, on petition of Reuben Hopkins, George D. Wickham, and others. James W. Wilkin, George D. Wickham, David M. Westcott, John G. Hurtin, James Wheeler, John Barber, and James Finch, Jr., commissioners to receive stock subscriptions. Capital $49,000, in shares of $50.

The Highland Bank of Newburgh was incorporated April 26, 1834. Capital $200,000.

Under the general banking law of the State, passed April 18, 1838, the Powell Bank of Newburgh (1838), the Middletown Bank (1839), the Wallkill Bank of Middletown (1857), the Quassaick Bank of Newburgh (1851), the Bank of Port Jervis, the Bank of Chester, and the Goshen Bank were organized. All the banks of the county, by conversion or reorganization, are now under the national banking law, in the following order:

	Capital.
First National Bank of Port Jervis, No. 94.....	$100,000
First National Bank of Warwick, No. 314.....	100,000

AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL STATISTICS.

In population the county ranks the eleventh in the State. In the value of its farms it is the ninth; in farm buildings it is third; in average yield of hay it is second; in buckwheat, third; in corn, second; in winter wheat, third; in potatoes, third; in milch cows it is first, and first in average yield per cow; in wool it is fourth; and it has twenty-three butter and cheese factories, which, in 1874, converted 8,688,498 pounds of milk into 222,548 pounds of butter and 751,515 pounds of skimmed-milk cheese,—if the latter fact may be worthy of special notice. In its product of old-fashioned "Orange County butter," made in families, it has fallen from 3,285,587 pounds in 1865 to 1,225,598 pounds in 1874, and in another decade that item may disappear entirely from the enumerator's list, thanks to the railroads, which have brought in the increasing traffic in milk. Value of dwellings, $32,200,519; of farms, $31,130,188; of farm buildings other than dwellings, $4,631,345; of farm stock, tools, etc., $4,730,929; total, $72,693,981. Its banking capital is $2,575,000; valuation of railroad property other than capital, $1,792,700; capital in manufacturing and mechanical industries, $5,413,620, making a total of $82,475,301, although the board of supervisors say that the whole value of real and personal estate is only $38,531,332. The following tables are from the State census of 1875:

The gross sales of farm products in 1874 were $3,541,488.

The census is, unfortunately, almost entirely silent in regard to the mechanical industries of the State, as well as in regard to mercantile pursuits and the capital invested therein, and many other branches of inquiry falling properly within its line. Whether the apology offered by its superintendent for this omission is sufficient is not a matter for discussion here. The United States census for 1870 is much more complete, but in its preparation many details were omitted, while in others classification by counties was evidently rendered impracticable from the magnitude of the labor involved. From its "selected statistics" of the mechanical industries of the county at the time it was taken (1870) the following table is copied :

The growth of the manufacturing interest of the county will more clearly appear from the following statement in Williams' "New York Register" for 1834:

"ORANGE: Franklin Company. This factory is situated in Walden, on the Wallkill River, near the falls, for the manufacture of flannels, and is the most extensive in the State (1841); capital, $100,000, which is all invested. The establishment consumes 65,000 to 70,000 pounds of wool per annum, and manufactures about 240,000 yards of white and colored flannels.

"Wallkill Company, at Walden. This factory consumes about 120,000 pounds of cotton, and makes about 360,000 yards of sheeting per annum.

"Orange Company, also at Walden. They manufacture about 30,000 yards of low-priced broadcloths per annum.

"A woolen manufactory at Warwick.

"Parmer & Co.'s iron-works, for the manufacture of nails, etc.; an extensive establishment.

"A number of works for making iron from ore, at Monroe.

"Craig's paper manufactory, and Oakley's paper manufactory at Blooming-Grove.

"Townsend's cotton manufactory, and Townsend's paper manufactory, at Cornwall.

"Walsh's paper manufactory, and Rogers' powder factory, at Newburgh.

"Two woolen manufactories at Wallkill, one of which is owned by Messrs. Phillips.

"The village of Walden is situated at the falls of the Wallkill, eleven miles west of Newburgh, and is surrounded by romantic scenery. Here is extensive water-power for manufactories; a part of the sites only are occupied. A company was incorporated by the Legislature in 1832, called the Walden Company, with a capital of $500,000, for the purpose of purchasing, holding, and improving the water-power and mill-sites of the village, and for manufacturing purposes."

CHAPTER X.

CHURCHES—RELIGIOUS AND BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

THE early settlers of the district now embraced in the county were mainly Christians, and brought with them their Bibles, and in some instances their religious and secular teachers. In other cases itinerant ministers passed through the forest-paths in visitation of the scattered settlers, who were led, as their numbers increased, to form societies, composed perhaps of those who held different denominational views, and who subsequently separated into societies in accord with their faiths; but in one way or the other, wherever population centred, the foundations of moral influence through religious worship were laid, and in no county has this influence been more fully sustained, the census of 1865 returning one hundred and fifteen churches, with a seating capacity of forty-seven thousand five hundred and eighty-four, to a population of seventy thousand, a ratio higher than that of the city of New York. In the order of their introduction, the first denomination in the field was the German Lutheran; the second, the Presbyterian; the third, the High Dutch; and the fourth, the Church of England. Numerically, there were ten churches in the district prior to 1750, viz.: two Lutheran, three Presbyterian, two High Dutch, and three Episcopal or Church of England. In 1764 the Baptist Church came in through settlers from New England, but with this exception the denominations stated were without rivals. Receiving strong and influential accessions from Scotland and Ireland, the Presbyterian Churches became the most numerous at the outbreak of the Revolution, and gave to that movement a support which has never been challenged. Reserving more especially to the towns in which they were located detailed histories of present church organizations, we notice the earlier steps in the introduction of the leading denominations.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

Lutheranism was brought to Newburgh by the Palatine immigrants of 1709, who were granted, in addition to farm-lots, a glebe of five hundred acres for "the sole and only proper use, benefit, and behoof of a Lutheran minister to serve and have the care of the inhabitants and their successors forever." Joshua Kockerthal, who accompanied the nine families of immigrants as their minister, did not locate permanently with them, but removed to Columbia County. Justus Falconier, minister of the Lutheran congregation of New York, served the people by an annual visit, and, it is written, administered the rite of baptism "in the house of one of the trustees, the 19th April, 1710." This is the first baptism of record in the county. Falconier died in 1723, and in 1725 William Christopher Berkenmeyer became his successor in visiting the settlement, it being agreed, in 1730, that he should receive as compensation "thirty shepels of wheat." His successor was Michael Christian Knoll, who served similar congregations at Hackensack and Wappinger's Creek until 1749, at which time it is stated that "there lived" as tenants upon the glebe and thereabout, on both sides of the river, "more than thirty families" of that "Protestant Confession." Their house of worship was erected between the years 1726 and 1731, and was adorned by a bell which had been given to them by the government, but which, in the early years of their parish history, they had loaned to the Lutheran Church in New York. In the course of the forty years which had passed since their settlement many changes had taken place among them, and in 1749 they were largely outnumbered by those who had been added to the settlement, and who were termed "Dutch and English new inhabitants of other Confessions." Availing themselves of the provisions of the charter of the glebe providing for an annual election of trustees, the latter class, at the election in 1747, elected those who were not Lutherans, and closed the doors of the church to a minister of that denomination except by consent. The last recorded services were held July 3 and Oct. 2, 1748. The record closes: "This year, 1749, our minister has not been there on the shore, and the church being locked up." The Lutherans appealed to the Governor and Council to restore to them the franchise, and the new trustees made petition to vacate the charter. The latter were successful, and in 1751 a new charter was issued confirming the income of the glebe to the support of a "minister of the Church of England as by law established, and of a schoolmaster to teach and instruct the children of the inhabitants" of the parish, the name of which was then changed from the "Palatine Parish of Quassaick" to the "Parish of Newburgh."

The second Lutheran Church was in the present town of Montgomery. Among the patented lands in the old precinct of Walkill was one to Francis Harrison, Oliver Schuyler, and Allen Jarrat (known as the Harrison Patent), issued July 7, 1720. Soon after its issue it was divided in farm-lots and an effort made to obtain settlers. What were known as Palatines supplied the materials. These immigrants were of three classes: first, those who found their way to England in 1708 and were sent to Quassaick; second, those who had formed part of the "Swiss contingent" in the allied army under the Prince of Orange, ten thousand of whom were sent to America by England and mainly located in Columbia and Ulster Counties; and, third, those who were induced by the representations of emigrant agents to accept of homes in the New World. From one of the two last classes a colony was obtained for the Harrison Patent, for whose encouragement a village was laid out under the name of Germantown and a log church erected, which was long known as the "Harrison Meeting-House." The first colony was located in or about 1722, and was composed of Hans Newkirk, Hendrick Newkirk, Mattias Slimmer, Peter Kysler, — Krans, — Brandos, to each of whom a deed for a farm tract was given. The church building, it is said, was blown down after the war of the Revolution, and the Lutheran element in the settlement and adjoining not being sufficiently numerous to erect another, the congregation became absorbed in other denominations. The ancient graveyard is the only remaining witness of the site, and in it but a single monumental inscription: "Born 1686, died 1759. A. M. M." The records of the church, if any there ever were, perished with its early members, some of whom are still represented by descendants residing in the town in which the ancient church was located.

As being among the earliest pioneers in civilization, and certainly the earliest in introducing the ordinances of religion, the Palatines, or Lutherans, of Quassaick and Germantown deserve recognition in the annals of the county.

There are now two German Lutheran Churches in the county, viz.:

St. Peter's, Port Jervis.....	Rev. B. Kuhn.
St. Paul's, Newburgh.....	Rev. W. R. Buehler.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

From the deeds on record the fact is clearly established that the Presbyterian Church at Goshen was the first of that denomination in the present county.

By the terms of the agreement under which the township of Goshen was founded, the proprietors of the Wawayanda Patent agreed to give a farm-lot of two hundred acres to such minister as the purchasers of the township lots should elect, while the purchasers were taxed ten acres on every hundred held by them for highways and for a parsonage, a burying-ground, and other public uses. The latter stipulation was complied with on the 17th of July, 1721, and deeds for three parcels given (one parcel containing seventy acres, one sixty-one acres, and one nine acres) to John Yelverton, in trust, who certified that a minister, the Rev. John Bradner, had been settled, that a parsonage-house was then being erected, and that it was intended to build a meeting-house. The deed from the proprietors was executed April 17, 1721, to Bradner and his heirs, as a consideration "over and above the salary and perquisites" which should be given to him, he being recognized as "the first minister of the precinct of Goshen." Bradner died in 1732. He was succeeded by Rev. Silas Leonard, who served until his death in 1754. Rev. Abner Brush served from 1758 to 1766, when the Rev. Nathan Kerr was installed. He was not the "successor" of Mr. Bradner, as has been erroneously stated, although he may have been in the esteem of the people, in whose charge he remained until his death, in 1804.* The first church edifice stood on the site now occupied by the court-house, facing the Westcott house, which was the original parsonage. The first rude stone erected in the graveyard had the inscription, "J. Finch, First Grave, 1716," showing that interments had been made prior to the formal deeds, the lot having been one of the three reserved in the survey.

The second Presbyterian Church was that known as Goodwill, in the town of Montgomery. The precise date of its organization cannot be fixed, the earliest record evidence in relation to it being under date of Sept. 20, 1729, at which time John McNeal presented an application to the Synod of Philadelphia for supplies of preaching. The traditional evidence in regard to it is that it was originally composed of "about forty families that had emigrated from different parts of Ireland, but principally from the county of Londonderry," and who, in their new home, were called "the people of Wallkill." Its first church edifice was erected in 1735, and its first pastor, the Rev. Joseph Houston, was settled in 1735. The original meeting-house gave place to a new one in 1765, and the latter, after sheltering the congregation for over one hundred years, was converted into the present edifice in 1875. During its existence not less than five congregations have sprung from its loins,—the Neelytown Church, Hamptonburgh Church, Hopewell Church, Graham's Church, Berea Church, and Montgomery Village Church, and several other societies have been recruited from its ranks.

The third Presbyterian Church was the Bethlehem, of Cornwall, designated in some early church records by the name of Highlands, from the precinct which it immediately adjoined, and in which a large percentage of its active members resided. The date of its organization is not certain, but it was probably some time about 1730,† in which year its three first elders, Thomas Smith, Sr., Charles Clinton, and James Given, located in the district. Its first pastor was the Rev. Mr. Chalker, in 1734, who appears to have accepted the charge under an agreement by which he was also to serve Goodwill Church "as pastor of both congregations," but which agreement Goodwill subsequently declined to execute. Its first church edifice was probably erected in 1731; the deed for the land on which it was situated was given by Dr. John Nicoll in 1739, at which time Thomas Smith, Sr., Charles Clinton, and John Given were its elders. During the early years of its existence the church had a wide-spread congregation, embracing Cornwall, Blooming-Grove, New Windsor, and Newburgh. The First Presbyterian Church of Newburgh and the First Presbyterian Church of New Windsor were planted under its care.

There are now thirty-three Presbyterian Churches in the county, viz.:

* Mr. Kerr has been preserved in several historical aspects, and especially by Mr. Headley in his "Clergy of the Revolution." The following anecdote from Rivington's New York Gazette, June 21, 1780, shows that he could be facetious as well as patriotic:

"Nathan Kerr, the pastor of Goshen, in New York, in a sermon delivered the last shearing-time to his flock, previous to the sending his deacons among them to collect the fleece, used many curious and pathetic arguments to induce them to pay in their several subscriptions with a proper allowance for the depreciation of the paper currency. He complained much of the injustice of a contrary conduct, and charged the neglect of the ministers in this respect upon them, as one of those crying sins which had called down so many heavy judgments on their heads. That these might be removed, he strongly recommended to them to repent particularly of the heinous sin of defrauding the ministers. Then, with uplifted eyes and hands, and plaintive voice, addressed himself to the Almighty in nearly the following words: 'O God! our corn is blasted! our fruit is all cut off! our flax is caught under the snow, so that we shall soon have neither shift nor shirt! And what, oh, God! dost thou intend to do with thy people next?'"

† The date is not certain, some authorities holding that the organization was in 1726. In the records of the church, under date of 1827, it is written: "According to the best information, it (the church edifice) must have been erected about the year 1731," which would imply a previous organization of the society, at least informally. Thomas Smith, Sr., and Charles Clinton, who appear in the deed of 1739 as elders of the society, were not in the district until 1730.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

In "a summary account of the state of the church," made by William Vesey, rector of Trinity, in 1704, it is written: "In Orange County there are about sixty families of several nations, who have no minister nor are able to raise a salary for one,"—the reference being to the county as originally constituted. In the annals of the London "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts" it is written (1728): "The Society have received many fresh applications from congregations of people in the Plantations to have missionaries sent to them; particularly from the inhabitants of New Windsor, in Ulster County;" and during the following year (1729), that "the Society have received a letter from the Rev. Mr. Vesey, at New York, inclosing one from Francis Harrison, Esq., one of his majesty's council of that Province, wherein he acquaints that, pursuant to the decree of the Society, he had inquired into the number, condition, and circumstances of the inhabitants of New Windsor and parts adjacent, and is informed this district is twenty miles from north to south and sixteen from east to west, and contains about four hundred inhabitants; that the chief of them live in good credit and reputation; but that there is no clergyman to officiate among this large body of people within eighty miles' distance." In response to this petition the society sent out the Rev. Richard Charlton, who entered upon his duties in 1731. He was soon after succeeded by the Rev. W. Kilpatrick, who served until 1734, from which time until 1744-45, when the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins was appointed, the parish was vacant. The latter established three stations in the parish,—one at New Windsor; one on the Otterkill, known as St. David's,* and one on the Wallkill, known as St. Andrew's. The New Windsor station was changed to Newburgh in 1747, where, soon after, the glebe which had been set apart for the support of a Lutheran minister passed into its possession, and where it became known (1751) as the Newburgh mission, and in 1770, by letters of incorporation, as St. George's. During the war of the Revolution it practically ceased to exist, but was revived in 1815, under the Rev. John Brown, who, during that year, administered "the Holy Communion for the first time in the parish since the Revolutionary war, to the small number of three." The mission station at St. David's was also incorporated in 1770, and erected, in 1774,† a church edifice, but never completed it. The congregation was almost entirely dispersed during the

4 It is inferred that a church edifice of some description was erected prior to the date here given, and that the building of 1774 was a second structure. When the Rev. John Sayre came into the field as the successor of Mr. Watkins, he found this old church, as well as the one in occupation at Newburgh and that at St. Andrew's. None of them seemed to conform to his standard, and his first efforts after securing for each division of the parish a royal charter, under the titles of St. David's, St. George's, and St. Andrew's, was to build a parish church at New Windsor, where there had never been one, which should be what he called the "capitol" of the parish. As has been stated above, the parish had been known as the "Parish of New Windsor" from its founding until 1752, when, under the new charter of the Glebe, it was changed to the "Parish of Newburgh." Mr. Sayre urged that New Windsor was entitled to the "capitol" by reason of original dedication, and from the fact that it had not only "had all the burthen of the two first missionaries," but was still known as the "parish of New Windsor" by the Society for Propagating the Gospel, to the records of which the title should conform. A part of his plan was to obtain an amendment to the new Glebe charter changing the name to New Windsor, and applying the revenues to the parish church. The official members of the parish of Newburgh consented to unite in building a church "near New Windsor," but when subsequently asked to do so refused to agree to the proposed amendment of the Glebe charter, saying that they would not have given their assent to the building had they had "the most distant thought" that it would "have tended to affix the Glebe at Newburgh to a church at New Windsor," and "urged their fear of the people of Newburgh if they should consent to such a step, and it would be unsafe for them to ride the roads for fear of assassination." The matter of changing the charter seemed to have been dropped, but a subscription for building a church was raised. This subscription was made payable to the "rector and members of St. David's Church, in the precinct of Cornwall," on the condition that the building should be erected "on a spot of ground to be agreed upon and procured" on the south side of Chambers' Creek, "so that the same shall be out and independent of the jurisdiction of the trustees of the parish of Newburgh." Whether the building was erected does not appear, nor where it was located if erected; but as there is no record of any other structure than that known as St. David's, it is inferred, as stated, that it is the one referred to in the text. The following were the subscriptions:

In connection with this subject we give the following extract from the records of St. Andrew's Church, which has been kindly furnished by Rev. O. Applegate. The statement bears evidence of having been written at a date comparatively recent and on tradition, but it is nevertheless not without value:

"In 1732 or '3, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts sent Rev. Richard Charlton to New Windsor, in Ulster Co. That part of the county was new and thinly settled, but some families of the church at New Windsor, viz.: the Alsops, Ellisons, Chambers, Lawrences; in the interior part of the county, the Coldens, Matthews, Wilemans, MacKintosh, Bull, etc. The parish of New Windsor was then said to include all these. Mr. Charlton officiated for some time in pri-

Revolution, and the building occupied as a hospital by the army. It was subsequently partly blown over and permitted to decay. A church organization, however, was maintained until a comparatively recent period, and possession of the location and burying-ground* is still retained. St. Andrew's has a somewhat brighter record, having escaped dissolution during the Revolution, although greatly weakened. It is said to have been the first of the three stations to erect a house of worship,—a log building with a fireplace,—which was located at the fork of the road now leading from St. Andrew's to Shawangunk and Walden. Soon after its incorporation in 1770, the congregation erected what was considered a very fine edifice, and also a parsonage-house, and was presented with ten acres of land by Peter DuBois, and by Richard Bradley, attorney-general of the province, with a farm of two hundred and twenty acres. The Rev. John Sayre, who had been appointed to succeed the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins, and who had been instrumental in obtaining the incorporation of the three parishes named, resigned his position in 1775, through attachment to the crown, and the rectorship remained vacant until 1790. The church is now known as St. Andrew's of Walden.

vate houses, but he soon got tired of the country, and being a young man formed an attachment in New York, married and left. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel suppld his place by removing their missionary, Rev. Mr. Kilpatrick, from Cape Fair, in Newfoundland, to New Windsor; but he having a large family and being a capulent man soon got tired of the country, as well as they of him. The mission was vacant until 1744, when Dr. Johnson, of Connecticut, recommended Mr. Hezekiah Watkins as a proper person to be sent home for Orders. A small subscription was raised for him, and he went to England; was ordained and appointed by the Society as missionary with a salary of only £30, to officiate at three divisions of the mission, viz: At New Windsor on the Hudson River, at the Otterkill in Orange Co., and at the Walkill in Ulster Co. Watkins was a single man of easy and inoffensive disposition, so that he lived happily with his people till the day of his death. During this time no place of worship was built except at the Walkill division, where they put up a temporary log cabin with a fireplace in it. In 1750 the inhabitants of Newburgh applied for and obtained a grant of 500 acres, which had formerly been granted by Queen Ann to a number of Lutherans, these Lutherans having all but one or two sold their rights and removed out of the county. Those that remained surrendered their right in the Glebe to the Crown (this is an error—Ed.), and it was regranted by charter. After obtaining the charter Mr. Watkins was put in possession of the 100 acres set aside for the minister, and he after that officiated every third Sunday in a small church on the Glebe built by the Lutherans. This church was before that kept at the town of New Windsor, and his moving to Newburgh gave offence to the heads of the church at New Windsor, and caused an unhappy rupture that was detrimental to the prosperity of the church thereafter. In 1768 or '9 the Rev. John Sayre was appointed to this mission, now by the name of Newburgh, and parts adjacent. He took possession of the Glebe, and brought matters which had been neglected into a little better regulation. He preached alternately at Newburgh, the Otterkill division, and Walkill Division or log church. He was a popular preacher, and obtained a charter of incorporation for each church, viz.: St. George's, St. Andrew's, and St. David's, all dated July 30, 1770."

* In this burying-ground, now entirely neglected, and from which it is said many headstones have been removed and converted into door-stones, lie the remains of Rev. Hezekiah Watkins, and also of his mother, Joanna, widow of Ephraim Watkins, and of several members of his father's family,—Abel, Joseph, Joseph (2d), Hezekiah, Jesse, and Submit, wife of Samuel. The inscription on the headstone of Rev. Hezekiah is as follows: "Sacred to the memory of the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins, who departed this life on the 10th day of April, 1765, aged 57."

Under the rectorship of Rev. Frederick Van Horn, St. Andrew's made some progress after 1790, and through his efforts established a congregation (now St. James') at Goshen, but it was not until after the settlement of Rev. John Brown at Newburgh, in 1815, that the Episcopal Church—the successor of the Church of England—began to recover the ground which it had lost during the Revolution. Although deprived of the income of the glebe, which, in the absence of "a minister of the Church of England, as by law established," had been, by act of the Legislature in 1804, permanently applied to the maintenance of a school, Mr. Brown succeeded in reviving St. George's Church under its old name, and subsequently in organizing St. Thomas' at New Windsor. Missions under his care were also founded at Port Jervis (now Grace Church), and at Monticello, Sullivan Co. (now St. John's Church), in which latter he performed divine service once in three months for about ten years. In 1860, St. George's parish was divided and St. Paul's Church established.

REFORMED DUTCH CHURCH.

At an early date—one authority says August, 1716—the Rev. Petrus Vas, pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church in Kingston, visited the settlements which had been founded on the Delaware River, and which were mainly composed of German, Dutch, and Huguenot immigrants, who had found their way thither from Kingston and New Paltz. How far his circuit extended is not known; but prior to 1737 at least four informal societies were in existence, and in that year were organized as the "united churches of Minisink." These churches were the Walpack Church, in the Walpack bend of the Delaware; the Shapenac Church, seven miles above; the Minisink Church, twelve miles farther on; and eight miles farther up, in the forks of the Delaware and Neversink, the Maghaghkemek Church. Dominie Vas was succeeded by Rev. George Wilhelmus Mancius, in 1732, and continued the work which his predecessor had inaugurated, having, prior to 1741, baptized over one hundred children in the Maghaghkemek Church. The first settled pastor of the four churches was Rev. Johannes Casparus Fryenmoek, in 1741. The first church edifice of the Maghaghkemek congregation was erected in 1743,—a log structure of perhaps thirty feet square. This building was burnt by Brant in his raid in 1779. Its successor was a building forty feet square, two stories high, and stood on the site of the original edifice by the roadside, near what is now the junction of Main Street and Jersey Avenue in Port Jervis. This building served the purposes of the congregation until 1833, when it was taken down and a larger one erected, and formally dedicated as the "Reformed Dutch Church of Deerpark." The edifice now occupied was erected in 1868.

All the ministers named in connection with the church at Maghaghkemek apparently performed no little itinerant work, not only on the Delaware River, but in the Wallkill Valley. It is at least presumable that Dominie Vas especially made the present town of Montgomery one of his stations, as his successor, Dominie Mancius, found there in 1732, if not a society, those who were ready to be organized as such, and gave them constitution under the name of the German Reformed Church of Wallkill, of which Johannes Yong Bloet (Youngblood) was the first elder, and Jacob Broch Slaber (Bookstaver) the first deacon. Its first church edifice was a log building, which is said to have been so "constructed that the upper story projected on all sides beyond the lower one, and served as a block-house for defense against attacks from the Indians, as well as a house of worship. The only way of entrance was by means of a ladder, and the hour of service was announced by blowing a tin horn.*" This tradition may or may not be true; if true, the probabilities are that the building was erected for a block-house during the French and Indian war of 1756, when a number of such structures were made in Ulster and Orange, and that it was subsequently occupied by the society. Whatever may be the actual facts, it was known and recognized as a church in 1758,—Ballard Beekford, of New York, giving to the society, in that year, four acres of land described as being "on the west side of Wallkill River, lying a little above the mill known as Mingus' mill,† where the High Dutch church now stands," the land to be converted into a burying-ground. In 1760 the log church was taken down and a frame structure erected, which was occupied until 1803, when it gave place to the present brick edifice. The first baptisms were in 1734, by Dominie Mancius. The first settled minister of the society was Rev. John Michael Kern in 1772.

While the Dutch ministers at Esopus were itinerating in the Wallkill and Delaware Valleys, a society of the same faith had been founded at Orangetown, in the extreme southeastern portion of original Orange. It was organized Oct. 24, 1694. Its first minister was the Rev. Guiliam Bartholf, and its first church edifice was erected in 1716. How early members of this society found their way to the Wawayanda Patent cannot be stated, but the fact is well ascertained that the families of Blauvelt, Demarest, Bartholf, Cooper, Van Houton, and DeHart, who were located in Warwick prior to 1760, were of the Orangetown stock; and the conclusion is not improbable that they maintained the faith of their fathers, and received pastoral attention from the Orangetown Church. It is stated, however, that not being in sufficient number to maintain a society, and being desirous of living in harmony with their neighbors, they consented to unite with the Presbyterians in founding a church at Warwick in 1764 or '65. In 1770, John Morin Scott, whose career during the Revolution is not unfamiliar, and who was then interested in the Wawayanda Patent, gave land for the erection of a Presbyterian church and for a burial-ground, and William Wickham added one acre to the gift. In 1773 or '74 a building was erected and inclosed, but was not completed until 1792. Presbyterian service was maintained until 1803, when, the Dutch element being the most numerous and influential, it was agreed that, as the deed of the property was in the Presbyterians, it should continue to be held by Presbyterian trustees, while the Reformed Dutch Consistory should have charge of all the spiritual interests of the church. It was also agreed that the name should be the "Presbyterian and Reformed Dutch Church of Warwick." These preliminaries having been settled, application was made to the Classis of Paramus for constitution, in response to which that duty was performed by deputation from the Classis, Jan. 7, 1804. Andrew Ackerman and Cornelius Demarest were the first elders; Aaron Taylor and John G. Ackerson the first deacons; and Rev. Charles Hardenbergh the first settled pastor. Under its title of 1804 the church remains at the present time, although practically classed as one of the American Reformed (Dutch) Churches of the country.

There are now in the county seven American (Dutch) Reformed Churches, viz.:

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Although never obtaining any considerable foothold in the county, Congregationalism has its rank among the early religious organizations, having been established in the Blooming-Grove Church in 1759, but whether as the result of agreement among settlers of different denominations who united in that form, or whether absolutely founded by Congregationalists of the New England type, cannot now, perhaps, be definitely ascertained, although it maintained the former character for many years and proved very suc-

ASSOCIATE AND ASSOCIATE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

Members of both the Associate and the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Churches were among the early immigrants of New Windsor and Wallkill. Perhaps too weak in numbers to maintain societies of their own, they attached themselves to the Presbyterian Church of Goodwill, or to Bethlehem. In 1752 the Rev. John Cuthbertson, of the Associate Presbytery of Scotland, was sent to America by that body, and in 1753, Revs. Galletly and Arnot, representing the Associate Reformed, followed Cuthbertson. Very soon after his arrival Cuthbertson visited the Wallkill country, and organized (1753) one of the "praying societies" then in vogue in the church which he represented, and which, in 1795, became the "Reformed Presbyterian Church of Coldenham." At a later period immigrants of the same faith established a "praying society in Newburgh, which, in 1816 or '17, became the First Reformed Presbyterian Church of Newburgh," and from its loins sprang the "Second Reformed Presbyterian Church," in 1854.

It is not of record that either Galletly or Arnot visited the district, although it is possible that one or the other of them may have done so and inaugurated a society of the Associate Reformed Church at Little Britain. Well-ascertained facts, however, seem to indicate that that denomination had its introduction here through the missionary labors of Rev. Robert Annan, who came over from Scotland in 1761, and who, before the expiration of ten years, established preaching stations throughout the Wallkill country from Little Britain to Bloomingburgh. In 1765 societies had been formed at Little Britain and in Wallkill of sufficient strength to erect houses of worship, and to warrant the calling, in 1767, of Mr. Annan to become their settled pastor, in which relation he was installed Oct. 2, 1772. The informal societies of 1765 became the "Associate Reformed Church of Little Britain" and the "Associate Reformed Church of Neelytown." From the latter a colony organized what is known as "Graham's Church" of Crawford, in 1809; but after that event it dwindled away, and in 1831 what remained of it was incorporated in the Presbyterian Church of Hamptonburgh. Meanwhile a number of the members of the Little Britain Church who had removed to Newburgh took steps to organize a church at the latter place, which was accomplished in 1797, under the title of the "First Associate Reformed Church of Newburgh," from which a colony organized, in 1837, the "Union Associate Reformed Church." The Little Britain Church and the Union Church are now attached to the Old School branch of the Presbyterian Church. The "First Associate Reformed Church of Newburgh" alone maintains its ancient faith, having refused to accept the union of the Associate and the Associate Reformed Churches by which the United Presbyterian Church was formed in 1859, or to follow the lead of its associate churches and attach itself to the Old School Presbytery. A number of its dissenting members, however, accepted the Associate and the Associate Reformed union, and organized, in 1859, the "First United Presbyterian Church of Newburgh."

BAPTIST CHURCH.

Baptist missionaries were in the county, on both its northern and southern border, as early probably as 1740. From 1740 to 1780 the Rev. Mr. Halstead, then pastor of the church at Fishkill, performed missionary labors at different places in Dutchess and Ulster Counties, and in 1782 succeeded in organizing a branch of the society in the precinct of New Marlborough, then recently a portion of the precinct of Newburgh. At a regular meeting of this branch church, held on the 24th of May, 1785, at the house of Reuben Drake (Elder James Phillips presiding), a petition was presented by Nathan Ellet and William Purdy, on behalf of themselves and others, asking that "the society be constituted a separate church, and that Jonathan Atherton be ordained pastor." The application was granted. The ordination as well as the services constituting the church were held on the 27th of May. The minutes state that Elder Dakens preached the ordination sermon from Timothy iv. 8. After prayer by Elder Cole, Elder Dakens gave the charge to the pastor and to the church. "Elder Phillips gave Bro. Atherton the hand and said, in presence of the whole congregation, that he owned him as an elder; and so Elder Phillips went to prayer. When done they sang a psalm, went out, and now we are left to ourselves." The organization thus formed was called "The Baptist Church of Pleasant Valley." In 1789 a branch church was established at Latingtown, and another at New Paltz. On the 24th of April, 1790, "a number of members were set off by themselves," and on the 2d of June following were constituted the "Church at Newburgh." In 1806 the society last named erected what was called the "Stone Meeting-house," near Luptondale, in the town of Newburgh, and established a burial-ground. William Brundage served as its pastor from 1790 to 1795; Levi Hall, from 1796 to 1799; Jethro Johnson, from 1796 to 1803; Luke Davis, from 1803 to 1811; William C. Thompson, from 1812 to 1815; and John Ellis, from 1815 to 1817,—in which latter year the society united with the Pleasant Valley Church, under the title of the "Union Church of Pleasant Valley and Newburgh," with alternate services, an arrangement which was continued until 1832, when the Newburgh branch ceased to exist, leaving as its only visible record at the present time the walls of its meeting-house and the burial-place of its dead.

The introduction of the denomination at Warwick was through the early settlers who removed thither from Connecticut, who in 1764 organized what is now known as the Old-School Baptist Church of Warwick. Several of the members of the society having acquaintance with Rev. James Benedict, of Stratfield, Conn., a licentiate of the Baptist Church at that place, he was invited to accept the pastoral charge of the society. He visited Warwick under this invitation in November, 1764, and in March, 1765, entered upon the pastorate, continuing in that relation until 1777, when he resigned and removed to Westmoreland, Pa. The church thus founded was the first of any denomination in Warwick, and its services, which were held for some years at private houses, were attended by all the church-going people of the neighborhood. In 1774 a house for public worship was erected on what is now the corner, at the junction of the road leading from the village of Warwick and the road leading from the Welling school-house to Bellvale. In 1809-10 the society purchased land in the village of Warwick, and erected the edifice which it now occupies. Pastor Benedict's successor was the Rev. Thomas B. Montague, 1788, who was succeeded by Thomas Stevens, who was succeeded by Lebbius Lathrop, and continued in charge until 1819, during which period the church became substantially established in its new location.

Although at one time comparatively numerous and influential, there are now but three organizations of the Old-School branch of the Baptist Church in the county, viz.:

Middletown	Elder Gilbert Beebe.
New Vernon (Mount Hope)	" Gilbert Beebe.
Warwick	" William Pollard.

The New-School Baptist churches came into the county in 1817, through missionaries appointed by the Hudson River Baptist Association, who founded societies at Newburgh in 1821, and Cornwall in 1823. Of that branch of the denomination there are now six churches, viz.:

Cornwall	Rev. ———.
Middletown	" W. E. Wright.
Newburgh	" Arthur Jones.
Orange (Unionville)	" Joseph N. Adams.
Port Jervis	" Wm. McKinney.
Warwick	" D. C. Littlefield.

METHODISM.

The history of the origin of Methodism, and that of its founders, John and Charles Wesley, and their associates, is too well known to require notice in these pages. A brief review of the progress of the society in this country, and of the system which was adopted to carry forward its missionary labors is, however, perhaps necessary to a proper understanding of the manner in which it was introduced in the county. In 1766 a company of Irish emigrants, of whom Philip Embury was one, organized a society in New York, and in 1768 they erected in that city the first Methodist church in America. About the same time Robert Strawbridge, who was also a native of Ireland, organized a society in Maryland, and built a log meeting-house near Pipe Creek, in that province. Other immigrants from the British Isles, who had settled in Philadelphia, laid the foundations of a society in that city, which soon rivaled, in point of numbers and active zeal, the one in New York. Encouraged by the progress of the sect in America, Mr. Wesley sent over two additional laborers in 1769, viz.: Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmore, the former being stationed at New York, and the latter at Philadelphia. In 1771, Francis Asbury and Richard Wright were added to the work; and in 1773, Thomas Rankin and George Shadford. Rankin was appointed by Mr. Wesley "General Assistant of the Societies in America," and soon after his arrival he issued a call for "a conference of all the preachers in America," with a view to systematize the work. The meeting was held at Philadelphia, July 4, 1773, and was the first "conference" that ever assembled in this country. The society then embraced eleven hundred and sixty members, of whom five hundred were in Maryland.

During the war of the Revolution the society gradually decreased in New York and Philadelphia, but continued to spread rapidly in the Southern States, so that while its total membership at the close of the war was thirteen thousand seven hundred and forty, only about eleven hundred were resident north of Philadelphia. After the peace Wesley suggested to his followers in the United States that they should make an organization independent of the society in England. This was accordingly done in 1785, and the title of the "Methodist Episcopal Church" was adopted to designate the new denomination. Thomas Coke and Philip Asbury were appointed bishops, or superintendents, and the society was divided into districts, over which "elders" were stationed, under whose charge two or more preachers were placed. The preachers were then styled "assistants," and the fields in which they labored were called "circuits." The itinerant principle, which is still one of the distinctive features of the Methodist Church, was adopted, and the preachers held their "circuits" only for a year. In this way the work was zealously prosecuted, often amid extreme hardships, and the society regained the ground which it had for a time lost, and won new triumphs in the North as well as the South.

In 1786, New York and New Jersey were divided into two "elder districts," one of which embraced the East Jersey, Newark, New York City, and Long Island "circuits," and formed the extreme northern limit of the society in the United States at that time. The East Jersey "circuit" bordered on Orange County, and had stationed on it as "assistants" John McClaskey and Ezekiel Cooper. While Mr. Cooper was on this circuit (1786), one of his public services was attended by Col. David McCamley, who invited him to preach at his residence in the town of Warwick. Mrs. Arthur Smith, a sister of Col. McCamley, was visiting her brother at the time of the service there, and at her solicitation Mr. Cooper accompanied her to her residence in Middlehope, where he held the first Methodist service in the town of Newburgh. The date at which it was held cannot now be ascertained, but it was probably in October, 1786. Mr. Cooper, accompanied by Samuel Purdy, also visited at this time John Woolsey, near Milton, and having established here an outpost for missionary labor far beyond the bounds of his circuit, he returned to New Jersey. Six weeks later, John McClaskey and John Cooper passed over the same route, and extended the new circuit to the Paltz, where they held services at the residences of Hendrick Deyo and Andries DuBois. They also stopped in the village of Newburgh, and preached in the house of Elnathan Foster, where a "class" was soon after formed. In January, Ezekiel Cooper again visited the district, and held service in the house of Samuel Fowler in Middlehope, which was henceforth a regular preaching station until 1813. From 1813 to 1822 the meetings were held in the summer in a barn owned by Daniel Holmes, and in the winter in Mr. Fowler's house.

The success which had attended the efforts of Mr. Cooper and his associates led to the organization, in 1788, of the Flanders (N. J.) circuit, which embraced this section of country. Of this circuit James O. Cromwell was elder, and his assistants were Jesse Lee, Aaron Hutchinson, and John Lee. It had five hundred and forty-three members. In 1789 it was again divided and the Newburgh circuit established, its preachers being Nathaniel B. Mills and Andrew Harpending; James D. Cromwell, presiding elder. It embraced two hundred and sixty-one of the membership of Flanders circuit, and was divided into the following "classes" or informal societies, viz.:

Saml. Fowler's, Middlehope.
Elnathan Foster's, Newburgh.
Munson Ward's, Fostertown.
George Stanton's, Gardnertown.
Daniel Holmes', Middlehope.
Jacob Dayton's, near Latingtown.

These classes continued to be visited by the circuit preachers until they ripened into societies of sufficient strength to support located ministers, or until that end was attained by the union of two or more classes. The following preachers appear on the record in connection with what was then known as the Newburgh circuit:

1790.—Benjamin Abbott, Joseph Lowell, Samuel Martindale.

1791.—Jethro Johnson, Joshua Taylor.

1792.—Samuel Fowler, Lawrence McCombs.

1793.—Lawrence McCombs, Smith Weeks.

1794.—Samuel Fowler, Moses Crane, William Storm. This year Marbletown circuit was connected with Newburgh, and appointments for preaching made at Woodstock, Hurley, Shokan, Tongue (or Clove), Shandaken, and Beaverkill.

1795.—Matthias Swain and David Buck.

1796.—Jacob Egbert and John Finnegan.

1797.—Samuel Fowler, Thomas Woolsey.

1798-99.—Robert Green, William Storms.

1800.—Samuel Fowler, Elijah Woolsey.

1801.—Samuel Fowler, Matthias Swain, D. Buck.

1802.—James Herron, Thomas Stratton. Ulster circuit was taken from Newburgh and reported separately.

1803.—Thomas Stratton, Mitchell E. Bull.

1804.—Robert Dillon, Isaac Candee. Haverstraw was added to the circuit appointments.

1805.—Zenas Covell, Isaac Candee. Haverstraw withdrawn from the circuit and church organized. Rev. W. Vredenburg appointed minister.

1806.—Asa Cummings, William Keith.

1807.—William Keith, John Crawford.

1808.—John Robertson, J. Coleman, and William Jewett. The Elnathan Foster class organized as the Methodist Episcopal Church of the parish of Newburgh, and steps taken to erect a church edifice, which was first occupied in 1810. Robertson planted Methodism at Florida, 1808.

1809.—Seth Crowell, John Finnegan. The Newburgh circuit was divided, and New Windsor circuit formed, with Revs. Thomas Woolsey and James Coleman, preachers; Andrew Cunningham and Benjamin Westlake, local preachers; Henry Still, James Benjamin, Thomas Collard, and Jonathan Stevens, exhorters. The circuit embraced the following classes:

Classes.	Leaders.

John Orr bought and rebuilt the mills, and when the Shortcut Railroad was opened, secured a station, to which he gave the name of Mountainville. It will be seen that the society there is one of the oldest in the county.

The New Windsor class was supplied with a room over the store of John Ellison, at Vail's Gate, in 1791, which was a regular preaching station until 1807, when the old New Windsor church was erected, and the society organized as the Union Methodist Episcopal Church of New Windsor. This was the first regular Methodist Episcopal Church edifice in the county, if not the first on the west side of the Hudson.

In 1819 the Sullivan circuit was formed from the Newburgh and New Windsor circuits, Revs. Horace Weston and James Quinlan, preachers in charge.

In 1820, Newburgh village was taken from the Newburgh circuit, and Rev. Samuel Fowler appointed minister. Arnold Schofield and Josiah Bowen, preachers on the circuit.

In 1823 the Newburgh circuit was divided, and Bloomingburgh circuit formed, embracing the preaching stations on the east side of the mountain, viz.: Bethel, Bloomingburgh, Middletown, Mount Johnson (now Crawford), Montgomery, Walden, Burlingham, Sam's Point, and Walker Valley.

In 1825, New Paltz circuit was taken from the Newburgh circuit. The class at Bellvale, on the New Windsor circuit, was broken up, and the appointment discontinued until 1833.

In 1837, New Windsor circuit was divided, and Sugar Loaf circuit formed, embracing Sugar Loaf, Florida, Edenville, Bellvale, Chester, Monroe, Oxford, Satterlytown, Washingtonville, Blagg's Clove, Highland Mills, Little Long Pond, and Dutch Hollow (Greenwood Lake), Revs. Seymour Landon and William Miller, circuit preachers, and Rev. Phineas Rice, presiding elder.

Although Methodism had its introduction in Warwick, it was not until 1839 that a regular appointment was made for Methodist preaching in the village of Warwick. From a Methodist stand-point the people of that village were thoroughly "joined to their idols," —i.e., Baptists and Presbyterian-Reformed-Dutch. Its firmest foothold was gained in Newburgh and New Windsor, where many came to its ranks who had been connected with the Church of England, and who were then practically without church connection. This was especially true of John Ellison, who liberally encouraged the circuit preachers. In Newburgh, on the contrary, the most socially prominent defender of the new faith was Elnathan Foster, a former Presbyterian. Perhaps, however, the itinerant ministers would have been equally successful without these adventitious aids. They were earnest, strong men, and sustained their faith under the most annoying persecutions and the most trying ostracisms.

It is due to the denomination to say that the census of 1875 awards to it forty-four churches in the county. The number, however, evidently embraces circuit stations, which do not appear in the minutes of Conference, and also perhaps colored churches and all others claiming the name of Methodists, but which are not attached to the regular church organization.

The following list is from Conference minutes:

In connection with this denomination, the following facts have been furnished by Rev. J. P. Hermance, P. E., in reference to the Newburgh District, which had its beginning in the Newburgh circuit.

In 1789, Newburgh first appears in the minutes of the Conference. By a division of Flanders circuit, Newburgh circuit was formed, extending from Plattekill and Marlborough on the north to Warwick on the south. (See list of "Classes," already given.) In 1791, Newburgh stands first on the list of circuits, and is followed by Wyoming, New York, New Rochelle, and Long Island, which compose the district. In 1792, Wyoming, Tioga, Newburgh, Flanders, Elizabethtown, and Staten Island circuits composed the district. 1794, Herkimer, Otsego, Delaware, Saratoga, and Albany circuits were added to the district. 1795, the district included Cambridge, Herkimer, Otsego, Delaware, Saratoga, Albany, Newburgh, and Flanders circuits. 1796, Salem, Bethel, Burlington, Trenton, Freehold, Elizabethtown, Flanders, Newburgh, Delaware, Herkimer, and Albany circuits constituted the district. 1798, Albany, Herkimer, and Delaware circuits were taken out of the district. In 1801 the district, which had previously been known as the East Jersey District, received the name of the "New Jersey District." In 1802 the work was put into "Conferences," the Newburgh and Ulster circuits forming part of the New Jersey District of the Philadelphia Conference. A rearrangement was made in 1803, by which the Albany District was formed, embracing the Newburgh, Ulster, Delaware, Albany, Albany City, and Saratoga circuits. In 1804 the district was taken from the Philadelphia and placed in the New York Conference. It then embraced the Black River, Western, Herkimer, Saratoga, Montgomery, Albany, Delaware, Ulster, Newburgh, and Albany City circuits. In 1805, Haverstraw was added. In 1808 the district was cut down to the Albany City, Albany, Schenectady, Montgomery, Delaware, Ulster, Newburgh, and Haverstraw circuits. In 1810 the name was changed to the Hudson River District, and remained under that title until 1832, when it was divided, the southern portion receiving the name of the Newburgh District, embracing the following charges and circuits: Catskill, Saugerties, Kingston, Marbletown, Sullivan, Montgomery, Rossville, Gardnertown, New Windsor, New Paltz, and West Point. The various stations, which had previously been preaching-places in connection with contiguous charges, appear in the published minutes at dates as follows: New Windsor, 1809; Kingston, 1822; Bloomingburgh, and name changed to Montgomery, 1824; New Paltz, 1831; Catskill and Saugerties, 1835; Rossville and Gardnertown, 1832; Rondout, 1836; Sugar Loaf, 1837; North Newburgh, 1838; Milton and Marlborough, 1840; Monroe, 1845; Goshen and Southfield Mission, 1847; Esopus, 1848; New Paltz Landing and New Paltz, 1850; Newburgh Second Church, 1852; West Newburgh and Eddyville, 1853; Chester, 1854; Kingston Second Church, 1856; Milton, 1858; Glasco, 1859; Cornwall and Little Britain, 1863; Warwick, Bellvale, Highland Mills, and Walden, 1866; Washingtonville, 1867; Florida, 1868; Salisbury Mills, 1869; West Newburgh, 1870; Port Ewen, 1873; Galeville, 1874. The district extends northward as far as Saugerties, southward to New Milford, westward to Goshen and along the Wallkill Valley, northerly and easterly to Hudson's River. While covering a considerable portion of Ulster, it fails to embrace the entire county of Orange, and the following statistics must of course be received in connection with this fact, viz.: It has 36 charges; 52 churches, valued at $364,400; 30 parsonages, valued at $68,100; 7845 members; 57 Sabbath-schools, with a roll of 6268 scholars and 925 teachers. The following is a list of the presiding elders of the district from 1787:

1787, Thomas Foster; 1788-89, James O. Cromwell; 1790, Thomas Morrell; 1791-92, Robert Cloud; 1793, Jacob Brush; 1794-95, Thos. Ware; 1796-98, John McClaskey; 1799, Freeborn Garrettson; 1800-2, Solomon Sharp; 1803-6, Elijah Woolsey; 1807-9-11, Henry Stead; 1811-14, Daniel Ostrander; 1815-18, P. R. Sanford; 1819-22, Eben Smith; 1823-26, Daniel Ostrander; 1827-30, Phineas Rice; 1831, M. Richardson; 1832, William Jewett; 1833-34, M. Richardson; 1835-38, Phineas Rice; 1839, William Jewett; 1840-42, Daniel Ostrander; 1843-46, M. Richardson; 1847-50, William Jewett; 1851, Stephen Martindale; 1852-54, A. M. Osbon; 1855-58, L. M. Vincent; 1859-61, Phineas Rice; 1862-65, William H. Ferris; 1866-68, A. M. Osbon; 1869-72, Joseph B. Wakeley; 1873-76, J. Y. Bates; 1877-80, John P. Hermance.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

The history of the efforts for the introduction of Catholicism in this State during the colonial era possesses a deep interest, embracing as it does the incidents of the French and Indian wars, which were waged from 1687 until the termination of French rule in Canada. The work was commenced in 1608, and was attended with considerable success among the more northern Indian tribes. The effort for the conversion of the Six Nations, however, met with very little encouragement until after the accession of James II. to the throne of England, who instructed the governors of the province to extend to the French missionaries every facility for the prosecution of the enterprise. The privileges thus granted were soon employed by the French to secure the ascendancy of their own national interest among the Iroquois, and compelled even James himself to materially modify the zeal which he had manifested for the propagation of the faith which he professed. The accession of William and Mary was followed by an entire change in the policy of the English government. So great had been the inroads upon the trade of the English with the Indians, and so palpable the influence of the French priests in that direction,—so materially had the alliance between the English and the Iroquois been weakened, and so essential was the continuance of that alliance to England,—that even the toleration of Catholicism was forbidden, not through any feeling of hostility to that form of religion in itself considered, but from political reasons. The most severe repressive measures were adopted; every Catholic priest coming voluntarily into the province was punishable with death. This law remained in force until after the commencement of the war of the Revolution, when it was so far relaxed, by the terms of the first constitution of the State, as to permit freedom of opinion to all who should subscribe the oath of allegiance. The appeal which was made to Ireland for aid in the war, and the subsequent assistance of Catholic France, materially affected the prejudices of the people, and made it possible to engraft upon the Federal Constitution of 1787 the full and complete equality of all religious faiths. Although the door was thus thrown open, Catholic authorities made little effort to propagate their faith until after the Irish rebellion of 1798, which sent many Catholic emigrants to America. In 1808, Pope Pius VII. erected Baltimore into an archiepiscopal see, with four suffragan sees, of which New York was one.*

* The first priest stationed in New York City was Rev. Charles Whalen, an Irish Franciscan, who had been chaplain in the French fleet under

The first bishop of New York, Rev. Luke Concanen, died soon after his consecration, and before he entered upon his duties. His successor, Rev. John Conelly, was consecrated in 1814, and among his first work was that of establishing missions along Hudson's River, ostensibly "to prevent the children of Catholics conforming to the persuasions of their neighbors." In his diary occurs the following: "Jan. 29th, 1818.—I answered the Rev. Arthur Langdill's three letters and sent him said Indult, and addressed the letter to the care of Mr. McIntyre, New Burg." Rev. Langdill and Rev. Dr. Ffrench (the latter in 1817 and the former in 1818) were the first Catholic missionaries in Orange County, and at Newburgh, in 1826, St. Patrick's Church, the first Catholic church in the county, was organized. There are now fifteen churches and missions in the county, viz.:

St. Paul's, Bullville, attended from Montgomery.
 St. Thomas', Cornwall, Rev. Stephen Mackin, Rev. James Kelly.
 —, Goshen, Rev. John Keegan, Rev. S. J. Byrnes.
 St. Mary's, Greenwood, attended from Sufferns.
 Sacred Heart, Highland Falls, Rev. Terrance J. Early.
 St. Joseph's, Middletown, Rev. Peter Preudergast, Rev. John Clancy.
 —, Middlehope, attended from Milton.
 Holy Name of Mary, Montgomery, Rev. Patrick Brady.
 —, Monroe, attended from Goshen.
 St. Patrick's, Newburgh, Rev. Joseph F. Mooney, Rev. Hugh McCabe.
 St. Mary's, Newburgh, Rev. Michael Phelan, Rev. M. Lane.
 Holy Name of Jesus, Otisville, attended from Middletown.
 Immaculate Conception, Port Jervis, Rev. E. J. Flynn, Rev. Michael Sully.
 St. Stephen's, Warwick, attended from Goshen.
 —, Washingtonville, attended from Cornwall.
 —, West Point, attended from Highland Falls.
 —, New Windsor, attended from Newburgh.

The academy of Our Lady of Mercy is located at Balmville, in Newburgh, and St. Patrick's parochial school is connected with St. Patrick's Church in the city of Newburgh.

FRIENDS.

Though not among the earliest of the sects in the county, members of the Society of Friends, "or the people called Quakers," have an early and honorable record in its annals. A considerable colony, located in the old precinct of Cornwall prior to the Revolution, and soon after its close we find them in the northwestern part of the town of Newburgh, and in the adjoining towns of Plattekill and Marlborough, in Ulster, both of which towns were originally covered by the precinct of Newburgh. From the precinct of Cornwall we have the towns of Cornwall and Monroe, and in the former are two meeting-houses, and in the latter one. The Friends of Newburgh unite with their brethren of Pleasant Valley in a meeting-house at the latter place. The original meeting-house in Cornwall was erected about 1790. The grounds on which it stands were deeded in 1789, by Langford Thorn, to Joseph Thorn, Nicholas Townsend, and William Titus, in trust for the "Cornwall Monthly Meeting." David Sands, a noted preacher of the sect, may be said to have been the founder of the society here. A division of the sect in 1827 resulted in the "Hicksite" and the "Orthodox" branches, the former retaining the old building, and the latter erecting a meeting-house of their own in 1828 or 1829.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

The religious and benevolent societies of the several towns of the county have not been few in number, nor without influence. It is believed that the county is older in the introduction of Sabbath-schools and Bible societies than its contemporaries. The first in the field was the Orange County Bible Society, which was organized in Goodwill Church on the 11th of June, 1811, over four years prior to the organization of the American Bible Society. At its first public meeting a constitution was adopted, and the following officers appointed, viz.: Rev. Andrew King, president; Rev. Moses Frøligh, first vice-president; Rev. Mathusaleh Baldwin, second vice-president; Rev. John Johnston, secretary; Rev. Arthur I. Stansbury, clerk; Dr. Charles Fowler, treasurer, and nineteen other managers. As first constituted it was a Bible and Tract Society, but in 1816, when the American Bible Society was formed, it became auxiliary to it, ceased its tract operations, and assumed the name of the Orange County Bible Society.

Previous to the year 1835 the amount of money collected and expended by the society in its operations cannot be stated with any degree of accuracy. In the report of 1832 it is stated that the amount collected up to June of that year, from 1816, was $3902, making an average for each year of $240, which had been paid over to parent society in remittances for Bibles, or in donations. The amount collected up to June, 1847, including the amount already given, was $16,690.73.

A complete list of the officers of the society is not contained in its record book, and hence we cannot give the names of the successors of Dr. King and his associate founders. Traditionally stated, the presidency was held by Rev. Dr. King, Rev. Mathusaleh Baldwin, Johannes Miller, Hezekiah Howell, Moses Crawford, and William Phillips, prior to 1834, since which time the officers have been as follows:

1834.—Gen. James W. Wilkin, president; Hon. Nathan H. White, first vice-president; Capt. Andrew Wilson, second vice-president; Robert Denniston, corresponding secretary; John Wilson, recording secretary; Gen. Charles Borland, Jr., treasurer.

1835-36.—Andrew Wilson, president; Samuel Millsbaugh, first vice-president; Jonathan Bailey, second vice-president; Daniel T. Wood, recording secretary; Peter A. Millsbaugh, treasurer; Robert Denniston, corresponding secretary.

1837.—Jonathan Bailey, president; John B. Hor-

Admiral De Grasse. After the war he settled in this country. His brother, Dr. Joseph Whalen, purchased lot No. 11 of the Schuyler Patent in Montgomery, April 1, 1788. He was the father of the late Joseph V. Whalen, of Montgomery.

ton, first vice-president; Nathaniel Brewster, second vice-president; Robert Denniston, corresponding secretary; Rev. M. N. McLaren, recording secretary; Dr. P. A. Millspaugh, treasurer.

1841.—Charles Fowler, president; James Little, first vice-president; George Phillips, second vice-president; James D. Bull, corresponding secretary; Rev. Isaac C. Beach, recording secretary; P. A. Millspaugh, treasurer.

1842.—Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; no other change.

1843.—Joseph B. Howell, second vice-president; no other change.

1844.—Andrew Wilson, president; Joseph B. Howell, first vice-president; Jesse Bull, second vice-president; Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; James D. Bull, corresponding secretary; P. A. Millspaugh, treasurer.

1845.—Samuel Wait, first vice-president; no other change.

1848-49.—Robert Denniston, president; William Houston, first vice-president; Moses Sawyer, second vice-president; James D. Bull, corresponding secretary; Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; P. A. Millspaugh, treasurer.

1850.—Rev. W. D. Snodgrass, corresponding secretary; no other change.

1851.—John S. Crane, M.D., treasurer; no other change.

1852.—H. M. Hopkins, second vice-president; no other change.

1853-54.—Alexander Thompson, president; Nathaniel Webb, first vice-president; Jesse C. Stewart, second vice-president; Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; Rev. W. D. Snodgrass, corresponding secretary; John S. Crane, treasurer.

1855-56.—Robert Denniston, president; Andrew Wilson, first vice-president; Jesse C. Stewart, second vice-president; Rev. W. D. Snodgrass, corresponding secretary; Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; John S. Crane, treasurer.

1858-65.—William S. Webb, president; Samuel J. Wilkin, first vice-president; Charles W. Reeves, second vice-president; Rev. S. W. Mills, corresponding secretary; Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; John S. Crane, treasurer.

1866-67.—William S. Webb, president; Robert Denniston, first vice-president; Hugh B. Bull, second vice-president; Rev. S. W. Mills, corresponding secretary; Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; John S. Crane, treasurer.

1868-69.—Hugh B. Bull, president; A. H. Sinsabaugh, first vice-president; William Evans, second vice-president; Rev. S. W. Mills, corresponding secretary; Theo. L. Jackson, recording secretary; John S. Crane, treasurer.

1870.—Augustus F. Schofield, president; William J. Groo, first vice-president; Selah R. Corwin, second vice-president; Rev. S. W. Mills, corresponding secretary; Rev. R. Howard Wallace, recording secretary; David Redfield, treasurer.

1871-72.—Rev. W. D. Snodgrass, president; A. H. Sinsabaugh, first vice-president; William Evans, second vice-president; Rev. S. W. Mills, corresponding secretary; Rev. R. Howard Wallace, recording secretary; David Redfield, treasurer.

1879.—Rev. W. D. Snodgrass, president; John L. Servin, first vice-president; Selah R. Corwin, second vice-president; Rev. S. W. Mills, corresponding secretary; Rev. R. Howard Wallace, recording secretary; David Redfield, treasurer.

The Newburgh Bible Society was organized Sept. 9, 1818, when a constitution was adopted and the following officers elected, viz.: Jonas Storey, president; Isaac Belknap and Joseph Clark, vice-presidents; Rev. John Johnston, corresponding secretary; Charles Miller, recording secretary; Benjamin F. Lewis, treasurer. The society still has an active existence.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Newburgh was the first society of this class. It was organized Sept. 15, 1858,—Arthur Potts, president. The present association is its successor. The Young Men's Christian Association at Goshen was organized in 1866. Present officers: C. E. Millspaugh, president; J. H. Staats, corresponding secretary. The Young Men's Christian Association at Warwick was organized in 1869. Present officers: Edwin S. Colwell, president; George A. Sanford, corresponding secretary.

Religious societies more directly connected with some one of the several churches will be noticed in the town where located.

BENEVOLENT ORGANIZATIONS.

The Newburgh Home for the Friendless was organized in the autumn of 1861, under the title of the Newburgh Union Female Guardian Society. In 1862 it was incorporated by a special act of the Legislature.

St. Luke's Home and Hospital, of Newburgh and New Windsor, is also an incorporated institution. It was organized Nov. 4, 1874, by ladies connected with the several churches. While the Home for the Friendless cares for "friendless or destitute girls under fourteen and over three years of age, and boys under ten and over three, until permanent homes can be secured for them," St. Luke's provides "a home for the aged and the infirm, and a hospital for the sick." Both are creditably managed, and both, with similar institutions elsewhere, are silently but effectually educating the public to more humanitarian views in making provision for the support of those who may be objects of public charity.

Without entering into details of the many benevolent societies in the county at the present time, we notice briefly the Masonic and Odd-Fellows' lodges.

Authoritative Masonry in the State of New York dates back to the appointment of Daniel Cox, of New Jersey, Provincial Grand Master of the Provinces of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, June 5, 1780. Lodges were constituted in New York City and in other parts of the province under this authority, and worked under the English ritual until 1776, when, by the outbreak of the Revolution, a new order of things came into existence. One of the results of the period was the organization of what were known as military lodges on the part of officers and others connected with the American army. The first of these, American Union Lodge, was warranted by Richard Gridley, Esq., Grand Master of Masons of Massachusetts, Feb. 13, 1776, with authority to hold a lodge in the American army, then located at Roxbury, Mass. Soon after receiving their warrant the portion of the army with which the members of the lodge were connected removed to New York, where, by permission of the Deputy Grand Master of the province, they assembled and petitioned the said Deputy Grand Master to confirm the warrant given them by the Grand Master of Massachusetts. Their petition was not complied with, but a new warrant was granted them under the name of Military Union Lodge, No. 1. "This lodge was located," says John G. Barker, in his "Early History of Masonry," "on the Hudson River, near West Point, during the summer of 1779, and at Newburgh from 1781 to 1783. The roll of the lodge is headed 'Members of Military Union and American Union Lodge.'"

From Hayden's "Washington and his Masonic Compeers" we take the following:

"Many Military Lodges existed in the army at this period, but the records of most of them are lost. So well established had these camp lodges become, and so beneficial to the brethren, that, in providing the necessary conveniences for the troops in their quarters on the Hudson at this time, an assembly-room or hall was built, one of the purposes of which was to serve as a lodge-room for Military Lodges. It was a rude wooden structure, forming an oblong square, forty or sixty feet, was one story in height, and had but a single door. Its windows were square, unglazed openings, elevated so high as to prevent the prying gaze of the cowans. Its timbers were hewed, squared, and numbered for their places, and when the building was finished it was joyously dedicated. . . . American Union Lodge met in this room on the 24th of June, 1782, preparatory to celebrating the festival of St. John the Baptist, and proceeded from thence to West Point, where they were joined by Washington Lodge, when a procession was formed at the house of Gen. Patterson, its first Master, and both lodges proceeded from thence to the 'Colon-nade,' where a dinner was provided and an oration delivered by Col. John Brooks, Master of Washington Lodge, and afterwards Governor of Massachusetts. American Union Lodge then returned to their room and closed in good time."¹⁸

The present Grand Lodge dates from Sept. 19, 1783. It was some years before its authority was fully established. Some of the old provincial lodges retained their charters, and, in addition to this, the military lodges had organized (1781) a Grand Lodge of their own. About five years after the regular Grand Lodge was organized (June 4, 1788), a lodge was warranted by it at Newburgh, under the title and number of Steuben Lodge, No. 18, and other lodges in the county soon followed. From records in the Grand Lodge and from newspaper files and other sources the following list has been compiled, which may or may not embrace all the lodges organized in the county prior to 1826:

Steuben Lodge, No. 18.—Warrant granted June 4, 1788; constituted at Newburgh, Sept. 27, 1788. Its charter was applied for by F. A. Morris and nine others. Its first officers were Ebenezer Foote, W. M.; Francis Anderson Morris, S. W.; Peter Nestell, J. W. Charles Clinton and Derick Amerman were its first adjoining members. Ebenezer Foote, Levi Dodge, and Charles Clinton were P. M.'s in 1797. The lodge was in quite a flourishing condition for a few years, but after 1792 it seldom held a meeting. The last mention made of it in the minutes of the Grand Lodge is 1800, but it seems to have had a nominal existence in 1806, as it is referred to in the petition for Hiram Lodge, in which it is said that the lodge had not had a meeting in the past five years. Its charter and minute-book are now in the archives of the Grand Lodge. Gen. Baron Steuben was an honorary member.

St. John's Lodge, No. 21.—Constituted at Warwick, March 26, 1790. The following were its officers (date not given): John Smith, W. M.; Wm. Holly, S. W.; Abm. Dolsen, J. W.; E. DuBois, Sec.; Abm. Gennung, Treas.

Orange Lodge, No. 45.—Warranted April 12, 1796, with the consent of St. John's Lodge, No. 21. Constituted at Goshen by John Smith, P. M. of St. John's, and Eben. Foote, P. M. of Steuben. Wm. Thompson, W. M.; Seth Marvin, S. W.; Anthony Dobbin, J. W.

Montgomery Lodge, No. 71.—This lodge was constituted at Montgomery, June 6, 1798, by G. M. De Witt Clinton, assisted by P. M.'s Levi Dodge and Chas. Clinton, of Steuben Lodge. John Smith, W. M.; Jas. Fitzgerald, S. W.; Ebenezer Howe, J. W. Warrant surrendered prior to June, 1818.

St. James' Lodge, No. 65.—Constituted at Middletown, Jan. 6, 1798. Warrant surrendered prior to June, 1818.

*The building referred to was long known as "The Temple." It was situated on the camping-ground in New Windsor, and is more particularly referred to in the history of that town.

Olive Branch Lodge, No. 102.—Constituted at Minisink, June 9, 1808.*

Hiram Lodge, No. 131.—Constituted at Newburgh, Feb. 19, 1806. Jonathan Fisk, W. M.; Chas. Baker, S. W.; John R. Drake, J. W.; P. McKenna, Sec. This lodge was the successor of Steuben Lodge, No. 18. Its history was specially marked by its participation in the reception of Lafayette at Newburgh, in 1824. Its charter was surrendered Dec. 10, 1834. Revived in 1842 as No. 92. Peter F. Hunn, W. M.; Minard Harris, S. W.; James Belknap, J. W.; D. W. Gridley, Sec. Charter surrendered in 1845.

Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 189.—Chartered at Wallkill, Dec. 6, 1809. Asked remission of dues to Grand Lodge in consideration of having built a commodious lodge-room. Petition refused, Dec. 2, 1812.

Lawrence Lodge, No. 230.—Chartered at Ward's Bridge, Montgomery, May 16, 1814. Officers installed by W. M. J. B. Reynolds, of Hiram Lodge, of Newburgh.

Washington Lodge, No. 220.—Blooming-Grove, June 10, 1813. Officers installed by W. M. J. B. Reynolds, of Hiram Lodge.

Corner-Stone Lodge, No. 231.—Chartered at Monroe, May 26, 1814.

Jerusalem Temple Lodge, No. 247.—Charter granted Sept. 9, 1815. Constituted at Cornwall, October 5th, by James B. Reynolds, W. M. of Hiram Lodge, at the house of Ebenezer Crissey. Warrant officers: Wyatt Carr, W. M.; Abraham Mead, S. W.; Southerland Moore, J. W. December 23d the following officers were chosen: Wyatt Carr, W. M.; Abraham Mead, S. W.; Southerland Moore, J. W.; Nathaniel Clark, Treas.; Samuel H. Purdy, Sec.; William Williams, S. D.; Stephen Coleman, J. D.; Obadiah Smith, Jr., Sr. M. C.; Isaac B. Titus, Jr. M. C.; Lewis Patterson and John Arnold, Stewards; and Hugh Gregg, Tyler. William A. Clark succeeded Wyatt Carr in 1820. Mr. Clark was followed by Jonathan Morrill. In 1824, Oliver Farrington was elected Master, and held that position until April 22, 1826, at which time the record stops. Mr. Beach's "Cornwall," from which the record of this lodge is taken, adds: "In the summer of 1826 the communications ceased, and the lodge became dormant for a period of forty-five years, until revived in the winter of 1871 by a few old Masons, who obtained permission to meet under its old name and number. July 27, 1872, the old lodge was revived with a new number (No. 721), and constituted with its original paraphernalia."†

* There is a discrepancy in dates between the record entry in the Grand Lodge minutes and the dates given in an official list of lodges prepared in 1818, in the case of this and several other warrants. The date in the latter is here given, although known (from other sources) to be inaccurate. The petition for Olive Branch Lodge was made Dec. 7, 1803, and the record shows that it paid dues to the Grand Lodge from Dec. 27th of that year.

† When the lodge suspended, the paraphernalia were taken in charge by Mr. John H. Lane, and on his death, in 1863, they were preserved by Mr. Dyer Brewster. They are now seen in the lodge-room, and excite the wonder of visiting brethren.—Beach's Cornwall.

Hoffman Lodge, No. 300.—Constituted at Wallkill, Dec. 3, 1818. Its name was taken from Martin Hoffman, D. G. M., who, in consideration thereof, presented to it a Bible in 1818. This Bible is now in use in Hoffman Lodge, No. 412, of Middletown. The first officers of the lodge were John Kirby, W. M.; Stacey Beakes, S. W.; Isaac Otis, J. W.; Isaac Mills, Treas.; George Hill, Sec.; Chas. Anderson, Tyler. The lodge closed its existence in 1832.

In addition to the foregoing, the following charters were granted:

Orange Mark Lodge, No. 51, Goshen.—Warrant issued, Feb. 8, 1809, to William Elliott, William A. Thompson, and Edward Ely.

Orange Chapter, No. 33, Minisink.—Warrant issued, Feb. 6, 1812, to Uriah Hulse, James D. Wadsworth, and Malcomb Campbell.

Hiram Mark Lodge, No. 70, Newburgh.—Warrant issued, Feb. 3, 1812, to Sylvanus Jessup, James Williams, and George Gordon. Warrant was forfeited Feb. 8, 1816, on account of non-payment of dues to the Grand Chapter.

Jerusalem Temple Chapter, No. 52, Newburgh.—Warrant issued, Feb. 6, 1817, to James B. Reynolds, William Ross, and William P. Lot. Warrant forfeited, Feb. 10, 1821, for non-payment of dues to Grand Chapter.‡

The old Masonic lodges shared the fate of their associates in other parts of the State under the Anti-Masonic movements, which had their origin in the alleged abduction and murder of William Morgan, at Batavia, on the night of Sept. 11, 1826. Morgan, it will be remembered, was about to publish a book disclosing the then obligations and ceremonies of the first degrees of the order. To prevent this, it was charged, a conspiracy was formed which resulted in his murder. Efforts were made to detect the guilty parties, but without success, and in the end the entire fraternity was charged with guilty participation in the offense, although the Masons always denied that Morgan had been murdered, or that the body which was identified as his was so in fact, but simply used as "a good-enough Morgan until after the election." An excited and prejudiced Anti-Masonic feeling sprang up, which not only carried the order down, but effected changes which have had more or less of political influence from that time to the present,—the Anti-Masons and the National Republicans, or ancient Federalists, falling into alliance under Adams in 1828, and Clay and Wirt in 1832, against Jackson and the Democratic party, with whom the Masons found refuge against a persecution as bitter and heated as that which the Tammany Society had hurled against the Society of the Cincinnati and the Federalists. What the latter would have become under its hereditary features had it obtained the control of the government, or what Masonry would have become had it escaped the chastening which it received, is not a question to be raised now that both have been essentially modified; suffice it that Masonry, under changes in its obligations and ceremonies, has regained its original standing, although it is still regarded with a traditional suspicion by many.

Odd-Fellowship dates its existence in this country from Washington Lodge, No. 1, which was instituted at Baltimore, Md., April 26, 1819, under a charter obtained in England. A lodge had existed in New York prior to that time, but it had been disbanded. The Anti-Masonic excitement was a material aid to the introduction and permanent organization of the order, supplying, as it did, the loss which the Masons had sustained in the disbandment of their lodges, although it shared to some extent in the general distrust of secret societies. Its spread in New York was quite rapid until it was disrupted, in 1850, on the question of "new" and "old" constitution, and two State grand lodges were formed. Some years were spent in demoralization, but from this it has now fully recovered. Prior to this disruption the following lodges were organized in Orange County, viz.:

Highland Lodge, No. 65, at Newburgh, 1842.
 Orange County Lodge, No. 74, at Newburgh, 1842.
 Middletown Lodge, No. 112, at Middletown, 1844.
 Chester Lodge, No. 138, at Chester.
 Wawayanda Lodge, No. 157, at Goshen.
 Freeman's Lodge, No. 170, at Montgomery.
 Beacon Hill Lodge, No. 203, at Canterbury.
 Hudson River Lodge, No. 281, at Newburgh, 1847.
 Myrtle Degree Lodge, No. 20, at Newburgh, 1845.
 Mount Carmel Encampment, No. 21, at Newburgh, 1845.

Mount Hermon Encampment, No. 34, at Goshen.
 Kossuth Lodge, No. 129, at Newburgh, 1850, and Gray Court Lodge, at Chester, were organized after the disruption as "new" constitution lodges. With the exception of Highland, No. 65, all the Newburgh lodges perished. Middletown, No. 112, and Freeman's Lodge, No. 170, of Montgomery, also escaped the general wreck. Since the reorganization fifteen lodges have been established, including Highland, Middletown, Freeman's, and three Rebecca Degree Lodges.

CHAPTER XI.

BENCH AND BAR OF ORANGE COUNTY.

THE bench and bar of the county have, from the earliest period in its judicial history, been composed of men of the highest professional rank in the eras in which they lived, and of whom many have their names written indelibly upon the annals of the political and general history of the province and of the State. In preparing an abridged review the mere mention of names and dates is the only tribute which we can pay to the memory of many eminent in the profession in times past, while of others even our most complete sketches do not adequately convey an ample knowledge of their worthiness. Although a Court of Common Pleas and a Supreme Court were established in the original county in 1691, there is no record of proceedings until 1703, and it was some years later that the county had resident members of the legal profession. Indeed, there is an entire blank in existing records from 1703 to 1727, during which time litigation was apparently confined to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace or to courts held elsewhere. It is with this latter year, therefore, that we commence our review.*

1727.—HENRY WILEMAN. He was formerly a resident of New York, where he was a coroner, and in 1701 a register in chancery. In 1712, in company with one Henry Van Bael, he received a patent for a tract of land in what is now the town of Montgomery, on which he founded the township plot of Wilemantown, in which he lived and died. He was the first resident attorney of whom we find any record.

1729.—PHINEAS MCINTOSH. He was the holder of patented lands in the old precinct of the Highlands, his tract being in the original town of New Windsor. He was one of the partners in the township of Newburgh plot in 1731, and erected his residence there, which was known for many years as the "McIntosh house."

1734.—JOHN ALSOP. He located in New Windsor about 1724, and removed from the county about 1744. His son, John Alsop, Jr., was a member of the Continental Congress of 1776, but resigned on the adoption of the Declaration of Independence. His daughter was the mother of Governor John A. King.

1735.—JOHN CHAMBERS. He was the son of William Chambers, one of the resident holders of the Chambers and Southerland Patent in New Windsor in 1712. He removed to New York in 1730, where he was appointed member of the Governor's Council (1752-63) and associate judge of the Supreme Court (1751-66). His contemporary, Judge Jones, says of him, in his "History of New York," "Mr. Chambers had been regularly bred to the law in the province, in all the courts of which he had practiced for a long course of years, with universal applause and the fairest reputation as an honest, upright man. He was at this time (1760) one of His Majesty's Council. His religion was that of the Church of England, of which he was not only a zealous professor, but an ornament and an honor to the religion he professed."

1741.—VINCENT MATTHEWS. He was the son of Peter Matthews. He located in the present town of Cornwall in 1721, having purchased the Van Dam

* The year prefixed is that of admission to the bar of the county, as shown by the court records. In all cases the names of known non-residents of the county have been rejected.

Patent, to which he gave the name of Matthewsfield. He was clerk of the county from 1726 to 1733, and a judge of Common Pleas in 1733. He was also colonel of Orange County militia 1738-58.

1753.—FLETCHER MATTHEWS. He was a son of Vincent Matthews. Cadwallader Colden, Jr., of Coldenham, son of Governor Colden, was admitted the same year.

1759.—WILLIAM WICKHAM, Goshen.

1760.—DAVID MATTHEWS. He was also a son of Vincent Matthews. He removed to New York, where he was appointed mayor by Governor Tryon in 1776. He was the father of Vincent Matthews (2), who was admitted in 1790 and removed to Rochester, where he was regarded as the "father of the bar of Western New York."

1767.—GEORGE CLINTON. He was the son of Charles Clinton, who located in New Windsor in 1731. He studied with Judge William Smith; was appointed clerk of Ulster County; was the first Governor of the State under the constitution of 1777, and died while Vice-President of the United States. It may with truth be said of George Clinton that he was to the State of New York what Washington was to the nation. In early life he gave promise of great activity and courage; he left his father's house and sailed in a privateer in the French war, and on his return demanded and received a place in the expedition under his father and his brother against Fort Frontenac. At the close of the war he settled down to study under Judge Smith. In 1759 he was appointed clerk of Ulster County, but held that position for only about one year. He took an active part in colonial politics, and was elected to a seat in the Assembly in 1760, serving until the close of that body under the English government. In the discussions of that period no voice raised in the province was more consistent and firm in resisting the demands of the crown, nor was there of his contemporaries one whose energy and zeal was more devoted. In 1775 he was elected to the Continental Congress, and served in that body until after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, that instrument, however, failing to receive, under instructions from the Provincial Convention of New York, either his vote or his signature. He was appointed a brigadier-general in the army of the United States in 1776, and during the earlier years of the war was active in military affairs in New York, where he held, by virtue of appointment, commission as brigadier-general of militia; subsequently, by virtue of his office as Governor, he was commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the State. In the former capacity he was in the field with his brigade for the defense of New York City in 1776; and in the latter, held command of the forts in the Highlands at the time of their reduction by Sir Henry Clinton, Oct. 7, 1777, and marched to the defense of the Mohawk Valley in 1779. In April, 1777, he was elected Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, under the first constitution of the State, and was continued in the former office eighteen years. His duties were especially trying. The State was the battle-ground of the nation almost during the entire war of the Revolution; invasions of the enemy swept in on the north and on the south, while the western frontiers were ravaged by savages and Tories; yet during the darkest hours of the heroic struggle he held the helm with a firm hand and an inspiring courage. His duties after peace was established were not less trying, though of a different type; poverty and distress were in his borders, and crude laws required shaping to the changed political relations of the people. That his administration was wise no one will question. He was president of the convention assembled at Poughkeepsie to consider the Federal Constitution in 1788; was again chosen Governor in 1801, and in 1804 was elected Vice-President of the United States, which position he held, by re-election in 1808, at the time of his death. In a sketch of this character nothing like justice to his public services can be rendered. He married Cornelia Tappen, only daughter of Petrus and Tyante Tappen, of Kingston, Feb. 7, 1770, and immediately thereafter took up his residence in New Windsor, where he remained until October, 1777, when, on the fall of the Highland forts, he hastily removed to Little Britain, and from the latter place to Poughkeepsie in December. His children were Catharine, born in New Windsor, Nov. 5, 1770; Cornelia T., born in New Windsor, June 29, 1774; George W., born in Poughkeepsie, Oct. 18, 1778; Elizabeth, born in Poughkeepsie, July 16, 1780; Martha W., born in Poughkeepsie, Oct. 12, 1783; Maria, born in New York, Oct. 6, 1785.

1773.—William Thompson, Goshen.

WILLIAM THOMPSON was the son of William Thompson, who settled in the present town of Goshen at an early period. He was one of the representatives of the county in 1788, and was a State senator from 1797 to 1800. In 1788 he was appointed first judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the county, and held the office one term. Of his descendants we have no other information than that a daughter married Dr. Nathaniel Elmer, of Warwick, and had Dr. William Elmer, of Goshen; Dr. Nathaniel Elmer, of Denton; Jesse Elmer, of Bellvale, and a daughter who married Robert Armstrong.

John W. Smith, residence not known; Balthazar DeHart, Goshen. He was an active man in the early part of the Revolution.

1788.—James W. Wilkin, Goshen.

1790.—James Everett, Goshen; Phineas Bowman, Newburgh; Reuben Hopkins, Goshen; Samuel Boyd, New Windsor; Vincent Matthews (2), Cornwall; Thomas Cooper, Oliver L. Kerr.

PHINEAS BOWMAN served in the war of the Revolution as captain in a Massachusetts regiment, but was usually addressed by the title of colonel. He came to Newburgh with the army, and either remained here after its disbandment, as was the case with several of his contemporaries in the service, or returned here not long subsequent to that event. He was a man of high legal attainments; was admitted to practice in the courts of Ulster County in 1790; rose rapidly in his profession, and rendered his constituents valuable service, as a member of the Legislature of 1798, by securing the passage of the law erecting the present county of Orange. During the last few years of his life, however, he lost character and fortune by habits of intemperance; and his memory is now preserved only through the medium of anecdotes arising from occurrences in which he was a principal participant. The date of his death is not known. He left one daughter, Mary, who married Benjamin Anderson. His wife, Mary, died March 22, 1813, in her fifty-eighth year, universally esteemed by all who enjoyed her acquaintance.

SAMUEL BOYD was the son of Robert Boyd, the Revolutionary gun-maker of New Windsor. We believe he removed to New York.

1791.—Nicholas Evertson.

1792.—Solomon Sleight, Newburgh; John Wickham, Goshen.

1793.—George Clinton, Jr., son of Gen. James Clinton, of New Windsor; Benjamin Smith, Jr., Newburgh.

1794.—Abraham L. Smith.

1800.—Jonathan Fisk, Newburgh; Stephen Jackson, Newburgh; C. F. Smith, James F. Smith.

JONATHAN FISK, perhaps the most distinguished of the early lawyers of Newburgh, was born at Amherst, N. H., Sept. 26, 1773. He was the son of Jonathan Fisk, who subsequently resided at Williamstown, Vt., and became a member of the Legislature of that State, and judge of probate, as well as the founder of that branch of the family of which the late James Fisk, of Erie Railroad fame, was a member. He left the home of his father at the age of nineteen years, and commenced the occupation of school-teacher, qualified, according to a letter of recommendation signed by Moses Bradford, Dec. 12, 1792, to teach "writing, English grammar, and arithmetic." We next find him at Ware, N. H., in 1795, with a certificate stating that he had lived for several months in the family of Amos Wood, of that place, where he had "read Greek and Latin, and attended to other branches of study, by which he appeared well qualified to teach a school," and that he "maintained a good moral character." In 1796 or '97 he entered the office of Peter Hawes, in New York, and commenced the study of law. He was without other means of support than such as his own industry could furnish, but he was enabled to complete his studies by occasional remuneration for services as an amanuensis, and by giving instruction to a class of young men in the evening. In 1799 he was admitted to practice in the Court of Common Pleas of Westchester County; in 1800, in the Supreme Court of the State, and during the same year, in the Courts of Common Pleas of the counties of Orange and Ulster. In 1802 he was examined by Chief Justice Morgan Lewis, and "regularly admitted as a Counsellor of Law in all the courts of the State of New York." Mr. Fisk removed to Newburgh, Feb. 4, 1800. In 1809 he was elected representative in Congress from the Sixth District, which was composed of the counties of Orange and Westchester, and again in 1814. Parties were then known by the titles of Democrats and Federalists. Mr. Fisk was a Democrat, and an ardent supporter of the administrations of Jefferson and of Madison. While in Congress he sustained the war of 1812, opposed the recharter of the Bank of the United States, proposed a plan for a national printing-office, and during his whole career he commanded the confidence of his friends and the respect of his opponents.

In 1815 (March 21st) he was appointed by President Madison attorney for the United States in and for the Southern District of New York, and this appointment was renewed Jan. 6, 1816. He was very diligent and efficient in prosecuting those who evaded the law in regard to the sale of foreign merchandise without a license, and so exasperated did this class of offenders become that they threatened him with personal punishment. Failing to intimidate him, they appealed to Congress on a question of fees, for the purpose of securing his removal from office. The subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, who reported that, while Mr. Fisk's fees had been large, and in some instances unsustained by law, he had nevertheless been governed by the usage of the former incumbents of the office, and the subject died "on the table." He remained undisturbed until the expiration of Madison's administration, in 1820, when his successor was appointed.

As a citizen, Mr. Fisk was highly esteemed. The town records, the files of the public journals, and his own manuscripts bear testimony to the commanding position which he occupied, and to the superiority of his abilities. The most important legal cases were submitted to his care, while on the various local questions of the times his views received the highest consideration. In person, he was large, and of a presence that impressed all with whom he had intercourse with a sense of his superiority,—

"A combination, and a form indeed,
Where every God did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man!"

His wife was a lady of more than ordinary personal attractions, lively, witty, and not without fair literary abilities. His family record is as follows: Jonathan Fisk, born Sept. 26, 1773; died July 13, 1832. Sarah Van Kleek, wife of Jonathan Fisk, born March 18, 1773; died June 6, 1832. Children: Theodore S., found dead in the street in New York in 1854 or '55; James L., died at Pensacola in 1835; Delaphine R. E., married J. C. Bisbee, died July 22, 1846; Mary M., died June 8, 1822; and an infant son, who died at the age of two months.

1801.—Jonas Storey, Newburgh; Isaac Hamilton, Newburgh; William Ross, Newburgh.

JONAS STOREY was born in Norwich, Conn., July 11, 1778; died Sept. 22, 1848. He was a graduate of Williams College; taught school at Poughkeepsie, and from thence removed to Newburgh, where he maintained for forty years a distinguished place among the members of his profession. He was quite active in politics in the earlier part of his career, and the candidate for Congress of the Federal or anti-war party in 1814, against Jonathan Fisk, by whom he was overwhelmingly defeated. He gave no little attention to religious matters, so much so indeed that he might properly be called a theologian as well as a lawyer. He retired from the active duties of his profession a few years previous to his death, but the change was disastrous. His mind, released from its long routine of toil, appeared to turn inward upon itself, and reason forsook its throne. His wife was Mary, daughter of Isaac Schultz, of New Windsor. His children were,—1. Henry E., who married Rebecca Cook, is now deceased; 2. Edwin, who married Abbey Basset Clark, is now deceased; 3. Helen E., who married Orville M. Smith, is now deceased; 4. Mary B., who married Daniel Smith; 5. Nathan S., who married Harriet Smith, is now deceased.

WILLIAM ROSS, perhaps the most prominent member of the class admitted to the bar in 1801, was the son of Robert Ross, of Rossville, Newburgh. He was elected member of Assembly in 1808, 1809, 1811, 1812, 1813, 1814, and chosen Speaker of that body in February, 1811. During the same month he was appointed a master in chancery. Hammond, in his "Political History of New York," speaks of him as an "honest and kind-hearted man," and as being "sincerely and warmly attached" to the Democratic party; but affirms that he was vain and lacked real talent. In the absence of any knowledge upon the subject of Mr. Ross' qualifications, we cannot pronounce judgment for or against Mr. Hammond's criticism. Whatever may have been his failings he enjoyed the esteem and confidence of his constituents, who sufficiently attested their appreciation of him by transferring him from the Assembly to the Senate, where he served from 1815 to 1822, and while in that position was designated by the Assembly as a member of the Council of Apportionment, and served from 1816 to 1819. He died Sept. 5, 1830, in his fifty-fifth year. His wife (first), Mary S., daughter of John McLean, died March 31, 1812, aged twenty-six years. His eldest daughter, Mary McLean, married John F. Butterworth. His second wife was Caroline Middlebrook, of Connecticut.

1802.—Henry G. Wisner, Goshen; Walter Case, Newburgh.

HENRY G. WISNER.—Probably no name was more closely identified with the early history of Orange County in its relations to the New York Colony, for many years prior and subsequent to the Revolutionary war, in the early development of its material resources, and also as one of the founders of the American republic, than that of Henry Wisner, grandfather of our subject, son of Hendrick Wisner, the first settler of the family in Orange County about 1714, and grandson of Johannes Wisner, a subaltern officer in the Swiss contingent of the allied army commanded by the Prince of Orange against Louis XIV. of France, who came to America as a colonist, and settled on Long Island about the time of the Peace of Utrecht, concluded during the reign of Queen Anne, in 1713.

Henry Wisner married Miss Sarah Norton, of Queens Co., L. I., and settled in Goshen, N. Y., where he acquired property and weight of character. He was elected and continued a member of the Colonial Assembly of New York from 1759 to 1769; was a member of the first county committee to consider the grounds of difficulty between Great Britain and her American colonies; a member of the first Congress that convened at Philadelphia in the autumn of 1774, and signed the non-importation agreement; was elected, with Peter Clowes, at the annual town meeting held at Goshen, April 4, 1775, a delegate to the Provincial Convention in New York City, and by that body, on April 21, 1775, he was chosen one of the delegates to the Second Continental Congress, where he took part in its patriotic measures, including the wonderfully fortunate selection of a commander-in-chief of the American armies.

In 1775, feeling the disadvantage the colonies labored under for want of ammunition, he applied himself to those necessary arts of making saltpetre and gunpowder, and erected a powder-mill in the south end of Ulster County, which he soon after gave up to his son, Maj. Henry Wisner, and erected two other powder-mills in Orange County, in May, 1776.

By letters dated Dec. 21, 1775, and March 28, 1776, addressed to the Provincial Convention, he strongly recommended to the country at large the consideration of this important subject.

He was one of the committee appointed to report the first constitution of the State, and under it was chosen a State senator from the Middle District at the election in 1777, and served until 1782.

In January, 1778, he was one of a committee of four to repair to the Highlands to fix on the place for building fortifications; the result was the erection at West Point of Fort Arnold and its outworks, including Fort Putnam, the impregnable key to the strategic lines of the army of the Revolution.

After the triumphal close of the Revolution the only public service of Henry Wisner was in the New York Constitutional Convention of 1788, which ratified the United States Constitution.

Henry Wisner was a man, though without superior education, of a clear, strong mind, active and useful, devoted to his country, and very efficient in its early councils, trusted by his fellow-citizens, and the companion and friend of its leading patriots.

If his name has disappeared from the records of churches and the stones of graveyards, so that neither his birth nor death can be accurately fixed, and if it does not stand where it really belongs, among the original signers of the Declaration of Independence, it is not likely to be forgotten while many patriotic and honorable descendants remain, and while history still continues busy in hunting up the records of those whose hearts and lives contributed sensible support to the trembling tree of our national liberty when it was first planted and in danger from every breeze of selfish cowardice or calculating distrust.

In 1779, Henry Wisner lost his younger son, Lieut.-Col. Gabriel Wisner, in the battle of Minisink, whom, according to the account in Stone's "Life of Brant," that savage tomahawked after the battle.

Gabriel Wisner married Elizabeth Waters, and his three sisters were Elizabeth, wife of John Denton; Mary, wife of Phineas Helmes; and Sarah, wife of Moses Phillips.

Henry G., son of Gabriel and Elizabeth (Waters) Wisner, was born on the homestead near Goshen, in 1777. His wife was Sarah, daughter of Samuel and Phebe Talman, of New York, born in 1784, died in April, 1874, and whom he married in December, 1805.

Their children are William H.; Elizabeth, widow of John E. Phillips; Mary, wife of George C. Miller, of New York; Samuel T., died in infancy; Frances, wife of Hon. Ambrose Spencer Murray, of Goshen; Gabriel H., of New York; Sarah A., wife of Joseph

H. Coates, of New York; Alma T., died unmarried; George T., of Goshen; and Martha.

Mr. Wisner was prepared for college at Farmer's Hall Academy, Goshen, then conducted by the eminent teacher and lexicographer, Noah Webster, and was graduated at Princeton in the class of 1799, delivering the valedictory oration. He read law with George Griffen, Esq., of New York, was admitted to the bar in due course of time, and opened an office for the practice of his profession in that city.

About the year 1810, Mr. Wisner removed with his family, consisting of his wife and two children, and settled at Goshen, where he opened a law-office, and continued a successful practice until his death, which occurred Feb. 20, 1842. Soon after his settlement at Goshen he was elected county clerk, and was the incumbent of that office during the war of 1812.

As a member of the bar he stood among the first in his native county, while he had but few equals in the State. Possessed of a clear and lofty intellect, he was enabled to grapple successfully the most difficult questions of law; endowed with an unusual share of moral courage, he was induced on all occasions fearlessly to pursue the path of duty, regardless of popular favor, while a keen discrimination, with a graceful and convincing style in argument, rendered him a most able and successful advocate.

In the discharge of his duty to his client he never forsook the path of honor nor sought to take undue advantage of his adversary. His great legal knowledge, unbending integrity, and frank and honorable course won for him the respect and esteem of his brethren of the bar, and gave great weight to his opinions with the court.

As a citizen he was spirited and enterprising, always ready to contribute of his time, talents, and means to the advancement of the public interest and to the good of his fellow-men. The spirit of benevolence ever prompted him to acts of kindness and charity. To the indigent he was, indeed, a friend and a counselor, whose aid was never invoked in vain. The generous impulses of a noble heart were obeyed without ostentation.

As a Christian he was consistent, zealous, and devoted; and, in generous support and counsel, he was ever foremost in the promotion of every good work that would contribute to the advancement and prosperity of the church.

WALTER CASE, of Newburgh, was the son of Rev. Wheeler Case, of Dutchess County, who has some reputation among antiquarians through his "Revolutionary Memorials," embracing poems, published in 1778. He was member of Congress, 1819-21, and surrogate of the county, 1823-27. He removed from Newburgh to Fishkill, where he died. His wife was Sarah, daughter of Jonathan Hasbrouck (2), of Newburgh. His grandson, Walter C. Anthony, is a practicing attorney in Newburgh, and is now serving his second term as district attorney of the county.

1804.—William W. Brown, Washingtonville.

1805.—Charles Baker, Newburgh; John Duer, Goshen; Benjamin Anderson, Jr., Newburgh; Joseph J. Jackson.

BENJAMIN ANDERSON, JR., of Newburgh, had, we are told, his principal consequence from the fact that he married the daughter of Phineas Bowman. CHARLES BAKER and JOHN DUER were strong men, although Mr. Baker destroyed his opportunities through intemperance. He was a native of Windham Co., Conn. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1760, and immediately removed to Sullivan County, where he engaged in school-teaching. A few years later he became a student in the office of William Ross, at Newburgh, and after his admission to the bar returned to Sullivan County, and opened an office in Bloomingburgh. "He was," says Mr. Quinlan, "a man of undoubted talent, of more than average learning as a lawyer, and much addicted to original thought and expression. So unusual and amusing were his sayings that he was the central figure, to which all eyes were directed, in whatever society he appeared." His career is fully sketched in Mr. Quinlan's history. He removed from Sullivan County to Newburgh in 1835, and died there May 7, 1839.

JOHN DUER was one of the three sons of Col. William Duer, of the army of the Revolution, and was born at Albany, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1782. His mother (Col. Duer's wife) was Catharine Alexander, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Alexander (Lord Stirling), well known in Revolutionary annals. William A. Duer, the older brother of John, was a distinguished lawyer, and for many years judge of the Supreme Court circuit of the State of New York. At the age of sixteen years John Duer entered the army, but abandoned it after two years' service, and commenced the study of law at Goshen, whither his family had removed. Upon the completion of his studies he commenced the practice of his profession at Goshen, where he was subsequently joined by his brother, Alexander Duer, who lived but a few years, and left two daughters, now Mrs. J. V. Beane and Mrs. David F. Gedney. He removed from Goshen to New York about 1820, and soon took a prominent position at the bar of that city. Upon the passage of the law providing for a revision of the statutes of the State, he was appointed a member of the commission charged with that important work. He was elected a justice of the Superior Court of the city in 1849, and in 1857 became presiding justice. He was the author of a valuable treatise on the "Law and Practice of Marine Insurance," which is regarded as authority not only in the State, but by the bench and bar throughout the United States. He was also the author of other works on legal subjects, and the editor of a series of Superior Court Reports. His death occurred Aug. 8, 1858. In person he was of tall and commanding stature, a noble and highly intellectual countenance, and possessed rare powers of forensic eloquence. An extraordinary fluent delivery, great command of language, and a rich, full, deep-toned voice, with a dignified, noble carriage, imparted to his style of eloquence a most impressive effect. While a resident of this county his peculiar qualifications not only gave him high rank in his profession, but drew him into the politics of the times. In this field he unfortunately formed an alliance with the opponents of the war of 1812, and, notwithstanding his abilities, found himself in an overwhelmed minority. With others he sought to regain political standing by stepping to the front after the burning of the national capital (1815), but it was then too late. He was quite active in local undertakings, and gave tone to Goshen society through his family associations and his personal accomplishments. His wife was Annie Bunner, of the city of New York, sister to Rudolf Bunner, who was his first business partner after he located in Goshen. Another brother-in-law, Morris Robinson, the first cashier of the Bank of Orange County, was a son of Beverly Robinson, of the British army, whose father was Col. Beverly Robinson, one of the historic associates in the treason of Benedict Arnold.

EDWARD ELY was member of Assembly in 1815, and surrogate from 1815 to 1820.

1808.—JONATHAN COOLEY, Newburgh. He was a judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1815.

1809.—Hezekiah Belknap, Newburgh; Rudolf Bunner, Goshen.

HEZEKIAH BELKNAP was born in 1781, and died in 1814, his death following his election (April) to the next Assembly (1815), of which his name appears on the roll.

RUDOLF BUNNER, the associate of John Duer, removed to Newburgh and subsequently to Oswego. He was representative in Congress from the Oswego district, 1827-29.

1810.—Samuel R. Betts, Newburgh; Gilbert O. Fowler, Newburgh; David Ruggles, Newburgh; Beverly Kain, Montgomery; Aaron Belknap, Newburgh.

SAMUEL R. BETTS was circuit judge in 1823.

GILBERT O. FOWLER was son of Dr. David Fowler, of Newburgh. He graduated with honor at Columbia College, and subsequently pursued the study of law at Newburgh, with Solomon Sleight. He was licensed to practice in 1810; appointed master in chancery in 1816; judge of Orange Common Pleas in 1828, and first judge of that court (in place of Samuel S. Seward) in 1833. In the autumn of 1833 he was elected to the Legislature, and as a member of that body was instrumental in securing the passage of the charter of the Highland Bank, and also of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad. He was elected president of the Highland Bank on the organization of that institution, and occupied that position until his death. He also held several important military commissions: was aide-de-camp to Gen. Leonard Smith in 1813; quartermaster of Thirty-fourth Brigade in 1815; aide-de-camp to the major-general of the second division of infantry in 1816; brigade major and inspector in 1818; brigadier-general of Thirty-fourth Brigade in 1826 (elected in 1825); and major-general of Fifth Brigade in 1827. Few men enjoyed to a greater degree the confidence of his fellow-citizens or more worthily performed the duties of the public stations which he held. He died in 1843. His sons were Isaac V., lawyer of New York; James W., surrogate of the county, 1851; and David E., who served as quartermaster under Gen. Sherman. Isaac V. and David E. are now deceased.

AARON BELKNAP was of the old Belknap stock of Newburgh. Samuel R. Betts was associated with him in practice. Aaron Betts Belknap, of New York, recently deceased, was his only surviving son.

1811.—Joseph H. Jackson, Goshen; John Antill, Coldenham; John Neffie, Montgomery; David W. Bate, Newburgh; Charles White, Jr., Philo T. Rugles, Newburgh; Thomas Swezey, Goshen; Joseph Chattle, Mount Hope.

DAVID W. BATE was the most prominent lawyer of this group. Of his family history very little is known beyond the fact that he was son of James Bate, A. Q. G. of the army of the Revolution, and that he was born in Shawangunk, Ulster Co. During the war of 1812 he was appointed brigade-major in Gen. Hopkins' brigade, and went to the lines. The dissolution of the brigade destroyed his usefulness in that station, and he volunteered under Gen. Hampton. In an engagement with the enemy under Gen. Provost (Oct. 27, 1813) he was severely wounded, and recovered with considerable difficulty. On his return from the army he resumed practice with William Ross (Ross & Bate), and continued in his profession until a short time before his death, as the senior member of the firm of Bate & McKissock. He was for several terms supervisor of the town, and was especially useful as a member of the board in the matter of the construction of the present court-houses of the county. In 1847 he was elected county judge under the new constitution, and served with credit to his profession. His first wife was Harriet M. Isaacs; his second, Mrs. Polhamus, who survived him. He left no children, and the bulk of his property went to his nephew.

1813.—Samuel W. Eager, Montgomery; William W. Sackett, Newburgh; John B. Booth, Goshen.

SAMUEL W. EAGER was a native of Montgomery, and he commenced practice there. He was a man of excellent natural and acquired abilities, but having been unfortunately appointed a justice of the peace when a young man, he acquired habits of indolence that were his besetting sin through life. He was elected to Congress for the unexpired term of Hector Craig in 1830. This, aside from local stations,—postmaster at Newburgh, police justice of Newburgh, justice of the peace, etc.,—was his only public official service. As a man and a citizen his character was blameless. Through his "History of Orange County," prepared in 1847, his name and memory have been preserved in many households in his native county. His wife was Catharine, daughter of John McAuley, a merchant of Newburgh. He had four sons,—John M., who practiced law in Newburgh, St. Louis, and New York; Samuel W., now of Racine, Wis.; Frank, and another.

WILLIAM W. SACKETT removed from Newburgh to Sullivan County. He was more of a surveyor than a lawyer, and found in his new home successful employment.

JOHN B. BOOTH, of Goshen, is referred to in another connection. He was surrogate of the county from 1831 to 1840.

1814.—Peter F. Hunn, Newburgh; Charles Borland, Jr., Montgomery.

PETER F. HUNN was the son of John S. Hunn and Margaret Frenau, and was born May 20, 1794, at Mount Pleasant, N. J. His ancestor, on his father's side, was from Holland. His grandfather, Thomas Hunn, married Catharine Van Emburgh, daughter of Peregrin Van Emburgh and Amelia Provost, the latter daughter of Bishop John Provost. On his mother's side he was a descendant of André Fresneau (now Freneau), who, with a large number of French families, left France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, and settled in New Jersey. The editor and poet Freneau of the Revolutionary era was of this stock. He graduated at Columbia College, and studied law in the office of Nathan Sanford, afterwards chancellor of the State. His father having received the appointment of cashier of the Bank of Newburgh (1811), he removed to Newburgh with him and entered the office of Jonathan Fisk, where he remained until admitted to the bar, when he removed to Sullivan County and commenced the practice of his profession. He was subsequently surrogate, master in chancery, and district attorney of that county, the duties of which stations he ably and satisfactorily performed. He removed to Newburgh in 1837, where he remained until his death, pursuing his law practice and discharging the duties of justice of the peace. When not otherwise engaged he devoted attention to the construction and copying of maps, and perfected some which were valuable. He was a man of varied talents and attainments, and though he did not excel in any particular branch, he exhibited excellence in many. Had he not been a man of extreme modesty and diffidence—evils that formed a part of his very nature and attended him through life—he would have been eminently successful either as a lawyer or a surveyor. He enjoyed the respect of the community and all who had his acquaintance. He died July 31, 1847, in his fifty-fourth year. His wife was Maria T. Griffing, of Monticello, by whom he had five children,—Mary, Margaret, Catharine, Freneau (druggist in New York), and John T. (at one time clerk in Tradesmen's Bank).

CHARLES BORLAND, JR., of Montgomery, was a descendant of one of the early settlers (1738) of that town, and was for many years one of its most reputable citizens. He was surrogate in 1844, and special surrogate in 1855. In 1821, and again in 1836, he was elected member of Assembly.

1815.—Charles Monell, Goshen; Wheeler Case, Newburgh; Charles Humphrey, Newburgh; L. W. Ruggles; Samuel J. Wilkin.

CHARLES MONELL was a master and examiner in chancery in 1830. He practiced at Goshen for many years.

WHEELER CASE and L. W. RUGGLES are not known to have practiced law in the county, a remark which will apply to others who were admitted to the bar.

CHARLES HUMPHREY removed to Ithaca on the organization there of the Branch Bank of Newburgh, with which he was connected. He was member of Congress from the Tompkins district in 1825-27, and member of Assembly, 1834-36, 1842. His wife was Ann Eliza, daughter of Joseph and Sarah Belknap, of New Windsor, of which town his ancestor, John Humphrey, was one of the first settlers.

1816.—Leonard Mason; Charles H. Ruggles, Newburgh; Alexander T. Bodle, Goshen; Alexander Duer, Goshen; Archibald Smith, Montgomery.

LEONARD MASON removed to Poughkeepsie.

CHARLES H. RUGGLES was circuit judge in 1831; residence, Poughkeepsie.

ALEXANDER DUER was the brother of John Duer, and has already been spoken of.

ALEXANDER T. BODLE and ARCHIBALD SMITH enjoyed no special reputation.

1817.—George F. Tallman; Samuel G. Hopkins, Goshen.

1818.—Thomas McKissock, Newburgh; Albert S. Benton, Goshen; Alpheus Dimmick, Goshen; James Dill; Ogden Hoffman, Goshen.

THOMAS MCKISSOCK was the son of Thomas McKissock, of Ayrshire, Scotland, who settled in Montgomery prior to the war for independence. He was born in Montgomery about 1790, and at the proper age commenced the study of medicine. This profession he abandoned, however, for that of the law, and entered the office of Ross & Bate in 1815. Subsequently for many years he was associated with Judge Bate, his tutor, under the firm-name of Bate & McKissock. In 1847 he was appointed judge of the Supreme Court to close up the business of that court under the old constitution, and discharged the duties devolving upon him with great credit. In 1849 he was elected representative in Congress. Very few men enjoyed more fully the confidence of men of all parties, and none to whose legal opinions greater deference was conceded. Candor, ingenuousness, manliness, and moral integrity were predominant traits in his character. His wife was Elsie, daughter of Joseph Belknap (sister to Mrs. Charles Humphrey). She died in 1843. He had two children,—Thomas, who removed to St. Louis, and Sophia (Mrs. Lowden), who removed to Brooklyn. He died at St. Andrew's, aged seventy-sixty years, two months, and nine days.

OGDEN HOFFMAN.—The name of Ogden Hoffman deserves special notice among the eminent men who have conferred lustre upon the Orange County bar. Although for the last thirty years of his life a resident of the city of New York, he is justly claimed also by Orange County, from the fact that here he pursued his legal studies, and commenced his brilliant professional career. Ogden Hoffman was the son of another very eminent lawyer, Josiah Ogden Hoffman, and was born in the city of New York in the year 1793. He had commenced studying in his father's office when the war of 1812, between the United States and Great Britain, broke out, and at the first bugle-blast young Hoffman entered into the service of his country as a midshipman. He was the favorite midshipman and aide to the gallant Decatur, and acquitted himself so bravely as to have merited the highest encomiums of that brave commander and his fellow-officers. He was on board of the "President" with Decatur, in January, 1815, when she was attacked by the "Endymion," "Pomona," "Taredos," and "Majestic," not far from the port of New York, and after an eight hours' fight compelled to surrender. Hoffman was sent to England as a prisoner, and was there confined for six months. He subsequently served under Decatur in the United States frigate "Guerriere" (forty-four guns), in the war with the Algerines. In the battle with the Algerine ship, the "Mesora" (sixty-four guns), June 16, 1815, he was second in command of the cutter which first boarded the Algerine, and with his comrades was fighting the enemy on his own decks when the other cutters came to their assistance. On leaving the navy he came to Goshen, and pursued his legal studies under John Duer, and immediately upon his admission to the bar took a high stand in his profession. He was soon appointed district attorney of Orange County (1823), and also represented that county in the State Legislature as member of Assembly for one term (1826). In 1826 he removed to the city of New York, where his brilliant talents soon commanded for him the highest position. He at first became a law partner of Hugh Maxwell. In 1828 he was elected a member of the State Legislature for New York City, and rendered material services in the revision of the statutes. From 1829 to 1836 he held the office of district attorney by appointment of the New York Common Council. He was then elected to Congress, and served two terms in the House of Representatives. In 1841 he was appointed to the office of United States district attorney for the Southern District of New York by President Harrison. Again, in 1848, he was elected to Congress, and subsequently filled the office of attorney-general of the State from 1854 to 1855. His active and useful career was terminated, May 1, 1856, by death. Mr. Hoffman had no equal as an eloquent advocate, and combined in his composition all those engaging qualities of heart and mind which make up the character of the true gentleman. No man ever was more heartily loved by his fellows, or more sincerely mourned. During his residence in Goshen he married Emily, daughter of Jonathan Burrill, who at that time was cashier of the Orange County Bank. She was one of three sisters very celebrated in their day for their beauty and attractions, one of whom, Frances, married Murray Hoffman, and the other, Caroline, became the wife of Henry Hone. The son of Mr. Hoffman, Ogden Hoffman, Jr., is United States district judge in California, and a second is Charles Burrill Hoffman, now living in the city of New York.

ALBERT S. BENTON was county clerk in 1838. Concerning him we have no other information.

1822.—Gabriel W. Ludlum, Goshen; John W. Knevels, Newburgh; John W. Brown, Newburgh.

JOHN W. KNEVELS was the son of Dr. Adrian Knevels, of Santa Cruz, W. I., and came hither with his father, whose family was composed of John W., Isaac, Augustus, Granville, and Maria. He studied law under William Ross, and was for a time associated with him. Subsequently he gave no little attention to horticulture, established a nursery, and published a monthly under the title of Tablets of Rural Economy. He also edited the Newburgh Gazette, and embellished his editorial articles with Greek types. He failed in 1737, and removed to Fishkill, where he died. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Daniel Cromeline Verplanck, and sister of Gulian C. Verplanck.

JOHN W. BROWN was the strong man of the class of 1822. He was born at Dundee, Scotland, Oct. 11, 1796; was brought to this country in 1801 by his father, who settled first in Putnam County, but soon after removed to what is now known as West Newburgh, where he conducted a fulling-mill. Receiving a good common-school education, but evincing studious habits and an inclination for the profession of law, he entered the office of Jonathan Fisk. For a time, both before and after his admission to the bar, he took considerable interest in military matters, became captain of the "Bell-Button Company," and subsequently colonel of the militia of the district. He was early appointed justice of the peace, and from 1821 to 1825 was clerk of the board of village trustees. In 1832 he was elected member of Congress, and re-elected in 1834. He was a faithful, but not especially a brilliant, representative. In the political discussions following his last election he became a strong opponent of the "Albany Regency," which controlled the Democratic party. The Constitutional Convention of 1846 was the outgrowth of this discussion, and in that Convention he took an active part as one of the delegates from Orange County. In 1849 he was elected justice of the Supreme Court for the Second Judicial District for the term of eight years. In November, 1857, he was re-elected, and served an additional term of eight years, the last years of each term having been spent as an associate judge of the Court of Appeals. Not one of his decisions as judge was ever reversed by the Court of Appeals, notwithstanding the fact that in several instances doubtful and intricate points of law were involved. His decision in the case of the seven million canal loan was especially in opposition to a strong element in public opinion. Distinguished as he was as an advocate, he became far more distinguished as a judge. In many respects he was peculiar. Very few men had a keener appreciation of the value of money than he, and it was for this reason that he was a moderate man in his charges for legal services, and equally moderate in his expenditures. Penurious he never was,—the rapacity of many was not in his composition; had it been, abundant wealth, instead of a simple competency, would have resulted from his practice. He was a gentleman in the strictest sense, and all his business intercourse with his fellow-men was marked by the most thorough integrity. A strong man when aroused in any emergency,—one who could sway a jury and awe a mob,—he was remarkably kind and sensitive. His wife was Eliza, daughter of Selah Reeve. Chas. F. Brown, at present judge of the County Court, is his son.

SAMUEL JONES WILKIN.—The progenitor of the Wilkin family in Orange County, N. Y., of whom the subject of this sketch is great-grandson, was John Wilkin, who was of Welsh birth, and settled at or near Enniskillen, Ireland, soon after the conquest of that country by William, Prince of Orange, in 1688. In 1728, with his wife and three children, William, James, and Ann, he settled in the town of Shawangunk, Ulster Co., N. Y. (now town of Montgomery, Orange Co.), on a tract of 500 acres of land. He had born to him, after his arrival in America, children,—John, George, Joseph, Jason, Jane, Elizabeth, Lydia, Mary, and Susan. He died in the occupation of his farm.

William, eldest son, born Jan. 20, 1720, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Rogers, who married a Miss Ogden, and who removed from Rye, Westchester Co., and settled in Walkill, when their daughter was young.

After his marriage William Wilkin settled in Walkill. He was a man of limited education, but possessed a strong mind, a retentive memory, and in those days of real log cabins he was very much esteemed by his neighbors, and often served them in settling their accounts when difficulties arose among them.

He reared a large family of children, who married with members of the oldest and most respectable families of Orange County, and many of their descendants have been prominent and influential members of society. The family of William Wilkin were among the early members of the Creeder Church at Neelytown.

The children of William Wilkin were Sarah, John, William, Jane, Daniel, George, Gen. James W., Robert, Joseph, and Elizabeth, most of whom lived to old age.

One brother of William Wilkin, George, was taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery, and died in the old Sugar-House prison in New York during the Revolutionary war.

Gen. James W., son of William Wilkin, was an influential citizen and lawyer during the early days of the Republic, and was prominently identified with the civil, political, and military history of Orange County nearly his whole life. He was graduated at Princeton under President Witherspoon.

He was appointed captain-lieutenant of a company of artillery in a brigade of Orange County militia, July 3, 1787, by Governor Clinton, and again March 16, 1792. He was appointed by the same Governor lieutenant-colonel of a regiment of artillery, May 19, 1803, and subsequently, by Governor Morgan Lewis, brigadier-general of the Second Brigade of Artillery.

He was appointed an attorney in the Ulster County Court of Common Pleas in 1789 by Judge Derk Wyn Koop, having been admitted to practice law in Orange County the previous year.

He was State senator from the Middle District in 1801, 1802, 1803, 1804, '11, 12, '13, and '14, and by virtue of his position as senator he was elected by the Assembly a member of the "Council of Appointment," Jan. 30, 1802, again on Jan. 30, 1811, and a third time Jan. 12, 1813.

He was a member of Assembly from Orange in 1808, 1809, and for the latter session was chosen speaker of the House.

Gen. Wilkin was president of the Legislative caucus which nominated De Witt Clinton for President of the United States, and was a member of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Congresses of the United States from Orange, and after the close of his Congressional career he served Orange County from 1819 to 1821 inclusive as county clerk, and also for several years as county treasurer.

He was a candidate against Rufus King for the United States Senate, and was defeated for the nomination by a single vote.

He was a large man of fine presence. He was a man of strictly moral character and temperate habits, and was one of the pillars of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, of which he was for many years an elder. He was exceedingly courteous and polite in manners, and generally amiable, although possessing a terrible temper when aroused. He was always deferential to the ladies, for whom in general he entertained the highest respect.

His wife was Hannah, daughter of Roger Townsend, of Goshen, who bore him the following children: William, a private secretary of one of the Governors of the State; James W.; Eliza Maria, wife of Wheeler Case, a lawyer at Goshen, and surrogate of Orange, 1823-27; Sally, who died unmarried; Caroline, wife of Hull Tuthill, a lawyer at Goshen, and after his death wife of John W. A. Brewster, of Maine, who died, leaving an only son, Rev. Charles A. Brewster, of Newark, N. J.; Samuel J., subject of this sketch; Frances, wife of John I. Thompson, of Goshen, who has one son, Rev. J. J. Thompson, a graduate of Princeton College.

Samuel J., son of Gen. James W. Wilkin, was born at Goshen, Dec. 17, 1793, and died March 11, 1866, in his native place, where he resided his whole life, except a short time, about the year 1838, spent in the city of New York, where he resided and practiced his profession; but owing to failing health he was obliged to return to his native county.

He married, July 18, 1816, Sarah G., daughter of Col. David M. Westcott, one of the early journalists of Goshen. She was born May 29, 1796.

Their children were Mary, wife of Joseph G. Ellis, of Mobile, born Oct. 14, 1817, died shortly after her marriage, Oct. 10, 1842; Col. Alexander, born Dec. 1, 1819, was a lawyer in New York City. He served as captain in the Mexican war, and in 1849 settled at St. Paul, Minn., and resumed the practice of the law. He was there appointed Secretary of the Territory, and held the office until the incoming of President Pierce's administration in 1853. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion in 1861 he was elected to the captaincy of the first company of the first regiment raised in the State for the war; for gallantry at the battle of Bull Run was made captain in the regular army; subsequently was appointed major in the Second Regiment, then its lieutenant-colonel, and upon the organization of the Ninth Regiment he was appointed, by Governor Ramsey, its colonel, which position he was gallantly filling at the time of his death, although acting, as he had done for some time, as a brigadier-general. He was a brave soldier and an accomplished gentleman, and was killed July 14, 1864, at the battle of Tupelo, Miss.

The remaining children were Charles, born Jan. 9, 1822, was killed accidentally while out hunting, Oct. 22, 1839; Westcott, born Jan. 4, 1824, a graduate of Princeton in the class of 1843, is now serving his third term, of seven years each, as judge of the District Court of Minnesota, and was a candidate on the minority ticket for chief justice of that State in 1874; William, born March 20, 1826, died May 12, 1839; Samuel Jones, died young; Hannah, born July 23, 1829, died May 22, 1839; and Sarah Westcott, born Jan. 2, 1838, is the wife of Roswell C. Coleman, a lawyer of Goshen, who, as a member of the "American Rifle Team" which visited Ireland in 1875, took first rank among the marksmen of the world.

John G. McArthur

In the profession to which Samuel J. Wilkin devoted most of his active life, he was eminent as a successful and eloquent advocate, an able and a learned and skillful lawyer. He was all through his life marked as a man of sterling virtues and high-toned integrity of principle. None who knew him well could doubt either the incorruptible honesty or the stainless honor of the man.

He was carefully and thoroughly educated, and graduated at Princeton College before reaching his majority. He studied law with his father, was appointed an attorney, Oct. 26, 1815, by Hon. Smith Thompson, chief justice of the Supreme Court, and counselor and solicitor by Chancellor Kent, Feb. 1, 1822.

He very soon attracted notice by his skill as an advocate, and at an age when most young men are climbing slowly up the first steps of the ladder of distinction he had already won an enviable reputation as a member of the bar of his native county. His first efforts were made against some of the ablest and most eloquent men of the State, and he was successful.

While still a young man he devoted much attention to political matters, and became a leader of his party in the county. He was elected member of Assembly in 1824-25, when such an election was sought by the ablest men, and held a high position for talent in that body.

He was engaged mainly after this in his professional labors at Goshen until he was elected a member of the Twenty-second Congress of the United States, where he served with honor. He resumed his practice after the close of his term in Congress, which he continued until 1848-49, when he served as State senator, and in that body became the acknowledged head and leader of his party. His record in the senate journal is bright with exhibitions of eloquence and talent of a high order.

This was the end of Mr. Wilkin's official career, except to serve as canal appraiser, appointed July 1, 1850.

In 1844, Mr. Wilkin was a candidate for Lieutenant-Governor of the State on the Whig ticket, with Millard Fillmore as candidate for Governor, but the Locofoco ticket prevailed that year, and Silas Wright and Addison Gardner were elected for these offices.

The talents of Mr. Wilkin were of a high order as an advocate, and some of his addresses to juries in important cases were fine specimens of professional skill and impassioned eloquence.

He was a ripe and sound lawyer, and had carefully studied and mastered the foundation principles on which the science of the law reposes.

He brought into the practice of the profession the highest style of integrity, and never swerved from it under the presence of temptation.

He was a close classical student, and found time to pursue the studies which had delighted his youth in the midst of his professional labors. He studied the principles of government and politics with great care and eminent success, and always took a deep interest in public affairs. He was a man eminently simple in his tastes, manners, and habits of life, kind and genial in his intercourse, and a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, of which he served for many years as elder.

JOHN G. WILKIN.—William, son of William Wilkin referred to in the sketch of Samuel J. Wilkin, and brother of Gen. James W. Wilkin, was grandfather of our subject, succeeded to a part of the homestead in Walkill, now Hamptonburgh, containing 200 acres, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits during his life, and then died about 1823 aged seventy-four years. He commanded a company of militia during the Revolutionary war, and appears to have acted as a minute man, ready to be called out for service upon the shortest notice.

His wife, Sarah Crans, was of Huguenot stock, her ancestors settling in Ulster County, from Holland. Both were buried in the old graveyard at Neelytown, where they were members of the church.

Their children were John, Joseph, Adam, Daniel, Marshall, Mary (wife of Gawn Mackinson), Sally (wife of Adam Shafer), Esther (wife of Benjamin Hornbeck), Susan (wife of Luther Hornbeck), and Eliza, who married a Mr. McKinney.

Of these children, Daniel, father of Judge John G. Wilkin, was born in 1784, and died in 1850. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812 on Staten Island.

For five years following his marriage he resided in Shawangunk, Ulster Co., after which time until his decease he resided upon a part of the homestead of his father, to which he succeeded by inheritance. He led a quiet and uneventful life as a farmer, was never ambitious for political place in his town, was a promoter of religious work and good society, and both himself and wife were members of the Associate Reformed Church at Neelytown, of which his ancestors had also been members, and afterwards of the Covenanters Church at Coldenham.

His wife was Harriet, daughter of John B. Haines, of Coldenham, Orange Co., formerly from Connecticut, afterwards from Long Island, and whose ancestors were of English birth. She died in 1870, aged seventy-six years.

Their children are Susan A., widow of John A. McWilliams, of Elmira; Abbey (deceased), was the wife of Cornelius Hornbeck, of Ulster County; Judge John G.; Moses B.; Daniel F., a lawyer in Nashville, Tenn.; and Joseph M., a lawyer at Montgomery, Orange Co.

Judge John G. Wilkin was born Oct. 22, 1818. As early as eight years of age young Wilkin, under the advice of his teacher, was set to learning the rudiments of the Latin language, with the supposed intention of his parents of eventually preparing him for the ministry. This study he pursued diligently for four years, and made such rapid progress that, under the old preparatory course, he had read as far as Horace when his teacher removed to other parts, and for the time being the Latin was virtually abandoned. For several years afterwards he remained at home engaged in farm work. At the age of seventeen he was called from Montgomery Academy, where he was attending school, to take charge of the school at home as teacher, which he successfully conducted, and for a part of three years thereafter further prosecuted his studies at the academy, going from home daily on horseback and on foot, a distance of four miles. He was subsequently a teacher at Monticello, N. Y., and while there, in 1838, began the study of law in the office of Judge Wm. B. Wright, of that place, who afterwards became a judge of the Supreme Court and of the Court of Appeals in this State. After two years' study with Judge Wright, Mr. Wilkin became a law student with Gen. A. C. Niven, of Monticello, one of the most eminent lawyers of the State, where he completed his law studies, and was admitted to the bar at the October term of the Supreme Court, held at Rochester, N. Y., in 1842. He was admitted as counselor in 1845.

On the 16th of January, 1843, following his admission as attorney, he opened a law-office in Middletown, where he has continued the successful practice of his profession since, a period of thirty-eight years.

Mr. Wilkin was appointed brigadier judge-advocate of artillery in 1842, and served until the militia system of the State was abolished. He was appointed an examiner in chancery by Governor Bouck in 1843, and held the office until it was abolished by the new constitution in 1846. He was elected, and was the first special county judge of Orange County under the law creating that office, and was elected and held the office of county judge from 1852 to 1856; was one of five commissioners on every commission chosen to assess damages in the construction of the Hudson River Railroad from Greenbush to and below Castleton, and is the attorney of the North River Railroad Company.

Judge Wilkin has been a director of and attorney for the Middletown Bank (now Middletown National Bank) since 1849; vice-president since 1855, and for some time was its acting president. He was one of the charter members of the Middletown Savings-Bank, and has been one of its board of trustees and attorney for the bank since its organization.

He was appointed revenue collector of the Eleventh District of New York upon the creation of the office in 1861, and held the office until 1869, when he resigned.

Judge Wilkin was among the foremost and most active in Orange County, during the late civil war, in raising and equipping troops for service, and gave his full support in time and means for the Union cause.

He married, Feb. 20, 1850, Louisa, daughter of Nathaniel Cooley, of Middletown.

Their children are John, studied law with his father, was admitted to the bar in 1876, and is practicing his profession in his native village; Dr. Charles H. was graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, subsequently at the New York Hospital, and is a successful practitioner of medicine and surgery in New York City.

Judge Wilkin is a man of positive and progressive views, and he has always had the courage of his convictions. He has never hesitated to espouse a cause if convinced that it was right, and he has never persisted in it through false pride if satisfied that he was wrong. Though the bent of his intellect inclines him to consider public questions in their broader aspects, and with reference to their remote and ultimate bearings, he has never been a mere theorist or doctrinaire. On the contrary, his prudent counsels and practical sagacity have always commanded the respect and influenced the judgment of his fellow-citizens.

Judge Wilkin is an eminently successful lawyer. His aid is sought in every important case which arises in his community. At the same time he has never aimed to promote vexatious and expensive litigation, and he possesses the entire confidence of his clients, of the courts, and of the public.

JOSEPH M. WILKIN.—Mr. Wilkin is descended from a family who represent four distinct nationalities, the German, French, Irish and Scotch, a detailed account of which is given in the sketch of Samuel J. Wilkin in this work. His grandfather, William Wilkin, was a resident of Hamptonburgh township, in Orange County, where his life was spent in farming pursuits and where his death occurred.

Among his large family of children was Daniel, who was born on the homestead and inherited his father's love for agricultural employments. He located in Hamptonburgh, and was married to Miss Harriet Haines, daughter of David Haines, of Montgomery. To this marriage six children were born,—John G., Moses B., Daniel F., Joseph M., and two daughters, Susan (Mrs. McWilliams) and Abbie (Mrs. Hornbeck), now deceased.

The birth of Joseph M. occurred April 18, 1828, at the paternal home in Hamptonburgh, where he remained until his fourteenth year, meanwhile turning his willing hands to farm labor or devoting his time to study at the district school. Being desirous to acquire a more thorough education than was possible within the confines of his own township, he entered the academy at Montgomery, and there prepared for college, having been admitted to the junior class of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1846, from which he was graduated in 1848, standing fifth in his class, and becoming a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society. He soon after engaged in teaching at the Kinsley Mathematical and Classical School at West Point, where three years were spent. Later the principalship of the academy at Montgomery was accepted, where an additional three years was passed

J. M. Wilkin

Geo. M. Grier

The ancestors of the Grier family were of Scotch origin, fled to the north of Ireland during the persecution of the Presbyterians in Scotland, and the grandfather of Maj. Grier, a Presbyterian minister, is supposed to be the progenitor of the family in Orange County, and who is known to have resided and preached in Wilmington, Del. His son was Rev. Thomas Grier, a well-known Presbyterian clergyman of Lancaster, Pa., who settled as pastor at Westtown, Orange Co., in 1808, where he preached for many years, and about 1836 died in his pulpit at Cold Spring, Putnam Co., N. Y.

The children of Rev. Thomas Grier were William; Maj. George M.; Smith, was a merchant in Chambersburg, Pa., where he died about 1870; Hon. Thomas Evans, a merchant at Pittston, Pa., has been several terms a representative in the State Legislature; Washington Decatur, was a physician, and died in Kentucky; Jane, was the wife of John Wallace, of Milford, Pa.; and John D. Grier, of Chambersburg, Pa., a merchant, and connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Maj. George M., son of Rev. Thomas Grier, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., Sept. 27, 1802, and was therefore six years of age when his parents settled in Orange County. His early education was received under the careful instruction of his father. At the age of eighteen he began the study of law with Hon. I. R. Van Duzer, a prominent lawyer of Goshen, was admitted to practice as an attorney at the October term of the Supreme Court in 1826, and was associated until 1834 with Mr. Van Duzer in law practice.

He was appointed surrogate of Orange County by Governor William H. Seward, Feb. 7, 1840, and creditably discharged the duties of that office for several years. Being related to the Seward family by marriage, he was made one of the executors of the late Samuel S. Seward's will, and had the principal charge of the estate.

He was appointed major in the old State militia by Maj.-Gen. Gilbert O. Fowler, of Newburgh, by which title he was familiarly known to the people of Goshen. He had a fondness for agricultural pursuits, and spent considerable time in the management of his farm, which lay just outside the limits of the village. He was, from its organization, a director of the Goshen National Bank, a trustee and member of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, and for nearly forty years officiated as clerk of the board of trustees.

Maj. Grier was a liberal, public-spirited citizen, and highly respected for his integrity and frankness in all the business relations of life. He was prominently identified with local and State politics, and was chosen to fill many places of trust and responsibility at home. He was chosen a delegate to the Pittsburg Convention that placed Gen. Fremont in nomination for the Presidency of the United States in 1856, and he was also chosen one of the Presidential electors of New York at the November election in 1860. Maj. Grier died Dec. 20, 1878. His wife was Frances, daughter of Freegift and Elizabeth (Sweezy) Tuthill, of Goshen, whom he married Aug. 7, 1833. She was born Jan. 16, 1804, and died Feb. 7, 1860. Her mother, Elizabeth Sweezy, was a niece of the late Judge Samuel S. Seward, and cousin of Hon. William H. Seward. Her father, Freegift Tuthill (for many years a merchant in Goshen), was son of Joshua and grandson of Freegift Tuthill, who was born on Long Island, Aug. 8, 1698, married Abigail Goldsmith, who bore him three sons and one daughter, and removed to Orange County about the year 1733 with his family. In the history of Cornwall and Blooming-Grove, members of the Tuthill family are mentioned as taking an active part in the public affairs of the towns as early as 1765-67.

The last-named Freegift Tuthill was a son of John, and grandson of John Tuthill, who was born July 16, 1635, and is supposed to have been the progenitor of the family on Long Island from England.

The surviving children of Maj. Grier are George and Thomas E., merchants in Goshen, and two daughters, Mary and Frances.

as instructor. Mr. Wilkin having determined upon the choice of a profession, entered the National Law School at Poughkeepsie, then a popular institution under the direction of John W. Fowler, from which he graduated in 1854, having previously studied under the direction of Robert Proudfit, Esq., of Newburgh. At a general term of the Supreme Court held at Newburgh, N. Y., in June, 1854, he was admitted to practice in all the courts of the State of New York.

In October of the same year he removed to the South, and having been admitted to practice in all the courts of Tennessee, located at Nashville in that State. Here he became extensively engaged in professional labor, and remained thus employed until 1861. Mr. Wilkin was an unflinching advocate of the cause of the Union, and popular feeling throughout the South at the opening of the late war rendered a further residence at Nashville impracticable. He returned to Montgomery, and was, Nov. 6, 1861, married to Miss Catherine, daughter of Harvey D. Copley, of Montgomery. Their children are Louise C., John Flavel, Harriet and Joseph M.

During the year 1865 the company was organized for the construction of the Montgomery and Erie Railroad, of which Mr. Wilkin was elected president.

He devoted his energies for two years to the building of this road, of which he was general superintendent until 1872, and is still the efficient president. He, in 1871, resumed professional labor in Montgomery, and is now engaged in active practice. He is also a director of the National Bank at Walden.

Mr. Wilkin is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party in politics. He was educated in the faith of the Presbyterian denomination, and still worships with that church.

1823.—Daniel H. Tuthill, Goshen; Isaac R. Van Duzer, Goshen.

ISAAC R. VAN DUZER.—The late Hon. Isaac Reeve Van Duzer was born in the town of Cornwall, Orange Co., May 8, 1802. His father, Isaac Van Duzer, was of the old Dutch blood that first settled this State, and was one of the prominent business men of that locality, and possessed many of the same strong elements of mind and character afterwards displayed by his son. His mother's name was Keturah Reeves. After receiving a good academic education, Isaac R. Van Duzer studied law with William A. Seely, Esq., a distinguished lawyer of New York City, and was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court, Aug. 15, 1823. He was rarely gifted both in mind and person for the honorable profession which he had chosen, and soon found that he had made no mistake in his choice. He commenced the work of his profession at his native place, but partly influenced by a desire for a more central field of action, and partly influenced by the friendship of Gen. George Wickham, the president of the Orange County Bank at that time, he moved to Goshen, the county-seat, about 1826. He was married Dec. 14, 1826, to Annie E. Gedney, daughter of Dr.

Gedney, of Newburgh, and shortly afterwards he purchased the old Hurtin homestead of Mr. Aspinwall, of New York, where he resided for the rest of his life, and where his family still live. He soon took and retained a commanding position in his profession, and his practice extended through this county and the neighboring counties on all sides. For some years the late Hon. George M. Grier was associated in business with him. In 1833 he became one of the firm of Van Duzer & Sharpe, associating with himself William F. Sharpe, Esq., who still survives him as the Nestor of the county bar. He served as district attorney for some years, resigning the office in 1835. He is said to have been equally at home in his office-work and before the courts, and to have been able to dictate two bills in chancery by alternate lines at the same time. He was one of the original incorporators of the Orange County Mutual Insurance Company. He was one of the directors of the Orange County Bank, and a vestryman of St. James' Episcopal Church for many years.

Mr. Van Duzer, soon after his entrance into professional life, commenced to take a strong personal interest in the politics of the day, and was closely and prominently identified with the local political movements. He possessed, in a rare degree, the gift of oratory, and whether presenting a technical point of legal logic, or entreating with a jury for the life of his fellow-man, or debating the political questions of the day, he is said to have been equally ready and successful. He represented his district in the State Assembly during the sessions of 1832 and 1833, and there made conspicuous his abilities of tongue and pen. In the session of 1833, as chairman of the committee on Ways and Means, he made a report on the subject of the State canals and the proper disposition of the revenues arising from them.

His position on this and other questions brought him into collision with the powerful Albany regency who then controlled the policy of the State government. He was fearless and outspoken in his able denunciations of what he believed to be the mismanagement of the public funds and other matters, and the regency in return made open war upon him through their organs in Albany and Orange County.

In view of the personal and bitter nature of these attacks, Mr. Van Duzer felt called upon to vindicate himself by legal proceedings, and he finally succeeded in fully punishing his assailants both at home and in Albany. In 1834 the Whig ticket, on which he was a candidate for re-election, was defeated in State and county.

Some years before this Mr. Van Duzer had been identified with the administration party. In 1832, President Jackson had vetoed the bill which had passed Congress extending the charter of the United States Bank, and in 1833 had caused the removal of public funds from that bank to certain State banks. These measures gave rise to great public excitement at the time. Whatever may be concluded by the disinterested student of history as to the justice of the President's opposition to the United States Bank, there seems to be little doubt of the great injustice of the arbitrary methods pursued by him in attacking it. This alienated many supporters of the President and strengthened the opposing party. About this time Mr. Van Duzer became one of the prominent leaders among the Whigs or anti-regency men of this county. With him in this movement may be grouped, among others, Gen. Wickham, George M. Grier, Albert S. Benton, Judge Fullerton, and Joseph Davis.

He lived to see the party of his later choice become triumphant in State and nation, for William H. Seward, formerly of this county, was elected Governor in 1839, and a Whig President, Harrison, was elected in 1840.

Mr. Van Duzer died of consumption, Nov. 27, 1841, in the fortieth year of his life. It is the unanimous verdict of those living who remember him that he would probably have attained very high public honors if his life and health had been prolonged to the years of old age. The general impression of those now living who were brought into personal contact with him is, that he was one of the most impressive and magnetic men of his day, that he was an orator of rare powers of eloquence and logic and gifted with a magnificent voice, that he was studious, painstaking, and honorable in the practice of his profession, and withal one of the most successful lawyers that Orange County has known.

He left surviving him five children,—Charlotte, who married the late J. W. Gott, Esq.; Kitty, who married Henry Strong, Esq., now president of the Bank of Green Bay, Wisconsin; George W., who died in early manhood; the Hon. G. Gedney, a promising young lawyer, who died in 1859; and Isaac R., who became a merchant in New York City, and died in 1875.

1824.—Theodore S. Fisk, Newburgh; James D. Bull, Philip Millspaugh, Montgomery.

1825.—Agricola Wilkin, Goshen; Abraham Crist, Montgomery; E. C. Sutherland, Cornwall; James G. Clinton, Newburgh; Benjamin H. Mace, Newburgh.

BENJAMIN H. MACE, although an active politician, had little legal practice. He was postmaster of Newburgh, and an inspector of State prisons. He also held several local positions. In his latter years he devoted attention to real estate and to grape culture. He died Nov. 21, 1879, in his seventy-seventh year.

JAMES G. CLINTON was the son of Gen. James Clinton, of New Windsor, and half-brother to DeWitt Clinton. He was a master in chancery, and a representative in Congress. He died May 28, 1849, in his forty-fifth year.

E. C. SUTHERLAND was for many years in successful local practice at Cornwall.

ABRAHAM CRIST removed to Williamsburgh.

1826.—William C. Hasbrouck, Newburgh; George M. Grier Goshen.

WILLIAM C. HASBROUCK was a descendant of Abraham Hasbrouck, who settled at New Paltz in 1675. He was born Aug. 23, 1800; married Mary E., daughter of William Roe, June 28, 1831; died November, 1870. He graduated at Union College at the same time William H. Seward was an undergraduate, and soon after removed to Franklin, Tenn. where he became principal of the academy founded by Bishop Otey. Among his pupils and friends there were many then and since distinguished in the history of the nation, among whom were John Bell, Sam Houston, Felix Grundy, Andrew Jackson, and Matthew F. Maury. Returning to the North, he became principal of the Farmers' Hall Academy, at Goshen, in 1822, and commenced there the study of law with Mr. Wisner. He completed his legal studies with William Ross, in Newburgh; was admitted to the bar in 1826, and rose rapidly to rank in his profession. He was frequently the candidate of his party for political honors; but, his party being in the minority in the district, he was without success. He was, however, elected to the Assembly of 1847, and was chosen Speaker of that body. He was a man of high bearing, spotless character, and a chivalric sense of honor and duty; few men enjoyed a more unblemished reputation, both at home and abroad. In person he was tall and slender, of attractive presence, and courteous manners; liberal in his charities; American in every aspiration of his nature.

Mr. Hasbrouck's oldest son, William H., is a practicing lawyer. His second son, Henry C., graduated at West Point Military Academy, May, 1861; served as lieutenant under Capt. Griffin, Fifth Artillery, U.S.A., in first Bull Run, also at Miner's Hill and Newport News; promoted captain Fourth Artillery, and in service in the Modoc campaign. Roe, his third son, graduated at Harvard College in 1876; since deceased.

1827.—Alsop Woodward.

1828.—John E. Phillips, Brookfield; Coe S. Bradner, Mount Hope.

1830.—Wm. F. Sharp, Goshen; Joseph V. Whalen Montgomery; William J. Street.

JOSEPH V. WHALEN is referred to in connection with his father, Dr. Whalen, of Montgomery.

1831.—Wm. B. Wright, Newburgh; Nathan Westcott, Goshen; Chas. Mason, Newburgh.

CHAS. MASON studied law in Newburgh after graduating at West Point. He subsequently removed to Wisconsin.

NATHAN WESTCOTT was the son of David M. Westcott, for many years connected with the press of Goshen. He was county clerk in 1849. For several years of his life he suffered from paralysis of his limbs, resulting from being accidentally thrown from a wagon, and the distinction which he might have attained at the bar was defeated. He died in 1879.

WM. B. WRIGHT was the son of Samuel Wright and Martha Brown, his wife, and was born in Newburgh, April 16, 1806. His father was a ship-carpenter, and he himself an apprentice, in his early years, to the business of printing under Ward M. Gazlay. He was an industrious boy and much of a student, and found his way, after his apprenticeship, to the office of Ross & Knevels, where he read law. On his admission to the bar he practiced in the office of Samuel J. Wilkin, at Goshen, and there, as well as at Newburgh, was connected with the press. Indeed, his early life was very much mixed up with mechanical, editorial, and legal pursuits. From Goshen he removed (1835) to Monticello, where he settled down to a quiet local practice, in which there was no example of industry or brilliant genius. At one period his life was a failure, but in 1846 he succeeded in the election as delegate to the Constitutional Convention, where he made some friends and acquaintances. In 1846 he was elected member of Congress by a combination of Whigs and Anti-Renters, and gained such additional notoriety that he secured a combination nomination for justice of the Supreme Court, in which station he remained by re-election for twelve years. In 1861 he was elected judge of the Court of Appeals, and served in that capacity until 1868, when he died. In his judicial position his whole character underwent a change, so greatly so indeed that Ward Hunt, his associate judge, could say with truth, "His enduring monument will be found in the reports of the decisions of this court. Patient, laborious, learned, clear-minded, and discriminating, he ranks honorably in that long line of distinguished men who have presided on this bench." With the ability and determination to adapt himself to the opportunity, Judge Wright secured a reputation which few of his contemporaries attained. During the latter years of his life his residence was at Kingston.

1833.—Alfred D. Walden, Walden; Horace W. Armstrong, Newburgh.

1835.—George W. Lord, Mount Hope; John J. Monell, Newburgh; George Van Inwegen, Deerpark.

JOHN J. MONELL was the son of Samuel Monell, of Montgomery, in which town he was born. His mother was Elvira, daughter of John Scott, and her sister, Catharine Lydia, was the mother of John A. C. Gray, of New York. He studied law under John W. Brown, and practiced in Newburgh for many years, during which time he served one term a judge of the County Court. He was active in local societies and associated enterprises, and deserves more credit in these connections than has been awarded to him. His residence has been at Fishkill for some years; and his more active business relations have been in connection with the publication of the New York Evening Post. His first wife was Mary E., daughter of Nathaniel Smith, of Connecticut; and his second, Caroline DeWint, widow of Andrew J. Downing.

1838.—George W. Niven, Newburgh.

1839.—Nathan Reeve, Newburgh; Benjamin F. Duryea, Goshen; Chris. Van Duzer.

1840.—Aaron B. Belknap, Newburgh; Daniel B. Boice, Newburgh; Joseph W. Gott, Goshen; William Fullerton, Newburgh; John L. Bookstaver, Montgomery.

JOSEPH W. GOTT, a prominent lawyer of Orange County for many years, was born May 25, 1814, in the town of Austerlitz, Columbia Co., N. Y. His father, Storey Gott, was a well-known and lifelong resident of that locality.

Mr. Gott passed much of his boyhood at Red Rock, Columbia Co., and in 1834 entered Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. That institution of learning was then under the admirable care of Dr. Eliphalet Nott. He was one of the founders of that large and well-known secret fraternity, now represented in most of the leading colleges, known as "Psi Upsilon." He graduated honorably in 1837.

In the same year he came to Goshen to reside, and assumed the position of principal of Farmers' Hall Academy, which he held for two years. He then turned his attention to the study of law, and pursued his studies with the firm of Van Duzer & Sharpe, and in 1842 was admitted to practice. From that time until his death, in 1869, he was in constant practice of his profession in the community in which he had taken up his residence, and became thoroughly identified with this locality.

Not long after his admission to the bar he held the position of postmaster at Goshen for several years. In 1849 he held the office of county clerk of Orange County by appointment. In the earlier part of his professional career he was also, for some years, one of the proprietors and editors of the Goshen Democrat and Whig.

He was a communicant and vestryman of St. James' Protestant Episcopal Church for many years.

He was married, Jan. 27, 1847, to Charlotte Van Duzer, daughter of the Hon. Isaac R. Van Duzer, now deceased, a prominent lawyer and ex-member of the Legislature. For many years he was a partner of the late Judge Samuel J. Wilkin.

In 1858, his health having suffered severely from too intense application to the demands of a large business, he made a trip to Europe, but found there only temporary relief from the bronchial trouble with which he was afflicted. His life was much prolonged by his temperate habits and rigid observance of the laws of health. He literally died in the harness, attending to his professional occupations until shortly before his death, which happened Jan. 6, 1869.

Mr. Gott was not, in one sense of the word, a public man. He was not ostentatious in his life, nor did he aspire to political preferment. But he was probably as well known in the line of his profession as any of his contemporaries in this county. He had several opportunities to form very profitable professional connections in New York City and elsewhere, but preferred to continue where he had begun his professional career.

He was a steadfast Whig until the formation of the Republican party, and then an earnest adherent to the latter while he lived. He was a strong personal friend of Secretary W. H. Seward.

He was of an eminently literary turn of mind, and owned and made practical use of a large and well-selected library.

The true lesson of Mr. Gott's life and professional success is contained in the following extract from the resolutions passed by the bar of his county, Jan. 13, 1869, and now entered upon the record of the court minutes:

"Resolved, That the earnestness and assiduity with which our deceased friend labored to protect and secure the rights and interests of those whom he served entitled him to the public confidence he so largely enjoyed, and that his distinguished success was achieved, not by unprofessional artifice, but by the devotion of his laborious life to high professional duty.

"Resolved, That the career of the deceased has closed with no stain of professional dishonor resting upon it, proving that no sacrifice of fairness, truth, and integrity is necessarily involved in the exercise of great professional zeal and the attainment of an exalted professional reputation."

Mr. Gott left two children,—a daughter, Annie, and a son and namesake, Joseph W., the latter of whom graduated at Yale College in 1873, and Columbia Law School in 1875, and has been engaged in the practice of law in Goshen since 1875.

1841.—Chancey F. Belknap, Newburgh; John C. Dimmick, Goshen.

1842.—Alexander Wilkin, Goshen; John S. Thayer, Newburgh; Stephen B. Brophy, Newburgh; John G. Wilkin, Middletown.

1843.—Robert S. Halstead, Newburgh; James W. Fowler, Newburgh; Benjamin F. Dunning, Goshen.

1844.—S. W. Fullerton, Jr., Newburgh; James L. Stewart.

1845.—Daniel Fullerton, Goshen; Oliver Young; Hugh B. Bull, Montgomery; James G. Graham, Newburgh; David F. Gedney, Goshen; William R. Nelson; Levinus Monson, Newburgh; Andrew J. Wilkin, Goshen.

DAVID FOWLER GEDNEY.—The paternal ancestors of Judge Gedney were English Quakers, who emigrated from England to this country in the reign of Charles II. to escape the religious persecution against Nonconformists during the life of that monarch. His father was Eleazer Gedney, M.D., who was for many years an eminent physician in what was then the village of Newburgh, Orange Co., N. Y. Dr. Gedney married Miss Charlotte Bailey, of New Windsor, in the same county, and who was the daughter of Dr. Jonathan Bailey. Dr. Bailey was related collaterally to the Revolutionary patriot, Samuel Adams.

Judge Gedney was born in Newburgh-on-Hudson, Jan. 1, 1821. He was prepared to enter college at the Newburgh Academy, and in 1836 entered the junior class at Union College. He graduated in 1838, receiving the usual degree of A.B. His father and elder brother having died while he was in college, he removed with his mother and an unmarried sister (afterwards Mrs. Isaac R. Van Duzer) to Goshen, Orange Co. Here he entered upon his professional career as a student in the law-office of Van Duzer & Sharpe, and after the dissolution of that firm he continued his studies with Van Duzer & Westcott. He was admitted to the bar in 1845, and formed a partnership with Nathan Westcott, which continued until that gentleman was elected county clerk in 1850. In 1856 he was elected to the office of district attorney, and in 1862 to the office of county judge. He formed a partnership in 1874 with his son, Mr. Herbert Gedney, with whom he is now associated in business.

In 1843, Judge Gedney married Miss Henrietta Robinson Duer, youngest daughter of Alexander Duer, Esq. Mr. Duer was a son of Col. William Duer, of the Revolutionary army, and a brother of the late Judges John A. Duer and William A. Duer. Of the three children of this marriage, the eldest—Alex. Duer Gedney—was lost at sea off Cape Horn in 1860; the others are living.

Judge Gedney's judicial career was marked by ability and impartiality, and he discharged the duties of district attorney in a manner eminently satisfactory to his county. He is an advocate of marked power, and has been connected with the trial of many important civil and criminal cases. He has taken for many years a prominent position among Republican politicians, and his speeches, both political and professional, are remarkable for the chastity of their language and the clearness and force of their logic. He is one of the oldest members of the present bar of Orange County.

The FULLERTONS—DANIEL, WILLIAM, and STEPHEN W.—have been honorable representatives of their profession. Daniel, the last admitted to practice, was the oldest brother and had but a short legal career. Stephen W., the youngest, prior to his removal to New York, filled the office of county judge, and also that of district attorney, and had for his associate in practice Charles H. Van Wyck, now United States senator from Nebraska. William, after some years in his profession in Newburgh, during the largest portion of which time James W. Fowler was his business associate, removed to New York, where he was associated with Charles O'Connor, and from that point has risen to the highest rank at the bar of that city. Aug. 30, 1867, he was appointed justice of the Supreme Court for the Second Judicial District, to fill the unexpired term of Judge Scrugham, but transferred the honor to his brother, Stephen W., who served from August 30th to December 31st. A brief history of the family will be found in another part of this volume. (See Wawayanda.)

JAMES G. GRAHAM was born in Shawangunk, Ulster Co., October, 1821. He graduated at Columbia College in 1840; studied in the office of Bate & McKissock, and after his admission to the bar practiced in Ulster County. In 1848 he was elected to the Assembly from the southern district of Ulster, and again in 1865. In 1878 he represented the First Assembly District of Orange in the same body. He has held several local trusts with credit since his removal to Newburgh in 1866, and enjoys the esteem and confidence of the community. His first wife was Mary E., daughter of George G. Schofield, of Walden. He married second, Margaret J., daughter of Israel Knapp, also of Walden.

1846.—Gabriel N. Sweezey, Goshen (removed to California in 1849, and died at Marysville, in that State, in 1875); DeWitt C. Cooley; John Lyon; S. Howell Strong; Moses Sweezey, Goshen; Charles H. Winfield, Goshen. (See Dr. Winfield.)

1848.—Eugene A. Brewster, Newburgh.

EUGENE A. BREWSTER is a lineal descendant of Elder Brewster, of the Plymouth Pilgrims. His immediate ancestor in this county was Samuel Brewster, of New Windsor, a most substantial and representative man of the Revolutionary era. He was born in New York, April 13, 1827, and was brought to Newburgh by his parents when he was three years old. He entered the office of John W. Brown in 1843, and remained with him until January, 1850, when he united in partnership with Nathan Reeve, Judge Brown's brother-in-law, and continued under the firm of Reeve & Brewster until 1855, since which time he has been without an associate. That he has few, if any, superiors in practice in the county will be generally conceded by the profession. He has held several local stations with credit, and many rely as implicitly upon his judgment as they did upon that of his tutor, Judge Brown, some of whose habits of thought and action were deeply grafted upon his character. He married, in 1859, Anna W., daughter of Rev. John Brown, D.D.

JAMES N. PRONK was born in the city of Boston, Feb. 27, 1822. His father, Dr. John N. D. V. Pronk, a native of Amsterdam, Holland, was there educated a physician, and emigrated to America in 1811, settling in Boston, Mass. He practiced his profession in that city until 1839, when he retired from practice, removed to Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y., and there resided until his decease, at the age of seventy-two years, in 1848.

Dr. Pronk's wife, who survived him twenty-five years and died at the age of eighty-two years, was Azubah Little, a native of Orange County, with whom he formed an acquaintance while traveling through her native county upon first coming to this county, and whom he married in 1812.

Only three of their eleven children survived them, viz., Edwin, a resident of Boston; James N., subject of this sketch; and Azubah L., wife of Silas L. King, of Bradford, Pa.

James N. Pronk received his early education in the English high school and public Latin school of his native city, and was graduated at the Teacher's Seminary at Andover, Mass. He removed with his parents to Orange County, and for several years thereafter was engaged here in teaching. He studied law with Judge John G. Wilkin, of Middletown, and was admitted to the bar of this State, as attorney and counselor, at the January term of the Supreme Court held in New York City in 1849.

Immediately after his admission to the bar he opened a law office in Middletown, where he has actively pursued the practice of his profession since, —a period of thirty-two years,—and is now one of the oldest members of the Orange County bar, only Judge Wilkin being his senior in Middletown.

During his residence in Middletown, Mr. Pronk has been an active participant in nearly all of its worthy local enterprises.

He was largely connected with and one of the prime movers in the incorporation of the village, for many years its clerk, and for nine years its president.

He was one of the incorporators of the Middletown Lyceum, a society that existed and held a leading influence for some thirty years; of the Hillside Cemetery, of which association he has officiated as president since its incorporation, and has filled the position of trustee and director of various other organizations.

Mr. Pronk was also one of the incorporators of "The Middletown and Bloomingburgh Plank Road Company," "The Middletown and Unionville Plank Road Company," "The Middletown and Unionville Railroad Company," "The Midland Railroad Company of New Jersey," and of the "Walkill Bank."

During the late civil war he was active in support of the Union cause, and served as provost marshal of the Eleventh Congressional District, New York, with his office at Goshen.

As a citizen Mr. Pronk is public-spirited and enterprising. All projects for the benefit of the community and to promote the best interests of society in which he lives receive from him willing and liberal support.

As a counselor he is careful, systematic, and judicious, and his opinions are always given with the strictest integrity after a thorough analytical treatment of the subject at issue, and as an advocate his retentive memory, his knowledge of the fundamental principles upon which the law is based, enable him to command the attention of judge and juror.

Mr. Pronk married, in 1841, Mary Ellen, daughter of Gilbert F. Mondon, of Port Jervis.

Their surviving children are Francis A. R., Ferris M., Devin N., Ashbel C. K., Louisa, Mary, wife of N. Tate, of Middletown, and Nellie R.

OLIVER YOUNG.—The Young family are of New England extraction, the father of the subject of this biographical sketch having been Samuel, who was born in Connecticut, and married Miss Anna Dilly, whose ancestors were of Hessian descent and early emigrated to America. Mr. and Mrs. Young had eight children, among whom was Oliver, born at Mount Hope, Orange Co., Oct. 7, 1811, to which place his parents removed after their marriage. He (Oliver) was early made dependent upon his own resources, and after the death of his father aided materially in the care of the family. At the age of seventeen he became a teacher, and later repaired to Milford, Pa., where, under the guidance of Richard Eldred, and afterwards of Melancthon Dimmock, he pursued the study of law. He was admitted to the bar of Pike County, Pa., in 1835, and as an attorney and counselor in New York State, Nov. 8, 1849. Very soon after the conclusion of his legal studies Mr. Young removed to Port Jervis and established himself in his profession.

By application and fidelity to the trusts confided to him a growing and lucrative practice was gained. He speedily attained a reputation as a safe and judicious counselor, and an attorney who was devoted under all circumstances to the interests of his clients, to whom he, on every occasion, displayed the most absolute loyalty. This fact soon won for Mr. Young the confidence of the community and brought to him an extended business. He was a firm advocate of anti-slavery principles long before any organized opposition was manifested on the part of its opponents, and for a length of time voted the ticket alone in the place of his residence. He cast the only ballot in Port Jervis for Hon. John P. Hale, anti-slavery candidate for the Presidency in 1856, and on various occasions maintained a steady defense of principles which were espoused from a conviction of duty. He was also a man of liberal impulses, and did much to relieve distress through benefactions of a private nature. Mr. Young was a proficient civil engineer, and possessed an extended knowledge of the boundaries and titles of much of the land embraced in Orange County. He was not an aspirant for office, and frequently declined local honors tendered him by his constituents. Mr. Young was married, Jan. 19, 1848, in Port Jervis, to Mrs. Lydia Frances Wentworth, formerly Miss Sinclair, of Bartlett, N. H., and had two sons,—Frank Sinclair, who died in early life, and Charles Oliver, who is engaged in the practice of law in Port Jervis. The death of Oliver Young occurred Oct. 3, 1871, in his sixtieth year. The loss sustained by the bar of Orange County was on the occasion graphically portrayed in a series of resolutions commemorative of his career and his marked abilities, presented by its members to the family.

THOMAS J. LYON.—The Lyon family are of Scotch descent, three brothers—Samuel, David, and James—having left the land of their nativity before the war of the Revolution and settled,—David in New Jersey, Samuel in Connecticut, and James in the Empire State, from whence he later removed to Ohio. David chose a location at Orange, Essex Co., N. J., where his children—Daniel, Moses, Henry, and Sarah—were born; all of whom are now deceased. Henry resided upon the homestead during his lifetime, where he was both agriculturist and distiller, and later became a manufacturer. He participated actively in the war of 1812, for which he enjoyed a pension until the date of his death in his seventy-eighth year. Mr. Lyon was, in the year 1808, united in marriage to Miss Eunice, daughter of Thomas Harrison, of Orange, N. J., a soldier with the rank of colonel in the war of the Revolution, and also a pensioner until his death in his ninety-eighth year. To Mr. and Mrs. Lyon nine children were born, of whom the survivors are Dr. S. S. Lyon, of Newark, N. J.; William Lyon, of Lyon's Farms, N. J.; Thomas J. Lyon, of Port Jervis; John W. Lyon, of San Francisco, Cal.; and Mrs. Ann Steel, of Dayton, Ohio.

Thomas J., whose career is here traced, was born in Caldwell, Essex Co., N. J., June 20, 1816, and spent the early years of his life at the home of his parents. The common schools of the neighborhood afforded him an opportunity of acquiring the rudiments of an education, and a subsequent period spent at the Montclair Seminary, in the same county, supplemented this with more substantial acquirements. A brief period was spent in teaching, after which Mr. Lyon entered the ministry and joined the Methodist Episcopal Conference of New Jersey. After a season of clerical labor in New Jersey, he was assigned by the Conference in 1840 to the Port Jervis charge, which place has since been his residence. At the expiration of his fourth year Mr. Lyon voluntarily requested and received a local relation without any change in his religious convictions, and began the study of law, Nathan Westcott, of Goshen, N. Y., having been his preceptor. An office was established by the latter gentleman in Port Jervis, of which Mr. Lyon was given the charge. He began his professional labors in the Justices' Court, and continued so to practice until his admission to all the courts of New York State in 1849, his examination having occurred in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Lyon has since that time been actively engaged in the duties of his profession. He was employed by the New York and Erie Railroad Company as one of their counselors, and acted in that capacity from the period of the construction of the road until 1867. As a trial lawyer Mr. Lyon has been especially successful. He has on many occasions displayed superior talents as an advocate, his clear, decisive arguments having gained for him many legal victories. His mental powers are acute and comprehensive, his self-possession perfect, and his command of language both forcible and striking. He was commissioned as postmaster under the Polk administration, and also during the Presidential term of Franklin Pierce. In 1869 and 1870, Mr. Lyon was elected to the Legislature of the State, and his abilities utilized as one of the committee on Ways and Means, on the Judiciary, and as chairman of the committee on Federal Relations. He is an unflinching Democrat, and has attained some distinction as an ardent worker and speaker in the cause of Democracy.

Mr. Lyon was married Dec. 31, 1840, to Miss Jemima Westfall, of Deerpark, and became the parent of eight children, of whom Sarah E., Annie M. (Mrs. E. A. Brown, of Newburgh), and John W., a practicing lawyer in Port Jervis, survive. By a second marriage, to Miss Miriam V. Osterhout, he has five children,—Thomas J., Jr., Wallen, Edwin F., Mary E., and Frederick, all of whom are living.

1851.—JAMES W. TAYLOR, Goshen. Mr. Taylor was born in Hamptonburgh in February, 1828; graduated at the College of New Jersey (Princeton) in 1848; studied law in the office of Wilkin & Gott, and was admitted to practice in 1851. In 1854 he served under Nathan Westcott as deputy county clerk, and in 1856 removed to Newburgh, where he succeeded Daniel B. Boice, deceased, in the partnership with William C. Hasbrouck. At the general election in 1856 he was elected special county judge, and was subsequently twice appointed to fill vacancies in that office. In 1864 he was appointed attorney for the city of Newburgh, and in the fall of that year was one of the Presidential electors of the Republican party. His record so far in life has been that of an excellent lawyer and a useful and respected citizen. He married, in 1850, Caroline, daughter of John Wilson, of Goshen.

1857.—Abram S. Cassedy, Newburgh.

ABRAM S. CASSEDDY was born at Ramapo, Rockland Co., N. Y., on the 29th day of November, 1833.

His grandfather, Archibald Cassedy, emigrated from the north of Ireland about the time of the Revolutionary war, and taking up a residence in Rockland County became one of the pioneer settlers of what was then a wild and unbroken section of country. Of hardy Scotch-Irish descent, imbued with the indomitable industry and perseverance that is the special characteristic of his race, he was a valuable acquisition to the pioneer life of the country, and contributed much toward the development of the locality in which he settled. The father of Mr. Cassedy was also named Archibald, and was born in Rockland County, where he passed his life in mercantile and agricultural pursuits. He married Lydia, daughter of Judge Gurnee, of Rockland County. The Gurnee family is of French extraction, and was early represented among the pioneers of that county, having emigrated from Paris previous to the Revolutionary war.

The early education of Mr. Cassedy was obtained at the common schools of his native county. He subsequently enjoyed the benefits of an academic course, graduating in 1853. He immediately turned his attention to the study of the law, and entered as a student in the office of Judge William F. Fraser, of Clarkstown, N. Y., in 1855. Subsequently he entered the law-office of Wilkin & Gott, at Goshen, and was admitted to the bar in 1857. He was immediately appointed deputy county clerk by the late Dr. Drake, then the popular clerk of the county, in which position he served two years. At the expiration of that time he became clerk of the board of supervisors of Orange County, a position in which he remained from 1858 to 1862. Meanwhile, in 1859, he removed to Newburgh, where he entered upon the active practice of his profession, and has ever since remained. Judge Charles F. Brown is now the partner of Mr. Cassedy, and under the name and style of Cassedy & Brown the firm are carrying on a large and successful business.

As a lawyer Mr. Cassedy is painstaking and conscientious, and brings to the investigation of his cases a degree of research and legal acumen not common in the profession. Naturally of a studious turn of mind, patient and industrious, he discharges the duties of his profession in a faithful and successful manner, and commands a large clientage. The possession of these qualities early brought him into public notice, and it has been his good fortune, although decidedly averse to the holding of public office, to be elevated by the partiality of the public to several prominent official positions.

In 1862 he was elected district attorney of the county against his former preceptor, Joseph W. Gott, and filled the office acceptably for three years. He subsequently served as alderman from the Fourth Ward, but soon resigned from that office. In 1874 he was elected a member of the board of education, and acted as president of that body in 1877, declining election to the board after that date, although nominated. In 1875 he was appointed corporation counsel of Newburgh, a position that he held for three years.

In 1880, while strenuously declaring himself not to be a candidate, he was nominated by acclamation for the office of mayor of Newburgh by the Democratic party, and although that city usually gives a Republican majority of from two to three hundred votes, was elected by the flattering majority of three hundred and twenty-four. He is still filling that office in a successful manner, and his administration of municipal affairs has been characterized by a degree of economy not before attained for fourteen years.

Mr. Cassedy has declined the nomination to other important offices within the gift of the public, some of them being of a kind calculated to attract the most ambitious of men. He has preferred, however, to confine himself to the legitimate practice of his profession. He takes an active interest in all movements tending to advance the social, material, or educational welfare of the community in which he resides, and lends the support of his means and influence to the development and sustentation of its institutions. He has been for a number of years a director of the Quassaick National Bank, of Newburgh, and is the attorney for that institution. A number of important causes have been litigated successfully by him, aggregating hundreds of thousands of dollars. He was married in 1861 to Miss Margaret J., daughter of the late Dr. Charles Drake, of Newburgh.

1868.—C. Frank Brown, Newburgh; William D. Dickey, Newburgh.

WILLIAM VANAMEE is descended from one of three brothers who emigrated from Holland in the early settlement of New York. Two of the brothers settled on Long Island, and the other upon the Hudson.

The name is spelt differently by the various branches of the family, but Mr. Vanamee follows the spelling given in Dixon's work upon surnames.

Mr. Vanamee was born in Albany, N. Y., Jan. 9, 1847. When he was nineteen years old he came to Middletown for the purpose of studying law. After prosecuting his studies two years, he was admitted at Poughkeepsie in May, 1868, and he has since resided in Middletown, engaged in the active practice of his profession. In September, 1871, he was married to Lida, daughter of Dr. J. W. Ostrom, of Goshen.

C. FRANK BROWN, son of Hon. John W. Brown, was born in Newburgh, Sept. 12, 1844. He graduated at Yale College in 1866, and subsequently read law in the office of A. S. Cassedy, assisted by the advice and counsel of his father. In 1869 the law-firm of Cassedy & Brown was formed, of which he is still the junior partner. He was elected district attorney in 1874, and county judge in 1877, filling both positions with credit. He married, June 27, 1876, Hattie E. Shaffer, of Poughkeepsie.

HON. FREDERIC BODINE.—The blood and characteristics of four distinct races are represented in the Bodine family,—the French, Dutch, Irish, and English, the paternal ancestors of Frederick having been Huguenots, who early fled from persecution in France, and, embarking for America, colonized on Long Island. A portion of this little band eventually found their way into Orange County, among whom was William Bodine, the great-grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, who acquired a large tract of land one mile to the west of Walden village, the homestead of later generations of the family. Among his children was Peter, the grandfather of Frederick, who resided upon a farm in Montgomery, and married Miss Mary Millspaugh. Their children were eleven in number, one of whom was Sylvanus, born July 10, 1807, and whose death occurred in Steuben County, N. Y., in his seventy-first year. He was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Ann, daughter of John Horton, of Goshen, and had children,—Amasa and Frederick. The latter, whose portrait accompanies this sketch, was born in Montgomery, June 18, 1835, where the years of his early life were passed. These years were uneventful in character, the winter being devoted to study or teaching, while the summer brought its routine of farm employments.

In 1865, Mr. Bodine, having become weary of agricultural labor, disposed of the farm, and removing to the village of Montgomery, embarked in business enterprises. During the same year he entered the political arena as the Republican candidate for representative in the State Legislature, to which he was elected by a large majority. Here he represented his constituency with marked ability, and served on the committees on schools and colleges and towns and villages. In connection with the former he did signal service, being largely instrumental in the introduction of the bill in behalf of the free-school system, which afterwards became a law, under which the State is now working. Mr. Bodine, in the fall of 1866, purchased a farm at Plattsburgh, N. Y., to which he removed, but the surroundings of his old home proving more congenial, he returned to Montgomery the following year and engaged in business. He has since been identified with the public interests of the township; is a director of the Walden Savings-Bank, has been railroad commissioner for the township of Montgomery since 1873, and has served as highway commissioner and inspector of elections. He was appointed, in 1880, supervisor of census for the Fourth New York District by President Hayes, including the counties of Ulster, Orange, Rockland, Sullivan, and Delaware.

He was in 1870 elected justice of the peace, and still fills the office. Mr. Bodine abandoned mercantile pursuits in 1877, and began the study of law with Joseph M. Wilkin, Esq. He was admitted to the bar as attorney and counselor at the general term held in Brooklyn, February, 1880, and at once engaged in the practice of his profession. In politics he is an ardent Republican, and an earnest advocate of the principles of the party. He is an active and useful member of the Presbyterian Church of Montgomery, of which he is an elder. Mr. Bodine has been twice married. He was first united to Miss Mittie Graham, June 5, 1862, to whom was born a son, Theodore. Mrs. Bodine's death occurred Feb. 28, 1870, and he was a second time married, Nov. 16, 1870, to Mrs. Emma Decker, of Montgomery.

CHAPTER XII.

PHYSICIANS—MEDICAL SOCIETIES.

THE physicians of the county, although many of them have been conspicuous in its political, military, and social affairs, are, as a class, so especially "silent" in its records that a list of them, either past or present, will be far from complete. It is probably true that to some extent the early ministers, itinerant as well as located, were physicians; but it is also probable that many of the first settlers were their own medical advisers, and relied largely upon such remedies as nature provided and their own experience approved, many of them living even to a "good old age" without the aid of a professional "doctor." Perhaps they were profited to some extent by the experience of their Indian contemporaries or predecessors, who could cure wounds and hurts, treat simple diseases quite successfully, and tell all about the medicinal virtues of native roots and herbs. There was one remedy that came from them that was of very general use,—beavers' oil. For dizziness, for trembling, for rheumatism, for lameness, for apoplexy, for toothache, for earache, for weak eyes, for gout, and for almost every ill, beavers' oil was the specific, at least among the early Dutch, who, with equal unanimity, rejected that other Indian specific,—the sweating-bath. They could not bear to be thrust into a heated hole in the ground with their head covered until the perspiration had reached its highest point, and then to be removed and immersed immediately in cold water. It strikes one singularly to read now that this or that State or colony had given somebody a hundred pounds for a recipe for some remedy with a view to make it public property; at least it prompts the conclusion that there was a great deal of what is now called "quackery" going on among the "rude forefathers" of many a "hamlet."

But whatever may have been the condition of medical practice elsewhere, there were physicians in the district the history of which we are tracing, at an early period, and apparently learned and skillful ones.

CADWALLADER COLDEN, of Coldenham, was a physician of no ordinary grade for his time. He settled at Coldenham in 1728, remained there for over thirty years, and wrote some able medical works. True, he was also a surveyor and a politician, and a botanist, and in the round of his years was Lieutenant-Governor and acting Governor of the colony; but these offices came to him at a later period.

We cannot say that "next" to Dr. Colden came EVAN JONES, in New Windsor; but he was a practicing physician and surgeon there, and died in 1763, leaving sons, JOHN and THOMAS, who became eminent physicians in New York City. His wife was the daughter of Vincent Matthews, of Matthewsfield. His residence was on the farm which, after his death, became the property of Samuel Brewster, and is now marked by the old stone house which the latter erected.

ALEXANDER CLINTON and CHARLES CLINTON, sons of Col. Charles Clinton, of Little Britain, were also early physicians. Alexander studied under Dr. Middleton, of New York, located at Shawangunk, and practiced in that town and in Montgomery and New Windsor. He died in Shawangunk in 1758, of "confluent smallpox." Charles was also a pupil under Dr. Middleton. He was a surgeon's mate in the British army at the capture of Havana; subsequently located in the precinct of Hanover (now Montgomery), where he had a large practice, and where he died in 1791.

Although not practicing physicians in the town of New Windsor, THOMAS and JOSEPH YOUNG, sons of John Young, one of the associate immigrants with Charles Clinton, became physicians, and were in service in the army of the Revolution. Thomas received a medical education, and Joseph taught himself, or, as he himself wrote, became qualified "by accurate observation and attentive application," having been "greatly assisted by Dr. Alexander Clinton, not as a professed student, but by riding with him and receiving oral instructions."

JOHN SMEDES was a contemporary of Dr. Charles Clinton, but his residence has not been ascertained. He was in practice in 1783. Among Dr. Clinton's papers is the following note, which serves the purpose of his identification as well as to illustrate the methods of treatment at that time:

"Mrs. Cooper was taken on Monday morning early with a cold chill, which continued more or less almost throughout the day. About nine o'clock in the morning she was seized with a violent pain in the left hypochondria, resembling laboring pains, with vomitings, and a taste in her mouth like rotten eggs,—great thirst. In this situation I came to her, judging it to be an inflammation in the womb, arising from cold she must have taken a few days ago from wet feet. I bled her immediately—the blood was not sily, but very coagulated—and gave her nitrous powders. In the afternoon the symptoms were the same, the pain alternating, leaving her in some degree, and then returning with violence. I bled her again,—the blood was somewhat sily. About evening her symptoms all vanished, and she was very well until Wednesday morning (excepting having felt some slight pains on Tuesday afternoon; she had this day taken a dose of Rhei). On Wednesday morning her symptoms returned. She was bled again, but I could not get above five ounces from her. In the afternoon, her symptoms continuing without abatement, I bled again, and took about five ounces. She swooned very nearly. I continued the nitrous powders, and ordered a glyster, which did not operate effectually. This morning I ordered another, which had the desired effect. I gave her this day powders of jalap, nitre, and crem tart., agreeable to consultation yesterday with Doct. Sackett. This afternoon I gave her a decoction of Seneca snakeroot, since which the vomiting has left her, but her other symptoms continue, with a scarcity of urine. Mrs. Cooper desires Doct. Clinton's consultation. I am

MOSES HIGBY was in practice in Newburgh and New Windsor prior to the Revolution. His name stands connected with local history during that period, and particularly for his part with Daniel Taylor, the British spy, who swallowed the silver bullet, and lost it under Higby's emetics.

Many anecdotes are related of him, for, of course, such things will be remembered when real merits are forgotten. His practice was among old and respectable families, where his coming was welcomed by old and young, and where he not unfrequently remained several days. He was a man of stern integrity, and upright and open in manner. He died May 3, 1823, upwards of eighty years of age, having practiced medicine over sixty years. Beyond the fact that a daughter married Samuel Bond and left children, we know nothing of his descendants.

ISAAC BROWN was a physician in Newburgh in 1767, and ROBERT MORRISON and his son HUGH were in practice there as early as 1775. DR. JAMES STICKNEY was another old physician of Newburgh.

NATHANIEL ELMER, of Florida, was a physician of the Revolutionary era. He was a native of Sharon, Conn., and removed to and settled at Florida, where he practiced his profession for many years with credit. His wife was a daughter of Judge William Thompson, by whom he had three sons—Dr. William Elmer, of Goshen; Dr. Nathaniel Elmer, of Denton; and Jesse Elmer, of Bellvale—and two daughters,—Mrs. Robert Armstrong and Mrs. Smith. After the death of Mr. Smith the latter married Joshua Conkling. Her children by Mr. Smith were John E. Smith, of Goshen, and a daughter, who became Mrs. Ira Gardner. By Mr. Conkling she had William S., who settled on the old Conkling homestead in Goshen; Enos S., of New York; George S., of Iowa; Mrs. Samuel Wilson, of Bellvale; and Nathaniel E., who resides on the Dr. Elmer homestead. The latter has displayed much taste in opening new streets and in other undertakings of advantage to the community in which he lives.

THOMAS WICKHAM, JOHN GALE,* JOHN PIERSON, and BENJAMIN TUSTEN, JR., were all in practice in the old township of Goshen in 1769, and some of them at an earlier date. DR. DUBOIS, of Warwick; DR. ROSENCRANS and DR. HENRY WHITE, of Minisink; and DR. CHANDLER, of Blooming-Grove, have an honorable record in early history of this class of physicians.

BENJAMIN TUSTEN was a native of Southold, L. I., where he was born Dec. 11, 1743. He was the only son of Benjamin Tusten, a respectable farmer, and removed to the precinct of Goshen with his father's family in 1746. He was educated at an academy in Jamaica, L. I., and at nineteen years of age commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Thomas Wickham, of Goshen, whose standing as a physician was very high in his day. After spending a year with Dr. Wickham he went to Newark, N. J., and spent another year under Dr. Barnet, and a third year in the office of Dr. Thomas Jones, of New York. In 1769 he returned home and commenced practice in competition with Dr. Wickham, Dr. Gale, and Dr. Pierson, and soon performed some operations in surgery which gave him considerable celebrity. In 1770 he introduced inoculation for smallpox, and for this purpose hired four houses,—one in Hamptonburgh (then Goshen), where he lived, another near Stony Ford bridge, a third at East Division, and the fourth on the little island near the cedar swamp. In these houses he inoculated about eight hundred persons, with such success as to entirely destroy the prejudice which had previously existed. He kept his houses two years, after which inoculation could be performed in private houses. In the discussions which culminated in the Revolution he took an active part, and during the remainder of his life did what he could to secure independence. In 1777 he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Goshen regiment of militia, and in 1778 was appointed surrogate of the county. Hesitating at no sacrifice, he marched with his neighbors in the pursuit of the invaders of Minisink, and in the battle with them gave up his life. His wife was a Miss Brown, of Newark, N. J., by whom he had two sons and three daughters.

After the Revolution, and prior to the formation of the Orange County Medical Society, a number of new names were added to the list of what are now called old physicians. Among this class was JOSEPH WHALEN, who located first in what is now the town of Crawford in 1788, but soon after removed to near the village of Montgomery, where he practiced medicine for more than half a century. He was a native of Ireland, well educated, and a gentleman in all respects. In religious faith he was a Catholic, but never intruded his opinions upon others. His brother, Rev. Charles Whalen, an Irish Franciscan, was the first Catholic priest stationed in New York. He had been a chaplain on board the French ships of Admiral de Grasse's fleet, engaged in assisting the colonies. The late Joseph V. Whalen, for years one of the principal lawyers of Montgomery, was his son, and one of his daughters was Mrs. McWilliams, of Montgomery, and another Mrs. Dennis McCool, of Newburgh. We believe there were other children.

The following additional facts have been furnished. The Whalen family are of Irish lineage and were first represented in Orange County by the subject of this biographical sketch, Dr. Joseph Whalen, who left his home at the close of the Revolutionary struggle, and soon after his arrival on American soil located in Crawford township, then Montgomery.

After a residence of a few years at this point he removed to the village of Montgomery, the scene of his lifelong professional labors.

He had already acquired a classical education and made himself proficient in the science of medicine, which proved congenial to his tastes. He determined to follow this profession, and was licensed by the Orange County Medical Society on the 1st of July, 1806, which at that early date was accorded full power to examine and grant licences to practitioners.

The doctor was at the first meeting of the society elected one of its censors, and subsequently held many of its most responsible offices. He ranked among the most judicious and skillful of the exponents of the healing art in the county, and his reputation readily brought to him an extended practice.

He was a man of progressive ideas, of energetic character, and of an indomitable will, which invariably brought success to every project undertaken by him.

Dr. Whalen was a man of varied accomplishments, having received not only a liberal education but such early training as moulded well his character and developed those traits which in later years rendered him so fine an example of the "old-school gentleman."

He was a man of charitable instincts, and gave much time and professional labor with little pecuniary return. All deserving causes found in him a helper, and the poor and suffering were invariably the recipients of his bounty. He participated rarely in public life, being always actively engaged in the duties of his profession. At a meeting of the council of appointments held at the city of Albany on the 20th of March, 1802, he was appointed surgeon of the regiment of militia in the county of Orange of which William Faulkner, Esq., was lieutenant-colonel commanding. In his religious tenets he espoused the faith of his family, and was through life a firm but unobtrusive Roman Catholic. Dr. Whalen was married in early life to Miss Mary Byrne. Their children were Elizabeth, Mary, Martha, Catherine, Joseph Virgil, and John Horace. His death occurred at Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y.

His grandson, Benjamin Crosby, who contributes this memorial sketch, was born Dec. 31, 1831, on the homestead. He spent his boyhood at school, first near his home and later at Montgomery. In connection with his brother he came into possession of the family estate. Mr. Crosby has spent his time in cultivating this land. In politics he is a Republican, though not an active worker in the political arena. He is a worshiper at the Presbyterian Church of Hopewell.

INCREASE CROSBY.—The name of Crosby is, in the State of New York, associated with distinguished public services and high social position. In the absence of authentic facts regarding the family it will be necessary to defer to the accepted legend handed down by tradition, which relates that four brothers emigrated from Scotland to the New World. On arrival their paths diverged,—one having settled in Pennsylvania, another in Massachusetts, while a third chose the genial climate of the South, and the presence of the fourth is involved in uncertainty.

The subject of this biographical sketch is a representative of the Massachusetts branch, and removed from that State to Orange County during the latter portion of the eighteenth century. Having, while in New England, begun and completed the study of medicine, on his arrival and after the purchase of the ancestral property, he began the practice of his profession. Dr. Crosby may therefore be regarded as one of the earliest practitioners in the county and a pioneer representative of the healing art. The duties were at that time laborious, requiring long and tedious rides over rough and unbroken roads, generally made on horseback, from the superior convenience of this mode of travel. The doctor was a skillful horseman, and largely dependent upon the services of his trusted steed. His original purchase, embracing sixty-four acres, was increased by later acquisitions, and in 1802 the homestead at present occupied by his descendants was erected. Dr. Crosby was united in marriage to Miss Isabella Milliken, of Ulster County, and had children,—Robert, Cyrenus, and Mary, who became Mrs. John Jordan, of Orange County. The doctor was a pronounced Democrat, of the Jeffersonian type, and strongly pro-slavery in his views. His life was one of great activity and extended usefulness, which was only ended by his death, May 13, 1845, in his eightieth year. Mrs. Crosby died during the year 1827. The birth of their son Robert occurred on the homestead Nov. 12, 1791, where he followed agricultural occupations during his lifetime. He was a man of quiet tastes, had no political aspirations, and from choice filled no public offices. He was married to Miss Catharine, daughter of Dr. Joseph Whalen, born May 10, 1797, and became the father of six children,—Cyrenus, who died in early life; Increase, Joseph V. W., R. Milliken, Benjamin, and one who died in infancy. The death of Mr. Crosby occurred Aug. 26, 1833, and that of his wife, March 17, 1852. His son R. Milliken, who, with his brother Benjamin, is owner of the homestead, and contributes this sketch of his grandparent, was born June 16, 1826, and spent his early life at the paternal home, having in 1845 assumed control of the farm. He was, in 1860, married to Miss Hannah C., daughter of David C. Ball, of Crawford township, and became the parent of two children who died in infancy. Mr. Crosby is in politics a Republican, though seldom a participant in the strifes which secure official advancement.

DAVID FOWLER, JR., another of this class, settled in North Newburgh in 1786. He was born at Crom Pond, Westchester Co., and was engaged in completing his studies in New York when the Revolution broke out. After the British obtained possession of the city he accepted the appointment of surgeon in the Second Regiment of Loyalists, and served during the continuance of the struggle. He resided on his farm at North Newburgh until 1828, when he removed to the village of Newburgh, where he died in 1835, when it was written of him that he "lived respected, esteemed, and beloved, and died regretted. His amiable manners, his correct deportment, and the distinguished virtues which adorned his character, secured him an extensive circle of friends. He was the cheerful companion, the unwavering friend, the kind and affectionate husband and father. He was a blessing to his friends, an honor to the community, and one of the highest ornaments of our nature. Of him it may be truly said that he was a man without guile and without reproach. He was just, generous, humane, and benevolent. The strictest honor, probity, and integrity were happily blended in his character. The law of God was his constant guide, and the day-star of his noble and cultivated mind. Those who knew him will often turn with melancholy pleasure to the remembrance of his virtues, and drop a tear to his memory." Gilbert Ogden Fowler, of Newburgh, Dr. Fowler's only surviving son, has been noticed in connection with the bench and bar.

CHARLES FOWLER, for many years a practicing physician in Montgomery, was a cousin of Dr. David Fowler, of Newburgh. He married first, Sarah Hill, and second, Ann E. McNeal. By his first wife he had eleven children, of whom two were sons, viz.: Dr. Charles G. Fowler and Peter H. Fowler.

ELEAZER GIDNEY, of Newburgh, was a descendant from the Gidneys who located and gave name to the district called Gidneytown, about 1760. He was in practice at Newburgh at the commencement of the present century. He died April 9, 1830, in his seventy-second year. His sons were Dr. Charles S. Gidney (born 1804, died 1850) and David F. Gidney, of Goshen. He will receive further notice in connection with latter (see Bench and Bar). It may be remarked here, however, that he had a very large practice and was highly respected.

WILLIAM GOURLAY, of New Windsor, was a practicing physician there soon after the Revolution. He was a native of Ireland.

ELIAS WINFIELD, PHINEAS HEDGES, BALTUS L. VAN KLEECK, and CHICHESTER BROWN, of Newburgh, deserve more extensive notice than our information will enable us to give them. ELIAS WINFIELD was an editor as well as a physician, having been connected with the Rights of Man. He made himself somewhat notorious in 1803 by his advocacy of the theory that yellow fever was of "domestic origin," and that it was "not a contagious disease." He removed to Kingston and died there. His daughter Catharine married Josiah Hasbrouck, and had issue eight children, one of whom, Gilbert, settled at Napanoch, Ulster Co.

PHINEAS HEDGES was an infidel, and is said to have died "of visitation of God" for his participation in the administering of "the Holy Communion" to a dog, but the tradition is erroneous. He died in July, 1799, at which time it was written, "In justice to his memory it ought to be observed that he was a man possessed of a strong mind, and this mind highly improved and cultivated by the principles of general science and the knowledge of the philosophy of nature."

BALTUS L. VAN KLEECK was, years ago, generally regarded as an eminently safe practitioner. He died in 1843, aged sixty-nine. He came from Dutchess County. His sister was the wife of Judge Jonathan Fisk; his wife was a daughter of Robert Boyd, of New Windsor. His son, Rev. Robert Boyd Van Kleeck, of the Episcopal Church, died recently.

CHICHESTER BROWN was the son of John Brown, of Monaghan, Ireland, who, from his connection or sympathy with the Irish Rebellion of 1798, found it necessary to escape to America, and who, soon after his arrival here, located in Newburgh. His family, including his son, followed him in 1800. The latter was born in January, 1783, died Aug. 8, 1849; married Catharine, daughter of Dr. Geo. Graham, of Shawangunk; had John, James, and George, the latter also a physician. He received a liberal education, followed for a time the occupation of a teacher, but soon after took up the study of medicine under Dr. Graham. In 1808 or 1809 he entered practice in the western part of the town of Newburgh, and in 1812 or 1813 removed to the village, where he continued to reside until his death. He was one of the most devoted of physicians. No hardship was too great for him to encounter, and the voice of suffering always found him ready at its call. Especially was he kind and attentive to the poor. The wealthy he knew could command attendance and comfort, and that the poor were too frequently permitted to suffer and die without a thought for their condition. This evil he labored to correct, and in his mission of good never paused to inquire into the pecuniary circumstances of his patient. He fell a martyr to this noble trait in his character,—contracted disease in the humble cabin of the immigrant, and, after a short illness, rested from his labors. If it be true that

"All our actions take Their hues from the complexion of the heart," then is his memory justly cherished.

DR. JAMES McNAIR GARDINER was a lineal descendant, in the third generation, of James Gairdner, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, who married a Miss McNair, and had issue, Robert, James, Margaret, and Cecilia.

DR. JAMES McNAIR GARDINER.

Robert Gardiner, father of Dr. Gardiner, was born in Scotland, May 31, 1769. About 1790 he emigrated to this country, and took up a permanent residence in Newburgh, where he clerked in the store of Hugh Walsh, and afterwards of John Anderson and John McAuley. He was the first to change the orthography of his name by transposition of the letter "i" from the third to the fifth place in the family name. In 1795 he established a general store on the southwest corner of Water and Fourth Streets, and adjoining it he opened a "coffee-house,"—the first of its kind in Newburgh. His establishment became a favorite place of public resort. He became a naturalized citizen of Newburgh in 1802, and until 1812 followed the various avocations of a school-teacher, painter, captain of a sloop, and merchant, finally opening a confectionery and toy shop. He was a member of the local militia, and in 1812 was ordered, with the company of which he was first lieutenant, to Staten Island, where he remained about three months. About this period the use of shinplasters began, and "among the many individuals and corporations by whom they were issued," says Mr. Eager, in his "History of Orange County," "none had a greater circulation than Robert Gardiner's small bills. Some idea may be formed of the extent of the circulation of shinplasters at that time when the fact is stated, that the average weekly amount taken in exchange for bank-bills and his own, together with what he received in the course of business, amounted to no less than two thousand dollars."

Robert Gardiner was twice married. His first wife—to whom he was united in 1791—was Jane, daughter of Benjamin Smith, who bore him the following children, viz., James M., born Oct. 24, 1792; Robert S., died young; Robert S. (2), born Oct. 29, 1795; and Cecilia B., born July 11, 1799. Mrs. Jane Gardiner died in 1803, and on Feb. 19, 1804, Mr. Gardiner married Sybil Burr, of whom were born Jefferson V. V.; Arabella J. G. V. V.; Cicero A., died Feb. 24, 1875; Demosthenes C.; Iduella T. R.; Lawrence L.; Marion A.; Zelima; Franklin M.; Lewis W.; Baron Steuben; and Anastesia M., who married Lewis H. Stansbrough. Mr. Gardiner died March 3, 1831, and his wife in 1854.

Dr. James M. Gardiner was born in Newburgh on the date indicated above, and received his academical education in Newburgh. At the age of sixteen years he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Gidney, and subsequently pursued his professional studies under Dr. Mott, of New York, for a year and a half. He commenced practice in 1813, and a short time after spent a year in the leading hospitals of Europe. He engaged in the practice of his profession in Newburgh throughout his life, and died Dec. 8, 1858.

As a physician Dr. Gardiner was devoted to his profession, and enjoyed a large and successful practice for nearly half a century. A short time before his death he is alleged to have said that before he had been a student one year, so great was the demand for the services of a physician, that he was pushed forward by his instructor into practice, and that before he was seventeen years of age he had attended with success several difficult cases of child-birth. "May God forgive me for any errors in practice that I may have committed then," said he, "but I did the best for suffering humanity that I could. And since that time, how many of the first accents of the living and the farewells of the dying have fallen upon my arm. I have seen suffering in all its forms; have had what few physicians can claim, two cases of triplets—one all boys and the other all girls—pass through my hands into this breathing world; and, as a rule, I may claim, and I am too near my grave to be accused of boasting, a most successful practice."* On Sept. 8, 1814, he was appointed surgeon in the Ninety-first Regiment of Militia, Gen. Hopkins' brigade, commanded by Col. Michael, but was not called into active service.

Dr. Gardiner was of a studious turn of mind, possessed of a powerful memory, which was cultivated and reinforced by a system of mnemonics of his own invention, and brought to the discharge of his professional duties a thorough knowledge of the pathology and cure of disease. Of a genial and happy disposition, possessed of wonderful personal magnetism, and a faculty for story-telling which few enjoy, he bore a pleasant look and encouraging manner into the chamber of sickness, and was justly popular in the community in which he dwelt. He was a great reader, was familiar with the works of the standard authors of Great Britain as well as of his own country; quoted with facility from them, and was a frequent contributor to the literary associations to which he belonged and to the public press. He was a remarkably good chess-player, a game in which he took great delight, and had few equals among the players of the State.

Dr. Gardiner was twice married—first to Maria, daughter of Josiah Vail, of Walkill, who died in 1824; and secondly, to Caroline H., daughter of David Havens, of Cornwall, who survives him. By the first marriage were born two children, Robert W. and Lucy Ann Cornelia, who married Dr. Daniel Wells, of Newburgh. The issue of the second marriage were Maria A., who married Charles Smith, of Newburgh, died May 2, 1855; James H., died young; Walter Scott, a poet and artist of ability and reputation; Caroline H.; James H., died young; Emma Jane, who married Charles Stewart, of Newburgh; James H. (2); and Henry C. James H. devotes much of his time to the study of mathematical science, is in correspondence with some of the leading scientists of the day, and, as an amateur astronomer, was the discoverer of what is known as Gardiner's comet, in 1863.

DR. ISAAC GARRISON was born in the town of Plattekill, Ulster Co., N. Y., on Aug. 11, 1802, and was the youngest of a family of ten children of Isaac and Martha (Denton) Garrison. His father was an intelligent farmer of Plattekill, and his grandfather, Richard Garrison, early engaged in agricultural pursuits near Sing Sing, N. Y.

The early life of Dr. Garrison was passed upon his father's farm, and his educational advantages were such as the common schools of his day afforded. At the age of fifteen or sixteen years he attended the academy at Sing Sing, Westchester Co., N. Y., for a short time, and subsequently commenced the study of medicine under his uncle, Dr. Joshua Garrison, of Pleasant Valley. After one year he removed to Newburgh, Orange Co., and pursued his studies under Dr. Charles Miller, a leading physician and surgeon of that city, with whom he remained four years. He then attended courses of lectures at the Vermont Medical College, Castleton, Vt., for two years, and was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine from that institution on Dec. 2, 1823. During a portion of the time that he was in attendance upon the Vermont Medical College, Dr. Garrison filled the position of adjunct professor of anatomy in that institution.

After receiving his degree Dr. Garrison returned to Newburgh, but owing to impaired health consequent upon close application to his studies, he was obliged to return to his father's residence in Plattekill for rest, where he passed the winter. The following spring he was called to Newburgh by Dr. Miller, who was then in poor health, as his assistant. Dr. Miller died soon after, and by his request Dr. Garrison succeeded to his large and lucrative practice, and continued in the regular and successful practice of his profession until 1849, when his health again failed him. He then removed to Brockport, Monroe Co., N. Y., and purchased a farm, residing there seventeen years. During this period he acted as consulting physician in a number of important cases, but did not pretend to apply himself to regular practice. In June, 1865, he returned to Newburgh, but did not resume the duties of his profession. He has since resided in that city.

Dr. Garrison has led a quiet and retired life, confined himself strictly to the regular practice of his profession when permitted by his health to engage in active business pursuits, and has avoided political and public life. As a physician he was recognized as skillful in the diagnosis and treatment of his cases, successful in meeting and combating the various forms of disease with which he met in an extensive practice, and in the department of surgery he ranked among the first of his profession. He became a member of the Orange County Medical Society on Jan. 21, 1829. During a long residence in Newburgh he has ever performed the part of a worthy and exemplary citizen, and willingly co-operated in the various benevolent and progressive enterprises of his day. On Feb. 26, 1827, he was appointed by Governor DeWitt Clinton assistant hospital surgeon of the Thirty-fourth Brigade of Infantry of New York. For many years he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church of Newburgh.

Dr. Garrison has been three times married. His first wife was Miss Matilda Miller, sister of Dr. Charles Miller, of whom was born one child, which died in infancy. Miss Mary Tousey, the second wife, died without issue. His present wife is Catharine A., daughter of Jeremiah Scott, of New York. An only son, Charles Miller Garrison, is a student of medicine under Dr. John Deyo, of Newburgh.

DAVID HANFORD, M.D., was born July 16, 1786, at Westport, Fairfield Co., Conn., and was graduated from the Medical Department of Yale College in 1807.

He settled in the practice of his profession in Middletown, N. Y., in 1810, and was for thirty-four years the leading physician of the place; identified with all of its temporal and spiritual interests, and for many years he was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church.

He was one of the number who pledged themselves to provide means to bring the Erie Railroad from Goshen to Middletown.

Dr. Hanford was one of the early members of the Medical Society of Orange County, and was always interested in the elevation and dignity of the profession. Dr. Hanford was one of the founders of the Wallkill Academy, and took an active interest in it as long as he lived. He died Oct. 13, 1844.

He married, in 1812, Margaret, daughter of Capt. Daniel Bailey, one of the old settlers of Phillipsburgh, Orange Co.

Two children survive,—John B. Hanford, a merchant in Middletown, of the firm of Shaw & Hanford from 1840 to 1856 (now retired), and one daughter, Caroline, wife of Charles Young, a farmer in the town of Hamptonburgh.

CHARLES WINFIELD, of Crawford, who died in 1858 or 1859, was the son of Daniel Winfield, of Shawangunk, in which town he was born, June 15, 1789. He studied under Dr. Benjamin Bevier, and subsequently graduated at the medical college in New York. He commenced practice in Crawford, and continued there until his death, doing a large amount of professional business, and maintaining with severity his opposition to every species of empiricism and medical imposture, under whatever name, place, or guise soever. He was widely known as a politician and public servant in an official capacity, as well as a physician. Besides minor offices, he was repeatedly elected supervisor of the town, and served as chairman of the board, and in 1832 and again in 1834 was elected to the Assembly. He was a member of the Reformed Dutch Church, and died, as he had lived, in the love and fear of the Lord. His son, Charles H. Winfield, of Goshen, was elected district attorney in 1850, and member of Congress in 1863, and again in 1865.

DAVID C. WINFIELD, M.D., was born in the town of Crawford, Orange Co., N. Y., Nov. 19, 1817, the eldest son and child of Dr. Charles Winfield and Margaret Crawford, one of the family from whom the town derived its name, and was the first of the children to die.

His father, Dr. Charles Winfield, was a prominent physician, well known in the counties of Orange, Ulster, and Sullivan, residing upon a farm adjacent to the village of Pine Bush, where the subject of this memoir spent his youth attending school; later, partly employed in labor upon his father's farm, and partly as a merchant's clerk in the country store of Mr. Wm. I. Smith.

He pursued his classical studies at the Montgomery Academy. In 1837 he entered his father's office as a student in medicine and surgery. He attended medical lectures during the session of 1838-39 at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, and obtained his degree of Doctor in Medicine from the Albany Medical College in the spring of 1840.

He at once began the practice of his profession as a partner in the business with his father, and so continued until his removal to Middletown in the fall of 1841.

On Nov. 26, 1845, he married Jane, daughter of the late Henry S. Beakes, and granddaughter of Stacy Beakes, one of the earliest merchants of Middletown. She survives her husband, and by her marriage with Dr. Winfield has two sons,—Charles H., a member of the firm of Wallace & Winfield, dry-goods merchants of Middletown, and David C. Winfield.

After his removal to Middletown, Dr. Winfield always resided and pursued his profession there until his death, which occurred on May 23, 1878, with the exception of the period of time from Jan. 1, 1859, to Jan. 1, 1865, when he was chosen to discharge the duties of clerk of his native county, having been re-elected in the fall of 1861. While filling this honorable position he resided in Goshen. Previous to his election to the position of clerk of the county, he had suffered from occasional attacks of pulmonary hemorrhage, which induced him to accept the office, hoping by rest from the fatigue and avoidance of exposure incident to his profession to regain his health. Dr. Winfield has for several terms filled the position of presiding officer of the Medical Society of Orange County, of which he became a member in 1843, and at the time of his death was its vice-president. By his fellow-citizens of Middletown Dr. Winfield was highly esteemed, and held several positions of honor and trust. He was a member of its board of water commissioners from its formation, in 1867, to the time of his death; also a director in the Wallkill Bank from an early period of its existence until its close; one of the incorporators of the Middletown Savings-Bank, and its first vice-president from its organization to his decease; also for a number of years a member of the board of education of Middletown, and at his death was its presiding officer.

As a physician, Dr. David C. Winfield attained to a high position in the ranks of his chosen profession. Possessed of a sound judgment, giving due deference to the opinions of others, and exercising great care in forming his own opinions, his advice was often sought by his brother physicians, to whom he was always courteous and generous. To his clientage he gave the best efforts of his life, seldom consulting his own convenience or comfort in answering their calls. He soon gained and retained a strong hold upon their respect and affection. To the poor among his patrons he was always patient, considerate, and kind, often supplementing his advice and remedies with substantial evidences of the benevolence which was a prominent trait of his character. Of an eminently social disposition, he was always welcomed by neighbor and friend as a genial and affable companion, while all in the community in which he lived regarded him as one of God's noblest works—"an honest man."

At the first meeting of the Medical Society of

Doctor Robert Shaw

Orange County after his death, among other resolutions showing the high regard of the society for the memory of Dr. Winfield were the following:

"Resolved, That in the death of Dr. David C. Winfield, of Middletown, this society has lost a member whom we all honored and sadly miss, and wish to express our grateful remembrance of his kindness of heart, his manly uprightness and integrity of character, his cheerful and faithful discharge of professional duty both to patients and to his medical brethren.

"Resolved, That while his loss will long be regretted by his church and the large number of those who knew and loved him, nowhere outside of his broken family circle will he be missed as by us,—his fellows and friends of the Orange County Medical Society."

ROBERT SHAW, M.D.—The Shaw family are of Scotch-Irish extraction, having at an early period settled in the north of Ireland, from whence a branch emigrated to America about the year 1750. Among this number was William, who chose a residence in Orange County, purchasing land in Mount Hope township, which is still in possession of the family. He was united in marriage to Miss Mary Waldron, of New York, and was the father of the following children: John, Robert, Samuel, Rev. Henry, Alexander, William, James, Charles, Elizabeth, and Mary. The death of William Shaw occurred in 1822. The simplicity, integrity, and purity which governed his life are best illustrated by embodying in this sketch the following letter left by him on his death: "This is to be read to my children when I am laid in the grave. My dear children, as God in his mercy has given you all the natural faculties and powers that are natural to man, I hope you will daily return thanks for the same, and that you will make the Scriptures your rule of life, and seek and serve God in the way and manner that he will approve and bless. As your mother has nursed you with the greatest tenderness, endeavor to give her a suitable return by honoring her person, and receiving her counsels and providing for her wants while God continues her in time. I hope you will love and cherish one another, not taking the least advantage, and if misfortune should befall any of you I hope the rest will, not only with your counsel, but with your property, assist your unfortunate brother or sister. Be just in all your dealings with mankind; be content with your own, be it little or much, for it is not the quantity that makes men happy, but being content with your condition. Signed with my hand this third day of June, one thousand eight hundred and six."—WILLIAM SHAW.

Robert, the second son of Mr. and Mrs. William Shaw, was born Oct. 30, 1780, on the homestead, in Mount Hope, where his early years were spent, the time being varied by study at the neighboring public school, or labor on the farm. He began his business career at a later period by engaging in the employments of a clerk at Kinderhook, N. Y., and at a subsequent date embarked in mercantile pursuits at Carpenter's Point. During this time his energetic mind sought a wider sphere of activity, and prompted him to aspire to a professional career. His leisure hours had already been devoted to the study of medicine, and advantage was taken of the earliest opportunity to enter the office of Dr. Jonathan Swezey, of Goshen, under whose preceptorship he received his diploma. His first professional labors were confined to Westtown, Orange Co., where he immediately located.

In 1822 he purchased the family residence now occupied by his widow, in her eighty-first year, and his son, William W. Shaw. Here Dr. Shaw continued practice during the remainder of his life.

He was, Aug. 4, 1821, united in marriage to Miss Meliscent, daughter of Salmon Wheat, of Wallkill, whose children were William W., Elizabeth W., Mary W., Robert Livingston, and William W. (2). Dr. Shaw was a man of much influence in the community, not more as a skillful physician than for his high personal character. He was intimately associated with the best and most prominent men of the day, and filled, both socially and professionally, a large place in the early history of the county. He was a Whig in his political preferences, and a man of much public spirit, though not an aspirant for official place. He was a Presbyterian in his religious convictions, and a cordial supporter of the church and all efforts for the promotion of morality.

The death of Dr. Shaw occurred in 1848, and inspired the most earnest professions of regret as well from the public as from nearer friends.

DAVID R. ARNELL, whose name deserves commemoration from his successful efforts in recovering from the battle-field the remains of the heroes who were slain at Minisink, is thus spoken of in an obituary notice in the Goshen Republican:

"Died, on the evening of Saturday, the 2d of September, 1826, David R. Arnell, of the village of Goshen, aged fifty-five years. By his death society has lost a valuable member, religion a distinguished supporter, science a zealous votary, and the profession in which he was an extensive practitioner an eminent and valuable member."

He was a native of the town of Minisink, but began his practice at Prospect Hill, near Scotchtown, where for some years before receiving his diploma he was engaged in the manufacture of brown earthenware. He removed to Goshen in 1808 and commenced practice, growing in public estimation until his death. Devoted to his profession and active in all its interests, he gave time and thought to its study, and was so especially useful as a member of the Orange County Medical Society as to be regarded as its father. Full of patriotic inclinations, he read a paper before the society, in 1820, on Dr. Tusten, which awakened an interest that culminated in the gathering up of the bones of the fallen at Minisink and their interment at Goshen, and which planted the seed that subsequently bore fruit in the gift by Dr. Merritt H. Cash of the present monument to their memory.

CHARLES DRAKE, one of the more recent physicians of Newburgh, was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y. After receiving a liberal education he studied medicine, and, after graduating, removed to Plattekill, Ulster Co., and entered upon the practice of his profession. He married a daughter of Dr. Adna Heaton, of Ulster County. In 1846 he was elected to the Assembly by the Democratic party. Soon after the expiration of his term he removed to Newburgh, where he continued the practice of medicine. In 1852 he was elected a member of the board of trustees of Newburgh, and served one year. In 1855 he was elected clerk of the county by a combination of "Whigs" and "Barn-Burners," and served three years. On the formation of the Republican party he became one of its most zealous members. He died Jan. 29, 1863. As a physician he occupied a high rank, and throughout his professional career enjoyed a large and lucrative practice. In his official trusts he was faithful and efficient. He was charitable to the poor, and his acts of kindness and benevolence were only known to the recipients of his bounty. He was outspoken and fearless in his views upon all public questions. For many years previous to his decease he was a member of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of Newburgh, and took a deep interest in the erection of the church edifice now occupied by that society. He will be remembered as one of the representative men of Newburgh and the county. His son, J. Hallock Drake, now of New York, was district attorney of Orange County, 1865-68.

DR. MERITT H. CASH.—Little is known with certainty of the early history of the Cash family that carries us farther back than the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. Daniel Cash was born in New England; the date of his birth is not known. He afterwards lived in Pittston, Pa., and from thence removed to Wyoming Valley, and with his wife and child escaped from the massacre that soon after devastated that beautiful valley. He made his way back to Orange County, and settled near Millsburgh, in the town of Minisink. He and his wife died in the year 1789. Daniel Cash had eight children,—Isaac, Nathan, Reuben, Mehitable, Ziphorah, Polly, Betsey, Mill-cent.

Reuben, the third son of Daniel Cash, father of Dr. Cash, was born Jan. 23, 1768, and died Jan. 6, 1828, aged sixty years. He married Millicent Howell, who died Sept. 3, 1838, aged sixty-three years. They had nine children, viz.,—Sally, Hannah, Dr. Meritt H., Capt. John M., James M., Solomon V. R., Phebe M., Fanny, and Selah J.

Dr. Cash was born in the year 1803, at Rutger's Place, near Ridgebury, in the town of Minisink, where he spent his life. His father gave him the advantages of a liberal education, and being of a thoughtful and studious disposition, he naturally turned his attention to the professions, choosing that of medicine.

He graduated from the New York Medical College about the year 1825, and commenced the practice of medicine in his native town. He succeeded in gaining the confidence of the people in a remarkable degree, and in building up a practice that gave him at once a foremost place among the physicians of Orange County.

He was an active member of the Orange County Medical Society, and aided materially in its organization, and during his life he always took a deep interest in its welfare. But the practice of medicine was not the only direction in which his talent lay, or his usefulness was felt and appreciated in the community. He was a far-seeing and accurate business man and financier, and he not only looked carefully after his own interests, but his advice and counsel was much sought by others, and, as executor and administrator, many estates of his neighbors and friends were confided to his care for settlement and distribution, and his final accounting was always scrupulously exact and rendered to the last farthing. He was twice chosen to the State Legislature, and there acquitted himself to the entire satisfaction of his constituents.

Late in life he married Hannah, daughter of Hon. Joseph Davis, with whom he lived happily about seven years, and whose memory he cherished fondly to the end of his life.

Dr. Cash was never a robust man; the seeds of consumption were inherent in his nature, and perhaps only for his strong will and persevering efforts in battling against its fatal tendencies, would have laid him in the grave much earlier. This tendency to disease gradually undermining his health forced him to relinquish the practice of medicine, and during his later years he found pleasure and satisfaction for his active mind in reading, in agriculture, and the care of his ample estate; and notwithstanding his apparent supreme disregard of riches in itself considered, his fortune, under his wise and careful management, continued to increase and multiply to the end of his days.

Dr. Cash was a man of plain and simple tastes, caring very little for affectation, or making anything like a display of his wealth.

He was not an open professor of religion, yet he was a God-fearing man, a careful student of the Bible, talked freely of the future state, accepted in faith the promises of God, and often expressed a hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave. As a rule he was kind to the poor, and was ever ready to extend a helping hand to any who proved themselves worthy of his confidence. He was a true patriot, and loved his country with a supreme devotion, and always took a great interest in its politics and general welfare, and he always felt a pride in relating the deeds of prowess recorded of his Revolutionary ancestors and the distinction they acquired in that struggle; and any measure that had for its object the advancement of its interests, politically or socially, always found in him a warm friend and earnest advocate.

In the ancestral home he spent his life, and there, amid the scenes of his youth and among the people who had respected him in his riper years, and learned to love and revere him in his old age, he calmly died, April 26, 1861.

Harvey Everett

Bartow Wright, M.D.

His ancestors came from England and settled at Flushing, L. I. William Wright, his grandfather, was born there in 1736, and moved to Dutchess County, N. Y., in 1766. He there married Jemima Haight, and lived the life of a farmer, holding the office of justice of the peace under the crown of England during the colonial struggle for independence. He died in 1812. His wife died in 1825, in the eighty-sixth year of her age. Enos, son of William and Jemima Wright, born in April, 1772, married Mary Woolsey, of West Chester County, on Jan. 15, 1799. He lived in Fishkill, Dutchess Co., and gave his time and attention to agricultural pursuits. By this marriage were born Elizabeth, died young; Mary, married William Anthony, died in 1826; Bartow; Hannah, married William Anthony as his second wife, and died in 1860; William W., a retired merchant of New York City; and Josiah W., deceased. Enos Wright died in June, 1855. His wife died in January, 1822.

Bartow Wright, M.D., was born at Fishkill, Dutchess Co., N. Y., Nov. 28, 1805. His early life was spent there, and he attended the Fishkill Classical School of Rev. Dr. Westbrook. At the age of twenty he began the study of medicine under Dr. Bartow White, of Fishkill, and afterwards entered the office of Dr. Theodore Anthony, of the same place, as a student. Subsequently he attended medical lectures at the Western Medical College, located at Fairfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y. Dr. Wright commenced to practice medicine in the year 1830, at which time he settled at Campbell Hall, Orange Co., N. Y., dependent upon his own resources and his professional education. For nearly half a century he practiced medicine in Hamptonburgh and adjoining towns, and was widely and favorably known as a man and as a physician. For the past few years he has retired from active practice, but frequently acts as counsel.

For many years he has been a member of the Orange County Medical Society, and was formerly its president. In his early life he paid some attention to local school interests, but for many years his entire time and energies have been devoted to his profession, and the fraternity have always regarded him as a lover of his chosen life-work, and interested in its advancement in both county and State.

Dr. Wright was an original stockholder and is a director of the Montgomery and Erie Railway. He is an active member of the Presbyterian Church of Hamptonburgh, and interested in all that pertains to the welfare of his town and people.

In 1839 he married Mary Ann, daughter of William and Keturah Bull, of Wallkill, N. Y., and their children were William B., born in September, 1840; was graduated at Princeton College, N. J., and afterwards at the New York College of Physicians, and was subsequently professor of ancient and modern languages at the Buffalo Normal College; he married Mary C., daughter of Gen. Niven, of Sullivan County, N. Y.; was brevetted major for gallant service in the late war, attained some reputation as a literary man, and died at Atlanta, Ga., in 1880. The second child was Bartow; married Mary, daughter of Dr. Walsh, of Port Jervis, and lives in Goshen. Catharine W., who died in June, 1871, in the twenty-first year of her age.

By will, his large fortune was distributed among his relatives, a special bequest having been made to Orange County, to be expended in the purchase of a suitable monument to commemorate those who fell at the battle of Minisink, a bequest which was gratefully accepted by the people of Orange County.

Proud of the distinction of having raised up so noble a son in their midst, and for his noble munificence and liberality, his name will be venerated and his memory cherished so long as Orange County has a name to live.

HARVEY EVERETT, M.D.—His grandfather, Ephraim Everett, born in 1742, was of English origin, and came from Long Island in 1762 and settled on some two hundred acres of land in the town of Wallkill, Orange Co., N. Y., upon which he resided until his death, in December, 1834.

He is said to have purchased and used the first wagon in the town. He was one of the early members of the Presbyterian Church at Scotchtown.

His wife, Beulah, was a daughter of David Moore, one of the early settlers of Goshen, who died in 1789.

Their children were Julia (wife of Obadiah Howell), Ephraim, Walter, Lydia (wife of David Reeve), Hephzibah (wife of Daniel Moore), Benjamin, David, and Frelove (wife of Samuel Kirk).

Of these children, David, father of our subject, born in 1783, married Sarah, daughter of Andrew Clark McNish, who was of Scotch descent, and grandson of Rev. George McNish, the progenitor of the McNish family in Orange County. She was born in Wallkill in 1789, and died in 1872.

David Everett succeeded to the homestead by purchase, and there carried on agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1848. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, and passed through life esteemed for his integrity in all the relations of life, unmoved by the bickerings of political strife, and never sought office or held any, except to serve his town for a time as assessor, and fill some other minor places.

His children are Dr. Harvey, subject of this sketch; Henry L., inherited the homestead, where he resided until a few years prior to his decease, when he removed to Middletown, where he died at the age of fifty-nine; and George Whitfield, who also remained on the homestead most of his life, and was never married. He died at the age of fifty-nine.

Dr. Harvey Everett was born Dec. 19, 1811, and received his early education in the public and private schools of Middletown and at the Montgomery Academy.

He began the study of medicine with Dr. John T. Jansen, of Minisink, Orange Co.; matriculated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, and subsequently attended a course of lectures at the Vermont Academy of Medicine at Woodstock, from which he was graduated in 1834.

After his graduation he settled in practice at Middletown, where he has remained since, a period of forty-seven years, retaining, by his skill in the treatment of diseases, and by his care and devotion to his patients, the confidence of a large and influential part of the community here and in the surrounding towns.

Dr. Everett has taken an active part in educational matters, and has been a promoter of all worthy local objects in the community.

He became a member of the Orange County Medical Society in 1839; was one of the board of school inspectors of Wallkill from 1835 until that office was abolished, and for some ten years following he was school superintendent of that town. He was also supervisor of the town from 1842 to 1844 inclusive; one of the board of trustees of the Wallkill Academy from its founding, in 1841, until 1868; a member of the board of education from 1868 until 1872, and president of the board in 1871 and 1872.

He married, in January, 1837, Sarah A., daughter of Walter and Abigail (Corwin) Everett, of Wallkill, who was born in March, 1811.

Their two surviving children are Darwin, graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York in 1864; was appointed on the medical staff at Bellevue Hospital, where he remained until 1866, when he settled in a successful practice at Middletown, which he continues in 1881.

Genevieve is the wife of Frank B. Denton, of Middletown.

SAMUEL M. CRAWFORD, M.D.—The family of Crawfords were of Scotch extraction, and early emigrated to the north of Ireland, from whence a branch embarked for the United States.

Members of this colony found their way to Orange County, and settled in the township of Montgomery (now Crawford), the birthplace of Samuel, the grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch. He devoted his life to the pursuits of agriculture, and was united in marriage to Miss McCurdy, of the same township, to whom were born sons, Archibald, Moses, Robert, and Jonathan, and four daughters. Mr. Crawford's death took place in the township of Crawford, which was for many years a portion of Montgomery. The birth of his son Moses occurred in the latter township, in 1777, his life having been spent in the occupation of farming. He married Elenor, daughter of Alexander Thompson, of Montgomery, and became the father of seven children,—Alexander, Samuel M., Jonathan, Matilda (Mrs. N. P. Hill), Isabella, whose death occurred in early life, Jane T. (Mrs. Wm. B. Crawford), and Mary. Of this number Samuel M. was born Feb. 5, 1810, in the township of Montgomery, where the years of his boyhood were spent. The public school of the district was first attended, after which the academy in the village of Montgomery enabled him to acquire proficiency in the classics, and fitted him for admission to Union College, at Schenectady, N. Y., in 1829, from which institution he was graduated in 1832. He at once began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. George Eager, of Montgomery, and received his diploma in 1836.

The doctor soon after chose his native township as a commanding field of labor, where he began his professional career, and has since been an active practitioner. He is now one of the oldest representatives of the profession in Orange County, and though entitled, after a laborious life spent in the interests of the science of medicine, to a respite from toil, still responds to the many demands made upon his skill and knowledge derived from wide experience.

Dr. Crawford was, in April, 1836, married to Miss Eliza A., daughter of John C. Niemyer, of Virginia. They have had eight children, of whom the following survive: Matilda (Mrs. J. C. Wilbur), Susan V., Henry V., and Mattie (Mrs. C. H. Hinckley). In his political affinities the doctor is a staunch Republican, though an active professional life has left little time for participation in the campaign strifes incident to official preferment. His religious views are those of the Presbyterian denomination, his family being among the worshipers of the church in Montgomery. Dr. Crawford is one of the earliest living members of the Orange County Medical Society, having joined it in 1837.

DR. THOMAS S. EDMONSTON.—The progenitor of this family in Orange County was James Edmonston, who, with his wife, Margaret Smith, came to this country in 1720 from Enniskillen, County Tyrone, Ireland. He remained for seven years at Plymouth, Mass., where he landed, and then settled on 200 acres of land in the town of New Windsor, Orange Co. When the army came to this county, Mr. Edmonston being an old settler and acquainted with the country, Gen. Washington requested him to go with him and Col. Pickering and select a camp-ground, which he did, leading them by an Indian path to the Square, where they established their camp. Mr. Edmonston had many encounters with the Indians, who were about him in great numbers and hostile during the French war, and at one time he came near being scalped. The stone house which he built in 1755 is still standing, and the property is still held by his descendants. His children were William and Sally. The latter married Patrick McDaniel. William married Jane, daughter of David Sutherland, of Canterbury, Cornwall, who bore him four daughters and three sons, of whom James was father of our subject, was a major in the Revolutionary war, and after its close he was a farmer near Newburgh, and died in 1844, in the occupation of his farm. His wife was Gertrude Harris, of Poughkeepsie, by whom he had a large family of children. One son, Samuel, was a physician in New York City. DeWitt Clinton was a prominent physician of Newburgh for many years, and his widow survives in 1881, and resides in that city. Harris was a physician, first settled at Washingtonville, and afterwards in Newburgh, where he died. William had a son, William Henry, who was a practicing physician at Jacksonville, Fla., and died at the old homestead. Thomas S. Edmonston, next youngest of the family, was born on the homestead, near Newburgh, March 13, 1804. He received a good education in the schools of Newburgh and became a teacher. Upon reaching his majority he began the study of medicine with Dr. James M. Gardiner, of Newburgh, and about the same time established himself in the drug business there, which he carried on while prosecuting his medical studies.

He received a license to practice physic and surgery, Jan. 20, 1829, from the Herkimer Medical Society. About that time, while passing through the village of Chester, he chanced to put up at the hotel in the place when the landlord's wife was very ill of a fever, and many others in the village were sick from the same disease. The attending physician having given up as incurable the landlady, Dr. Edmonston at once began the treatment of her case, and not only was he successful and restored her to health, but cured the rest in the vicinity in the same way afflicted. He soon after resolved to settle at Chester, which he did, and at once was inducted into a large and lucrative practice, which continued until his death, in a great measure caused by overwork and exposure, which occurred March 11, 1852.

As a physician, Dr. Edmonston ranked among the first in Orange County. He was indefatigable in his devotion to the interests and care of his patients, skillful in the treatment of complicated diseases, sympathetic in cases of suffering, and his services were often given at all times of day or night to those from whom remuneration was impossible, as well as to those who were abundantly able to compensate him for his services. As a citizen, he was honorable in the promotion of all worthy local objects, and endeared to the people not only in Chester, but in the adjoining towns of Warwick, Goshen, Hamptonburgh, and Blooming-Grove, where his practice extended. His consultations often reached to other counties, and his counsels commanded the confidence and respect of his associates.

At the time of his death he was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Chester. His wife was Drusilla, youngest daughter of John and Christina (Wells) Decker, and granddaughter of Johannes Decker, who in 1768 owned the mill and property where Walden, town of Montgomery, is now a thriving and prosperous village. The Deckers were among the early settlers of Esopus, and as early as 1689, Broerson Decker was numbered among the Huguenot settlers of Ulster County who found homes on the banks of the Hudson. She had one sister, Cornelia, wife of George G. Mitchell, and one brother, Theodore Wells, a graduate of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute of Troy, N. Y.

Christina Wells was great-granddaughter of Sarah Wells, the first reputed white woman in the town of

F. E. Armstrong

S. W. Carpenter

C. P. Smith

Goshen, and a lineal descendant of Hon. William Wells, an educated lawyer in England, who came to America, and was high sheriff of New Yorkshire, on Long Island. The father of Christina Wells was Joshua, who was born at Goshen in 1744, was a soldier in the colonial army, married Rhoda Booth, a granddaughter of William Bull and Sarah Wells, and died in 1819, he being the son of John Wells, the progenitor of the family in Orange County. The children of Dr. Edmonston are John Decker and Cornelia Mitchell Edmonston.

S. G. CARPENTER, M.D.—The Carpenter family, of which Dr. Carpenter is a member, is one of the oldest in Orange County, and he is a descendant of Capt. Solomon Carpenter, one of the first to own land in the town of Goshen.

Papers now in possession of the family show that Capt. Solomon Carpenter, of Jamaica, L. I., deeded 412½ acres of land on May 1, 1714, situated in Wawayanda, now Goshen, to John Everett and Samuel Clowes for £80.

Another sale was made by him to John Yelverton in 1749, and the instrument of sale was witnessed by an Indian named "Herkiaheana."

In 1753 he made a sale of land in Goshen to his son Solomon, and in 1715 he made a sale to John Carpenter, of Jamaica, L. I., of land in Goshen, and John Carpenter in 1779 sold land to his son John in the south division of the old town of Goshen.

The will of Capt. Carpenter, dated 1763, designates his sons Solomon and Nehemiah as his executors, and provides among other things that the negro children should be learned to read the Bible and know the shorter catechism of the Presbyterian Church by whoever purchased them by the time they were twenty years old; that the elders and ministers of that church were to judge if this had been done at that age, and if not, they were to put them to school at the expense of their masters until it was accomplished and the officers of the church satisfied.

Capt. Solomon Carpenter seems to have been a man of great enterprise and good business ability, and one of the early founders and promoters of the Presbyterian Church here. Another member of the family, Michael Carpenter, was appointed June 1, 1770, by Governor George Clinton, ensign of a company of militia.

Nehemiah, father of our subject, was born in Goshen, March 2, 1798, was a farmer in the west division of the town, also in the town of Mount Hope, during most of his active business life, but spent his latter years at Chester, where he was engaged in the drug business with Dr. Carpenter, his son. During his residence in Goshen he was a member of the Presbyterian Church there, and for several years officiated as deacon. He died April 20, 1858.

His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Caleb Goldsmith, of Scotchtown, Orange Co., whom he married Jan. 5, 1824. She was born April 17, 1800.

Their children are Dr. Solomon G. Carpenter and Mary E., born Nov. 12, 1834, wife of Jehiel G. Clark, a merchant at Chester.

Solomon G. Carpenter was born Jan. 6, 1825. He prepared for college at the Farmers' Hall Academy, Goshen, but on account of ill-health was obliged to relinquish his desire to take a college course.

In 1842 he began the study of medicine with Dr. J. W. Ostrom, of Goshen, attended three courses of lectures at the University of the City of New York, and was graduated from the medical department of that institution in 1845.

Dr. Carpenter settled the same year in practice at Chester, and has devotedly and continuously practiced medicine in Chester and the surrounding vicinity since, where for a period of thirty-six years he has retained the confidence of the community as a skillful, self-reliant, judicious, and honest practitioner.

From 1848 until 1858 he carried on a drug-store at Chester in connection with his professional duties.

Dr. Carpenter has been a member of the Orange County Medical Society since 1845. His wife was Mary S., daughter of Jacob Feagles, of Amity, this county, whom he married Nov. 12, 1857. She died Jan. 7, 1865, aged thirty-seven years, leaving the following children: Lizzie, Mary S., and Clara.

CHARLES P. SMITH, M.D.—His grandfather, Isaac Smith, born at Jamaica, L. I., March 8, 1755, came to Orange County with his parents when he was twelve years old. His active business life was spent in the town of Chester as a farmer.

He married Mehetabel, daughter of Joshua Wells, who was a descendant of Hon. William Wells, an educated lawyer of England, born near Norwich in 1608, and who settled upon Long Island, where he became high sheriff of New Yorkshire, his great-grandson, John, being the first settler of the family in Orange County, and died there July 4, 1776. She was born March 14, 1768, and died Nov. 22, 1831.

Isaac Smith died Oct. 14, 1836, leaving the following children: Parshall, Hezekiah, Joanna (wife of Isaac Van Duzer), Isaac, Sarah, Julia Ann, Eliza Jane (wife of Abram Demerest). Of these children, only Mrs. Demerest survives in 1881, having been born April 17, 1808.

Isaac was the father of Dr. Smith; was born Dec. 22, 1800, and died April 19, 1850. He was a farmer in West Milford, N. J., during the early part of his life, and subsequently settled at Chester, where he was engaged in the mercantile business until his death. He was an industrious and active business man, liberal to the needy, and devoted to the principles of Christianity. He was an elder of the Presbyterian Church at West Milford, and a promoter of all worthy local objects.

His wife was Katy Maria, daughter of James Smith, of Chester, who was born Feb. 7, 1803, and died April 19, 1838.

The children born of this union are Joanna, wife of John Yeomans, of Troy, Pa.; Sarah, born Jan. 17, 1825, died Oct. 4, 1857, was the wife of George W. Vreeland; Charles P., subject of this sketch, born Feb. 27, 1827; Oscar F., a farmer of West Milford; Phebe Jane, born Feb. 24, 1832, died unmarried Feb. 10, 1855; James M., born April 3, 1834, died March 10, 1864; Amzi L., a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

For his second wife, Isaac Smith married Mary K. De Kamp, who was born Aug. 12, 1806, and died Oct. 14, 1855, leaving a surviving daughter,—Julia Elizabeth, wife of George W. Masten, of Chester.

Dr. Parshall Smith spent his boyhood on the home farm, and in attending the district school and receiving private instruction from Rev. Cornelius Conkling, the Presbyterian minister of the place. At the age of sixteen he became a teacher, and taught school for one year. He then entered the preparatory school of the New York University, intending to take a collegiate course, but failing in means to carry out his object, and being wholly dependent upon his own resources, after one year there he returned to teaching, which he continued until the age of twenty, and began the study of medicine with Dr. D. D. Meeker, of West Milford. In the winter of 1849–50 he attended his first course of lectures at the New York University Medical College, and in the spring following purchased the drug-store of Dr. G. S. Carpenter, at Chester, Orange Co., which he carried on for a year, at the same time doing what practice was offered, which, however, was confined largely to charity. His second course of lectures was taken at Castleton Medical College in 1851, from which he graduated at the close of the term.

After his graduation he returned to Chester, where, by indomitable perseverance and integrity, his skill as a physician and surgeon soon gained the confidence of a respectable part of the community, and where he has very successfully continued the practice of his profession since,—a period of thirty years.

Dr. Smith is widely known as a devoted, judicious, and skillful physician, and a man of marked ability as a skillful surgeon in difficult cases. In the treatment of diseases he has the confidence of a large community in the surrounding towns, and his counsel is often sought by his medical brethren outside of his regular ride.

As a citizen, Dr. Smith is eminently interested in all that pertains to the welfare of the people and to the prosperity of the place where he resides. In matters of religion and education Dr. Smith takes an active interest, contributing liberally of time and means thereto. He was elected a member of the board of education upon the organization of the union graded school at Chester, has been a member continuously since, and for several years past president of the board.

His first wife was Caroline, daughter of Thomas C. Jennings, of Edenville, N. Y., whom he married June 8, 1853. She died March 27, 1854, leaving no children.

For his second wife he married Susan, daughter of Jacob Feagles, of Amity, Orange Co., who died June 15, 1857, leaving no issue. His present wife is Susan, daughter of John B. Randolph, of Brooklyn, N. Y., whom he married Nov. 2, 1859. She was born March 13, 1838. Their children living are Mary L., Henry B., Charles P., Anna N., Joseph H., and William H.

SOLOMON VAN ETTEN, M.D.—The great-grandfather of Dr. Van Etten was Anthony Van Etten, of Rochester, Ulster Co., N. Y., who settled in the valley of the Neversink about the year 1743, having built a shop and followed the trade of a blacksmith. His occupation proved so lucrative as to have enabled him soon to purchase valuable lands in the neighborhood, which are nearly all still in possession of the family. On the maternal side, Dr. Van Etten's grandfather was Benjamin Carpenter, and his grandmother Miss Margaret Decker, daughter of Maj. Johannes Decker, of historic memory, and one of the pupils at school on the occasion of the raid made by Brant, the Indian chief, when the life of the teacher and others were sacrificed by his warriors. The house of Maj. Decker was burned by this marauding band, and the owner badly wounded previous to the battle of Minisink.

Among the children of Anthony Van Etten was Levi, whose son Levi married Elinor Carpenter. Their son Solomon was born July 30, 1829, in Deerpark, Orange Co., N. Y., and spent the first sixteen years of his life at home and in attendance upon the neighboring public school. He then repaired to the Unionville Academy, and devoted two years to study under the direction of William Rankin. After further time spent at school, under the instruction of David L. Towle, Esq., at the Farmers' Hall Academy, Goshen, N. Y., he adopted the profession of medicine, having entered the office of Dr. B. W. Thompson, of Goshen, N. Y. He graduated from the Albany Medical College in June, 1855.

Immediately after he chose Port Jervis as a desirable field for the exercise of his skill, and has since resided at that point. Dr. Van Etten has developed not only a taste for, but much proficiency in the art of surgery, a large field for which is presented by the numerous accidents occurring upon the line of the Erie Railroad.

He entered the service of the government during the late Rebellion as surgeon of the Fifty-sixth Regiment of New York State Volunteers, which was recruited in 1861. His career was brilliant, and his advancement rapid. He was speedily appointed brigade surgeon, and in 1862 was assigned to the charge of Gen. Terry's division, where he did valuable service both in the surgical and medical department of the army, and retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He was also largely instrumental in the raising of recruits from his own State. Dr. Van Etten has been since the formation of the party a Republican, and was elected in the fall of 1861 supervisor of his township. He was also nominated in early life as a candidate for member of the Legislature, and received a flattering vote in a district largely Democratic.

Dr. Van Etten was first married, Feb. 21, 1856, to Miss Harriet, daughter of Col. Levi Westbrook, of Waverley, N. Y., who died in 1857; and a second time, in September, 1865, to Mrs. Maria B. Sawyer, daughter of Hon. Nathan Bristol, of Waverley, N. Y. They have two children,—a son, Nathan B., and a daughter, Nellie B. Van Etten.

JAMES D. JOHNSTON, M.D., was born in Angel Street, Saint Martin's Le Grand, London, England, May 14, 1815, the son of John B. Johnston, a prominent manufacturing chemist of that city, and grandson of James Johnston, a wealthy and influential land proprietor of the midland counties of England.

His mother was Jane Richmond, and his brothers are John, William, and Samuel. John and William succeeded their father in the manufacturing business, which had been carried on by the family for several generations.

Dr. James D. Johnston's boyhood was spent at home, where he early received impressions of what he has so successfully followed for a life profession,—the practice of medicine,—and also where he became acquainted with the manufacture and use of chemicals.

At the age of sixteen he began his medical studies at St. Thomas' Hospital, London, England, where he remained a faithful student for four years, and became eminently versed in the nature, cause, and cure of complicated diseases.

In 1841, Dr. Johnston, with his brother Samuel, emigrated to America, landing at New York, where he stopped only a short time, and then came to Newark, N. J., where he remained until 1842, when he decided to permanently locate, and chose the then small village of Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y. His brother settled in Newark, where he died.

Here Dr. Johnston sedulously applied his time to the acquisition of means necessary to enable him to open an office and drug-store in which he could resume the practice of his profession. These efforts proved successful, and he ultimately located in North Street, where he continued to reside for fifteen years. At first he met considerable opposition from local physicians here, to which he paid little attention, believing his knowledge of physics and their proper dispensation would eventually give him a place among medical men.

In this he was not disappointed; his practice gradually increased, and his skill in treating special cases of disease rapidly gained influence in the community around, until after a few years his name became widely known throughout Orange County, which has since been connected with the successful treatment of complicated cases of disease in this and other States of the Union, and his patients are found from Maine to California, and from Minnesota to Texas.

Dr. Johnston has continued a successful practice at Middletown for nearly forty years, and by close attention to the duties of his profession has secured a fair competency.

He has always been a student of his profession, bringing to bear upon every case under his supervision his knowledge gained by long experience and the practical ideas of a naturally analytical mind.

Although a general practitioner of medicine and surgery, he gives special attention to uterine surgery, in which his operations, although often difficult, and in cases abandoned by other physicians, have been successful.

Dr. Johnston was one of the founders of Grace Church, Middletown, one of its first vestrymen, assisted in the construction of the present church edifice, and his eldest daughter, Selina Montrose, was the first infant baptized at its font.

Dr. Johnston continued his drug-store on North Street until 1860, when he purchased a lot containing a brick structure near Franklin Square, on West Main Street, and established his business there. He erected his present elegant and substantial brick store and residence on the site of the former, of three stories in height, in 1876, which for beauty and architectural design vies with the most costly in Middletown.

Dr. Johnston married, Nov. 5, 1845, Deborah, daughter of William Meeks and Sabrina Jaycox, of Peekskill, N. Y. Her paternal great-grandfather was of English birth, and settled near Peekskill, where he was a well-to-do farmer. She was born Dec. 4, 1825.

Their surviving children are Selina Montrose (widow of the late Alderman Wm. I. Underhill, of Newburgh), James Doremus, Charles Albert, and Annie Richmond.

CHARLES HARDENBERGH, M.D., studied medicine with Dr. Charles Winfield, of Crawford, was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York City, and began the practice of medicine in the twenty-second year of his age, in the year 1824, at Greenville, Orange Co. Here he only remained one year, and then settled at Port Jervis, N. Y., where he continued the practice of his chosen profession through a long life of professional service of fifty-seven years.

When young, and possessed of a good constitution and an intellect of more than ordinary comprehension, and being incited to the prosecution of his work by a love for it, he did an amount of professional labor which to most men would seem impossible.

He was acute in observation, original in thought, and possessed wonderful aptness for bringing to practical usefulness the very many discoveries he made in his professional experience. He possessed a scientific mind, although his life was purely practical, and his success in his profession was in his correct diagnosis of the diseases he encountered.

He was a valuable counselor to his junior brethren on account of his retentive memory and his desire to impart facts that came under his observation during his long experience. A pioneer of the valleys of the Delaware and Neversink, his history was interwoven with the history of that country, and when he located at Port Jervis the woods abounded with the animals of the forest, there being no canal, telegraph, or railroad. The cry of the panther and the howl of the wolf were the common accompaniments to the lonely doctor as he on horseback followed the narrow pathways, through the then forest country, on his errands of mercy.

Dr. Hardenbergh was fond of humorous stories, and many a funny story has been accredited to him which he had never heard. He possessed all the elements of a skillful surgeon, was a skillful operator, had a delicate touch, and a correct, mechanical eye, and had he lived in a district where an opportunity presented for surgical operations he would have gained distinction in that branch of his profession. He died at the age of seventy-two years.

GEORGE HUNTER, M.D.—The father of Dr. Hunter was a farmer in the township of Montgomery, where his son's birth occurred on the 12th of July, during the year 1800. The lad George devoted his early years to study at the neighboring public school, and subsequently enrolled his name as a student at the Montgomery Academy, from which institution he graduated. He then entered the drug-store of Dr. Eager, of Montgomery, and at the same time began the study of his chosen profession—that of medicine. At a later date he repaired to the city of New York and continued his studies, having received his diploma as a physician and surgeon March 22, 1822. During July of the same year he became a resident of Searsville, Orange Co., and at once engaged in the practice of his profession, where he continued until his death, which occurred July 13, 1870. He was, Nov. 13, 1827, united in marriage to Miss Sarah, daughter of Archibald and Mary Bartley Crawford, to whom were born four children,—Mary E., wife of Daniel Thompson; Emily A., who died in infancy; Samuel, deceased; and Sarah, wife of Theodore Merritt, also deceased.

Samuel Hunter entered the service during the late war, was a lieutenant in Company K, New York Cavalry, and distinguished for bravery and fidelity to duty. His death occurred in camp on the 26th of February, 1865, in his thirty-second year, from disease superinduced by exposure and privations.

Mrs. Hunter survived her husband, the doctor, and died Jan. 20, 1879, in her seventy-fourth year. Dr. Hunter became a member of the Orange County Medical Society July 6, 1830, was frequently an officer, and active in promoting its interests. His practice was extended, and marked by skill and success. In his political sentiments he was an early Whig and afterwards a Republican. He was instrumental in the establishment of a post-office at Searsville in 1850, and held the commission of postmaster until his death. Dr. Hunter was an active worker in the cause of temperance in the township of his residence, and a zealous promoter of educational and church interests.

The following extract from a county paper, on the occasion of his funeral, conveys to the reader a just idea of his relations to his patients: "A large number of those present felt the loss to be a personal one. To them there was no physician like Dr. Hunter. Could he have been spared to minister to them they would have sought no other. With sad hearts they assembled to bury him, feeling that with his family they shared the burden of bereavement his death had brought."

JOHN HUDSON THOMPSON, M.D., residing in Goshen, N. Y., was born near Circleville, in the town of Wallkill, Orange Co., March 8, 1827. His father's name was Benjamin, and his mother's maiden name was Maria Antoinette Owen. His early education was derived at the common school near his birthplace, and later at the Sullivan County Academy, located at Bloomingburgh. During the years 1847 and 1848 he attended the State Normal School at Albany, graduating therefrom in the spring of the last-mentioned year.

After devoting himself to teaching for a brief time, he commenced in 1849 the study of medicine. His attendance of medical lectures was at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York, from which institution he received his diploma in 1852. His first year of practice was at the Seamen's Retreat, at Staten Island. In the spring of 1853 he returned to Goshen, where he had pursued his professional studies, and began on his own account the practice of his profession. During all the subsequent years of private practice he has continued its pursuit at Goshen. As aiding him greatly in the outset, his was the good fortune to secure the appointment of physician to the Orange County poor-house for six or seven years.

Upon the organization of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, at his home in 1862, he was commissioned as surgeon of that regiment, and accompanied it to the field. He continued with it in the official capacity specified till the autumn of 1864. During his service in the army he was charged with varied duties from time to time. He was on several occasions detailed for important hospital service, and always in active campaigning as a member of an operating staff. He was surgeon-in-chief of brigade and division respectively. Coincident with his experience in military relations, since the resumption of occupation of his home-field of practice, surgery has constituted his specialty of professional pursuit. At one period, and for a considerable time, he was an official surgeon of the Erie Railway Company.

Medical, literary, and scientific pursuits are prosecuted by the doctor with great avidity. He has first and last contributed largely to the press on various

George Munter

H. C. Seely

The Seely family, who are of English extraction, early settled in Connecticut, from whence a colony removed to Long Island. At a later period twenty-four of their number settled in Orange County. From one of the representatives of this band of emigrants Dr. Henry C. Seely traces his descent. His grandfather was Bezaleel Seely, who, with his companions above mentioned, located at Greycourt. Among his six children was a son, Isaac, whose birth occurred at or near Middletown, Orange Co., where his earlier years were spent previous to his removal to Minisink. He was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Mandeville, of Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, and had six children,—Hector, Francis T., David W., Henry C., Lewis T., and Isaac B. Mr. Seely's life was cut short in the progress of a useful career at the age of forty-two years.

Henry C., whose life is here briefly reviewed, was born at the family residence, near Middletown, N. Y., March 1, 1815, and passed his early life at school and in farming industries in the township of Wallkill. Having desired a wider sphere of usefulness in a professional career, he, in 1832, began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. T. S. Edmonston, of Chester, with whom he continued for three years. He subsequently attended medical lectures at the popular seminary at Fairfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., and received his diploma from the Board of Regents of the University of the State upon the recommendation of the State Medical Society. He chose Amity as a desirable field for his energies, and has since resided there. The doctor's untiring devotion to his profession, together with the skill manifested by him in the treatment of critical stages of disease, soon gained for him an extended family practice, which he still enjoys. Dr. Seely was married in 1844 to Miss Almeda, daughter of Rev. William Timlow, of Amity. They have four children,—Whitfield T., a practicing physician, William H., Elizabeth F., and Ruth T. Dr. Seely has no taste for official life, though he has served as supervisor of his township, and also as school inspector. He is a member of the Orange County Medical Society, and one of its active representatives. The doctor is in politics a Democrat, and uncompromising in his adherence to the principles of the party. He is a Presbyterian in his religious affiliations, and an elder in the Presbyterian Church of Amity.

T. Walsh

DR. THOMAS WALSH, who enjoys an extended reputation as a physician of ability and influence in Orange County, was born Oct. 11, 1817, in the city of Newburgh, N. Y., his parents having been Henry and Mehetabel (Bull) Walsh. His early years were devoted to acquiring the rudiments of an education. The common schools of the vicinity were first attended, after which the Newburgh Academy, an institution of some reputation in its day, numbered him among its pupils. From the latter he graduated about the year 1835, having during the progress of his studies also engaged in home employments with his father. Having decided to embark in business pursuits, he entered the old Bank of Newburgh as discount clerk, which position was filled by him for two years. He subsequently removed to the South, and became associated with his brother in mercantile ventures, which were continued for a period of ten years. In the fall of 1847, Dr. Walsh returned to his native place, and enrolled his name as a student of medicine in the office of Dr. Alpheus Goodman, having already given some time to the study of this profession at the South. At the expiration of a year he continued his studies with Dr. Olmstead, of Brooklyn, and graduated at the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York.

Fallsburgh, Sullivan Co., N. Y., was the scene of his earliest professional labors, where he remained until 1852, when Port Jervis became his residence. In his new field of labor his diligence, accompanied by a thorough knowledge of the profession he had espoused, soon won for him an extended practice, to which he still devotes himself. The Orange County Medical Association, a society embracing talent of a high order, numbers him among its representative members.

H. H. Robinson

HEMAN H. ROBINSON, M.D., is grandson of Rev. Jonathan Robinson, a Presbyterian clergyman of Long Island, who spent his life in the ministry and died there. A relative of his was the late Solon Robinson, for many years agricultural editor of the New York Tribune, and after his removal to Florida a correspondent of that paper there until his death.

Rev. Phineas, son of Rev. Jonathan Robinson and father of our subject, was born near Franklinville, L. I., Dec. 21, 1798; died near the same place in April, 1871, and was buried in Hillside Cemetery, at Middletown. He was graduated at Hamilton College, and on June 5, 1825, married Eliza, daughter of Jonathan and Susan Day, at Clinton, N. Y., who was born at Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., May 31, 1803, and died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. E. M. Madden, of Middletown, Dec. 9, 1868. Rev. Phineas Robinson was the first principal of the Wallkill Academy, at Middletown, and was instrumental of much that advanced the cause of learning, in which he was enlisted with his whole heart and soul. He was a good citizen and a Christian man. Before coming to Middletown he had been in charge of the academy at Sherburne, N. Y., and had been principal of an educational institution in South Carolina; afterwards he preached and taught at Washingtonville and Chester, in this county. An erudite scholar, learned in the sciences, familiar with ancient and modern languages, added to his kindness of heart, won him the respect of all who knew him. He was remarkable for his linguistic accomplishments, and was a poet of considerable merit, being the author of a poem entitled "Immortality," which attracted considerable attention, besides other fugitive productions.

His children were Eudocia, deceased, was the wife of Senator E. M. Madden, of Middletown; Ellen, deceased, was the wife of John Hanford, of Middletown; Sidney B., graduated at the New York Medical College, was appointed one of the house physicians on Ward's Island, afterwards was appointed first assistant physician in the Seaman's Retreat Hospital, Staten Island, where he died of typhus fever, Nov. 10, 1855, at the age of twenty-six; Leander Van Ess, was a printer's boy at Newburgh, proof-reader in a law book concern in Nassau Street, New York, admitted to the bar of the State at Albany, practiced his profession at Haverstraw with Judge Suffern, went South for his health, and died at Green Cove Springs, Florida, in January, 1869; Edward Payson, died in 1849, aged sixteen; Susan Frances, widow of Dr. Jeremiah Havens, of Schoharie County, N. Y.; Mary Hedges, wife of Phineas R. Coleman, of Goshen; Henry M., a merchant in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dr. Heman H.; Thomas Spencer, a clothier of New York; Charles Lincoln, died at the age of fourteen; and Caroline, died in infancy.

Dr. Heman H. Robinson was born at Belleport, L. I., Aug. 20, 1838. He received his preparatory education at the Chester Academy, under the instruction of his father, and at the age of seventeen became a medical student of Dr. T. Clarkson Moffatt, physician-in-chief in the Seaman's Retreat Hospital, on Staten Island, where he remained two years. He attended the University Medical College, New York City, for two years following, and was graduated from that institution in the spring of 1860.

The same year of his graduation Dr. Robinson settled in the practice of his profession at Jeffersonville, Sullivan Co., N. Y., where he remained until 1870, when he came to Goshen, where he has continued his professional duties since. As a physician Dr. Robinson ranks among the most skillful in Orange County, and by his indefatigable efforts to administer medical assistance, his devotion to and care of his patients, by his social and generous ways with all with whom he comes in contact, he has won the confidence of a large circle of friends in his new field of labor, which extends to remote parts of this and other counties.

He married, in April, 1861, Maria V., daughter of Lemuel L. and Mary (Ver Plank) Pendell, of Schoharie County, N. Y. She was born Aug. 10, 1838. Their surviving children are Josephine Lamont, Sidney Moffatt, Kitty, Mary, Robert Thomas, Heman Henry, Frank Leon, and Arthur.

Mr. C. Henry

subjects. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Orange County Medical Society, the Tri-States Medical Association, Society of the Veterans of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment, the Goshen Scientific Association, and various other organizations. He is a Presbyterian in religious faith, and a member of the church of that denomination in Goshen.

The doctor is married. His wife is the daughter of Capt. Ellis A. Post, of Goshen. He has one child, Wilmot P., who is the senior member of a business firm in Goshen.

DR. I. S. HUNT was born Nov. 1, 1819, in the township of Newton, Sussex Co., N. J.; was educated under the private instruction of Rev. Tisdal, a Baptist clergyman, of Newton, now professor of rhetoric in a Tennessee university at Knoxville, working night and morning for his board.

In 1834, Rev. Tisdal accepted the position of superintendent of schools in the State of Virginia, and Dr. Hunt accompanied him as assistant, and remained in the South seven years, a part of the time superintending a plantation.

In 1841 he began the study of medicine at New Haven, Conn.; was graduated from the Medical Department of Yale College in 1846; was surgeon in the hospital at New Haven for one year, and then located at Centreville, in Sussex Co., N. J.

In 1865 he removed to Port Jervis, where by his perseverance, devotion to, and care of his patients, he established himself in a successful practice.

Dr. Hunt was an earnest worker in his profession, thorough in his diagnosis of a case, and cautious, yet thorough, in the treatment of diseases. He died in 1875.

DR. WILLIAM P. TOWNSEND, son of William Townsend, was born at Lancaster, Worcester Co., Mass., July 26, 1818. His early education was mainly acquired at the common school and at the Lawrence Academy, Groton, Mass. For some time before reaching his majority he was a teacher.

In the spring of 1839 he went to New York, when, being without friends, he failed to get employment, and the following autumn he went to Shawangunk, Ulster Co., where he remained, engaged in teaching, until 1844, and during the same year pursued his medical studies. In this way he obtained means, and attended lectures at the medical college at Castleton, Vt.

Subsequently he was graduated from the Medical Department of Harvard University, and in the spring of 1845 settled at Hamptonburgh, Orange Co., in the practice of his profession. There he remained only a short time, and removed to Florida, in this county, where he continued his professional duties until 1849, when he settled in Goshen, where he devotedly and successfully practiced medicine until his death, which occurred Dec. 25, 1876. He was an active member of the Orange County Medical Society. He was twice married, his second wife being an only daughter of Garret Thew, of Goshen, who survives him, and with her children resides in Goshen.

WILMOT C. TERRY, M.D.—A branch of the Terry family were early settlers on Long Island, to which point they had originally emigrated from England. Some of its members eventually found their way to Orange County, among whom was Constant Terry, the grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, who located in Bloomsbury, and engaged in the pursuits of an agriculturist.

He was twice married. To the first union were born children,—Austin, Havens, and two daughters, Hephzibah and Dorothy, and to the second five children,—Youngs, Tuttle, Nicholas, and two daughters. Austin, the father of Dr. W. C. Terry, was born at Bloomsbury, and engaged during his lifetime in the occupation to which he was reared,—that of a farmer. He was married to Miss Sarah Myers, and at a later period repaired to Goshen. The children of this marriage were Van Rensselaer, John, Mary, Wilmot C., Sarah, William A., and two who died in infancy.

Mr. Terry in later years made Walkill his residence, where his death transpired. The birth of his son Wilmot C. occurred Jan. 15, 1822, in the township of Blooming-Grove, though his early life was passed in the suburbs of the village of Goshen.

The public school of the vicinity enabled him to acquire the rudiments of knowledge, the labors of the farm having occupied the time which was not devoted to study. At the age of twenty-one Dr. Terry took leave of the parental home and engaged in teaching as the initiatory step in a career of independence.

Having meanwhile trained his mind to habits of study and thought he determined upon a professional life, and chose that of medicine as most congenial to his tastes. He, in 1847, entered the office of Dr. Gabriel P. Reeves, of Goshen, where three years were spent in close application, with attendance during this period upon lectures at the Medical Department of the University of New York. He then repaired to the Castleton Medical College, Castleton, Vt., from whence he graduated in 1851.

Dr. Terry soon after established himself in practice at Ridgebury, Orange Co., where he has since resided. His professional labors extend over an area of many miles, where his fidelity to patients and his skill as a physician have rendered him deservedly popular.

In politics Dr. Terry is a Republican, and though earnest in the espousal of the principles of the party, cares little for the official honors within its gift. His religious affiliations are with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a member.

The doctor has been twice married,—first, in 1854, to Miss Sarah E., daughter of Dr. J. H. Halsted, of Ridgebury, to whom one daughter, Flora Bell, was born. Mrs. Terry died Jan. 27, 1857, and he was again married, to Miss Mary J., daughter of Henry Decker, of Wawayanda. Their children are Fannie

E. and Lillie Gertrude, a son, Wilmot A., having died in infancy.

MEDICAL SOCIETIES.

By act of the Legislature, passed April 4, 1806, the physicians and surgeons in the several counties of the State, or such of them as were authorized to practice by the law which was then in force, were empowered to organize societies, which, by such organization, became bodies corporate, and from each of which one delegate should be elected, who, with his associates similarly chosen, should constitute a State society, which also became a body corporate. The county societies were authorized to examine students and grant diplomas; and it was further provided that no person should "practice physic or surgery" in any county until after he had passed an examination by the society of the county in which he proposed to practice, or should he do so he was to be disqualified from collecting "any debt or debts incurred by such practice" in any county of the State.

Pursuant to the provisions of this law, the Medical Society of Orange County was organized, July 1, 1806, at a meeting of physicians held in the court-house at Goshen, Dr. Jonathan Swezey, chairman, and Dr. Thomas Wickham, clerk. The minute record is as follows:

"Doctors Jonathan Swezey, Thomas Wickham, Elijah Randall, William Elmer, William Elliot, Samuel S. Seward, Benjamin S. Hoyt, Nathaniel Elmer, Elisha DuBois, Charles Fowler, David R. Arnell, Samuel Warner, Wm. McCoppins, Aaron M. Smith, William Gourlay, Eleazer Gidney, Elihu Hedges, Ethan Watson, Cornelius Roosa, James Bradner, Henry I. Hornbeck, and Elijah Welch were present and produced their licenses to practice physic and surgery according to law.

"The society then proceeded to organize themselves and elect their officers, when the following gentlemen were elected for the ensuing year, viz.: Dr. Jonathan Swezey, president; Dr. Samuel S. Seward, vice-president; Dr. Nathaniel Elmer, secretary; Dr. Thomas Wickham, treasurer.

"Doctors Anthony Davis, Elisha DuBois, Charles Fowler, Joseph Whalen, and Cornelius Roosa were appointed censors.

"Dr. David R. Arnell was elected member of the State Medical Society."

A list of members; officers, and other matters pertaining to the operation of the society, taken from its records, is appended, as well as similar facts in connection with the Homœopathic Medical Society.

It will be observed that the act under which the Orange County Medical Society was organized gave to it great power. Without its indorsement no one could practice medicine in the county except under the generous label of "quack," nor if one did practice could he collect his bills by law. Perhaps the society always exercised its prerogative wisely,—perhaps it protected the public from or warned them against uneducated medical pretenders, by the mere fact that they were disqualified from becoming members of it,—we shall not say; but this is very clear, that many physicians whose names do not appear on its rolls were esteemed worthy and competent by their patients. Thomsonianism, hydropathyism, eclecticism, and other systems were excluded. Homœopathy shared in its ostracism for years, except in cases where members of the society adopted the new practice, as was the fact with Dr. Ostrom and others, or where diplomas were obtained from recognized colleges. Appeals were repeatedly made to the Legislature for a modification of the law so far as it related to the collection of bills, but for over forty years this provision remained unchanged.

Viewed from the stand-point of the present, a wiser law, at least a law which recognizes the progress which has been made in medical science during the past half-century, was that of 1880, which repeals the law of 1806, and provides:

"Every person now lawfully engaged in the practice of physic and surgery within the State shall, on or before the first day of October, eighteen hundred and eighty, and every person hereafter duly authorized to practice physic and surgery shall, before commencing to practice, register in the clerk's office of the county where he is practicing, or intends to commence the practice of physic and surgery, in a book to be kept by said clerk, his name, residence, and place of birth, together with his authority for so practicing physic and surgery, as prescribed in this act. The person so registering shall subscribe and verify by oath or affirmation, before a person duly qualified to administer oaths under the laws of the State, an affidavit containing such facts, and whether such authority is by diploma or license, and the date of the same and by whom granted, which, if wilfully false, shall convict the affiant to conviction and punishment for perjury." . . . "The degree of Doctor of Medicine lawfully conferred by any incorporated medical college or university in this State shall be a license to practice physic and surgery within the State after the person to whom it is granted shall have complied with the provisions" above quoted. Persons coming into the State from another State may have license to practice on obtaining the indorsement of their diplomas by any incorporated medical college or school of the State. This provision, however, does not "apply to any person who has practiced medicine and surgery for ten years last past, and who is now pursuing the study of medicine and surgery in any legally incorporated medical college within this State, and who shall graduate from and receive a diploma within two years from the passage of this act."

P. Moir Barclay M.D.

DR. P. MOIR BARCLAY was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, on April 20, 1834. His parents were Dr. Alexander Barclay, a practicing physician of Newburgh, formerly of Scotland, and Mrs. J. Fraser (Watt) Barclay, a representative of the noted Watt family of Scotland.

Dr. Barclay was brought to this country by his parents in November, 1835, the settlement of the family being made at Newburgh. His earlier years were passed in attendance upon the common schools of Newburgh, and his academic training was enjoyed at the Newburgh Academy, from which institution he was graduated in 1848. Having decided to enter the profession of medicine, Dr. Barclay passed some time in the drug-store of his father in Newburgh, and in a wholesale drug-house in New York City, and in 1850 commenced the study of medicine under his father at Newburgh. In 1851 he entered the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York, where he passed three years, graduating in 1854 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. During his collegiate course he was under the care of Dr. Thomas C. Finnell, a prominent physician of New York. Returning to Newburgh, he at once entered upon the practice of his profession, in which he has since continued.

Dr. Barclay ranks among the first of his profession in Newburgh, and enjoys a large and lucrative practice. His careful professional education was supplemented by a European tour in 1868, at which time he visited the principal foreign hospitals, and was brought into personal contact with the leading practitioners of the world. As a physician he is painstaking and in hearty sympathy with his patients, and brings to the treatment of his cases an accurate knowledge of the latest discoveries and implements, both in mechanical appliances in surgery and in the materia medica of his profession. Naturally of an independent and self-reliant nature, he depends largely on himself in his practice, though in nowise loth to co-operate with the more intelligent and skillful of his compeers. He is of a genial and frank disposition, popular in the community in which he resides, and prominent in the councils of the Democratic party of his section, though no aspirant for place. On July 9, 1866, he was appointed by Governor Reuben E. Fenton surgeon of the Nineteenth Regiment of Infantry of New York, with the rank of captain, a position that he filled until the disbandment of the regiment. He is a non-resident member of the Medico-Legal Society of New York City, and a member of Hudson River Lodge, No. 607, A. F. and A. M., of Highland Chapter, No. 52, R. A. M., and of Hudson River Commandery, No. 35, K. T., all of Newburgh.

Dr. Barclay was married on June 19, 1872, to Miss Hattie E., eldest daughter of the late Capt. C. B. Armstrong, of Newburgh, a little daughter, Maude, being born of the union.

Theodore Writer M.D.

The family of Writers were first represented in America by Jasper Writer, a native of Germany, who left the Fatherland as early as 1760, and landed in New York. With him sailed a sister who succumbed to the severity of the voyage, and died on the passage. Jasper, having found himself almost friendless on his arrival, repaired to Little Britain, Pa., and sought service with a family named Depew, where he remained until he attained his majority. Seeking then a wider field of activity he removed to Phillipsburg, Orange Co., where soon after he was united in marriage to Miss Eve Kortright, to whom were born children,—Margaret, Elizabeth, Elinor, Rebecca, Nancy, Aaron, Jasper, and John T. Mr. Writer, after his marriage, removed to the township of Mount Hope, where he engaged in farming pursuits, and resided until his death, Nov. 15, 1842, having lived to be more than one hundred years old. He enjoyed some distinction as having signed the Revolutionary pledge at Goshen in 1775. Aaron, one of the sons of Jasper, and the grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, was born in Mount Hope township, April 25, 1776, and followed the occupation of his father. He was married to Miss Elizabeth McKeeby, whose birth occurred Sept. 13, 1776, and who was the mother of the following children: Sarah, Eve, Catharine, Jasper A., Jemima, Jane, Margaret, Elinor, Matthew M., Aaron K., John F., Elizabeth M., Isaac V., and Benjamin N. Of this number, Aaron Kortright, the father of Theodore, was born March 2, 1811, on the homestead farm, where the early years of his life were spent. After becoming thoroughly familiar with the labors of an agriculturist he purchased land in the township of Greenville, upon which he resided until his death, Sept. 25, 1871. Mr. Writer was on the 21st of March, 1835, united in marriage to Miss Abigail, daughter of Daniel D. Penney, of Mount Hope, and had children,—Theodore, Daniel D. P., Sarah E., Josephine, and Louisa. The birth of Theodore occurred July 17, 1837, on the homestead where the years of his boyhood were spent. The district school at this time afforded but limited advantages of education, which induced him later to avail himself of the superior instruction enjoyed at the Seward Institute, at Florida, Orange Co. Here he remained for three years, and having determined upon a professional life enrolled his name as a student of medicine in the office of Dr. A. Cook, of Otisville. Later he entered the office of Dr. D. C. Logue, in New York, and graduated from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1866. After a year of professional labor in New York he became associated with his former preceptor, Dr. Cook, of Otisville, where he has since continued in practice.

The arduous duties of his profession leave but little time for other pursuits, though Dr. Writer manifests a keen interest in the public events of the day, and in efforts having for their object the welfare of the township of his residence. In his political preferences he is a stanch Republican. Dr. Writer was married Nov. 3, 1869, to Miss Helen A., daughter of Osmer B. Green, of Otisville, and has one son, Daniel D., a lad of nine years.

Among the papers that have been read before this society, receiving its indorsement, many of which have been published, are the following :

Dr. Anthony Davis, 1808, entitled "Hectic Fever;" Dr. David R. Arnell, 1812, "The Rise and Progress of Medicine," 1814, "Pneumonia Typhoides;" Dr. Gabriel N. Phillips, 1815, "Phthisis Pulmonalis;" Dr. David Fowler, 1816, "Nervous Fluid;" Dr. Charles Winfield, 1822, "Typhus Fever;" Dr. Gough, 1823, "Emmenagogues;" Dr. William Horton, 1832, "Functions of the Skin;" Dr. Benham, 1833, "Dysentaria;" Dr. George Eager, 1833, "Morbid Symptom;" Dr. James P. Young, 1833, "Scientific Botany;" Dr. James M. Gardiner, 1834, "Cholera;" Dr. James S. Horton, 1835, "Nosology;" Dr. James Heron, 1836, "Medical Topography;" Dr. Gough, 1838, "Scarlatina;" Dr. T. W. Newman, 1843, "Nature and Treatment of Tubercle;" Dr. G. C. Monell, 1852, "Disease of the Uterus;" Dr. Seely, 1859, "Encysted Dropsy;" Dr. H. C. Seely, 1868, "Bite of Reptiles;" Dr. William P. Townsend, 1869, "Causes of Diminished Ratio of Population in the United States;" Dr. R. V. K. Montfort, 1871, "Hygiene;" Dr. Mills, 1879, "Puerperal Convulsions;" Dr. J. H. Thompson, 1881, "Antifebrile Agents."

The meetings of the society were for a series of years held annually, the first having been convened at Goshen in 1806. As the organization increased in numbers and influence, the importance of more frequent conferences became apparent, and semi-annual meetings were instituted, the first of which was appointed at the house of Dr. Daniel Seward, in the village of Goshen, on the first day of July, 1817. They were for a while successfully maintained, but the interest having flagged, were for a long period abandoned and again revived, a gathering of the society having taken place at Chester on the first Tuesday of October, 1853. As early as 1823 a resolution was passed that quarterly meetings be held, though this movement seemed premature, as the attendance was limited and the project unsuccessful. They were revived in 1874, the society having convened at the village of Monroe, on the first Tuesday of September of that year, and are now regularly maintained.

The society has been governed by circumstances in the selection of localities at which its sessions are held, Newburgh, Middletown, Goshen, Montgomery, Port Jervis, Monroe, Washingtonville, Chester, and Warwick having in turn offered hospitality to its members, and hotels, public assembly rooms, or private houses received them as convenience dictated.

During the year 1818, Dr. David R. Arnell made a generous donation of books to the society. This collection, which formed the nucleus for subsequent literary accumulations, has from time to time received additions until the Orange County Medical Society is now in possession of a well-selected and valuable library of a professional character. It is under the superintendence of a librarian, who is appointed at the annual meetings of the association.

During the past few years the society has sent delegates to the American Medical Association, and is to be represented in 1881 by Drs. B. Pillsbury, Middletown, and Sol. Van Etten, of Port Jervis.

HOMŒOPATHIC MEDICAL SOCIETY OF ORANGE COUNTY.

At a meeting of homœopathic physicians of Orange County, held at the United States Hotel, Newburgh, Nov. 12, 1851, Dr. A. Gerald Hull, of Newburgh, was called to the chair, and Dr. Ira S. Bradner, of Scotchtown, was appointed secretary.

The chairman stated the object of the meeting to be "the organization of a Homœopathic Medical Society of Orange County," whereupon it was voted unanimously that such a society should then be organized, and entitled "Homœopathic Medical Society of Orange County."

The constitution and by-laws having been submitted to the convention were, after discussion and amendment, unanimously adopted.

On motion, Dr. Everett, of Modena, Ulster Co., N. Y., was unanimously elected a member of the society.

The society then went into an election of officers for the ensuing year, and the following gentlemen were duly elected: A. Gerald Hull, M.D., Newburgh, president; DeWitt C. Jayne, M.D., Florida, vice-president; Ira S. Bradner, M.D., Scotchtown, secretary and treasurer; William A. M. Culbert, M.D., Newburgh, corresponding secretary.

On motion, Drs. Hull and Culbert were appointed a committee to prepare an address to the public on the recent action of the County Medical Society in reference to homœopathy.

The secretary was instructed to procure a book in which to record the proceedings of the society, and on motion the society adjourned to meet at Goshen on the second Wednesday of February, 1852, at 12 o'clock noon.

The minutes of the meeting were signed by Ira S. Bradner, secretary.

The meetings of the society, as provided for in its by-laws, were to be held quarterly, on the second Wednesdays in November, February, May, and August.

At the annual meeting, held Nov. 10, 1852, at Goshen, the by-laws were amended so as to read, "The association shall hold two regular meetings every year, one the second Wednesday in November, and one the second Wednesday in May each year, and at the meeting May 11, 1853, it was voted that the annual meeting be held the second Wednesday of October each year.

The society met the following October, and also on May 10, 1854, after which time no meetings of the society were held until Jan. 11, 1870. From the latter date semi-annual meetings were held for about three years, and from 1873 until 1881 the society has met quarterly.

The sessions of the society have been mostly at Newburgh, Goshen, Middletown, and Port Jervis, and some of the later meetings have been held at the Homœopathic Asylum at Middletown. At the meeting held at Goshen, Oct. 8, 1873, on motion of Dr. Mitchell, the following bureaus were established: "Surgery," "Gynecology," "Materia Medica," "Practical Medicine," "Psychological Medicine," and "Obstetrics," and the president at that and subsequent meetings appointed a chairman to present a report upon each bureau at each succeeding meeting.

From time to time papers were read by members of the society bearing upon important topics, among which were the following: "Occupation in its Relation to Insanity," by Dr. Butler, in 1880; "Remedies for Delusion and some Characteristics for many of them," by Dr. Talcott, April 13, 1880; "Melancholia with Stupor," by Dr. Talcott, Oct. 12, 1880; "Restraint or Non-Restraint of the Insane," by Dr. Talcott, Jan. 11, 1881; "Cellulitis," by Dr. Kinney, Jan. 11, 1881.

The following gentlemen have been elected and served as presidents of the society since its organization: Dr. A. Gerald Hull, 1852; Dr. J. W. Ostrom, 1853; Dr. D. C. Jayne, 1854; Dr. C. M. Lawrence, 1871; Dr. John J. Mitchell, 1873-75; Dr. J. W. Ostrom, 1876; Dr. C. M. Lawrence, 1877; Dr. J. W. Ostrom, 1878; Dr. Selden H. Talcott, 1879-80.

Dr. Ira S. Bradner has been secretary and treasurer from 1852 to 1881, inclusive.

The censors chosen by the society have been Henry R. Stiles, C. M. Lawrence, Ira S. Bradner, J. T. Hotchkiss, and J. J. Mitchell.

The following have served as delegates to State Homœopathic Medical Society: A. Houghton, 1852; J. Temple Hotchkiss, 1870; C. M. Lawrence, 1870; Jno. J. Mitchell, 1873; F. W. Seward, 1873; Fred. H. Bradner, 1875; J. W. Ostrom, 1877; Jno. J. Mitchell, 1877.

The following is a list of the membership in the order in which they have subscribed to the constitution and by-laws of the society:

J. W. Ostrom, DeWitt C. Jayne, J. Temple Hotchkiss, Ira S. Bradner, C. M. Lawrence, A. Houghton, W. A. M. Culbert, Theo. P. Knapp, Joseph Hasbrouck, Frederick W. Seward, C. P. Saxton, E. H. Noble,

Levi H. C. Payne

George I. Fiske, John J. Mitchell, Henry B. Stiles, Fred H. Boelter, Arthur M. Woodruff, Henry C. Smith, Clarence M. Conant, George Schenker, W. Morris Butler, A. P. McDonald, Mrs. Ed. Pierce, L. Cary, Selden H. Talbot, S. Emmens, Fane, Floyd P. Sheldon, Alonzo P. Williamson, C. Spencer Kirtley, Miss John F. Brodner.

DEWITT CLINTON JAYNE, M.D.—The Jayne family are of English origin, the earliest representative having been Samuel Jayne, a widower, who married after reaching this county, and had by this marriage three sons and one daughter, all residing on Long Island. The latter afterwards became Mrs. Phillips, whose husband was the progenitor of the family of that name who founded Phillipsburg, town of Walkill, Orange Co., N. Y. One of the sons at a later period settled in Florida, Orange Co. Among his children was Samuel, who resided in Florida, married, and had six sons and six daughters, of whom a son, Stephen, was united in marriage to Miss Sarah, daughter of Seth Marvin, Esq., of Blooming-Grove, whose family were intimately associated with the war of the Revolution. Mr. and Mrs. Jayne were the parents of eight children,—Amelia, Lewis M., Charles M., Emily, Dewitt C., Maria, Seth M., and Harriet. Of this number Dewitt Clinton, whose career is here briefly epitomized, was born in Florida, Orange Co., Feb. 6, 1817. His boyhood was spent at the home of his father, where he pursued his studies at the public school, and later repaired to the Montgomery Academy at Montgomery, N. Y., and the Farmers' Academy at Goshen, N. Y. Here he developed a taste for study and a power of application which contributed greatly to his success in after-years.

Having determined upon a professional career, he in 1834 entered the office of Dr. S. B. Barlow, of Florida, as a student of medicine and continued with him until his enrollment in the Medical Department of Yale College, from whence he graduated in 1839. He chose the place of his nativity as a desirable field of labor, where he has since that time resided. Dr. Jayne immediately espoused the cause of homœopathy, and meeting with some difficulties in the introduction of a new system of practice became for a time an exponent of both schools of medicine. At a later period his labors were wholly devoted to the cause of homœopathy, of which he is now one of the leading representatives in the county. Dr. Jayne speedily entered upon an extended and lucrative practice. He at once established a reputation for skill in diagnosis and for untiring devotion to the interests of his patients. His counsel and experience were at a later period eagerly sought by students, many of whom began a successful medical career under his direction. Dr. Jayne was both president and vice-president of the first homœopathic society organized in Orange County, and continued an active member during its existence. He has been a member of the American Institute of Homœopathy since 1867, and was in 1872 elected a trustee of the State Homœopathic Asylum at Middletown, N. Y. He has also devoted himself with zeal to the public interests of the county. He has filled the position of director of the Goshen and Deckertown Railroad since its organization, and has been for thirty years identified with the Chester National Bank as a director. The doctor's early political affiliations were with the Democratic party. He subsequently became identified with the Republicans and was a member of the State Convention which met at Saratoga in 1854, whose object was the organization of the party, and also of the Syracuse and Auburn Conventions of the same year. He is, however, not a strong party man, and frequently independent in the exercise of his franchise. He is a Presbyterian in his religious preferences, and his family regular attendants upon the worship of that church. Dr. Jayne was married Dec. 20, 1849, to Miss Mary Augusta, daughter of Edwin P. Seward, of Florida, and brother of Hon. William H. Seward, whose birthplace was also Florida.

J. W. OSTROM, M.D.—His father, Rev. James I. Ostrom, was born at Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N. Y., in November, 1761, and spent his active life as a Presbyterian clergyman.

He began his labors as a minister in the Presbyterian Church of Marlborough, Ulster Co., N. Y., in 1810, where he remained, with great devotion to his calling, until 1829, when he was called to the Salina Presbyterian Church in Onondaga Co., N. Y., and preached for four years, thence to Little Falls for two years, and in 1835 returned to the Marlborough Church, where he remained until 1838, and for the following ten years was pastor of a church in New York City. During his pastorate there his wife, who was a devoted Christian woman and a faithful helper in church work, died. This sad event so affected him that he gave up the ministry for a while, and resided in Goshen with his son, Dr. Ostrom, but becoming restless under a seeming duty to follow the ministry, to which he had devoted his life, he accepted a call from the New Windsor Presbyterian Church, where he labored until it seemed proper for him to retire from service there, on account of his earnest advocacy of the Union cause and support of the principles of freedom during the late civil war. He married again and resided in Marlborough, where he first began his ministerial labors, until his death, which occurred in September, 1871. His first wife was Eliza, daughter of Col. Joshua Ward, of Pleasant Valley, who bore him the following children that grew to manhood and womanhood: Adelia, wife of Mr. Huntley, of Salina, N. Y.; Dr. J. W. Ostrom, subject of this sketch; James, for many years a merchant in New York; Harriet; and John, who died while preparing for the ministry at college, in New York.

Dr. J. W. Ostrom was born July 10, 1814, in Marlborough. His early education from books was received at the common school, under the private instruction of his uncle, Rev. Mr. Kniffin, of Little Falls, and at the Fairfield Academy, N. Y., at which latter place he was graduated. At the age of eighteen he began the study of medicine at Little Falls, with Dr. Arsenus Smith, and the same year attended a course of lectures at Castleton Medical College, Vermont.

Being wholly dependent upon his own resources for prosecuting his medical studies, he taught one term of school in Marlborough, and then engaged to attend a drug-store in New York, where he continued his studies with the proprietor, who was a physician. While there he was invited by Dr. Bedford, of that city, to attend his medical lectures at Peale's Museum, where he obtained the confidence of Dr. Bedford to such an extent for his devotion to study, and his determination to succeed, that he was invited to continue his studies with that gentleman, until he was graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in New York, in 1838.

In the spring of 1839, Dr. Ostrom settled in the practice of his profession at Goshen, where by perseverance and skill in the treatment of disease, and his care and sympathy for the afflicted, he soon won the confidence of a large circle of friends.

A student of his profession, Dr. Ostrom followed the regular practice until 1849, when he began to investigate the principles of homœopathy. Here he found a wide and interesting field for study, and becoming convinced of its superior theory of practice and necessary results, in 1852 he entered regularly upon the practice of the new theory of medicine, which, although at first was received with doubts, soon won the confidence of a respectable part of the community, and in a few years was successfully established with a large part of the intelligent reading and thinking public.

Dr. Ostrom was the first regularly settled physician of homœopathy in Orange County, one of the founders of the Orange County Homœopathic Medical Society, of which he has been chosen president many times, and to his early practice of this new theory of medicine is largely traced the origin and early history of homœopathy in this part of the State.

Besides his connection with the Orange County medical societies, he has been chosen for four years in succession, beginning with 1877, a delegate to the State Medical Society.

His acknowledged skill as a physician, his long continuous practice at Goshen, his liberal views entertained towards those who differ with him in the theory and practice of medicine, his care of and devotion to his patients, his safe and judicious counsel, often outside of his regular ride, have made his name widely known throughout the county and State, as among the first physicians of his day.

He married in December, 1840, Emily I., daughter of Dr. Eleazer Gedney, of Newburgh, who died March 24, 1879, aged sixty-three years. The children born of this union are Charlotte, wife of Dr. Clarence Conant, of Middletown; Gunning B., a merchant in Goshen; Eliza, wife of William Vanamee, a lawyer of Middletown; Annie, wife of Rev. Henry A. Dowes, of Middletown; and Hiram Irwin, a graduate of the New York Homœopathic Medical College, and a practicing physician in New York City.

Dr. Ostrom's present wife is Emma Gertrude, widow of the late Edgar T. Lu Gar, of New York, and daughter of Prof. L. A. Benjamin, of that city, whom he married April 26, 1881.

DR. WILLIAM A. M. CULBERT is a native of New York City, and was born Nov. 4, 1822. During his earlier years he resided in the city and enjoyed the benefits of excellent educational training at the private schools of the period. He subsequently entered the Academic Department of the University of the City of New York, at which institution he was graduated on June 12, 1841, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Three years later he received the Master's degree.

After the termination of his academical course only a brief interval elapsed before Dr. Culbert commenced his medical education. He entered the office of Prof. Valentine Mott as a student of medicine, and the year following was matriculated in the medical department of the university of which he was an alumnus. After completing the three years' course of prescribed studies he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine on March 11, 1846. He soon after settled in Brooklyn and entered upon the practice of his profession, meeting with a degree of success that was very encouraging. His friend, A. Gerald Hull, M.D., a distinguished physician of New York, had recently withdrawn from practice and settled in Newburgh to recover his health, greatly impaired by hard work in his profession. By this gentleman Dr. Culbert was urged to remove to Newburgh also, and this, after consideration, he finally resolved to do. Accordingly on Nov. 8, 1847, he arrived in that city and took rooms in the United States Hotel, where he immediately opened an office, entering almost from the beginning upon a good practice, which in time became extensive and lucrative, and included many of the most desirable families of the vicinity.

Dr. Culbert was married on Oct. 12, 1852, to Miss Henrietta, daughter of Robert and Louisa A. Powell, and granddaughter of Thomas Powell who was then in the enjoyment of a vigorous old age. Since his marriage the doctor has occupied the residence corner of Grand and Second Streets, with his wife and son, Francis R. Culbert, in the enjoyment of a high degree of professional success. For twenty years so closely confined was he that he was scarcely absent from the duties of his profession as many days in all as that number of years. His practice demanded his full time, and so incessant were his labors that at last health began to yield and rest became imperatively necessary. This he took in 1870, and again in 1871, several months of each year traveling in Europe and visiting many of the medical institutions of the countries through which he passed.

Besides occupying the position of an intelligent and successful physician in the community in which he has passed so many years of his life, Dr. Culbert is also recognized as one of the leading citizens of Newburgh, performing in a plain, modest, dignified, and courteous manner the various social duties that devolve upon him. While taking an active interest in the public events of the day, and in the local enterprises of the city, he has been prevented by the pressure of professional duty from participating in political or public life.

IRA S. BRADNER, M.D., is a lineal descendant from Rev. John Bradner, a native of Scotland, the first Presbyterian pastor of Goshen, who settled there in 1721, and died in 1732.

His father, Thomas Wickham Bradner, was born and resided in the town of Goshen, Orange Co., where he was a farmer during his active business life. He was a promoter of the interest of the Orange County Agricultural Society, of which he was a member, progressive in his ideas of the development of the industries of the county, and a thorough-going business man. Both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, of which he served for many years as elder.

His wife, Susan Smith, bore him the following children who reached manhood and womanhood: William Fisk, succeeded to the homestead farm and there died; Eliza, became the wife of David Redfield, a merchant of Goshen, where she died; Dr. Ira S., subject of this sketch; Rev. Thomas Scott, graduated at Princeton College, and is a Presbyterian clergyman at Glen Cove, L. I.; Harriet, died unmarried; Harvey, was a farmer in Goshen, and there died; Susan Emily, is the wife of Joseph Young, of Goshen; and Caroline.

Many members of the Bradner family have made the medical profession their life work, and several have been identified with the practice of medicine in Orange County.

Dr. Ira S. Bradner was born in the town of Goshen, June 2, 1820. He received his preparatory course of education at Farmers' Hall Academy, Goshen, entered Princeton College, from which he was graduated with the usual honors in the class of 1840.

After his graduation he began the study of medicine with Dr. J. W. Ostrom, of Goshen, attended two courses of medical lectures at the Medical Department of the University of New York, from which he was graduated in 1843.

He first settled in practice at Scotchtown, Orange Co., where, by his professional skill, perseverance, care, and devotion to his patients, he soon won the confidence of the community and esteem of his fellow associates of the profession. While in New York purchasing medical books to replenish his library, about 1850, Dr. Bradner, through curiosity alone to know what it contained, purchased among other books the "Hahnemann Organon," the study of which soon convinced him of the superiority of its theory of the practice of medicine, and gradually he began to adopt the new practice. So successful was he in the treatment of difficult cases by this method, that although a member of the Orange County Medical Society, and already inducted into a successful practice in the old school of medicine, he resolved to adopt the new theory, which he accordingly did about 1852.

He remained at Scotchtown until 1857, when he settled at Middletown, where he has since continued the duties of his profession.

Upon the organization of the Homœopathic Medical Society of Orange County, on Nov. 12, 1851, in which Dr. Bradner took an active part, Dr. A. G. Hull was chosen president, Dr. De Witt C. Jayne, vice-president, Dr. Bradner, secretary and treasurer, and Dr. Wm. L. Culbert, corresponding secretary.

Dr. Bradner has not only officiated as secretary and treasurer of the society since, a period of twenty-nine years, but has frequently contributed valuable statistics, and ably discussed medical topics before the society, in which his counsel has always commanded the confidence of his professional brethren for candor, frankness, and practical utility.

Dr. Bradner, and a few other medical men of Orange County, are the founders of homœopathic practice in the county, and to them alone is due the credit and honor of having met the obstacles incident to the introduction of this new theory and its successful establishment here.

Dr. Bradner was the first settled homœopathic physician in Middletown, and is one of the oldest practitioners of medicine in the county.

In 1863, Dr. Bradner was appointed assistant surgeon of the Fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, under Gen. Van Wyck, and remained with the regiment while stationed on Saybrook Island, and at Beaufort, S. C., and just before the close of the war he received the appointment of surgeon of the same regiment.

His wife is Sarah Jane, daughter of John G. and Susan (Bronson) Houston, of Scotchtown, whom he married Oct. 5, 1843. She was born July 18, 1819.

Their children are Julia E., graduated at the Women's Medical College and Hospital in New York in 1878, and is a successful practitioner in Middletown; Susan, is the wife of Odell Hathaway, of Newburgh; Fred. H., born Oct. 6, 1849, graduated at a homœopathic college in New York, and afterwards practiced medicine in Middletown until his death, in January, 1880; John Fremont, was graduated at the Albany Law School, and is a lawyer and police justice at Middletown; and Isabella G.

CHARLES M. LAWRENCE, M.D.—The Lawrence family are of German extraction, Jacob Lawrence, the progenitor of the family in America, having, at the age of eighteen and previous to the war of the Revolution, emigrated from Alsace, Germany, to his adopted country. Mr. Lawrence, soon after his arrival, became impressed with the justice of the cause of the colonies, and enrolled his name as one of their defenders, serving with much credit at the battle of Trenton, where he was captain of the guard. He was on this occasion honored with the confidence of the commander-in-chief, whose intention to cross the Delaware was known only to his council of war and to Mr. Lawrence. He served during the conflict, and at its close became a resident of Philadelphia, having previously been located at Red Bank, N. J. Mr. Lawrence had three sons, Jacob, James, and Charles, the latter of whom was the father of Charles M., the subject of this biography, and was born in Philadelphia, where the early years of his life were passed.

The practical education which laid the foundation of a subsequent successful career was obtained at the public schools of the city, after which he acquired the trade of a rope-maker. This was pursued for years with his accustomed vigor, and at a later period his business interests became identified with those of his brother Jacob.

Mr. Lawrence's political predilections may be described as those of an Old-Line Whig, while his faith sympathized with the belief of the "Christians." He was united in marriage to Miss Mary De Flood, to whom two children—James and Charles M.—were born. The death of Mr. Lawrence occurred in 1845, in his fifty-sixth year, his wife's demise having taken place in 1826. Charles M. Lawrence was born in Philadelphia, July 8, 1822, where his early years were spent in study. A desire to engage in active business prompted him to remove to New York, where he became a druggist. Determining to enter one of the professions, he began the study of medicine in 1847, and graduated in the class of 1849-50 from the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York, having for two years previously engaged in practice in New York under the direction of his preceptor, Lyman Fisk, M.D., in whose office he spent four years.

He soon after relinquished business pursuits and devoted himself exclusively and with much ardor to the practice of medicine in New York, having meanwhile become an exponent of the homœopathic school. He was appointed in 1849 to the care of the Thirtieth Ward Station-House during the cholera epidemic, and the following year removed to Port Jervis.

Dr. Lawrence has been twice married; first, to Miss Margaret Holmes, of Bridgeton, N. J., who was the mother of four children,—Emma, wife of Edgar Van Etten, of Port Jervis; Carrie J., wife of D. J. Pierce, of the same place; Holmes; and Charles, who is deceased. Mrs. Lawrence died in 1865, and in 1868 he was again married, to Miss Agnes L., daughter of Alexander Turner, of Scotch descent. To them were born two children,—Fred. M. and Agnes Houseman. Dr. Lawrence is a member of the State Homœopathic Society, and president of the Orange County Homœopathic Society. He has manifested during his residence in Port Jervis a deep interest in its educational institutions, and has been for successive years president of the board of education.

Dr. Lawrence during the late Rebellion warmly espoused the cause of the Union, and was instrumental in organizing the first company of volunteers. He has, notwithstanding his extended and lucrative practice, found time to devote to the interest of the community and the State. The doctor is in politics a Liberal Republican. His religious affinities are those of the Reformed (Dutch) faith, of which church he is an active and consistent member.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE PRESS OF ORANGE COUNTY.

PRINTING, both of newspapers and books, had a comparatively early introduction in Orange County. The first newspaper printed in New York City was issued Oct. 16, 1725, and fifty years later there was none north of the Highlands. During the Revolution, Samuel Loudon followed the retreating footsteps of the Continental forces from New York to Fishkill with his New York Packet, but at best it was an army and not a local newspaper. The war closed in 1783, and five years later a newspaper press was established at Goshen,—The Goshen Repository,—and twelve years later there was a newspaper press—The Newburgh Packet—and book printing at Newburgh. Specimens of these pioneer publications compare favorably with any printed in New York at that time; while “An Apology for the Bible,” by R. Watson, D.D., F.R.S., printed by David Denniston, at Newburgh, in 1796, is exceedingly creditable in typographical execution and binding. That there has been a wide departure from this primitive equality, both in newspaper and book printing, is evident enough. “Capital, machinery, and the facilities of communication are preponderatingly in favor of the cities in all avocations, and especially in printing; nevertheless, the newspaper press of Orange County maintains—and has maintained during the unequal struggle through which it has passed—a high standard of merit.

The history of the newspaper press of the county cannot now be written. In their early stages newspapers represented men to a greater extent than they do now. They were mainly either literally the “organs” of agreeing politicians, who purchased and “set them up,” or of individuals in a less aggregated sense, in whose hands they became the substitute for the pamphlet in reaching the public ear. In some instances they were private ventures. With full files and a thorough investigation the influences which brought many of them into being might be traced in some cases, and the writer be able to say, with an early penman, “Which means, through the columns of that paper, Judge Booth! Judge Booth!” but as a whole the inquiry would not be profitable. Sufficient for the purposes of this work are such details as have tangible record.

THE PRESS OF GOSHEN.

The Goshen Repository was established by David Mandeville and David M. Westcott, at the Academy, in Goshen, in 1788. In 1793 its office was near the court-house. In 1800 it was sold to John G. and William Heurtin, who changed its name to The Orange County Patriot. In 1801, William Heurtin sold his interest to Gabriel Denton. In 1803, Denton sold to William A. Carpenter, and its name was changed to The Friend of Truth. In 1804, Ward M. Gazlay became its proprietor, and changed its name to The Orange Eagle. In 1805 its materials were destroyed by fire, and Mr. Gazlay removed to Newburgh.

The Orange County Gazette was commenced at Goshen in 1804 by Gabriel Denton, who took its name from an extinct Newburgh paper. Elliott Hopkins, publisher, 1807; Elliott Hopkins & Co., 1811; Elliott Hopkins, 1812; F. J. & A. D. Houghton, 1813; “printed and published for the proprietor” in 1818. Its subsequent history is unknown.

The Orange County Farmer was established at Goshen in 1820 by Williams & Farrand. How long it was continued has not been ascertained. Its founders were graduates of the Albany Plow-Boy establishment, and aimed to conduct a general news and agricultural paper. Samuel Williams, the associate of Mr. Farrand, died at Rondout, June 16, 1878, in his ninetyeth year, and at the time of his death was said to have been the oldest printer in the State. He was for forty years a member of the Baptist communion.

The Orange County Patriot and Spirit of Seventy-Six was commenced at Goshen, by Gabriel Denton, in 1808. Lewis & Crowell purchased it and removed it to Newburgh, where it was published as “a new series” in 1811. T. B. Crowell was the publisher in 1812, and professed to hold its columns “open to all parties” but to be “influenced by none.” It was again at Goshen in 1822, Mr. Crowell proprietor, and was subsequently sold to R. C. S. Hendrie. Feb. 22, 1834, Hendrie sold to F. T. Parsons, who changed its name to Goshen Democrat. Charles Mead became the associate of Mr. Parsons in 1842. Nathaniel Webb succeeded Mr. Parsons, and the firm became Mead & Webb, and, after the death of Mr. Webb, Charles Mead & Son. Mr. Hendrie started the True Whig in 1843, and after continuing it two years sold it to Mead & Webb, who changed their newspaper title to Goshen Democrat and Whig. After Mr. Webb’s death, Mr. Mead dropped the Whig and resumed the title of Goshen Democrat. As the name of Gabriel Denton will not again be met in connection with the Goshen press, of which he was so industrious a founder, it may be stated here that his last years were spent in the Orange County poor-house. He certainly deserved a better fate.

The Orange County Republican, “volume one, number one, Montgomery, May 6, 1806. Published for the Proprietors by Cyrus Beach and Luther Pratt,” is a transcript of the imprint of a paper published in Montgomery, or, as some writers say, “at Ward’s Bridge,” which was the title of the first post-office in Montgomery, and so called from the fact that it was located and kept at James Ward’s grist-mill, where he had thrown a bridge across the Walkill, constituting it one of the most convenient locations for the delivery of mail-matter. Who the proprietors were is explained in its issue of June 9, 1806, in which it says, “Money was advanced in equal shares by twenty-four patriotic citizens of this county, consisting chiefly of respectable farmers, and mostly inhabitants of the town of Montgomery.” Notices of meetings of the proprietors frequently appear in its files. From the first it claimed to be an Independent Republican journal,—one which was prepared to admit that there was some honesty among Federalists, but one that was bitterly opposed to DeWitt Clinton and what would now be called the “ring,” which controlled the then Republican organization. In 1812, January 18th, Luther Pratt being the publisher, its title was changed, for the evident purpose of more clearly indicating its character, to Independent Republican. James A. Cheeney became its proprietor in 1818, by whom it was removed to Goshen some time about 1822, where he continued it until 1832, when he sold to Henry H. Van Dyck. When the latter was elected to the State Senate in 1836, and in which he served from 1837 to 1840, he sold it to Victor M. Drake, who had previously been associated with him in its publication. Mr. Drake sold to Moses Swezey in 1841, who sold to Clark & Montanye in 1846. James J. McNally purchased in 1853, and sold to L. V. Montanye in 1857. Mr. McNally repurchased from Mr. Montanye, and sold to E. M. Rittenber and H. P. Kimber in 1869. H. P. Kimber continued it until 1873, when he sold to Thomas P. McElrath, who sold to L. V. Montanye, its present proprietor. While prolific in changes of proprietors, the paper has maintained a consistent political course since 1824, when modern political parties were founded under Jackson, and fairly won, in days anterior to 1846, the title of "the Bible of the Orange County Democracy."

The Democratic Standard was started at Goshen in November, 1843, by Vail & Donovan, as an opponent of the Republican, or rather of the parties which it represented. It passed to the hands of Hector Vail in 1844, who changed its name to Goshen Clarion. It was a spirited "burn-burner" paper, but under the reunion of the Democratic party its vocation was lost. In 1849 its subscription list was merged in the Independent Republican,* and its materials were taken to New Milford, Pa., by John M. Heller, and with them James J. McNally started the Milford Herald. In 1851, during the "hard-shell" and "soft-shell" rupture in the Democratic party, the Democratic Recorder was started at Goshen as a "soft-shell" organ under the management of A. G. Tucker. After a short life its materials and subscription passed to the Independent Republican, of which James J. McNally was then the proprietor.

From recollections by Victor M. Drake, now the oldest printer in the county, we learn that "David M. Westcott was a practical printer and editor, who served a portion of his time in Benjamin Franklin's old printing office in Philadelphia, though, of course, not under Franklin's mastership. He was born in Cornwall of humble parentage, and in early life apprenticed to a farmer, and afterwards learned the printer's trade. His wife was the daughter of Dr. Coe Gale, one of the early settlers of Goshen, by whom he had five daughters and three sons,—Mandeville, Nathan, and William. Nathan was clerk of the county from 1844 to 1855. David M. Westcott was not only a good practical printer, but a good merchant and farmer, an able editor, and a trustworthy public servant, serving as county clerk in 1815 and 1821, State senator 1831-34, member of Assembly in 1828, and filled many other stations of honor and trust. He acted as editor of the Independent Republican for a long time after Mr. Cheeney was struck down with paralysis. I have repeatedly called him from his labor upon his farm to write editorials for the Republican, for such was the high state of party feeling that the public would trust no other man than 'little Dave Westcott' with the responsibility of editing that paper in critical election times. The next two gentlemen of distinction connected with the Goshen press were Hon. Henry H. Van Dyck and Hon. William B. Wright. Both of these gentlemen were printers and editors of high literary ability. Van Dyck was a native of Kinderhook, and was sent to Goshen from Albany to succeed Mr. Cheeney. I lived seven years with Mr. Cheeney, and served four years in the Republican office with Van Dyck. Judge Wright was a native of Newburgh, and learned printing under Ward M. Gazlay. While studying law at Goshen he was the editor of Mr. Hendrie's True Whig. I remained in the Republican office for a period of four years as editor and proprietor after Mr. Van Dyck was elected senator. During my administration the 'Hard Cider' campaign of 1840 was fought, and prior to that was the local struggle to locate the Eastern Division of the Erie Railroad. In 1841, my office was burned up and everything but my books lost. For the time being I was completely broke. While the five hundred dollars insurance policy was pending, I took rooms in the third story of the old court-house, and through the generosity of Mr. Parsons, of the Democrat, I was enabled to issue the Republican in a half-sheet form. In the mean time Lewis Cuddeback, Robert Denniston, and Nathaniel Jones, our members of the Legislature, made up a hundred dollars for me, and with the aid of a five-hundred-dollar note discounted by Gilbert O. Fowler at the Highland Bank in Newburgh, I was enabled to get on my feet again, and bring out the Republican in better shape than ever before. I afterwards sold out my business, and on settling up found I had five thousand dollars left, which I invested in the brick building opposite the Goshen Bank. Having stipulated neither to print nor edit any more newspapers in Orange County, I emigrated to New Jersey, where I spent a good many years in the newspaper business, acquiring, however, more honor than profit. In 1864 I returned to Orange County, and during three years

* Mr. Nathaniel Vail, of Goshen, supplies the following additional particulars in reference to the Standard and the Clarion—

"In November, 1843, was commenced at Goshen the publication of the newspaper known as the Democratic Standard. Its editors were T. W. Donovan and H. Vail. On the 14th of June of the following year Donovan retired, and the paper appeared with a new head—the Goshen Clarion—and became a 'freedom' publication. The leading local Democrats of the 'soft-shell' or 'burn-burner' portion of the party who were sustaining the enterprise were Lebbius L. Vail, Asa D. Jensen, James H. Jensen, John B. Booth, and Hector Vail, of Goshen; Merrit H. Cash, of Minerva; and Francis Lathell, of Chester. Judge Booth falling in 1845, the publication devolved on the Vails, and on the death of Lebbius L. in 1849 (whose name had been constantly at its head), his youngest executor, discovering that he had expended upwards of twenty-five hundred dollars in the publication, took steps to discontinue the same, which was effected June 14, 1849."

succeeding, and while the Republican was under charge of Mr. McNally, had free use of its columns to urge the Walkkill Valley Railroad project upon the attention of the public. I might add here that my father, Rufus Drake, lived neighbor to Timothy B. Crowell, proprietor of the old Orange County Patriot and Spirit of Seventy Six, and it was in Mr. Crowell's office that I first learned to set type."

One of the methods of circulating newspapers in early times was by what were called post-riders, who would convey the papers to subscribers, in some cases carrying a route from Goshen to Newburgh of Goshen issue, and returning with Newburgh issues. It was a most interesting service viewed from the stand point of present facilities for reaching patrons through the mails. Coming into use before the days of a post-office system, it came to be blended with it, the mail-carrier and the post-rider being frequently one and the same person. This method of transacting business is shown by the following advertisement:

"IMPORTANT NEWS.—Those persons in Ulster and Orange, who have been supplied with the Gen'l S. Republican, by the carrier, are informed that the present paper completes one year since he has rode post. He wishes those gentlemen who are in arrears, to make payment as soon as possible, as his engagements with the printer oblige him to exact the most punctual settlements for the last year's papers. Those who find it most convenient, may leave the money at the place where their papers are left.

JONATHAN BECHER.

"Feb. 1, 1791."

Noah Carpenter was another post-rider; he was also a mail carrier. He was a lame shoemaker, and lived at the two mile stone on the La Grange road. "He was a man of a high degree of intelligence, of strict moral character, and highly respected wherever known. His route was from Goshen to Bloomingburgh, and through the towns of Wawayanda, Greenville, Minisink, and Warwick. He was," says Mr. Drake, "a communicant of the Presbyterian Church, and lived an unsullied life by never being a candidate for office. Through the intercourse with the people which his occupation gave him, he became one of the most respected and influential men in the county. Clergymen, politicians, lawyers, and professional men early learned to pay due respect to his opinions. For months together he would be the only man from the outside world who was seen in many neighborhoods, and his coming was an event that was greeted with pleasure. All kinds of business was intrusted to him,—deeds to be recorded, money to be collected, notes to be paid, and store-goods to be purchased. Wells, when he introduced the express business, had not far to go for his idea,—it was but the continuance of the old post-rider system under another name. When Hector Craig gave the only electoral vote from the State of New York, in the Electoral College of 1824, he was sustained by Noah Carpenter, and that was enough."

Perhaps there were other post-riders equally worthy of notice; but our purpose is served by what has been written.

VICTOR M. DRAKE was born at Milford, Pa., March 29, 1813. His father was Rufus J., a son of Francis Drake, of Blooming-Grove, the Goshen Drakes being among the oldest in the county; and all his ancestors by the name of Drake lived in Goshen or Chester from the beginning of the seventeenth century. His great-grandfather, Joseph Drake, was supposed to be a lineal descendant of Sir Francis Drake, of England, who died in that country in 1794. His grandfather, Francis Drake, had nine children by his three wives, his father, Rufus J. Drake, being the only one in the male line by the last wife, Rebecca Clark. His mother's name was Rhoda Pierson, who was a daughter of Rachel Bull, whose mother was a DeWitt, and sister of Mary DeWitt, DeWitt Clinton's mother. Thus Mr. Drake is descended from the earliest settlers of the county by four different lines,—the Drakes, Piersons, Bulls, and DeWitts,—all of whom were distinguished for their devotion to the cause of the colonies at the time of their separation from the English crown in 1776. His grandfather, Francis Drake, was taken prisoner when Fort Montgomery was captured by the British in 1779. He served in Col. Drake's regiment. Capt. Croomsd Drake, of Goshen, was a distinguished patriot and friend of Henry Wisner, who championed the Revolutionary cause in Congress in 1776, and the first congressman that represented Orange County. His father, Rufus J. Drake, served two years in the army as a volunteer in the Eighty-first Pennsylvania Regiment in the war of 1813. He died poor in 1828, leaving a widow and five children,—two sons and three daughters. His mother, Rhoda Pierson Drake, died in 1866; and during the thirty-eight years she remained his widow she uniformly declined to apply to the government for a pension. Victor M. Drake's life has been spent mainly in Orange Co., N. Y., and the adjacent county of Sussex, N. J. At the age of eleven years he was placed in a printing-office, where he received about the only schooling that he ever obtained. He served eleven years in the office of the Independent Republican in the various capacities of apprentice, journeyman, editor, and proprietor. In 1846 he removed to Sussex Co., N. J., settling in Newton, where he was connected with the New Jersey Herald until 1871 in the capacities of reporter, editor, and proprietor. During his early connection with this paper it became an influential journal in the politics of New Jersey, and had a direct influence in procuring the nomination and election of four Governors of the State,—viz., Daniel Haines, of Sussex; George F. Fort, of Goshen; Rodman M. Price, of Hudson; and Gen. Joel Parker, of Monmouth. These men were all elected on the questions of a reform of the old State constitution, equal taxation, free schools, and the election of county officers by the people, a power previously invested in the old Council of Appointment, principally controlled up to this time by the East and West Jersey proprietors. Mr. Drake originally devised the system of railway improvements that have become a distinguishing feature of both counties. When he began printing in Sussex County he had to wagon his paper over the Jersey mountains sixty miles. He also carried the mails on five Star routes, covering five hundred miles each week for the distribution of his newspaper. He had previously done the same thing in Orange County. The farmers received their newspapers direct at their houses instead of through the post-office, and for this purpose he always kept three or four fleet horses. In this way he increased the circulation of his newspaper and distanced his competitors. In politics Mr. Drake has always been a pronounced Democrat. In early life he hurrahed for Gen. Andrew Jackson, and cast his first vote for Martin Van Buren for President, and each of his Democratic successors until the renomination of James Buchanan. He supported Andrew Johnson and defended Abraham Lincoln when the rebels attempted to usurp the government. He has lived an industrious life from a boy, having in turn been a printer, editor, farmer, and gentleman at large. Now, in the eighty-sixth year of his age, he has rarely been sick during his life, never having used liquor, tobacco, or other stimulants, and in 1881 he is able to do an average day's work either in the printing-office or on the farm. He erected the first brick buildings built south of Goshen court-house, in 1841, and has taken an active interest in all local improvements wherever he has resided.

CHARLES MEAD.—His paternal grandfather, Matthew, was a colonel in the Continental army during the Revolution, and was on very intimate terms with Gens. Washington and Lafayette, as his private papers indicated.

After the close of the war he refused an assignment of land in the Connecticut Valley, the soldier's right, and never received a pension. He resided at Wilton, Fairfield Co., Conn., where he reared a family of several sons and daughters, of whom Xenophon was father of our subject, and was born in the town of Wilton, June 12, 1779.

He was a merchant in Newburgh, N. Y., for several years, subsequently a farmer in Warwick, afterwards resided for a time in Mobile, Ala., and finally removed to Ohio, where he died Dec. 29, 1847.

His wife was Abigail, daughter of Moses Burr, who was born June 3, 1778, and died Aug. 22, 1857.

Mr. Mead's maternal grandfather, Moses Burr, resided in Fairfield Co., Conn.; was a relative of Aaron Burr; was a soldier in the Continental army, and at the burning of Norwalk. His wife was Mabel Banks, whose family was noted for great longevity, one member having reached the great age of one hundred and two years, and several others to the very advanced age of over ninety years.

The children of Xenophon Mead were Louisa, born June 20, 1802, widow of the late Nathaniel Webb, of Goshen; Aaron Burr, born Dec. 2, 1803, removed to Ohio, where he died; Norman, born May 17, 1808, for a time resided in Ohio, but died in Goshen, N. Y.; Edwin, born Dec. 17, 1812, of Santa Cruz, Cal.; and Charles.

Charles Mead, son of Xenophon, was born in Newburgh, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1819, and educated under the well-known teacher, the late Nathaniel Webb, of Goshen.

At the age of fifteen he went to learn the trade of a printer in Goshen, under William B. Wright, editor of the Orange County Patriot, but who afterwards became a judge of the Supreme Court of the State. Here he remained until 1839, and for one year following edited the Carbondale Journal, at Carbondale, Pa., and in 1841-42 he worked on Graham's Magazine, in Philadelphia.

He married, May 9, 1842, Caroline A., the accomplished daughter of Daniel Warden, of Goshen. She was born April 11, 1821, and died Nov. 11, 1880.

After his marriage he came to Goshen, purchased the Goshen Democrat of the heirs of Frederick T. Parsons, who had recently died, which he has edited and published since, a period of thirty-nine years. From 1843 until 1854 he did the printing for the Erie Railway Company, and at the latter date started an office for that company in New York.

During this time, for twelve years, the late Nathaniel Webb was associated with him in the management of his paper, and since 1868 his eldest son has been a partner in the concern, under the firm-name of "Charles Mead & Son."

Charles Mead, whose life and family origin have been briefly sketched, it will be seen, has spent almost his whole business career in Goshen.

The Goshen Democrat, of which he has been the proprietor for nearly forty years, has long been recognized as a model newspaper. Its conservative and high moral tone has justly distinguished it from its compeers. In the part of political strife an upright and honorable course has always been maintained towards its political opponents. Tolerant of the opinions of others, it has never failed to assert its own in a candid and unobtrusive manner.

Mr. Mead's object seems to have been to make his journal a useful, truthful, and unexceptionable family newspaper. From the liberal patronage always accorded it, it would seem that the efforts of its publisher had been duly appreciated by the public.

We seldom meet with a journal of this class, and in a county where newspaper enterprise has more than kept pace with the times, where its success is justly a source of congratulation. That it has had its influence in sustaining the high moral tone of the community in which it is printed is evident. Whilst it has outlived so many other journals conducted on different principles, its future career of usefulness promises to be excelled by none. The life and usefulness of such men are seldom estimated at their true worth, whilst the scheming and meretricious too often claim and obtain the applause of the world, which in reality is due to others.

As a man and a citizen, Mr. Mead has always been distinguished for his quiet and unostentatious manners and high social position. His intercourse with his friends and neighbors has always been agreeable and pleasant.

His sons, Charles and William B. Mead, are both young men of a high grade of talent, and promise future usefulness.

THE PRESS OF NEWBURGH.

The first paper published in Newburgh was the Newburgh Packet; it was printed by Lucius Carey in 1795. Carey was the son-in-law of Rev. John Close, Presbyterian minister at Newburgh and New Windsor until 1796. It is said that Carey sold the paper to David Denniston in 1797, who changed its name to The Mirror, of which Philip Van Horne (1797) and Joseph W. Barber (1798) appear as printers, the latter saying in his advertisement, "also, Printing and Book Binding carried on by David Denniston." In 1799, Jacob Schultz removed to Newburgh the New Windsor Gazette, the name of which he changed to Orange County Gazette. This paper was purchased by David Denniston and the name changed, it is said, to The Citizen, a point on which there is some doubt, as, while copies of all other Newburgh papers have been preserved, there is none of this, and as Denniston was, about that time, connected with the American Citizen, of New York, which he circulated from his office. Whatever the facts may be cannot now be ascertained. In 1799 the Rights of Man was established by Dr. Elias Winfield, for whom it was printed by Benoni H. Howell. This paper was also purchased by Denniston, and the Orange County Gazette probably incorporated with it. Winfield was a physician and druggist, and made himself somewhat notorious, in 1803, by his advocacy of the theory that the yellow fever was of "domestic origin," and that it was "not a contagious disease." He subsequently removed to Kingston. The Recorder of the Times was commenced by Dennis Coles, in 1803. The Mirror was absorbed by the Rights of Man, in 1804; and the latter by the Recorder of the Times, in 1805. Ward M. Gazlay, who had been burned out of the Orange Eagle, at Goshen, in 1805, purchased the Recorder in 1806, and changed its name to the Political Index, under which it was continued until 1829.

The Mirror and the Citizen were the advocates of Paine's infidel teachings. The Gazette was anti-infidel. The Rights of Man was more especially devoted to the interests of that branch of the Republican party of which Jefferson was the representative. The Recorder of the Times claimed to be Republican, but was generally regarded as representing "the Federalists and Burrites." Mr. Gazlay, who was then printing The Friend of Truth, at Goshen, introduced it to his readers (August, 1803) in this language: "The pretended Republicans of Orange County, not satisfied with the Rights of Man, published at Newburgh by Mr. Denniston, have established a new paper called the Recorder of the Times." The Political Index apparently consolidated the interests of the Republican party. It gave a hearty support to the administration of Jefferson and of Madison, and to the war of 1812. Its political articles were mainly from the pen of Jonathan Fisk, one of the most able men of the period. Its only competitor was the Orange County Patriot and Spirit of Seceady-Sce, a paper of Federal or anti-war politics, a new series of which was commenced at Newburgh, in 1812, by Lewis & Crowell. It was subsequently removed to Goshen, from whence it came.

The Political Index was purchased, in 1829, by Charles U. Cushman, who changed its name to the Orange Telegraph, and subsequently to the Newburgh Telegraph. It continued under the management of Mr. Cushman until October, 1839, when it passed into the hands of Henry H. Van Dyck, who, finding Newburgh people uncongenial from his course in the Senate on the location of the Erie Railroad, placed the paper, in the winter of 1840, in the hands of Elias Pitts, who continued it until 1850, when it was purchased by E. M. Rittenber. Mr. Rittenber sold the establishment to Joseph Lawson, Oct. 1, 1857; repurchased it May 1, 1859, and sold it in 1861 to E. W. Gray, who sold to George M. Warren (1864), who sold to Isaac V. Montanye (1864), who sold to E. M. Rittenber (1865), who sold to A. A. Bensel (1867), who sold to J. J. McNally (1869), who sold to Dr. Cooper (1874), who sold to N. H. Schram soon after. The latter was succeeded by E. J. Horton in 1875, and in 1876 it was again purchased by E. M. Rittenber, who changed its title to the Newburgh Register. The Telegraph, although Democratic at all times, opposed the Albany Regency, a fact which led to its purchase by H. H. Van Dyck, or rather the purchase for him. Mr. Pitts, who had been sent to take Mr. Van Dyck's place, very soon fell into the line of thought of his local supporters, and not only opposed the Regency, but upheld the "Free Soil" banner of 1848 with marked ability. In the subsequent changes and revolutions in politics it has maintained the Democratic faith.

The publication of the Newburgh Gazette was commenced by John D. Spalding, June, 1822. Its subsequent publishers were as follows: Spalding & Parmenter, from 1825 to 1832; Knevels & Spalding, 1832 to 1836; Knevels & Leslie, 1836 and 1837; Wallace & Sweet, 1837 and 1838; Samuel T. Callahan, 1838 to 1852; William L. Allison, 1852 to 1855; Royal B. Hancock, 1855 to February, 1856, when Eugene W. Gray became the proprietor. In the summer of 1856, Mr. Gray commenced in connection with it the publication of the Daily News, mainly designed for political purposes, and continued it until December. He again resumed it in January, and in February, 1857, united his establishment with the Telegraph. The Gazette and the Telegraph were continued as weeklies under the consolidation, and the News as a daily, until 1864, when the Gazette was dropped and the title of the News changed to the Daily Telegraph. After a temporary discontinuance during the winter of 1864, the daily was resumed under the title of the Daily Union. In 1866 the title of both the weekly and daily was changed to the Press. The old title of the Telegraph was restored in 1869, but changed to the Register in 1876, of which H. P. Kimber & Co. are now the publishers.

In 1833 or 1834, John D. Spalding commenced the publication of the Newburgh Journal, which he continued until 1843, when he changed the name to the Highland Courier. The Courier was continued by Mr. Spalding until his death, Aug. 22, 1853, and subsequently by his widow, Mrs. E. L. Spalding, who sold it, in 1855, to William E. Smiley. In August, 1858, Edward Nixon became its proprietor. In 1859, Rufus A. Reed purchased the establishment and changed the name of the paper to the Highland Chief-tain. Mr. Reed sold to Cyrus B. Martin, who resumed the title of Newburgh Journal, and commenced, in 1863, the publication of the Daily Journal. The establishment is now conducted by Ritchie & Hull.

In addition to these papers, The Beacon, an anti-Jackson campaign paper, was published in 1828; the late Judge William B. Wright was its editor. In 1834, Wallace & Sweet published the National Advertiser,—subsequently merged in the Gazette. Thomas George commenced, in 1849, the publication of the Newburgh Excelsior. This paper was purchased by E. M. Rittenber, in May, 1851, and merged in the Telegraph. In 1855 the publication of the Newburgh American was commenced by R. P. L. Shafer, and continued three or four weeks. In March, 1856, the Newburgh Times, a temperance paper, was commenced by Royal B. Hancock, as agent for an association of gentlemen. It subsequently passed into the hands of R. Bloomer & Son, who sold to Alexander Wilson. Charles Blanchard purchased from Mr. Wilson, and commenced in 1867 the issue of the Newburgh Daily Democrat, but failed in a few months. The establishment was then broken up. The Daily Penny Post was commenced by an association of printers in October, 1875; and the Daily Mail by a similar association in the spring of 1876. The former was discontinued in June, 1876, and the latter merged in the Register in 1877.

There have also been several religious publications. In 1824, the Rev. J. R. Wilson commenced the publication of a monthly magazine of forty-eight pages, under the title of the Evangelical Witness. It was devoted to the exposition of the faith of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and was continued four years. It was succeeded by the Christian Statesman, which lasted only one year. On the 1st of March, 1836, by the appointment of the Synod of that church, the Rev. Moses Roney commenced the publication of the Reformed Presbyterian, a monthly magazine of thirty-two pages. Mr. Roney removed this magazine to Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1849. Here he published it until his death in 1854; it was subsequently continued there by Mrs. Roney, and is now conducted by the Rev. Thomas Sproul. In October, 1859, the Rev. David L. Proudfit commenced the publication of the Family Visitor, a monthly quarto, which he continued one year. In 1845 he published the first number of the Christian Instructor, a monthly magazine of thirty-two pages, which he continued for two years. It was then sold to the Rev. J. B. Dales, who removed it to Philadelphia. In 1856 the Catholic Library Association commenced the publication of the Catholic Library Magazine, John Ashhurst, editor, which was continued monthly until August, 1860.

Literary serials have been numerous, but without permanency. In May, 1832, John W. Knevels issued the first number of a monthly quarto called Tablets of Rural Economy. It was only continued for a few months. In 1855, R. B. Denton commenced the Literary Scrap-Book, a monthly magazine of forty-eight pages; but it failed in a short time. The Acorn, a small monthly, was commenced by an association of students of Mr. Domanski's school, in 1857, and was discontinued in 1859. The title was subsequently resumed in a publication by the students of the Newburgh Institute, under the auspices of Mr. Siglar. In 1867, S. S. Wood commenced the publication of the Household Advocate, an eight-page monthly. Having secured a large circulation, he changed the form and the title to Household Magazine, the circulation of which at one time reached sixty thousand. The publication failed in 1874. Meanwhile Mr. Wood, who retired from the old publication in 1874, prior to its failure, endeavored to introduce a larger magazine, but without success. In 1869, A. A. Bensele started the Home, Farm, and Orchard, an eight-page weekly, and ran it until the spring of 1876. The Musical Bulletin, a monthly quarto, was issued by Demorest & Burr during the years 1872 and 1873.

The list of publications is substantially completed with the titles of a series of what were known as "amateur newspapers," from 1865 to 1873: the Union Jack, by Master A. Ludlow Case; the American Eagle, by Frank S. Hull;* the Comet, by Henri Gerard (1871); the Index, by J. Walker F. Ruttenber (1871); the Collector, by D. W. Jagger (1871); the Packet, by W. H. Wood and D. W. Corwin (1872); the Laurel, by A. Milligan (1872); and the Amateur Herald, by T. R. Balf (1872). The Index survived its contemporaries, and closed its life in the hands of D. W. Jagger.

Of the early printers, David Denniston stands the most conspicuous. He was of the New Windsor Denniston stock, and a man of no little activity. He appears to have established first a printing-office and bindery, and to have engaged in printing books, which he sold by subscription, and whatever other printing might come to his hands. It is believed that the early papers with which his name is connected were printed by him for other parties. He was a man of strong character, and a radical in religion as well as in politics. He became notorious through his writings in the Mirror in opposition to Christianity, and subsequently through the Rights of Man in political literature. He was certainly a very busy man in printing newspapers, having at different times held the Mirror, the Citizen, and the Rights of Man in the local field, and for a time (1802) had editorial connection with the American Citizen and Watch-Tower, of New York. He died in Newburgh, Dec. 13, 1803, of "malignant fever."

Jacob Schultz was, for a brief period, the contemporary of David Denniston. He was born in New Windsor, April 23, 1776, and married (Feb. 14, 1799) Anna, daughter of John Denniston, of that town. His first appearance in business was as the editor and proprietor of the New Windsor Gazette. He subsequently opened a dry-goods and grocery store in Newburgh, in company with Andrew DeWitt, and was engaged in this trade until 1814, when he purchased from his brother, Isaac, the old mill of his father, but afterwards sold it to Peter Townsend, came back to Newburgh, and commenced business in company with George Betts. He retired, in 1818, to a small farm in the town of New Windsor, erected a substantial stone house, and in the quiet independence of agricultural paper was occasioned by the change of residence of the editor. No. 21 was issued at Millerton, N. Y., May 12, 1866; No. 30, from Castleton, now called West New Brighton, Staten Island, where it was changed to a monthly, and where the last number of the American Eagle, No. 57, was published in October, 1868. In January, 1868, the motto, "Alis Volat Propriis" ("She flies with her own wings") was placed at the head. The paper ceased to exist not from lack of support, but to allow its editor to pursue his studies, which were necessarily neglected because of the duties involved as a publisher. As the paper became older, new and improved tools were added to the office, and job-printing was no small feature of the business connected with the American Eagle. The last two issues appeared with several illustrations from wood-cuts engraved by the publisher. The price of subscription at the start was one dollar and twenty cents a year, and was at a later date reduced to fifty cents a year.

The American Eagle was among the first of the several amateur papers published in Newburgh, and we think the second one, the first being the Union Jack, published by Master A. Ludlow Case, son of Rear Admiral Case, of the United States navy. Young Case continued the publication of the Union Jack but a short time, when he devoted his time to study, and a few years afterwards engaged in the service of the United States navy, where he now is.

*The American Eagle. Published every two weeks at 285 Grand Street, Newburgh, by Frank S. Hull. Age at time of first issue, June 21, 1865, twelve years. Printed on "press" of editor and publisher's own construction. The first twenty-two numbers were two columns, on one side only of a sheet seven by eleven inches. No. 23 appeared printed on both sides of the sheet, thus increasing it to four columns. No. 31 was enlarged to twice the size, or four pages, eight columns, on a sheet eleven by fourteen inches. No. 51 was increased in size to twelve columns,—three on a page. Some interruption to the regular publication of the pursuits spent the remainder of his life. He died in 1859.

Ward M. Gazlay was a native of Pennsylvania, and, as stated in another connection, was first engaged in printing at Goshen. He died in April, 1836, and received the following notice in the Telegraph :

"Died, in this village, on Wednesday last, aged about fifty-four years, Ward M. Gazlay, Esq., for many years a magistrate of Newburgh, and editor and proprietor of the Political Index from about the year 1806 to 1829, at which latter period the present proprietor of the Newburgh Telegraph purchased his establishment and changed the political character of the paper. To some peculiarities, and a few faults, Mr. Gazlay united many excellent qualities both of head and heart. His early career as a magistrate was marked by strict probity and a sound, discriminating judgment, united to a fixedness of purpose and an impartiality in his decisions which saw no difference between the rich and the poor, the peasant and the king. A wide circle of friends deeply sympathize with the family."

Mr. Gazlay's wife was Bridget, daughter of Jonathan and Bridget Carter, by whom he had three sons.

Charles U. Cushman was a descendant of Robert Cushman, one of the original company of Pilgrims who sailed for the New World, Aug. 5, 1620, O. S. He was born in Washington Co., N. Y., March 20, 1802; served as an apprentice in Rutland, Vt., and subsequently in Boston, Mass.; purchased the Political Index in March, 1829, and retired from printing in 1839. He was a man of strong natural abilities, industry, perseverance, independence of mind, and strict integrity. As a writer, his style was vigorous and compact. He used but few words, and in expressing his thoughts his language was plain and unmistakable. As a private citizen, he was active in advancing the interests of the community in which he lived. He was one of the founders of the Newburgh public libraries, and also helped to establish the Quassaick Bank and the Newburgh Savings-Bank. At the election in 1853 he was chosen to represent the first Assembly District of Orange in the Legislature. In all his public and private walks he aimed to accomplish practical results, and exhibited the traits of a good citizen and an honest man. In person he was nearly six feet, clear complexion, blue eyes, rather fleshy, and well formed. He always dressed with extreme neatness, and walked with an erect carriage and firm tread. He married, June, 1832, Mary, fourth daughter of Capt. Charles Birdsall, and granddaughter of Isaac Belknap. He died without issue at Rhinebeck, N. Y., June 1, 1859.

John D. Spalding was the contemporary of Mr. Cushman, and was connected with the Newburgh press for about thirty-eight years. He was born in Salem, Mass., January, 1800, and removed to Newburgh in 1815, in company with his father, Rev. Joshua Spalding, a noted member of the Presbyterian Church. He served his apprenticeship with Ward M. Gazlay, and was subsequently connected with the Gazette and the Journal, as above stated. He possessed a sound judgment; was urbane and kind in his disposition, and liberal in his charities. By these qualities he secured friends and retained them through many years. In person he was over six feet in height, light in frame and in flesh, and ungainly in his carriage. He married Elizabeth L., daughter of Rev. John Johnston, D.D., of Newburgh, and had several children. He died on the 22d of August, 1853, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, after an illness of about two days.

Elias Pitts, practically the successor of Mr. Cushman, was born in Columbia Co., N. Y., in the year 1810, and received a liberal education at the Kinderhook Academy. He served an apprenticeship of a few years in the office of the Kinderhook Sentinel, and at its termination became associated in the editorial management of that paper. Subsequently he removed to Rochester, and was connected with the editorial department of the Advertiser of that city, a paper published by Henry O'Reilly. At the retirement of Mr. Van Dyck from the Newburgh Telegraph, in the winter of 1840, Mr. Pitts assumed the management of that paper, which he continued until 1850. From Newburgh he removed to Poughkeepsie, and there became the editor of the Poughkeepsie American. His connection with the public press terminated in the autumn of 1853; and he soon after received an appointment to a clerkship in the State Department at Washington, the duties of which he continued to discharge up to the time of his last illness. He was twice married. His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of John Jamison, of Newburgh, by whom he had two children,—Mary E. and John M. His second wife was Margaret, daughter of John Whited. He died at Washington, Friday, July 21, 1854, from an attack of typhoid fever, at the age of forty-four years.

Edward M. Ruttenber was born in Bennington, Vt., July 17, 1824, and at that place received a common-school education. In 1837 he entered the office of the Vermont Gazette as an apprentice to the printer's trade. A year later, in 1838, he came to Newburgh and became an apprentice to Charles U. Cushman, an old friend of his father, and then proprietor of the Newburgh Telegraph. He remained in that office three years, when Mr. Cushman sold the paper and transferred young Ruttenber's indentures to S. T. Callahan, proprietor of the Newburgh Gazette. In that office he labored until 1845, when he was made foreman of the Newburgh Telegraph, then owned by Elias Pitts. That position he filled until May, 1850. Mr. Ruttenber at that time purchased the Telegraph, and successfully conducted it until 1857. When he purchased the office it had only a weekly issue and was printed on a hand-press. The first steam-power press brought to the county was added to the Telegraph office by him in 1853. In 1851 the Telegraph absorbed the Newburgh Excelsior, and the Newburgh Gazette was consolidated with it in 1857. Early in that year the Daily News was issued by Mr. Ruttenber and E. W. Gray, from the office of the Telegraph. Later in the same year he sold the office, repurchasing it in 1859. In 1861 he sold it to Mr. E. W. Gray, and in 1866 he again became its owner. In 1867 he sold it to A. A. BenseL. In the spring of 1869 he reorganized the office in connection with Mr. J. J. McNally, retiring from it in the fall of that year. He then became part owner of the Independent Republican, of Goshen, which he sold in 1870 to Mr. H. P. Kimber. Soon after leaving that paper he started a job office in Newburgh with his eldest son as partner, who has since been succeeded by a younger son. From July, 1863, to January, 1865, when he resigned, Mr. Ruttenber was engaged in the Bureau of Military Records, at Albany. Mr. Ruttenber, always deeply interested in local history, published in 1859 a "History of Newburgh." His next was a work entitled "Obstructions to Navigation of Hudson's River," published by Munsel, of Albany. Following this was a "History of the Flags of the Volunteer Regiments of the State of New York." Next, a "History of the Indian Tribes of Hudson's River," also published by Munsel, of Albany. In 1875 he began the publication, in serial form, of a "History of Orange County," a work which is still unfinished. For twelve years Mr. Ruttenber was an active member of the Board of Education of Newburgh, ending that service in 1870. He was married in 1846 to Matilda A., daughter of Mark McIntyre, of Newburgh. He has two sons,—the eldest, Charles B., has made music his profession, and is at present organist of the Church of the Holy Trinity, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Fifth Avenue, New York; the younger son, Walker F., is a partner with his father in the printing business.

THE PRESS OF MIDDLETOWN.

A weekly newspaper, Democratic in politics, under the title of the Middletown Courier, was started in Middletown in 1840, by A. A. BenseL, who continued its publication until April, 1846, when he removed his office to Kingston, N. Y., where he established the Ulster Democrat. In July, 1846, John S. Brown commenced the publication of the Orange County News, succeeding Mr. BenseL in the printing business in the village. His paper was neutral in politics, was hardly worth the name of a newspaper, and died in 1849. His type and materials were purchased by G. J. Beebe.

The Signs of the Times, an Old-School Baptist publication of eight pages, was commenced at New Vernon, in Mount Hope, in 1832, by Elder Gilbert Beebe. From there it was taken to Alexandria, Va., again returned to New Vernon, and in 1847 was removed to Middletown. The only paper of that denomination in the country, it has maintained a circulation from six thousand to ten thousand semi-monthly.

The Banner of Liberty was commenced at Middletown in August, 1848, by Gilbert J. Beebe, as an independent monthly, opposed to pretty much every modern styled reform,—temperance laws, religion in politics, etc. In 1856 it took position in favor of the Democratic party, and was issued weekly. A Campaign Banner was added to it in 1856, and the two journals reached a circulation of twenty-seven thousand. Its circulation was principally in the South and West, and after the Rebellion broke out was almost wholly lost and the paper was discontinued.

The Hardware-Man's Newspaper, printed monthly at the Press office, for John Williams, was commenced in August, 1855. The Separate American,—Rev. David James, editor,—a small folio, was printed quarterly for the colored people belonging to the Separate American Methodist Church. It ran from 1853 to 1856. The Sibyl, a semi-monthly, by Dr. Lydia Sayer Hasbrouck (Mrs. John W. Hasbrouck), was commenced July, 1856,—now discontinued.

The Middletown Advertiser, a monthly advertising sheet for gratuitous circulation, was commenced by G. J. Beebe in 1850, and ended in 1852.

The Middletown Mercury was established, in 1848, by G. J. Beebe. In 1860 it was sold by Mr. Beebe to J. H. Norton and I. F. Guiwits. Mr. Guiwits remained in the firm one year, and Mr. Norton continued as sole proprietor until 1867, when he sold an interest to I. V. Montanye. In 1868, Mr. Montanye became sole proprietor, and sold out to S. M. Boyd in 1869. In 1873 the Middletown Mail, established by Dr. J. D. Friend, was consolidated with the Mercury, and Geo. H. Thompson and J. D. Friend became the proprietors, the latter retiring in 1874. Mr. Thompson remained the proprietor until Jan. 1, 1878, when the Weekly Argus, established by I. V. Montanye in 1875, and sold to C. Macardell in 1876, was merged with the Mercury, and George H. Thompson and C. Macardell became the proprietors, and have continued up to the present time. The Daily Argus was founded by Mr. Macardell, Jan. 27, 1876, and has been published in connection with the Mercury by Thompson & Macardell since Jan. 1, 1878.

The Whig Press was established Nov. 26, 1851, by John W. Hasbrouck. It was a Whig and Republican paper up to 1856, when it assumed an independent position. In March, 1868, Mr. Hasbrouck sold to Moses D. Stivers, who changed the name of the paper to the Orange County Press. Albert Kessinger bought one-half of the establishment in 1870, and died, while a member of the firm of Stiver & Kessinger, in August, 1872. Soon after his partnership was formed with Mr. Stivers, the firm issued (May 24, 1870) a tri-weekly edition, under the name of the Middletown Evening Press. In October, 1872, Mr. Stivers sold the newspaper to F. Stanhope Hill, who in turn sold an interest to John W. Slauson. Hill & Slauson changed the tri-weekly to a daily (Oct. 26, 1872), under the name of the Middletown Daily Press. July 1, 1873, Mr. Stivers bought out Mr. Hill, and the firm became Stivers & Slauson, who continued the business until December, 1880, when Mr. Stivers sold his interest to Mr. Slauson, and the latter formed a partnership with Charles J. Boyd, under the firm-name of Slauson & Boyd, who are now the publishers.

DR. LYDIA SAYER HASBROUCK, wife of John W. Hasbrouck, was born Dec. 20, 1827, in the town of Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., at the old stone residence of her father, between that village and Bellvale. She is the daughter of Benjamin Sayer and Rebecca Forshee. (See sketch of Benjamin Sayer for her paternal ancestry.) Her mother was the daughter of Cornelius Forshee and Elizabeth Cole. A history of the Cole family (compiled by Rev. David Cole, D.D., of Yonkers) states that the Cole ancestors first came to America from Holland about the year 1625. The Forshee record is not so definite, though from the same source we learn that the family came to this country not far from 1700. They fled from religious persecution in France, where they left valuable estates. The first ancestor lived to be one hundred and ten years old.

Lydia Sayer was noted from childhood for her fearless spirit and independence of character. She inherited her father's temperament and features in a marked degree, as he had inherited like characteristics from his mother.

Lydia always enjoyed her father's favor and confidence in an especial manner, and he frequently remarked that he had no fears but she could take care of herself.

Reared amidst the charming scenery for which the "fair vale of Warwick" has so long been noted, Lydia enjoyed to the fullest extent all the varied beauties by which she was daily surrounded. None loved the freedom of the mountains, streams, and fields more than she; and in riding or driving spirited horses, or in active pursuits of any kind, none could do so with keener zest or enjoyment. She had the reputation of being the smartest scholar of her classes,—but terribly independent and self-reliant,—and was given the best opportunities the district and high schools of Warwick at this time afforded.

As she grew to womanhood her father's house was a great resort for friends and visitors. Miss Lydia was the life and centre of these gatherings, and a favorite with all, both young and old. She made golden Orange County butter and snow-white loaves of bread. She spun flax and wool for family use and to enrich her own dower, while the pile of bedquilts she pieced and quilted would make a fashionable young lady of the present day faint with sheer exhaustion to contemplate. In fine, she prided herself in knowing how to do everything in connection with the work of a well-regulated, hospitable house.

When a reform dress for women was first brought into notice in 1849, under the name of Camille costume, Turkish dress, etc., she early espoused and adopted it. Mrs. Bloomer, who was editing the Lily at Seneca Falls, wore and recommended the dress, and forthwith it was styled "Bloomer Dress," notwithstanding Mrs. Bloomer always protested she neither originated or was the first to wear it. This dress, worn simply as a physiological costume, has subjected its wearers to much personal slight and social ostracism, and all because of its not conforming to prescribed fashions that are constantly changing. In this connection it is worthy of mention, that when first adopted it was thought the wearing of it would become more general, as for a time the Philadelphia magazines placed it among their monthly fashion plates.

Mrs. Hasbrouck desires the fact put on record that she was once refused admission to the Seward Seminary, at Florida, simply because she wore the dress. A faculty meeting was called solely to take the cut of her dress into consideration. The trustees, knowing her and her family, expressed the highest esteem for her varied gifts and graces, and the pleasure they would feel in having her an inmate of the school if she would only dress in harmony with fashion. She says,—

"Up to this time I loved the physical freedom of my dress. I had thought but little of woman's political freedom or her unequal rights before the law. I had never suffered from them, and enjoyed too many other privileges to feel their lack. The chances are, if I had not been persecuted I would have returned to fashion's requirements. But my every sense of right and justice was outraged. I knew I was doing that which should have met with approval, because it was to better the physical woman, then weighed down with bustles and heavy underskirts. As I went out from the interview with that committee, I was kindly shown by the lady principal into her private room. I fairly bathed my soul in an agony of tears and silent prayers for a knowledge of the right and guidance therein. Remember, I was then young, and had often heard it was not dress that made the man; but was now bitterly learning that it was the principal part of the woman. This treatment anchored me into the ranks of women's rights advocates, and as I left that house I registered a vow that I would stand or fall in the battle for woman's physical, political, and educational freedom and equality. I felt that if there ever had been a principle that justified men and women going to the stake and faggot rather than renounce it, that principle was now mine to defend; and come what might, I would stand true to its requirements."

Few know what that vow has cost her unswerving yet sensitive spirit; but what many do know is, that she has never faltered, never yielded in what she believed was her duty and right.

The reform dress was adopted by many for its physical freedom, and especially by lady physicians and invalids at hygienic institutes as an aid to health and comfort. The question of woman's rights was then in its infancy, and meeting all sorts of ridicule from pulpit and legislatures. Several of the prominent women in the cause adopted the dress; but when the cry of "strong-minded," "masculine," and other like epithets were hurled at the wearers whenever they appeared in public, most of them succumbed to the mob spirit. Miss Sayer refused to yield her right to dress in a sensible manner, and said if woman's purity and character hung on the last few inches of her swabbing skirts, she wanted none of it, but would win a character for herself above the filth of the streets. She was more or less persecuted and defamed, but knowing her motives were just and pure she moved steadily forward.

At this stage of her life, Miss Sayer determined to fit herself for some more extended sphere of action,

Lydia Gayser Hasbrouck

John W. Hasbrouck

JOHN WHITBECK HASBROUCK was born in Woodstock, Ulster Co., N. Y., Nov. 20, 1821. He was the ninth of a family of ten children born to Richard M. Hasbrouck and Mary Johnson. His grandfather, Capt. Elias Hasbrouck, was in active service during the war of the Revolution, and, under Gen. Montgomery, took part in the northern campaign that ended in the storming of Quebec and death of Montgomery. He named his son, born the following year, Richard Montgomery. A deed for fifty acres of land in Northern Ulster, together with a gold ring which she placed upon his finger, were given by Janet Montgomery to the young namesake of her hero husband. The deed and ring are still in the possession of his descendants. Capt. Elias Hasbrouck lost heavily by the destruction of his store and property when Kingston was burned by the British.

The father of the subject of this sketch, Richard M. Hasbrouck, lived to the age of eighty-four years, and always bore a name proverbial for integrity and uprightness of character. His mother, Mary Johnson, was nearly related to the Vanderbilt family, and was a woman of pious and exemplary character.

John W. Hasbrouck is a descendant in the sixth generation from Abraham Hasbrouck, who, with his brother Jean, Walloons from the northern part of France, fled from their native country not long before the revocation of the edict of Nantes. Jean, or John, went with many other Protestants to Manheim, in the Palatinate, before he came to America. Abraham, in 1675, came direct to this country, passing through Calais to England and then to Boston, en route for Esopus (Kingston), where several French Protestants had already arrived. Two years later Abraham and Jean, together with eleven other Frenchmen living at Kingston, took up the Paltz Patent, and established the settlement there. Abraham became conspicuous both in the civil and ecclesiastical affairs of that early period. His family continued their residence there until about the middle of the next century, when they removed to Kingston. His descendants are wonderfully numerous throughout Ulster County, and among them many who were and still are distinguished both in the walks of public and private life. The name has been written variously Hasbrouck, Hasbroucq, Hasbrouque, Asbrouck, and Von Asbroeck. In the fourteenth century Charles V. granted a patent of nobility to the family. Its cotte d'armes, or coat of arms, is represented by an emblazoned shield, surmounted by a male figure, holding in one hand an arrow and in the other a torch, while on a scroll beneath the shield is the legend, "Dieu sauve Von Asbroeck." Mr. Hasbrouck has a representation of this insignia now in his possession. A steel rapier, bearing date 1414, that was brought by the family from France, still belongs to one of its descendants.

BIOGRAPHY OF JOHN WHITBECK HASBROUCK.

John W. Hasbrouck, the subject of this sketch, removed with his father's family from Woodstock to Kingston about the year 1834, and completed his school days at the celebrated Kingston Academy. During the four years following he became a clerk in stores in that village, when he entered the Ulster County Bank as clerk and book-keeper, continuing in this occupation for the next three years. After a summer spent in New York, in a wholesale crockery house as book-keeper, he came back to Kingston in the fall of 1845, and entered upon his future career in the profession of journalism. Previous to this, however, he had been a frequent contributor to the several papers of the village, writing essays, sketches, and discussing political questions during the exciting political contests of 1840 and 1844.

Accepting a position on the Kingston Journal, during the winter of 1845 he found time, with his other duties, to compile a history of the press of Ulster County up to that period, which was published in the journal on which he was then engaged. About this time, also, he took great interest in the Kingston Lyceum and Literary Association, both of which he was instrumental in forming. In the debates, lectures, and other exercises he took a prominent part; and while secretary of the latter he had the honor to invite Horace Greeley to lecture before its members, which was the first effort of the kind of that noted journalist and lecturer. His theme was "Human Life."

In the spring of 1846, Mr. Hasbrouck purchased the Sullivan Whig establishment at Bloomingburgh, in that county. He here commenced to learn the practical part of the "art preservative," and, without any previous knowledge of the printer's trade, set up in type two columns of the first paper he issued. The county had long been Democratic, but thereafter elected the Whig county ticket for several years. While a resident of Sullivan he was chosen town superintendent of schools for Mamakating, and was also appointed postmaster at Bloomingburgh, under Polk's administration, which office he held acceptably to the community until his removal from the county. In 1848 he attended the Philadelphia Whig National Convention at which Gen. Taylor was nominated, but warmly espoused the claims of Henry Clay. The same year he represented the Whigs of Sullivan in their State Convention held at Syracuse, and in 1850 he was nominated by the Whig party of Sullivan as their candidate for member of Assembly, failing of an election, with the rest of his ticket, by only one hundred and twenty-eight in a poll of three thousand five hundred and fifty-six.

About this time two opportunities occurred to induce him to change his location. One was to take charge of a weekly journal at Corning, on the Erie road, at the solicitation of Hon. A. B. Dickinson, and the other to establish and edit a daily administration paper in the city of Milwaukee, Wis. Stopping over at Corning long enough to look over the ground, and not thinking favorably of the opening, he pursued his way westward to the Badger State. This project, also, not being acceptable to him, he returned East to accept from the late Com. Vanderbilt the position of agent at San Juan (Nicaragua) for his line of California steamers; but sickness just at this time compelled him to forego his purpose.

In the fall of 1851, being strongly urged to come to Middletown and start a newspaper to meet the local and business wants of the village, he determined to do so. The village then contained a population of only fifteen hundred. The first number of the Whig Press—the name chosen for his new venture—was issued Nov. 26, 1851. The Press was published weekly, and soon secured, by its satisfactory management, a remunerative support and circulation, and, by his assiduous efforts, its proprietor built up a business second to few other country offices in the State. He was the first in this section to introduce the practice of giving a full and accurate compend of local intelligence from all parts of the county, always being careful, however, to exercise a discriminating judgment as to its public importance.

In 1854, being recommended to ex-Governor Hunt as a suitable person to conduct a daily journal at Lockport, in this State, he visited that gentleman at his home in Niagara County, the better to determine the matter, but concluded not to accept of the position, notwithstanding liberal offers were made him to do so.

In addition to publishing the Press, he also issued from its office, for the editors or proprietors, several other publications at different periods. Among these were the Hardwareman's Newspaper, in 1855, published monthly for some three years. Its name was afterwards changed to the Iron Age, and is still published in New York by a son of its former proprietor, he having learned the printer's trade under Mr. Hasbrouck. In 1856 he also published The Sibyl, a semi-monthly quarto, edited by Mrs. Hasbrouck, which was continued for eight years.

July 27, 1856, he was married to Miss Dr. Lydia Sayer, a lady of varied attainments and culture. Their married life, though not uneventful, has glided along harmoniously, and during the present year has reached its silvered stage in the onward march of time. (See sketch of Dr. Lydia Sayer Hasbrouck.)

In 1866 he changed the name of his paper to The Orange County Press, the name which it still bears; but feeling the need of rest he sold, in 1868, the establishment to Mr. M. D. Stivers, and during the following thirteen years kept out of newspaper work altogether; but during the present year has again resumed business by publishing, in connection with Mrs. Hasbrouck, a reform paper called the Liberal Sentinel. It is done to meet an unsupplied local want in the progressive thought of the age.

Of Mr. Hasbrouck it can be truly said, that during his entire newspaper life his practice has ever been to do as well as he was capable of doing whatever he undertook; requiring, also, the same care and effort from those who served under him. He has the satisfaction of knowing, therefore (and points with no little pride to the fact), that among his former apprentices many have become successful printers and publishers, while several at the present time occupy responsible positions in the editorial ranks.

and spent several years in study at the Elmira High School and Central College, finally graduating at the Hygeia Therapeutic College in New York City. During vacations she also lectured and wrote considerably for the newspapers, striving in every way to fit herself for public work.

In September, 1853, Miss Sayer was a delegate to the Whole World's Temperance Convention, held in Metropolitan Hall, New York City. The Tribune thus summed up the work of that convention:

"First day.—Crowding a woman off the platform (Rev. Antoinette L. Brown). Second day.—Gagging her. Third day.—Voting that she shall stay gagged. In fact, so determined were men at this time that women should not speak from public platforms, they acted like rowdies. Even Rev. John Chambers, of Philadelphia, stamped his feet, thumped his cane, and pointed his finger, saying, 'Shame on the woman!'"

The first year of Miss Sayer's practice was in Washington, D. C., where she was well received by both press and people, lecturing by invitation in Washington, Annapolis, Georgetown, Baltimore, Philadelphia, etc., writing for papers, as well as familiarizing herself with our national legislation. She speaks of this period of her life as most profitable and enjoyable.

While lecturing she received many flattering newspaper notices, and an invitation to make a lecturing tour of the States. The editors of the principal dailies in Washington invited her to use their columns to introduce or defend any principle she desired,—Major Ben Perley Poore, then local editor of the Star, bringing her the message from that paper. Both her writings and discussions were well received, and made so much of a sensation that the newsboys cried their papers through the streets as containing her articles. She enjoyed the personal friendship of Prof. Henry, of the Smithsonian Institution, Mr. Giddings, then the father of the House, and many other noted and liberal men and women. The president of the Allopathic College recognized her as a physician by inviting her to attend any of the college lectures and clinics she chose, while a retired physician brought her many patients, and offered to start a large health institute if she would take charge of it. She says before going to Washington she was warned that her dress would damage her prospects, but she found it introduced her to all kinds of pleasant people and to personal attention in the best society, and regrets ever leaving a city so full of pleasant memories and associations.

In 1856, at the earnest solicitation of the then editor of the Press, at Middletown, she came North on a lecturing tour, and on her arrival at that village lectured most acceptably in Gothic Hall to the largest audience ever assembled there. She also spoke at several neighboring places. Her return to Orange County, as stated, was to end in assuming the editorial duties of a semi-monthly reform paper called The Sibyl, and to join her life-work with John W. Hasbrouck. They were married July 27, 1856, and have had three children,—Daisy, Sayer, and Burt, the last two yet living.

Mrs. Hasbrouck edited The Sibyl for eight years, at the same time practicing her profession and attending patients both at her home on Sibyl Ridge* and outside. But at length finding the quadruple duties of editor, physician, mother, and housekeeper too arduous, she was forced to rest. After this, until 1868, she assisted on and wrote for the Press until it changed ownership. Since then, until the present year, though writing considerably for the papers, fighting corruption in public officials and denouncing high and unjust taxation, she has not been engaged in responsible newspaper work.

During 1864 and 1865, Mrs. Hasbrouck was president of the National Dress Reform Association. In 1864 its annual convention was held in Middletown. A large number of women wearing the reform dress were present, and Gothic Hall was packed with attentive listeners.

In 1880 the New York Legislature passed a law allowing women to vote for and hold school offices. The act was passed February 12th. On March 9th the election for school officers occurred in Middletown. Mrs. Hasbrouck wrote an article for the Press calling on the "men of Middletown to show by their action they were honest enough to give the law a fair trial and practical test." The Republicans refused to do this, but the Equal Rights element united with the Temperance and Democratic vote, and elected five women as members of the board of education,—Lydia Sayer Hasbrouck being one of the number.

It being the first election in the State where women had been chosen to this office, immediately the New York journals despatched interviewing reporters to Middletown to learn the situation and facts, and to spread them far and near to their readers,—Mrs. Hasbrouck being always the prominent figure in their articles. Naturally, the old members were greatly displeased with the result of the election, but Mrs. Hasbrouck has stood firmly in defense of such reforms as she believed the majority of the taxpayers and people desired. This not suiting "the ring," they managed in the spring of 1881 to have the editors of both local journals for members of the board of education, when they refused to admit in their papers a word in favor of woman as a worker in the schools. They had long been conservative on the subject of temperance and other reforms, hence the starting of the Liberal Sentinel by John W. and Lydia Sayer Hasbrouck,—an independent weekly quarto paper, open to the discussion of all topics that tend to make humanity better and healthier.

Since her marriage her husband has been a most efficient aid, having always sustained and assisted her in the carrying out of her principles, and no influence has shaken his faithful allegiance to her. For twenty-five years they have been true to their principles and

* A charming locality on high ground in the northern part of the village, where, in 1857, she built an octagon stone house in a two-acre clover-field for their future home, now surrounded by a wealth of shrubbery, fruit, and flowers, all planted and cultivated by her own hands.

troth, and though six-foot boys call them mother and father they are yet workers in the field, fighting wrong and battling for the right.

Mrs. Hasbrouck has always been an energetic business woman, with remarkable executive and go-ahead capabilities. Her transactions have been confined mostly to real estate, and at present she is engaged in building a large block of stores and offices on the best business street in Middletown. In it the Sentinel is expected to have new quarters and to be issued oftener, the better to accommodate the wants of this flourishing town.

MOSES DUNNING STIVERS was born near Beemerville, in the township of Wantage, Sussex Co., N. J., on the 30th day of December, 1828.

His father, John Stivers, was born in Middlesex Co., N. J., Oct. 3, 1802, and his grandfather, Randal Stivers, was also a native of the same county. The latter removed to Sussex County in the early part of the present century, and settled in the township of Frankford.

His mother, Margaret Dunning Stivers, who is still living and remarkably sprightly and active at the advanced age of seventy-eight years, was born near Scotchtown, Orange Co., N. Y., July 1, 1803. Her father and mother, Jonathan and Rachel Crans Dunning, removed to Sussex Co., N. J., and settled in the township of Wantage about 1806. Mr. Dunning served as a private soldier in the American army in the war of 1812. John Stivers and Margaret Dunning were married March 22, 1828, and settled upon a farm near Beemerville, N. J., where all their three children—Moses D., Randal, and Jesse L.—were born. In 1845 the family removed to Ridgebury, Orange Co., Mr. Stivers having purchased the old Deacon Hallock farm. The father died here on the 21st of February, 1865. His widow and son, Randal, still continue to reside upon the place.

The youngest son, Jesse Lewis Stivers, enlisted in Company B, Fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, known as the "Tenth Legion," which was raised and commanded by Col. (now Gen.) Charles H. Van Wyck, then representing the Tenth District (Orange and Sullivan Counties) in Congress, now United States senator from the State of Nebraska. Although a mere stripling of slight build and not strong and robust, Jesse participated in several campaigns and battles, among them the campaign in front of Richmond, and was wounded in the battle of Fair Oaks. The regiment was afterwards stationed at Yorktown, and subsequently for some time on Morris Island, S. C. After three years' service, young Stivers re-enlisted with his regiment for another three years. He was subsequently promoted to second lieutenant of his company. Ill health and physical debility, growing out of the hardships of the service, compelled him to resign his commission in the spring of 1865, when he received an honorable discharge.

For a time he was associated with his brother in the ownership of the Orange County Press. He died suddenly from heart-disease, in New York City, April 30, 1871, at the age of thirty years.

The subject of our sketch, Moses D. Stivers, whose likeness is given herewith, after attending the common schools in his neighborhood, was in his fourteenth year sent to the then well and widely known select school kept by Edward A. Stiles, now deceased located near the Clove church, in the township of Wantage, Sussex Co., N. J., afterwards known as Mount Retirement Seminary. He spent two and a half years at this school, and afterwards attended a term at a select school at Beemerville, N. J., and also the academy at Ridgebury, N. Y. After leaving school he worked upon his father's farm in the summer seasons, and during the winters, for the next ten years, engaged in teaching at various places in Sussex and Orange Counties.

He was married, Sept. 26, 1855, to Mary Elizabeth Stewart, second daughter of Mr. Lewis Stewart, of the town of Wawayanda, Orange Co., N. Y. Five children have been the fruit of this marriage, viz.: Mary Ellen (wife of Mr. Edwin T. Hanford, of Middletown), Louis Stewart, John Dunning, Cristina Stewart, and Moses Ashby.

For two years after his marriage he kept a country store at Ridgebury. In 1859 he removed to Middletown, where he has since resided, with the exception of three years at Goshen. In the spring of that year he entered into partnership with Mr. William Evans in the mercantile business, under the firm-name of Evans & Stivers, which they carried on upon Main Street for some five years. Mr. Evans then sold his interest to Messrs. Harvey and John A. Wallace, and the business was continued under the firm-name of Stivers & Wallace until after the election of Mr. Stivers to the office of county clerk in the fall of 1864.

In March, 1868, after the expiration of his term of office as county clerk, Mr. Stivers purchased from Mr. John W. Hasbrouck the printing-office and weekly newspaper, The Orange County Press, which the latter had founded. Although with no practical knowledge of the printing business, and without any experience as a journalist, except as an occasional contributor to the newspaper press, Mr. Stivers at once met with remarkable success in his new vocation. The paper was enlarged, and in various ways improved; and from a feeble circulation of a few hundred copies it speedily ran up in a few months, until it equalled, if not surpassed, the circulation of any weekly journal in the county.

He associated his brother Jesse with him for a few months, and afterwards, in December, 1869, formed a partnership with Albert Kessinger, of Rome, N. Y., a mere youth, who had not then attained his majority, but who possessed intellectual and business qualities far beyond his years. This association continued until the unfortunate mental disability and death of Mr. Kessinger, which latter occurred Aug. 5, 1872.

W. D. Stevens

In the mean time, besides largely increasing their business in all its branches, they had established the Middletown Tri-weekly Evening Press. In order better to settle up the partnership affairs of the late firm, in October, 1872, Mr. Stivers sold the concern to Mr. F. Stanhope Hill, who associated with him Mr. John W. Slawson, under the firm-name of Hill & Slawson.

In the summer of 1873, Mr. Stivers made a tour of Europe, visiting England, Ireland, Scotland, and the Continent, going as far south as Naples, and visiting the International Exposition at Vienna. His observations were given in a series of letters in the Press. Just previous to his departure, which was on June 14, 1873, he again became part owner of the Press by the repurchase from Mr. Hill's interest therein. On his return from abroad, in September, 1873, Mr. Stivers again resumed the editorship of the paper,—the Daily Press having at this time been established,—devoting the closest attention to it until he finally sold his interest in the concern to the present proprietors in December, 1880. The Press had during these years attained a wide circulation.

While the paper was radically Republican in politics, it nevertheless was always extremely independent in the expression of its views. Mr. Stivers has always taken a lively interest in political matters. He started out as a Free-Soil Democrat in 1848, but could not then vote. In 1852 he cast his first vote for President, for Franklin Pierce. He was an ardent Anti-Slavery Democrat during the Kansas troubles, which occurred during President Pierce's term, and when the Republican party was organized in 1855 was one of the very first to assist in that organization, and has remained a staunch and active Republican—without variableness or shadow of turning—to the present time. He has frequently been chosen as a delegate to the various local, State, and once to the National Convention of his party. In fact, probably no one in the county has ever been called to serve oftener in this capacity.

Mr. Stivers has also received many nominations, and has held several offices at the hands of his fellow-citizens. He was elected town commissioner of schools for the town of Wawayanda, and when the office was abolished was the first Republican candidate for the office of district commissioner. He was appointed postmaster at Ridgebury under President Pierce, but owing to his outspoken Free-Soil sentiments was removed. In 1862 he was the Republican candidate for member of the Assembly in the Second District of Orange County, but of course was defeated in this strong Democratic district.

In the fall of 1864 he was elected to the office of county clerk of Orange County on the Republican ticket, and after serving three years, at the close of his term, received the compliment of a renomination. But the county at that election was carried by the Democrats, and he was defeated, though only by a few votes.

In October, 1868, he was appointed by President Grant collector of United States internal revenue for the Eleventh District of New York, comprising the counties of Orange and Sullivan. In 1876 the Thirteenth District (Ulster and Green Counties) was consolidated with the Eleventh, and Mr. Stivers was retained as the collector of the new district, which office he continues to fill.

In the Utica Republican State Convention, in February, 1880, Mr. Stivers was selected by a majority of the delegates from the Fourteenth Congressional District to represent the party at the Republican National Convention at Chicago in June following.

Mr. Stivers from the outset declared his intention to obey the manifest will of his constituents rather than the instructions of the State convention, and joined with Judge Robertson and some twenty other delegates from this State in opposition to the unit rule, which position was sustained by the subsequent action of the National Convention. With the delegates alluded to he voted in the convention steadily for Mr. Blaine for President, until the name of Gen. Garfield was introduced, when they immediately gave their votes to him and helped to bring about his nomination. He took an active part in the campaign which followed, as, indeed, he has always done in every political campaign since he has been a voter.

Aside from the political offices he has held, Mr. Stivers has been called to fill many other positions of honor and trust. He is a director of the Middletown, Unionville and Water Gap Railroad, a trustee of the Middletown Savings-Bank, a trustee of the Hill-side Cemetery, and almost from the first organization of the New York State Homœopathic Asylum for the Insane at Middletown—in which he took an earnest interest, and to which he contributed liberally of his time and means—he has been a member of its board of trustees, and the secretary of the board.

In all matters pertaining to the advancement and welfare of the village of Middletown he has always taken a lively interest and been an active participant. He was one of the original members of Eagle Engine Company, and for some years its foreman. He is a member of Hoffman Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and is a Past Master of the lodge; also of Midland Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; a member of Middletown Lodge of Odd-Fellows, and of Ivanhoe Lodge Knights of Honor.

THE PRESS OF MONTGOMERY.

The history of the Orange County Republican, which was printed in Montgomery from 1806 to 1818, has been given in connection with the press of Goshen.

The Republican Banner was, we believe, the second paper printed in the town. Calvin F. S. Thomas was its publisher in 1833–34, but when it began or ended its career we have no knowledge. The Montgomery Standard was established by William H. Smith, June, 1859. The Montgomery Republican was established by Lester Winfield, in September, 1868, as a continuation of the Pine Bush Weekly Courier (November, 1867), which was originally started by him at Galeville Mills, Ulster Co., May 4, 1864. The Standard was consolidated with the Republican, May 1, 1869, under the title of Republican and Standard, which is continued by Mr. Winfield.

The Wallkill Valley Times was established at Montgomery in April, 1868, by Stephen H. Sayer, who also issued the Dollar Weekly, in 1869. His undertaking failed in 1871, and his materials went into the hands of Mr. Winfield.

The Walden Recorder was commenced by S. H. Sayer in 1869, but suffered to go down. Chauncey B. Reed took it up in 1870, and added Herald to the title, but subsequently dropped Recorder. The paper is now the Walden Herald.

THE PRESS OF PORT JERVIS.

The first newspaper published in Port Jervis was the Port Jervis Express, an independent Whig journal, and was issued in January, 1850, by P. H. Miller, a colored man, who was both editor and proprietor. The size of the sheet was twenty by twenty-eight. It was printed on a Ramage press, and was published on Wednesdays, at one dollar a year, payable in advance, or two dollars at expiration of year. The office was over a harness-maker's shop, near the residence of Dr. John Conkling. The Express gave up the ghost in about nine months.

In November, 1850, the publication of the Tri-States Union was commenced in Col. Samuel Fowler's brick building, opposite the present Erie Railway freight depot. It was mainly through the efforts of Col. Fowler, then a leading Democratic politician, that the paper sprang into existence. It was a nicely-printed sheet, and was ably edited by John I. Mumford. In December, 1853, the paper was purchased by L. F. Barnes, a young lawyer of Milford, Pa., who edited it until Aug. 10, 1854, when, having been appointed to a lucrative government position, he sold the establishment to James H. Norton. Barnes died at Milford about 1868.

Mr. Norton was editor and proprietor of the paper until 1861, when he disposed of the office to G. W. Allen, of Honesdale, Pa., and W. W. Farnum, nephew of the late H. H. Farnum, of Port Jervis.

From its commencement until the advent of Mr. Allen as editor the paper was Democratic in politics. The latter changed it to a Republican paper. Sept. 27, 1862, the Union was sold to Daniel Holbrook, a graduate of Harvard College, and at the time principal of the schools at the House of Refuge, Randall's Island.

Mr. Holbrook was succeeded Sept. 27, 1869, by W. G. Mitchell, of Chambersburg, Pa. In 1871, Mr. Mitchell retired, and Mr. Charles St. John, Jr., the present editor and proprietor, A. E. Spooner, and William T. Doty, the present editor of the Gazette, became the proprietors, with Messrs. St. John and Doty as editors. In 1872, Spooner disposed of his interest to E. G. Fowler, at present editor of the Sunday Morning Call, and later in the same year Mr. Doty retired. At this time the Liberal party was organized, and the Union was an earnest champion of the new party.

In January, 1873, the Daily Union was started by Messrs. St. John & Fowler, the latter retiring in the fall of that year. In 1879 the daily was enlarged. The Tri-States Union was changed from a weekly to a semi-weekly in 1878. Since 1875 the Union has been Republican in its politics.

In 1852 the temperance question was largely advocated in the town of Deerpark. A number of the friends of the cause united and purchased the outfit of a printing-office, and in June, 1852, the publication of The Mirror of Temperance was commenced, edited by J. L. Barlow and John Dow. Barlow was a "Millerite," and had previously edited the Sussex County Home Journal, at Deckertown, N. J. The paper proved an unprofitable venture; it lived about one year and a half. On the ruins of the Mirror John Williams, an Englishman, started The Sentinel. Like its predecessor, it was the organ of the Temperance party. In the fall of 1854 he issued a campaign paper called The Precursor of Temperance. The Sentinel failed in 1855, Mr. Williams removing to Middletown, and later to New York City. The Iron Age, the leading paper in the United States devoted to the iron interests, was founded by Mr. Williams, and is now published by his son, David Williams. After the demise of The Sentinel the owners sold the press and type to parties elsewhere.

The Evening Gazette was founded April 22, 1869, as a tri-weekly publication, by James H. Norton, of Middletown, and William H. Nearpass, of Port Jervis. The paper was neutral in politics. In about a month thereafter the Family Gazette, a weekly paper, was issued from the same office. Before the expiration of the first volume it was enlarged and the name changed to Port Jervis Weekly Gazette. In 1871, Mr. Norton retired from the concern, and E. H. Mott, of Honesdale, Pa., became associated with Mr. Nearpass as one of the editors and proprietors. Oct. 1, 1872, the Gazette establishment was purchased by George A. Clement, a New York lawyer, and the paper, which had hitherto been neutral, was changed to Republican. Mr. Clement edited the Gazette until July 1, 1873, when he leased the office to William T. Doty and a young man named Waller, of Monticello, Mr. Doty assuming the editorial charge. In 1874, Mr. Clement sold the establishment to Jesse M. Conner, a Port Jervis merchant, and in September, 1874, Mr. Conner disposed of it in a trade to Hon. Charles St. John. The latter shortly after sold it to E. J. Horton, of Peekskill, and W. T. Doty. With the new change the paper was made Democratic. In 1875, Mr. Horton sold his interest to Mr. Doty. In October, 1876, Hon. Charles St. John again became the owner, and for two issues the Evening Gazette appeared as a neutral paper, when he disposed of it to its present proprietor, William H. Nearpass, and both the Evening and *Weekly Gazette*s were again Democratic. The present editor of the paper is W. T. Doty, who has continued to edit it since 1873. The publisher is W. H. Nearpass.

The Sunday Morning Call, a weekly Sunday paper, was established April 4, 1880, by E. G. Fowler and A. L. Moffat. Mr. Fowler is the editor. Mr. Moffat remained in the office but a short time, and disposed of his interest to other parties. The paper is "independent." George Lea purchased it in December, 1880. Mr. Fowler is now connected with the Middle-town Press.

WILLIAM H. NEARPASS.—The earliest representative of the Nearpass family, Jacob by name, emigrated from Germany about the year 1755, and chose a home in Montague, Sussex Co., N. J., where he remained until his death, having followed agricultural pursuits during his lifetime. His children were Baltus, John, Jacob, William, Benjamin, Elizabeth, and Catharine, of whom John, William, and Benjamin settled in Montague. Baltus sacrificed his life in the battle of Minisink; William ended his life by an accident; Jacob removed to Seneca Co., N. Y., and was the progenitor of the branch of the family residing in western New York; and Benjamin, at a later day, repaired to Michigan.

John was married, March 19, 1785, to Miss Sarah Inkhorn, and is the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. His children were Baltus, William, Michael, Benjamin, Rachel, Mary, and Catharine, all of whom chose homes in the vicinity, either in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, or New York. Michael, the father of William H., remained in New Jersey, having inherited the homestead. He was united in marriage first to Jemima Cuddeback, and a second time to Charlotte E. Stewart, who was the mother of four children,—William H., Horace S., Sarah Temperance, and Charles H. Of this number the only survivors are William H. and Charles H., both of whom reside in Port Jervis. William H. Nearpass was born in Montague, N. J., May 9, 1840, and passed his early years at the home of his parents in the latter township. They removed in 1856 to Port Jervis, which afforded him improved educational advantages at the public school of that place, though these were not of a superior character. At the age of nineteen he began a mercantile career as clerk in one of the stores of the place. In 1865 the firm of Wilkin & Nearpass was established, which copartnership continued until 1867, when Nearpass & Swartwout embarked in trade. This firm was succeeded by Nearpass & Brother, after which the present copartnership of Nearpass & Shimer was formed.

Mr. Nearpass having developed a taste and manifested a peculiar adaptation for the profession of journalist, in connection with Mr. J. H. Norton began the publication of the Evening Gazette, a tri-weekly, together with a weekly edition of the same paper. He later disposed of his interest in the paper, and in 1876 repurchased. This evening bulletin of news met a want which the community had long felt, and its publisher was encouraged, in January, 1881, to further enterprise by converting it into a daily. Its increasing circulation testifies to the appreciation in which it is held by the citizens of Port Jervis and vicinity.

Mr. Nearpass has engaged actively in all undertakings having for their aim the public welfare. He has been favored with many local offices, having been for five years supervisor of the township, and elected a portion of this time without opposition. The offices of trustee and treasurer of the village have also been filled by him. His religious associations are with the Reformed (Dutch) Church, of which he is an esteemed elder.

Mr. Nearpass was married in 1867 to Miss Anna W. Newman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who died in 1879, leaving three children,—Emma E., Charlotte A., and Anna W., the latter of whom is deceased.

THE PRESS OF WARWICK.

The Warwick Advertiser was commenced Jan. 27, 1866; Leonard Cox, editor and proprietor. John L. Servin purchased it Jan. 8, 1869, and sold to Daniel F. Welling, April 1, 1874. From Welling it passed to Stewart & Wilson (Aug. 5, 1876). Wilson sold his interest to D. C. Demerest, and it was published by Stewart & Demerest until the establishment was destroyed by fire, Jan. 24, 1879, since which time it has been published by Stewart & Co. Samuel J. Stewart has been its editor since August, 1876.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In regard to the following newspapers no reply has been made to our inquiries:

The Cornwall Reflector, founded as the Cornwall Mirror, by John W. Lee, in 1877, now published by H. H. Snelling.

The Cornwall Times, Miss S. J. A. Hussey, editor and proprietor.

The Highland Falls Journal, James C. Merritt, editor.

CHAPTER XIV.

ORANGE COUNTY CIVIL LIST.

IN the following lists are included the names of representative and other officers of the original county of Orange, and also the officers of Ulster County who were taken from the precincts and towns of that county which were subsequently annexed to Orange, together with those of the present county of Orange, viz.:

REPRESENTATIVES IN COLONIAL ASSEMBLY.

Original Orange was given representation in the General Assembly in 1699, from which time until 1775, which embraces the first representative period prior to the Revolution, its representatives were:

The representative from Ulster, from the district now embraced in Orange, was George Clinton, of New Windsor, from 1768 to 1775.

DELEGATES FROM THE COLONY OF NEW YORK TO THE FIRST CONTINENTAL CONGRESS—1774.

SECOND CONTINENTAL CONGRESS—1775.

John Alsop, James Duane, William Floyd, Lewis Morris, Simon Boerum, John Jay, Philip Livingston, Philip Schuyler, George Clinton, Francis Lewis, Robert R. Livingston, Henry Wisner.

Clinton and Wisner were from the district now embraced in Orange County. Simon Boerum died July 11, 1775, and John Alsop resigned immediately after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, to which measure he was opposed. Clinton, Wisner, Alsop, Floyd, and Lewis were present when the Declaration was adopted, but, in consequence of the instructions which they had received from the Convention of New York, did not vote. New York subsequently approved the Declaration, and it was signed, on behalf of the State, by Philip Livingston, Floyd, Lewis, and Morris. Clinton, Wisner, Schuyler, Jay, and Robert R. Livingston were called home to take charge of defensive operations in New York, and hence did not sign. Their signatures were not necessary, as the Convention of New York had instructed any three of the representatives to cast the vote of the State. The delegates of 1775 continued to serve until 1777,—William Duer taking the place of John Alsop.

DELEGATES TO THE PROVINCIAL CONGRESS OF NEW YORK—1775-77.

Orange County.—A. Hawkes Hay, Haverstraw; Jeremiah Clark, Cornwall; John Coe, Haverstraw; Wm. Allison, Goshen; Peter Cowles, Goshen; Thomas Cuyper, Haverstraw; John Haring, Orangetown; Abm. Lent, Orangetown; Thomas Outwater, Orangetown; Israel Seeley, Cornwall; Joshua H. Smith, Haverstraw; Roeloff Van Houten, Haverstraw; Nicholas Jackson, Goshen; Archibald Little, Cornwall; David Pye, Haverstraw; Isaac Sherwood, Orangetown; Benj. Tusten, Goshen; Henry Wisner, Goshen; Jesse Woodhull, Cornwall. ✓

* Speaker of Assembly. He was a resident of New York.

† Henry Wisner was the grandson of Johannes Wisner, who settled on the Wawayanda Patent in 1714. "He was a man, although of slender education, yet of strong natural abilities, of pleasing address, and seemed to possess from his ancestors a strong predilection for republican institutions," says Judge William Thompson. His active years were spent in the civil service of his country, having entered the General (Colonial) Assembly in 1759, and continued therein until 1782, with only a few years' interruption. He was also the founder of two powder-mills in the county for the supply of the army of the Revolution. His son, Henry, Jr., was also in the Legislature; and his son-in-law, Moses Phillip, was the founder of Phillipsburgh.

Ulster County.—John Nicholson,† Montgomery; Arthur Parks, Montgomery; Johannes Snyder, Shawangunk; Matthew Rhea, Montgomery; Thomas Palmer, Newburgh; Henry Wisner, Jr., Wallkill; Levi Paulding, Kingston; Christopher Tappen, Kingston; Dirck Wynkoop, Jr., Kingston.

MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY—1775-76.

Orange County.—David Pye, John Haring, Jeremiah Clark, Theunis Cuyper.

Ulster County.—Samuel Brewster, New Windsor; Henry Wisner, Jr., Wallkill.

DELEGATES TO THE CONVENTION CALLED TO DE-LIBERATE UPON THE ADOPTION, BY THE STATE OF NEW YORK, OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, HELD JUNE 17, 1788.

Ulster County.—George Clinton; James Clinton, New Windsor; Ebenezer Clark, John Cantine, Cornelius C. Shoemaker, Dirck Wynkoop.

Orange County.—Henry Wisner, Goshen; John Haring; Jesse Woodhull, Cornwall; John Wood.

After a severe struggle this convention ratified the constitution by a vote of thirty to twenty-seven,—Orange and Ulster Counties voting in the negative.

DELEGATES TO THE STATE CONVENTION OF 1801, CALLED TO AMEND THE CONSTITUTION OF 1777.

Orange County.—Aaron Burr; Arthur Parks, Montgomery; James Clinton, New Windsor; John Steward, Goshen; Peter Townsend, Cornwall.

Aaron Burr resided in New York, but was elected as a representative from Orange. He was president of the convention.

DELEGATES TO THE STATE CONVENTION OF 1821, CALLED TO AMEND THE CONSTITUTION OF 1801.

Orange County.—John Duer, Goshen; Peter Milliken, Montgomery; John Hallock, Jr.; Benjamin Woodward, Mount Hope.

DELEGATES TO THE STATE CONVENTION OF 1846, CALLED TO AMEND THE CONSTITUTION OF 1821.

John W. Brown, Newburgh; Lewis Cuddeback, Deerpark; George W. Tuthill, Blooming-Grove.

† John Nicholson was of Scotch-Irish extraction. He settled with his father in Wallkill precinct in or about 1731. He raised a company for the Canada expedition in 1775, and on the reorganization of the troops there in 1776 was raised to the rank of colonel. He died at his residence in the present town of Montgomery, Aug. 2, 1811, with the record of "a useful and excellent man."

‡ Arthur Parks was a resident if not a native of the present town of Montgomery, where he died Aug. 11, 1806, in his seventieth year. He was the grandson of John Parks and Margaret Clinton, the sister of James, the father of Charles Clinton. He was in civil service from 1775 to 1788.

§ New York had no voice in electing the first President, not having adopted the Federal Constitution.

¶ Jesse Woodhull was born at Mastic, L. I., Feb. 10, 1735. He settled at Blagge's Clove, in Cornwall precinct (now in Blooming-Grove), about 1753. His military service has been noticed elsewhere. He died Feb. 4, 1795.

From 1777 to 1796 the senatorial district embraced the counties of Orange, Ulster, and Dutchess, and was entitled to six senators. 1796-97, Orange, Ulster,* Dutchess, and Columbia; Delaware added in 1797; Chenango in 1798; Greene in 1800; Sullivan in 1809, entitled to twelve senators to 1808, and to seven from 1808 to 1814. In 1815, Albany, Chenango, Columbia, Delaware, Greene, Orange, Otsego, Schoharie, Sullivan, and Ulster composed the district, with a representation of nine senators. Under the constitution of 1821 the district was composed of Dutchess, Putnam, Rockland, Orange, Sullivan, Ulster, and Westchester. This continued until 1826, when Delaware was annexed. In 1836, Queens and Suffolk were added and Delaware transferred. Under the constitution of 1846, Orange and Sullivan composed the district.

‡ John Hathorn was a native of Wilmington, Del. He came to Orange County in the capacity of a school-teacher and surveyor; subsequently married a daughter of Thomas Welling and settled in Warwick, where he had an iron-forge and a store. He was a captain in the old Goshen regiment of militia, and under the rearrangement of the militia of the Revolution was made colonel of the Warwick regiment, then (1775) a new organization, in which capacity he commanded in the battle of Minisink. His civil service began as member of the Assembly under the first State constitution in 1777, in which capacity he served until 1787, when he was transferred to the Senate, where he remained until 1790. In 1789-90 and 1795-97 he was a representative in Congress, and 1801-3 again in the Senate. He was a small man, wrote an elegant hand, and left behind him many pleasant recollections.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The county business now transacted by Boards of Supervisors was originally in charge of justices of the peace. Section 2 of act passed Oct. 18, 1701, provided—

* Crom was the first man who was married in the county.

† Until 1848 appointed by Board of Supervisors.

That the justices of the peace of the respective counties of this province, or any five or more of them, two whereof to be a quorum, shall once in the year, at a Court of General or Special Sessions, supervise, examine, and allow the public and necessary charge of their respective county, and of every town thereof; part of which, the allowance made by law to their representative or representatives, shall be deemed and accounted to be; and upon examination and allowance of the said accounts they, or the major part of them, as aforesaid, are hereby empowered to issue their warrant to the several towns in said county, under their hands and seals, or the hands and seals of the major part of them for the chusing and electing of two assessors and one collector, in each of their towns or county, for the assessing of the sum or sums of money so allowed by the justices aforesaid."

For neglect of the duties here specified, justices were liable to a fine of fifty pounds, and collectors and assessors to a fine of twenty pounds. The justices were also empowered to appoint and elect a treasurer "for their respective county," and to provide for the support of the poor. In the county clerk's office may be found, in the first book of records, the proceedings of the justices of Orange acting as supervisors. The session was held April 27, 1703. Present: William Merritt, John Merritt, Cornelius Cuyper, Teunis Van Houghton, Thomas Burroughs, and Michael Hawdon, justices; and, as the court proceedings were also held, John Perry, high sheriff, William Huddleston, clerk, and Conradt Hanson, constable, were in attendance. The record is indorsed: "Register kept for Orange County, begune ye 5th day of Aprill, Ano. Dm. 1703." The following was the county tax levied:

"That the Queen's tax is.....	22	10
The $\frac{1}{2}$ of the clerk's salary.....	3	10
Toward payment of a book.....		6	6
Toward furnishing ye county goal.....	2	10
Toward pound for cattle.....	1	10
To be levied in all.....	30	6	6"

The election of supervisors was authorized by act of the Assembly in 1703, as stated in a previous chapter (Chapter III.). The oath of office which they were required to take was somewhat different from that of the present. It was as follows:

"I, ———, do swear I will not pass any account, or article thereof, wherewith I do not think the county justly chargeable, nor will I disallow any account, or any article thereof, wherewith I think the county justly chargeable. So help me God."

The names of supervisors, so far as they can now be ascertained, will be found in connection with the towns which they represented.

CHAPTER XV.

TOWN BOUNDARIES.

THE towns composing the county at its reorganization (1748) were given their boundaries under the act of April 3, 1801. These boundaries, and those of the towns subsequently organized, are given in connection with a brief summary of the facts in Chapter III., in regard to prior organization, viz.:

BLOOMING-GROVE—formed from Cornwall, March 23, 1779. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the county of Orange beginning in the south bounds of the town of New Windsor at the northeast corner of a tract of land commonly called Van Dam's Patent, and then along the east bounds of the said patent to the southeast corner thereof, thence along the south bounds of the said tract to the foot of the said Sugarloaf Mountain, and then an east course to the bounds of Blooming-Grove."

WARWICK—formed from the precinct of Goshen, March 7, 1788. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the said county of Orange bounded easterly by Chesebicks and Blooming-Grove, southerly by the State of New Jersey, westerly by the middle of the Wallkill, and northerly by Goshen."

MINISINK—formed from the precinct of Goshen, March 7, 1788. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the said county of Orange bounded easterly by the middle of the Wallkill, southerly by New Jersey, westerly by the Delaware River,* and northerly by the towns of Wallkill and Deerpark."

NEW WINDSOR—formed from the precinct of Highlands, Dec. 11, 1762; erected as a town March 7, 1788. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the said county of Orange bounded easterly by the middle of Hudson's River, southerly by an east and west line from the mouth of Murderer's Creek, and westerly and northerly by a line beginning at the west side of Hudson's River at the mouth of Quassaick Creek, and running from thence along the south bounds of a tract of land commonly called German Patent and the southerly bounds of a tract of land granted to Alexander Baird and Company to the east bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Cadwallader Colden, and then across the same to the most northerly corner of the land granted to Patrick Hume, and thence along the westerly bounds thereof to the lands granted to Patrick McKnight, and then along the same southeasterly and southwesterly to the southerly corner thereof, and then continuing the last-mentioned line to the town of Blooming-Grove so as to include the lands formerly of Fletcher Matthews."

NEWBURGH—formed from the precinct of Highlands, Dec. 11, 1762; erected as a town March 7, 1788. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the said county of Orange bounded easterly by the middle of Hudson's River, southerly by New Windsor, westerly by the east bounds of the tract of land granted to Cadwallader Colden, and the east bounds of one thousand acres of land granted to John Johnson, and the east bounds of three thousand acres of land granted to Henry Wileman, and the east bounds of three thousand five hundred acres of land granted to Rip Van Dam and others, and northerly by a line beginning on the west side of Hudson's River at the northeast corner of a tract of land granted to Francis Harrison and Company, called the five-thousand-acre tract, and running from thence east to the middle of Hudson's River, and westerly along the north bounds of the said tract and the north bounds of another tract granted to the said Francis Harrison to the tract of land commonly called Wallace's Tract, then along the lines of the same northerly and westerly to the northeasterly bounds of a tract of land granted to Jacobus Kip, John Cruger, and others, commonly called Kip and Cruger's Tract, then westerly along the northeasterly and northerly bounds thereof to the northwest corner thereof, and then westerly to the northeast corner of the said tract of three thousand five hundred acres of land granted to Rip Van Dam and others."

WALLKILL—formed from the precinct of Wallkill, March 24, 1772; erected as a town, March 7, 1788. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the said county of Orange bounded easterly by New Windsor,† southerly by a west line from the mouth of Murderer's Creek, westerly by Shawangunk Kill, and northerly by the line commonly called the old northwest line."

MONTGOMERY—formed from the precinct of Wallkill, under the name of the precinct of Hanover, March 24, 1772; name changed to the precinct of Montgomery, 1782; erected as a town, March 7, 1788. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the said county of Orange bounded easterly by New Windsor and Newburgh, southerly by the town of Wallkill, westerly by Shawangunk Kill,‡ and northerly by a line beginning at the northeast corner of a tract of three thousand acres of land granted to Henry Wileman, and running thence along the north bounds thereof to the Paltz River, commonly called the Wallkill, and then southerly up the same river to the southwest corner of a tract of four thousand acres of land granted to Gerardus Beekman and others, and then westerly and northerly along the southerly and westerly bounds thereof to the northwest corner thereof, and then northwesterly along the north bounds of the lands granted to Jeremiah Schuyler and Company to the Shawangunk Kill aforesaid."

DEERPARK—formed from the precinct of Maghaghkemek; subsequently included in the precinct of Mamakating; erected as a town, April 5, 1798. Boundaries, 1801: "All that part of the said county of Orange beginning on the Shawangunk Kill at the southwest corner of the town of Wallkill,§ and running thence along the said kill, being the boundary line of the said town of Wallkill, to the north part of the farm now or lately occupied by Joseph Wood, Jr., thence west to the river Mongaap, then along the said river Mongaap as it runs to the Delaware River, then along the said river to the town of Minisink, and thence along the northern boundary of the said town of Minisink to the place of beginning."

CRAWFORD—formed from the town of Montgomery,

* The section lying on the Delaware, west of the Shawangunk Mountains, was attached to Deerpark by act of Feb. 13, 1825. (See Mount Hope.)

† Now by Hamptonburgh.

‡ Now by Crawford.

§ Now the southeast corner of Mount Hope.

March 4, 1823. Boundaries: "All that part of the town of Montgomery, in the county of Orange, lying west of a certain line, beginning on the line between the town of Wallkill, in said county, and the town of Montgomery aforesaid; at the southwest corner of a tract of five thousand acres of land, called the five-thousand-acre patent, and running thence northeast on the southwest side of the said five-thousand-acre patent, to the southwest corner of the tract of ten thousand acres of land, called the ten-thousand-acre patent; thence northwardly, on the west side of the said ten-thousand-acre patent, till it strikes the centre of a turnpike road leading from the village of Montgomery to the falls of the Neversink River, called the 'Orange and Ulster Branch Turnpike Road;' thence northwardly, on a direct line, to a small bridge erected across the old stage-road leading from the village of Montgomery, in the county of Orange, to the village of Kingston, in the county of Ulster, near the west end of the house now owned and occupied by Adam Dickerson, in the said town of Montgomery; thence northwardly, from the said bridge on the centre of the old stage-road, until it intersects the line between the said town of Montgomery and the town of Shawangunk, in the county of Ulster." The first town-meeting was held at the house of Edward Schoonmaker.

MOUNT HOPE—formed as the town of Calhoun, from the towns of Wallkill and Deerpark, Feb. 15, 1825;* name changed to Mount Hope, March 14, 1833. Boundaries, 1825: "All that part of the town of Deerpark lying southeasterly of the before-mentioned line (see note), and that part of the town of Wallkill within the following bounds, to wit: beginning at the easterly corner of the town of Deerpark, and at the southeasterly corner of the county of Sullivan, and runs thence due east to the easterly line of the Deerpark Patent, thence along said line to the town of Minisink, thence west to the town of Deerpark, to be a separate town, by the name of Calhoun, and the first town-meeting to be held at the house of Joseph Conklin, in said town."

HAMPTONBURGH—formed from Goshen, Blooming-

* This act is entitled "An act to divide the towns of Wallkill, Minisink, and Deerpark." That part relating to Minisink and Deerpark is as follows. "That from and after the passage of this act, all that part of the towns of Minisink and Deerpark, lying westerly and northwesterly of the following lines, to wit: beginning on the line of the town of Deerpark, and the line of the county of Sullivan, where the west line of the second division of the Minisink Patent crosses the same, thence southwesterly along the said west line of second division of the Minisink Patent to the old Jersey claim line and southwesterly corner of said division; thence southerly along said Jersey claim line thirty chains; thence southwest-erly through the town of Minisink to the New Jersey State line, to strike or intersect the same one hundred chains from the Delaware River, at Station or Carpenter's Point, to be a separate town, by the name of Deerpark, and that the first town-meeting be held at the house of Cornelius Cuddeback, in said town, on the first Tuesday of March next (1826); and all that part of the town of Minisink lying southeasterly of said line be and remain a separate town, by the name of Minisink, and that the first town-meeting be held at the house of Gabriel Sayre, in said town."

Grove, New Windsor, Montgomery, and Wallkill, April 5, 1830. Boundaries: "Beginning at a point where the new northwest line crosses the old county line and runs thence along said new northwest line south forty-nine and a quarter degrees east, two hundred and eighty chains to within twenty-five chains of the southeast corner of the Bull's and Gerard's Patents; then north sixty and a half degrees east, three hundred and twenty-two chains to a heap of stones in Samuel Brewster's field; then north seventeen degrees east, thirty-six chains and seventy-five links to the aforesaid old county line; then north sixteen and a half degrees west, one hundred and ninety chains to the northwesterly corner of the farm of Stephen King, deceased; then north fifty-six and a quarter degrees west, two hundred and thirty chains to the middle of the Wallkill stream; then up the middle of said Wallkill as it runs four hundred and seventy-three chains and fifty links to opposite a bass-wood-tree standing on the east branch of said Wallkill stream; then south fifteen and a half degrees east, ninety-five chains to the aforesaid old county line, and at the corner of the lands of Grant and Derick Smith, Nathaniel Tuthill, and the lands formerly owned by Isaac Germond; then east along said old county line seventy-one chains to the place of beginning." First town-meeting held at the house of Charles Heard on the first Tuesday in April, 1831.

CHESTER—formed from Goshen, Warwick, Blooming-Grove, and Monroe, March 22, 1845. Boundaries: "Beginning on the line between the towns of Goshen and Blooming-Grove, near a brook at the intersection of the line of Cromeline's Patent with the aforesaid line, and running thence along said town line north four degrees east, twenty-two chains, then south twenty-three degrees west, one hundred and twelve chains to a chestnut-tree; then south fifty-five degrees west, three hundred and twenty chains to the line between the towns of Goshen and Warwick at the creek below Thompson's mills; thence south twenty-five degrees east, one hundred and ninety-five chains to a heap of stones; thence south forty-seven degrees east, three hundred and forty-six chains to the line between the towns of Warwick and Monroe; thence north thirty-two degrees east, one hundred and sixty-six chains to the junction of three roads near the head of Little Long Pond; thence north nine degrees east, two hundred and thirty-five chains to four chestnut-trees; thence north twenty-one degrees west, two hundred and twenty chains to the place of beginning." The first town-meeting at the house of Benjamin R. Conklin on the first Tuesday in April, 1845.

WAWAYANDA—formed from Minisink, by the Board of Supervisors, Nov. 27, 1849. Boundaries: "All that part of the town of Minisink, in the said county of Orange, commencing on the old Ulster County line and in the centre of the Wallkill River, also in the line of the town of Wallkill, and runs near due west to the corner of the town of Mount Hope and Wallkill; thence along the same course twenty-four chains and seventy-five links to the centre of the highway leading from Ketchum's Mills to Mount Hope village; thence south thirty-seven degrees west, twenty-one chains along the highway; thence south along the same forty and one-half degrees west, twenty-five chains and fifty links; thence south sixty-five chains to an old road near Robert Robertson's; thence along the same south forty-four degrees west, twenty chains; thence south thirty-five degrees west, fifteen chains and fifty links; thence south forty-three and a half degrees west, sixteen chains and fifty links; thence south fifty-two degrees west, fifty-six chains along the road leading through the Milford neighborhood; thence along said road south sixty-two and one-quarter degrees west, thirty-six chains to Robert Robertson's, Jr.; thence south forty degrees east, twenty-two chains; thence south six and a half degrees east, thirteen chains to the old Minisink turnpike; thence across the same south forty-eight and three-quarter degrees east, twenty-two chains; thence south forty-three and three-quarter degrees east, twenty-four chains to William Canfield's; thence south twenty-seven three-quarter degrees east, six chains; thence south fifty-eight and a half degrees east, thirty-eight chains to the bridge across the branch at Rutger's Kill; thence along the said (branch) stream to its intersection with Rutger's Kill; thence along Rutger's Kill to the Wallkill River, and thence following the same to the place of beginning." First town-meeting at house of DeWitt C. Hallock.

GREENVILLE—formed from Minisink, by the Board of Supervisors, Dec. 2, 1853. Boundaries: "All that part of the town of Minisink which lies west of a line between the towns of Minisink and Wawayanda, which is about twelve chains northwest of the dwelling-house of William Canfield, said station being twenty-five links northwest of the centre of an arched stone bridge across said road to said Canfield's, and running thence south forty-eight degrees west, four hundred and twenty-eight chains and fifty links to a station on the south line of the town of Minisink, which station is a black-oak-tree on the line between the States of New York and New Jersey, on the east side of the highway leading to the village of Salem from the house of John W. Elston."

HIGHLANDS—formed from Cornwall, by the Board of Supervisors, Dec. 3, 1872. Boundaries: "All that part of the town of Cornwall lying to the south of a line drawn from Sherwood's Rock, on Hudson's River, running thence westerly to a house now or recently occupied by William Lancaster; thence in a direct line to the house of William Chatfield; thence to the house of John Odell; thence to the highest peak of Mount Rascal to the line of the town of Monroe."

CITY OF NEWBURGH—chartered by the Legislature as the village of Newburgh, March 25, 1800; as the city of Newburgh, April 22, 1865. Boundaries, 1872: "Beginning at the mouth of Chamber's Creek, on the west side of the Hudson River, and at the northeast corner of the town of New Windsor, and runs thence along the north line of the town of New Windsor to an old oak-tree on the west slope of Snake Hill, and twenty-two chains measured eastwardly along the town line from the east line of the reservoir lot; thence in a straight line through lands of estates of W. Chapman, G. F. Wisner, and others, to the intersection of the Gidneytown Creek with the west side of the road leading from the Newburgh and Ellen-ville plank road to Gidney Avenue; thence northwardly along said creek to a point due west from the northwest corner of the village of Newburgh; from thence eastwardly to the said northwest corner of the village of Newburgh; and from thence eastwardly along the north line of the village of Newburgh to the west side of the Hudson River; thence due east to the east line of the county of Orange, being the centre of said river; thence southerly along the east line of the county of Orange to a point due east from the place of beginning, and from thence to the place of beginning."

TOWN HISTORIES.

NEW WINDSOR.

I.—GENERAL.

LOCATION, PHYSIOLOGY, ETC.

NEW WINDSOR, originally the extreme southeastern precinct and town of the county of Ulster, and, under the reorganization of the counties of Orange and Ulster in 1799, the central northeastern town of the county of Orange, is bounded on the north by the city and town of Newburgh and the town of Montgomery, on the west by Montgomery and Hamptonburgh, on the south by Blooming-Grove and Cornwall, and on the east by Hudson's River. Substantially in the same latitude, and of corresponding elevation, its mean temperature may be accepted as the same as that of Newburgh, viz.: 50° 10'. The surface of the town is rolling and hilly. The soil from the Hudson to Muchattoes Hill is gravelly; more immediately adjoining the Hudson deposits of clay underlie the sand. The southern spur of Muchattoes Hill is rough and hilly. West from this ridge and until near Rock Tavern, a rolling upland prevails, while the extreme western part is more or less broken by slate ridges. Muchattoes Hill, or Snake Hill, as it is more generally called, on its northern border, the only considerable elevation in the town, rises six hundred feet above tide-water. The creeks and streams are Murderer's or Moodna, Silver Stream and Beaver-dam, Goldsmith and Colemantown Creeks. Quassaick Creek constitutes a portion of the northern boundary of the town, and gives to it several valuable mill privileges. Its marsh or swamp land is the Big Swamp, in the northwestern part of the town. Washington Lake, for many years known as Little Pond, lies midway on the northern border; it has an elevation of two hundred and thirty feet, and covers, including overflowed swamp, an area of one hundred and seven acres. The Newburgh water-works take its waters, as well as the waters of Silver Stream, with which it is connected by conduit. The principal agricultural products are rye, wheat, corn, oats, hay, butter, and milk; paper, woolen goods, and brick are the almost exclusive manufactures, although milling, cotton goods, snuff and tobacco, and iron implements and glass, have at different times been produced with more or less success. The local divisions of the town are New Windsor village, Moodna or Orangeville, Vail's Gate or Mortonville, Little Britain, the Square, and Rock Tavern. Hunting-Grove, a division so called in its early history, is now in Hamptonburgh. It has twelve school and joint school districts, and five churches. The Newburgh Branch of the Erie Railroad, and the Newburgh and New York Railroad, pass through the eastern part of the town. The town has an area of 20,871 acres, of which about 17,500 are improved. Its population in 1790 was 1819; 1830, 2310; 1865, 2697; 1875, 2455.

CIVIL ORGANIZATION—NAME.

The district of which the town now forms a part had its first local government under the patent to Capt. John Evans, who, being vested with the privileges and powers pertaining to a lordship and manor, had authority to establish a manorial court. In 1709 it was included in the "Precinct of the Highlands" and attached to New Paltz. In 1743 more definite bounds were given to this precinct, which was made to embrace the present towns of New Windsor, Newburgh, Marlborough, Plattekill, etc. The precinct meetings were held "at the house of John Humphrey, Jr., on the first Tuesday in April, annually, for the election of precinct officers." In 1762 the precinct was divided into the precincts of New Windsor and Newburgh, "by a line beginning at the mouth of Quassaick Creek, and running thence west to the east bounds of Wallkill Precinct," all the lands theretofore comprehended "within the said Highland Precinct lying to the southward of the said dividing line to be called by the name of New Windsor Precinct."

The name of the town is from Windsor, England, with "New" prefixed. At what precise period or by whom it was conferred cannot now be ascertained. Its earliest record, however, is 1728, in connection with the "Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts," in which connection it is employed to define a specific portion of the district which, with "parts adjacent," became the parish of New Windsor. In 1755 it is spoken of as "the Southern Division of the Precinct of New Windsor, otherwise called the Highlands." In 1749 it was applied to the "township," now the village, and in 1762 to the precinct.

TOWN RECORDS.

The records of the town begin with the precinct meeting held on the first Tuesday of April, 1763, when, "agreeably to the directions" of the act constituting the precinct, a meeting was held at the house of Judah Harlow, at which the following officers were chosen, viz.: Joseph Belknap, clerk; George Harris, supervisor; Samuel Brewster, George Denniston, James Humphrey, assessors; Alexander Denniston, constable and collector; Judah Harlow and Capt. James Clinton, overseers of the roads; David Crawford and John Nicoll, overseers of the poor; Andrew Crawford and William Lawrence, fence-viewers.

ROADS.

The earliest roads of the town were the King's highway, better known locally as the Goshen road, and the highway now known as the Little Britain road. The first extended through the town from north to south, and the second from east to west. In 1766 the roads of the town were defined in the appointment of overseers as follows: "Moses Fowler, overseer from Mr. Falls' saw-mill to New Windsor; George Denniston, from the west line of Johnson's patent to Mr. Falls' saw-mill; Thomas King, from the west line of Johnson's patent to the north line of the precinct." This was the Little Britain road. "Francis Mander-ville, for Goshen road and the roads about Murderer's Creek,"—a line which included what is now known as the Forge Hill road. In 1769 the road districts and overseers were: "John Galloway, overseer from William Mulliner's to the top of Snake Hill; Theophilus Corwin, from the top of Snake Hill, through New Windsor to Hudson's River, and up Goshen road as far as the road that leads off to Arthur's mill, and to take all the inhabitants on the north side of Murderer's Creek as high as they are to work; Samuel Arthur, at the creek and the rest of the road upwards, and to take the remainder of the inhabitants left therein." Patrick McClaughry, James McClaughry, and George Clinton, commissioners under the act of 1770, divided the town into road districts as follows: "The first, or New Windsor district; the second, or Creek district; the third, or Middle district; and the fourth, or West district." The districts so designated were generally known and called, and so entered on the precinct records, as: 1. The New Windsor district; 2. The Creek district; 3. The Little Britain district; 4. The Hunting-Grove district. In 1772 the Creek district was divided. In 1774 the Middle and the Hunting-Grove districts were divided, and a new district, called the Silver Stream district, established; and in 1781 the Little Britain district was divided and a new district established, called the Stonefield district. The roads and streets of the village of New Windsor, which were included in the New Windsor district, were dedicated to public use by the proprietors of the plot in 1749, a fact which establishes their date. The Little Britain and Goshen roads were the first in the town, the Forge Hill the third, and the Ridge road probably the fourth. The Newburgh and New Windsor turnpike, the New Windsor and Cornwall turnpike, the Snake Hill turnpike, and the New Windsor and Blooming-Grove turnpike, which have been fully noticed in another connection,* materially changed the roadways of the town, and, with the public roads previously opened, gave to it substantially its present facilities.

SCHOOLS.

The first entry in regard to public schools is at the annual election in 1796, when David Dill, John Dill, Daniel Borden, John Denniston, and Francis Crawford were elected school commissioners. The same persons were reappointed in 1797, but no further entry appears until 1813, when, on the 10th of May, at a special election, Joseph Morrell, Thomas King, and William Mulliner were elected commissioners of schools, and Thurston Wood, David Dill, and Thomas Fulton inspectors of schools. On the 18th September, 1814, the commissioners named divided the town into nine school districts, viz.: No. 1, village of New Windsor district; No. 2, Murderer's Creek district; No. 3, Good Hope district; No. 4, Centre district; No. 5, Square district; No. 6, Little Britain Meeting-house district; No. 7, Union district; No. 8, Goodwill district; No. 9, Hunting-Grove district. In 1816 one of the districts was divided, making ten. The first report of attendance and distribution of public money is recorded as follows: Number of children between five and fifteen years of age, 597; amount of public money, $258.75. There were probably some private schools in the town as early as 1740. Dr. Joseph Young writes in regard to the education of his older brother, Thomas: "Our grandmother, Jane, was a good English scholar and learned us to read. As there were but few children in their new settlement (Little Britain) they had no schoolmaster; but my father, who was a tolerable arithmetician, undertook to teach him, with the assistance of Cocker's Arithmetic." This was written of Thomas when he was six or seven years old, and as he was born in 1731, it shows that there was no school at that time. He adds: "Some time after, Mr. John Wilson, a famous mathematician, opened a school about four miles distant, to which the young self-taught student was sent. Mr. Wilson's mathematical fame soon procured him an invitation to open a school in New York, where he removed." Rev. John Moffat was probably Mr. Wilson's successor, as the authority already quoted continues: "Fortunately there came a minister to the parish who was a good linguist, under whom he completed his Latin education." The description and the period to which it refers alike point to Mr. Moffat, who was the pastor of Goodwill Church from 1751 to 1765, and whose last years are known to have been employed as an instructor. His school was known as "Moffat's Academy." It was situated on the road leading from Little Britain to Washingtonville, on the farm now (1880) owned by Robert Shaw. The house was one story and a half with basement. The school was kept in the upper rooms, Mr. Moffat and his family occupying the basement. It was partly, if not wholly, broken up during the Revolution. While the probabilities favor Mr. Moffat, we find it written, in connection with the education of James and George Clinton, that the latter attended a school conducted by Rev. Daniel Thain, a minister from Scotland.

SUPPORT OF POOR.

The support of the poor of the town was in the manner provided by law. The first public tax appearing on record was under the act of the Assembly, passed Dec. 31, 1762, when the sum of twenty pounds was raised to pay expenses of previous years. In 1770, twenty shillings only was raised; in 1778, eighty pounds ($200); in 1779, one hundred and fifty pounds; 1780, five hundred pounds ($1250); but this amount probably represents depreciation in currency rather than an increase in pauperism. In 1782 the practice of selling the support of paupers to the lowest bidder was introduced and followed for many years. The town is now included in the county system.

LICENSES.

Licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors have been issued from the earliest recorded period, James McClaughry having been an excise commissioner in 1763. In 1796 the town received the fees for licenses, which then amounted to $65. In 1815 the sum of $88 was received, and nine tavern and six permit or store licenses were granted. These figures are introduced merely as the foundation of comparative statistics. The local travel of half a century ago required a far greater number of taverns than at the present time, or since the introduction of railroads.

POST-OFFICES.

The first post-office in the town was at Little Britain. It was established May 29, 1824, Hamilton Morrison, postmaster; Charles Palmer, postmaster, 1834. The second, the New Windsor post-office, was established Feb. 19, 1829, Abraham Schultz, postmaster; John Hall, postmaster, 1834. The third, Mortonville, was established April 10, 1850; John D. Vail, postmaster. The fourth, Moodna; date of establishment not ascertained.

CREEKS, STREAMS, SWAMPS, Etc.

Murderer's or Moodna Creek, on the southern border of the town, and Quassaick Creek, on the north, require no further description than has been given elsewhere in this work. Silver Stream rises near the Square, and is fed by a number of springs north and south of the main road. It crosses the New Windsor turnpike at the old Alexander Falls saw-mill, and from thence in a southeast direction through what are called the "Continental Meadows," and crosses the Snake Hill turnpike north of Vail's Gate. East of this road there is another old saw-mill on the Morton place, where the creek crosses the New Windsor turnpike, and supplies power to the Morton (formerly John Ellison) grist-mill. From thence flowing south it unites with Murderer's Creek. The only mill privileges on it are those that have been mentioned, of which the Morton mill is the most important. It is not a certain stream, but being fed by a water-shed of not less than two thousand acres, it is quick to respond to rain-falls. The right to its surplus waters is now in the city of Newburgh as a part of its water supply. Beaver-dam Creek has been claimed as the original outlet of Orange Lake. It crosses the Cochection turnpike between Alexander Beatty's place and the old stone house formerly owned by the Howells; runs south through New Windsor and empties into the Otterkill west of Salisbury mills. There were several saw-mills on it in former times, of which only one remains, viz., on the old Belknap farm, now owned by Robert Morrison. Its claims as the outlet of Orange Lake were disputed in the courts many years ago and a decision obtained in favor of Quassaick Creek. Goldsmith Creek rises on the Burnet homestead in Little Britain, runs south through the Clinton homestead, and empties into the Otterkill at Washingtonville. Coleman-town Creek, another small stream in the west part of the town, also flows to the Otterkill. Big Swamp, or Great Swamp, is in the northwest part of the town, and extends into Montgomery. It commences within a quarter of a mile of the main road in Little Britain, runs thence north to near the Cochection turnpike. The north part of it has been redeemed and is now under cultivation. Its outlet forms a branch of the Tinn Brock, although it does not take that name until after it crosses the Cochection turnpike. There is little doubt that this part of the town was once filled with water, presenting a pond or lake.

II.—PATENTS AND FIRST SETTLEMENTS

Originally covered by the patent to Capt. John Evans, the precinct embraced, when constituted in 1762, patents and portions of patents issued as follows: 1. Patrick MacGregorie, 160 acres, Aug. 24, 1721; 2. William Chambers and William Southerland, 1000 acres, Sept. 2, 1709; 3. Charles Huddy and Philip Brooks, 4000 acres (in part), Feb. 20, 1709,—subsequently included in a grant to Mary Ingoldsby and her daughter, Mary Pinhorn, Aug. 12, 1720; 4. John Haskell, 2000 acres, April 9, 1719, and 2000 acres, Aug. 24, 1721; 5. Vincent Matthews, 800 acres, June 17, 1720; 6. John Johnson, Jr., 1000 acres, Feb. 3, 1720; 7. James Henderson, 1184 acres (in part), Feb. 12, 1722; 8. Vincent Pierce, 1000 acres (in part), July 21, 1721; 9. Lewis Morris, 1000 acres, July 21, 1721; 10. Andrew Johnson, 2000 acres, July 19, 1719; 11. Patrick Hume, 2000 acres, Nov. 29, 1721; 12. Cornelius Low and Company, 3292 acres (mainly), March 17, 1720; 13. Richard Van Dam, 1000 acres (in part), June 30, 1720; 14. Phineas McIntosh, 2000 acres (mainly), April 9, 1719. As defined by the boundaries of 1801, the town included, in addition to the foregoing, a considerable portion of the patent to Cadwallader Colden (15), granted April 9, 1719. Portions of the Low, McIntosh, and other patents were cut off by the erection of the town of Hamptonburgh in 1830, but all the patents enumerated are represented in the land titles of the town.

MacGregorie Patent.—In the order of settlement, the town is the oldest in the present county, having been begun by Col. Patrick MacGregorie, in 1685, on the lands subsequently embraced in the patent to his son, Patrick MacGregorie, and now known as Plum Point. MacGregorie was a native of Scotland, and was the leader of a colony of Presbyterian immigrants. Landing first in Maryland, he, with part of his original company, came north, stopping at Perth Amboy and Staten Island, but finally took up lands, as stated, on the solicitation of Governor Dongan. How many of his original company came with him is not of record, but we have the names of his brother-in-law, David Toshack, who boasted the title of "Laird of Minivard;" Daniel Maskrig, a servant in the employ of Toshack, and one Collum. His wife, Margaret, in a petition to the government, Nov. 23, 1710, states that, in addition to her husband and David Toshack, there were "twenty-five others, their families, and sundry of their servants." After erecting a commodious cabin, MacGregorie and Toshack established a trading-post on Sloop Hill. While in this occupation, MacGregorie was appointed muster-general of the militia of the province, and was subsequently sent on a mission to the French Indians. On his return he took part in the Leisler revolution, and was killed in the effort to reduce the Leisler party, in March, 1691. His family continued to reside on Plum Point for some years. Toshack died there in 1689, leaving one son, who died without issue. The record is clear that they were the first settlers in the county. Capt. John Evans was a son-in-law of MacGregorie, and taking advantage of his father-in-law's death, obtained a patent for the land which he had originally purchased,—a patent which was subsequently vacated, as hereinbefore stated. On repeated petition representing the facts, the patent of 1721 was issued to Patrick MacGregorie, Jr., in compensation for his father's losses. At what time the MacGregories removed from Plum Point does not appear, but it was certainly subsequent to 1721. On the 7th of October, 1734, Dr. John Nicoll, of New York, purchased the place from John Waldron, Cornelius Van Horne, and James Livingston, who appear to have been agents for the sale of patents. John Nicoll, son of the purchaser, came into possession in 1735, and erected the homestead house, which is still standing and owned by his descendants. A portion of the farm was sold to the late Philip A. Verplanck, and was occupied by him.

Chambers and Southerland Patent.—The second settlement in the town was on the patent to William Chambers and William Southerland, or Sutherland. Although issued in their names, the patentees had but one-third interest each in the grant, it being of record that they consented, "for and in consideration of one equal third part of said tract," that their names should be made use of in obtaining the grant by Col. Peter Matthews, who, by the agreement, became the owner of the remaining third. In the division of the patent, Nov. 7, 1723, Chambers was assigned lands immediately south of Quassaick Creek, Matthews occupied the centre of the plot, and Southerland the southern part. The land had been previously cleared of timber, as appears by a petition from Chambers for an additional tract (June 17, 1720), in which he states: "The petitioner, with great labor and expense, hath, for some years past, settled, cultivated, and manured a small farm to the northward of Murderer's Creek, upon Hudson's River, but before the land was granted to him (1709), most of the timber that stood thereon was cut down and removed for the use of the crown, so that he hath not a sufficient quantity for fencing and for the use of his said farm; but near to a place or hill called Muck-Hattoes there are certain lands, mostly stony and unfit for cultivation, which he will take and pay the rents required therefor." Not only is the fact stated that the land was cleared when granted, but the date of his settlement is very nearly fixed. If he had been "for some years" on the land in 1720, the inference is pretty clear that he settled thereon very soon after the grant was issued, probably in the spring of 1710. His log cabin stood on what is known as the Ludlow farm (late Christie). He died in 1738, and his portion of the tract passed to his sons, William and John. The former, an admiral in the British navy, died without issue, and full possession passed to the latter, who obtained (1753) a grant of the lands under water extending from New Windsor village to Quassaick Creek. In 1758 he conveyed the property to Nathan Smith, "blacksmith, of Kingston," together with a portion of the Ingoldsby patent, which had been purchased by his father in 1726, and also part of lot No. 1 of the German patent, which he had himself purchased in 1742. Smith sold a portion to Robert Boyd, Jr., and another to George Clinton. The latter erected a new house about 1769, and resided there until he was elected Governor, when he removed to Poughkeepsie. In 1790 he sold to Hugh Walsh, who founded the farm residence and mills now owned by his grandson, J. DeWitt Walsh. With this portion of the patent are associated the names of Admiral William Chambers, Associate Judge John Chambers (1751), Governor George Clinton (1776), and Capt. Charles Ludlow, of the United States navy.

The central portion of the tract (that held by Peter Matthews) was purchased by John Alsop (1724-25), who, in company with his brother-in-law, Joseph Sackett, Jr., settled on the lands immediately after, and erected a store-house and landing on the Hudson. He was the father of John Alsop, Jr., of Revolutionary history, and the grandfather of Governor John Alsop King. In 1749 he sold the tract or a considerable portion of it to an association or company organized under the name of the "Proprietors of New Windsor," who founded thereon what is now known as the village of New Windsor, but which was then called "the township of New Windsor." Sackett ran a sloop to New York, and retained his wharf after the proprietors came in possession.

The southern portion was settled by Southerland simultaneously with the settlement by William Chambers. In 1718 he mortgaged the property, then in his possession and occupation "for many years," to John Ellison, of New York, for £160. Ellison made an additional loan of £140 in 1721, and perfected his title to the property in May, 1723, when his son, Thomas Ellison, took possession, erected a stone mansion on the bluff overlooking the river, and a dock and store-house, and founded the freighting business, which was continued for a century by himself and his descendants. His house was occupied by Washington in 1779.

Vincent Matthews Patent.—The patent to Vincent Matthews, immediately adjoining the southern portion of the Chambers and Sutherland patent, was purchased by Thomas Ellison, Jan. 24, 1724, and on it he erected, in 1754, the stone farm-house and mill near Vail's Gate, which was subsequently occupied by his son, John Ellison, and which is known as Gen. Knox's headquarters.

Ingoldsby Patent.—The fourth settlement was by John or Joseph Gale, in 1726, on the northwest corner of the Ingoldsby Patent. Gale sold to Thomas Ellison in 1736. James Edmonston is said to have purchased a farm lot in 1727, but his deed is not of record, nor does his name appear on the tax-roll of that year. He was an early settler, however. The stone house which he erected in 1754 is still standing, and is associated with the annals of the town in the war of the Revolution. Peter Post was the purchaser (July 22, 1730) of 500 acres on the north bank of Murderer's Creek. He sold to Dr. John Nicoll, April 12, 1738, leaving behind him the name of "Post Hill," by which one of the elevations on the tract is still known. A considerable portion of the purchase remains in the descendants of Dr. Nicoll.

The most important of the early settlements on this patent, however, was that portion now embraced in the village of Moodna, which was purchased from Mary Ingoldsby by David Mandevill, May 1, 1728. Mandevill sold to Samuel Hazard, who, in company with his brother, Nathaniel Hazard, erected a mill and laid out a township plot under the name of Orangeville.

Haskell Patent.—The patent granted to Col. John Haskell was settled by himself in 1726. He erected a log house on what was afterwards known as the Dusenberry farm, and which is yet standing on lands adjoining the farm late of Ezra P. Thompson. To this portion of the patent he gave the name of "The Hermitage," divided the whole tract into farm lots, and remained in occupation of his original location until his death. Evan Jones, surgeon, was among the early settlers on the patent, having purchased and occupied lot No. 3. His farm of 292 acres was sold by his heirs (1763) to Samuel Brewster, who erected (1768) what is now known as the Brewster house. The western part of the patent was conveyed by Haskell (June 13, 1719) to Elizabeth Stollard, who sold 631 acres to John Crawford, weaver, Oct. 18, 1737. Andrew Crawford sold part of the purchase to Neil McArthur in 1763.

McIntosh Patent.—The first settler on the patent to Phineas McIntosh was John Davis, whose deed recites the sale to him (July 5, 1726) of fifty acres, "on which his house now stands." Robert Boyd and the Dill family were also early settlers. The Davis house is yet standing. It is the third house from Rock tavern, on the Washingtonville road. A considerable portion of the patent passed to the hands of Nathan Smith, through his wife, Susan McIntosh, who established thereon a grist-mill, a fulling-mill, and a store, giving to his place the name of Hunting-Grove. It may be proper to add, that he and the Nathan Smith of the Chambers Patent were different persons of the same name but of no known relationship.

Andrew Johnston Patent.—The district known as Little Britain had its first settler in John Humphrey, who purchased, in 1724-25, a farm-lot of 250 acres, being part of the patent to Andrew Johnston. Peter Mullinder purchased and settled on a farm of the same patent, Sept. 22, 1729; Robert Burnet, of Raritan, N. J., Oct. 7, 1729, and at the same time John Reid; Charles Clinton, of Longford, Ireland, Aug. 22, 1730, and at the same time Mary McClaughry, widow, John Young, Alexander Denniston, and Andrew McDowell. John Humphrey took his deed Dec. 6, 1731, although his land was located and occupied by him in 1724-25. The lot purchased by Mary McClaughry was bounded west by Humphrey, and north by Betsey Mallard, widow, showing the residence there of the Mallard (now Mailler) family prior to 1730. The Mallard farm was subsequently purchased by Robert Carscadden. This patent was the centre of the district known as Little Britain. It was here and in the immediate vicinity that the immigrants located who accompanied Charles Clinton in 1730, and among whom may be mentioned the names of Armstrong, Beatty, Barkly, Brooks, Denniston, Davis, Dunlap, Frazer, Gordon, Gray, Hamilton, Little, Mitchell, McDowell, McClaughry, Nicholson, Oliver, Thompson, Wilson, and Young.

Low & Co's. Patent.—The patent to Cornelius Low and Company (Cornelius Low, Garret Schuyler, and John Schuyler) was divided among the patentees. The third held by John Schuyler passed by his will to his nephews, Brant and Samuel Schuyler, and on the death of the latter to Brant Schuyler. The other patentees sold to Allen Jarratt, April 5, 1720, a very considerable portion of their interests. Cornelius Low sold, Sept. 1, 1734, 600 acres to John Vance, of Newark, who conveyed 200 acres to James Thompson, "lately of Drumeel, in the county of Longford, Ireland, but now resident in Little Britain, in the county of Ulster, in the province of New York," by deed dated May 22, 1738. John Slaughter was a settler on the patent as early as 1726, and Thomas Shaw was a purchaser in 1726 or '29. William Miller, weaver, then a resident, purchased (Nov. 12, 1746) 200 acres. Brant Schuyler sold (Aug. 22, 1744) to Charles Beatty 200 acres, which the latter sold to James McClaughry, July 14, 1749. Thomas King was also an early settler. Beatty and McClaughry came over with the Clinton immigrants in 1730, but were then children. McClaughry became colonel of the Third Regiment of militia, while Beatty, who was the son of a sister of Charles Clinton, became a distinguished clergyman.

Hume Patent.—James Gembell and John Humphrey purchased, in 1724, 300 acres of the patent to Patrick Hume, and divided the same equally between them, April 6, 1730. Gembell sold to Patrick Byrn, March 12, 1744, and Humphrey sold to Patrick McClaughry, Feb. 22, 1769. One-half of the remainder of the patent (850 acres) was sold by James Lithgow, nephew of the patentee, to James Neelly, Henry Man Neelly, William Young, and Patrick McClaughry, March 6, 1749, and the same parties purchased the remaining half (850 acres) from Hannah Lithgow, widow, and John Nicholas, of Philadelphia, April, 1750. June 10, 1757, William Young sold to Samuel Sly 233 acres, now known as the Sly homestead. The Gembell and Humphrey portion of the patent was sold to William Telford and Samuel Falls.

John Johnston, Jr.'s, Patent.—This patent was transferred to Cadwallader Colden on the date of its issue. A branch of the Belknap family settled on it about 1750.

Van Dam Patent.—The patent to Richard Van Dam passed to the possession of Jesse Woodhull, who settled at Blagg's Clove, in the present town of Blooming-Grove, in 1753. David Gallatian, John Moffat, and Peter Welling and his brother held portions of it.

Henderson Patent.—John Wandel was an early purchaser of a portion of the Henderson patent. David Edmonston was also a purchaser; he held part of lots Nos. 3 and 4.

Lewis Morris Patent.—Alexander Denniston, Francis Crawford, Thomas Cook, and William Denniston were owners of 800 acres in 1786. They were descendants of early settlers.

Satisfactory records showing first settlements on the remaining patents and portions of patents have not been found, but from what has already been written it will be seen that few districts in the province were more densely occupied, sparse as was the population; and it may be added that in few districts, if any, were the immigrants of a class who commanded more general respect. The upper portion of the precinct was in woodland, "through which," remarks Cadwallader Colden, Jr., "one could not see the sunshine," and the honor was not with himself alone of felling "the first tree" and taking out "the first stub." The eastern part of the precinct, on the contrary, was partially prepared for cultivation through the removal, as has been already stated, of the forests by employees of the government for shipment to England. Whatever the primal condition, however, the years were not many before no small number of settlers could say, "I have made a small spot in the world, which, when I first entered upon it, was the habitation only of wolves, bears, and other wild animals; now, no unfit habitation for a civilized family. So that I, without vanity, take the comfort of not having been entirely useless in my generation."

The early settlers located along the old Goshen road, the Little Britain road, the Ridge road, the roads constituting the Square, and in the villages of New Windsor and Orangeville. Their dwellings were of logs or stone; in some cases the timber in the former was squared or axe-hewed. Their outbuildings were of logs, and their church edifices but mere unfinished barracks, even after saw-mills had been set in motion. Traveling was mainly on foot or on horseback; wagons were few and rude, many of them being made with wheels cut from the end of a log; sleighs were literally sleds, the runners formed from the limbs of trees or cut from a plank, or took their highest mechanical dignity in runners bent from a sapling, with supporting knees worked out by a draw-knife. If there were those who had European implements, and the one-horse chaise that is now so rarely seen except in pictures, they were few in number. But wealth came in gradually, and in less than forty years the more fortunate were able to write in their inventory of household goods, "several boxes and cases of china, some cases of pictures and looking-glasses, several tables (one a marble slab), chairs, window-curtains, some ornamental china, with images of Shakespeare and Milton in plaster-of-Paris." Silverware, and stoves, and the harpsichord also became known among them; and as opportunity offered they acquired negro slaves, of whom, in 1755, Col. Thomas Ellison owned six; James McClaughry, one; James Edmonston, one; Dr. Evan Jones, six; Capt. Charles Clinton, two; Christian Hartell, two; Joseph Sackett, Sr., one;

Rev. John Moffat, one; Francis Nicoll, one; James Jackson, Jr., one; and John Chambers, two,—a record which is of interest also as showing the social rank of the persons named, for few there were who could own slaves even in those cheap times. At a later period slaves became more abundant, although they were never very numerous in the precinct.

In the settlement of the western part of the town, as well as on patents contiguous but now included in other towns, what are known as the Clinton immigrants of 1731 have so prominent a part that we give, as furnishing the best information now obtainable in regard to those immigrants, the following well-attested copy of Charles Clinton's "Journal":

"JOURNAL OF CHARLES CLINTON'S VOYAGE FROM IRELAND TO AMERICA, 1729.

"A journal of my Voyage and Travels from the County of Longford in the Kingdom of Ireland to Pennsylvania in America, Anno Dom. 1729.

"I took my journey from the County of Longford on Friday the 9th day of May, came to Dublin ye 12th ditto. Entered on shipboard the ship called the George and Ann ye 18th. Sett sail the 20th.

"Came to anchor at Glanarm on the 24th, where Matthew McClaughry and his wife and two of his family went on shore and quit their voyage.

"Sett sail from Glanarm on ye 25th and came to anchor at Green Castle in the Lough of Foyle the 26th, where we stay'd till ye 28th, then sett sail in company with the John of Dublin, bound for New Castle in the same country.

"Ditto, came in sight of Loughsully Lough Swilly ye 30th. Sail'd by Tory (Tory Island) and Horse-head.

"On the 30th at night a strong wind arose yt continued to ye first of June at evening which Lowered our Bowsprit with Hazard to our Masts.

"June ye 2d we had a fair breeze for our westerly course.

"On the 3d ditto my daughter Catharine and son James fell sick of the measles.

"A strong gale of westerly wind continued to ye 10th ditto.

"James Wilson's child died ye 5th.

"On the 7th met ye Mary from Pennsylvania from which she sail'd to us in five weeks and five days.

"On the 8th ditto, a child of James McDowell's died and was thrown overboard.

"On the 10th ye winds came to East and be South.

"On ye 11th changed more Easterly and continues fair and seasonable.

"On the 12th the winde blew North and be East; a fresh gale by which we sailed 40 leagues in 20 hours—and found we were in 49° 20' North Latitude by observation.

"The wind changed on ye 14th to ye South, and so continued to ye 15th, being Sunday morning. One of ye serv'ts on board belonging to one Gerald Cruise threw himself over deck and was drowned.

"Discovered land on ye Continent of America ye 4th day of October 1729."

The voyage occupied one hundred and thirty-nine days from embarkation to landing at Cape Cod, during which time ninety-six deaths occurred on board the ship. The original destination of the Clinton Company was to Pennsylvania, but from the terrible mortality on the vessel, and the shortness of provisions growing out of so long a voyage, the passengers were glad to land at the first available place, which proved to be Cape Cod. Remaining there during the winter, where a number were added to the list of the dead, they came on to New York, where, finding satisfactory terms, they purchased lands at Little Britain, where they gave to the State, in themselves and in their descendants, some of the noblest men in its annals.

III.—VILLAGES, Etc.

VILLAGE OF NEW WINDSOR.

The village of New Windsor is located about one mile south of the boundary line between the city of Newburgh and the town of New Windsor. It was laid out as a township plot in 1749, by a company under the title of "The Proprietors of New Windsor," and was one of the five townships similarly opened for settlement in the present county, viz.: Goshen, in 1714; Newburgh (old town of Newburgh plot), in 1730, New Windsor, in 1749; Orangeville, at perhaps an anterior date; and Chester, at about 1750. The precise date of the organization of the company does not appear, nor are its articles of association on record, if such were entered into. The first entry in its original book of minutes is under date of Sept. 9, 1749, at which time the members of the company were Vincent Matthews, Ebenezer Seely, Michael Jackson, Joseph Sackett, Jr., Daniel Everett, Hezekiah Howell, John Sackett, David Marvin, Evan Jones, and Brant Schuyler, who had prior to that date purchased from John Alsop that portion of the patent to Chambers and Southerland held, under the partition of that patent, by Col. Peter Matthews. Immediately after organizing, the proprietors employed Capt. Charles Clinton as clerk and surveyor, who surveyed and made a map of the plot, and divided it into lots and streets. The first sale by the proprietors was to Henry Brewster and Judah Harlow, in September, 1749, of a store-house, dwelling-house, barn, and lot, the property being probably that which John Alsop had occupied prior to his deed to the proprietors. In 1752 the proprietors obtained a patent for the soil under water adjoining the township plot, uniting for that purpose with John Chambers and Thomas Ellison, and also established a ferry to Fish kill. The proprietors in January, 1751-52, were James Tuthill, Henry Brewster, Samuel Brewster, Brant Schuyler, Evan Jones, John Yelverton, Hezekiah Howell, Joseph Sackett, Jr., Ebenezer Seely, Vincent Matthews, and John Nelson, who executed (January 3d) a deed to Samuel Bayard and Company for twelve lots "at low rates and under value, to encourage the said Samuel Bayard and Company for the building and erecting a glass-house for making glass and potash, which the said Bayard and Company have agreed to erect upon the said lots." In July of the same year the proprietors were Vincent Matthews, Ebenezer Seely, John Yelverton, Hezekiah Howell, John Sackett, Brant Schuyler, Henry Brewster, Evan Jones, James Tuthill, Joseph Sackett, Jr., Paul Richards, Nathan Smith, and Christian Hertell, from which it appears that purchasers of lots became members of the association. In 1772, James Clinton, Robert Boyd, Jr., Theophilus Corwin, George Clinton, David Halliday, and James Dunlap appear in the list, in which year also James Clinton was elected clerk and surveyor, in place of his father. At this point the record closes; it conclusively establishes the date, however, of the founding of the settlement, the grants of soil under water, and the establishment of the manufacture of glass, an industry then in its infancy in the provinces of America. The village and its immediate proximity, already a commercial centre of some importance, through Alsop, Sackett, and Ellison, increased quite rapidly in population, and until after the close of the Revolution gave promise of becoming one of the first cities on the Hudson. Its business enterprises and the causes of its decline are more specifically noticed in the following sketches.

Glass-Works.—The manufacture of glass was commenced some time about 1753. The company, named in the deed "Samuel Bayard and Company," was composed of Christian Hertell, Samuel Bayard, Lodwick Bamber, and Matthew Earnest, and was organized under the firm-name of "Christian Hertell and Company." The works were conducted for a number of years,—it is said until after the Revolutionary war. They were quite famous in their day, and were especially noted as the place at which let- ters coming up by the sloops or brought in by post- riders were left for the settlers for many miles around. The works stood on the bank of the Hudson, in the northeast corner of the village.

A second undertaking of the kind was commenced in 1867 by a company of gentlemen, principally residents of Newburgh, who regarded the peculiar stone of Butter Hill as a superior material for glassware; but the experiment failed. The ordinary sand-glass was subsequently made for a few years.

Commercial Record.—The commercial history of the village has been fully written in another connection,* and need not be repeated here. It was founded by John Ellison early in the century, and by John Alsop and Joseph Sackett contemporaneously with him. The business of the Ellisons, however, survived that of Alsop and Sackett. Their books show the names of the ancestors of a large proportion of the old families of Northern Orange and Southern Ulster, who found in them not only their tradesmen, but their bankers. Although the commerce of the village was continued with more or less activity until the death of Thomas Ellison (2) in 1830, and of Abraham Shultz in 1835, its decadence, as well as that of the village, began at about the commencement of the century. At that time the population of the village was nearly equal to that of Newburgh, although the latter had a much larger acreage. Contributing to its decline and ultimate discontinuance were several causes, among which may be mentioned the active rivalry of the village of Newburgh, the advantages which its property-holders offered to settlers, the superiority of the river-front for commercial purposes, and the efforts of the people generally of that place to improve their trade by the construction of turn-pike-roads. Its fatal misfortune, however, was the folly of some of its land-owners, who made the rivalry of contemporary communities possible. Its river-front, capable as it was, and as it still is, of improvement, was held by one or two individuals, who were thereby enabled to control the destiny of the entire community. They had the trade, they had the roads, they had the wealth, why should they permit competition or encourage development? They did not; they chained up the river-front with paper deeds, denied accommodation to competing business, and dried up the springs of action which impel communities to undertakings in which mutual prosperity is involved. From their presence enterprise and the enterprising fled away. True it is now, as true it was when Goldsmith penned it,—

* See "Trade and Commerce."

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey, Where wealth accumulates, and men decay."

Beyond the manufacture of brick, in which there are six yards engaged, the village has now no commercial business. The prosperous city which, under proper development, might have resulted from its founding, remains a city "neither perfected nor inchoate."

New Windsor Ferry.—All traditions agree that at the village of New Windsor a ferry was maintained to Fishkill at a very early period. There is no evidence, however, of a chartered privilege there as at Newburgh. In 1742, April 12th, Joseph Sackett, Jr., representing himself as "seized in fee of and in a small piece of land at a place called New Windsor, in the county of Ulster, lying on the west side of Hudson's River and contiguous thereto, between the land of John Alsop, on the north, and of Thomas Ellison on the south," petitioned for a "grant of the sole liberty of having a ferry at any convenient place within the distance of five miles on each side of his said land, with the privilege of landing on the opposite shore." In the minutes of the "Proceedings of the Proprietors of New Windsor," Feb. 12, 1755, it is written: "A letter was directed to be sent to Vincent Matthews, asking him to prepare a petition to his Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, for a charter for a public ferry for the benefit of the proprietors of the said township of New Windsor." A still later petition is on file at Albany (Nov. 23, 1762), signed by Matthew DuBois, Jr., praying "a grant of the exclusive right of ferriage on the east side of Hudson's River, for the distance of one hundred and sixty chains (two miles) to the southward of an east line across the said river from the north side of Quassaick Creek, for the purpose of establishing a ferry across said river."

There is no record that any of these petitions were granted, or that that referred to in the minutes of the proprietors was ever presented; but that there was an established ferry there is certain. Morgan and his riflemen passed over the river on its boats in July, 1775, on their march to join Washington at Boston. At that time it was owned by Martin Wiltsie, of Fishkill, and Daniel Carpenter, of New Windsor, and ran from what was long known as the Lower Landing at Fishkill (now Lomas' brickyard) to New Windsor, or to Newburgh if required by passengers. It is said that it was a chartered ferry, but if so the grant is not recorded. Its history is more or less connected with that of the Colden or Newburgh ferry, and of the Continental ferry. The former was granted a charter in 1743, by which its proprietor had the exclusive right to convey passengers from Newburgh to Fishkill, but contained no ferriage right from Fishkill; the latter, the Continental ferry, was established by authority of the quartermaster-general of the Continental army, and ran from the Upper Landing at Fishkill to the foot of Third Street at Newburgh. It was discontinued in 1782. Whether the boats which it employed were taken from the Colden ferry or otherwise supplied does not appear, but its discontinuance was the occasion of the establishment, by Peter Bogardus, of Fishkill, and John Anderson and James Denton, of Newburgh, of a new ferry, which was announced by advertisement as "a private ferry at Fishkill and Newburgh Landings, where the public ferry was formerly kept,"—i.e., from the Upper Landing at Fishkill to the foot of Third Street at Newburgh. Wiltsie and Carpenter replied to this advertisement that its language implied that their ferry "was no more," whereas, on the contrary, their ferry "being opposite to New Windsor," was "the most convenient for travelers," and added: "We have furnished ourselves with excellent new Pettyaugars for that purpose. We have now larger scows building with great expedition, for transporting loaded wagons. All such as chuse to cross at this ferry can do so at the prices set forth underneath, which are as cheap as at any other ferries. For a footman, one shilling; man and horse, two shillings; two-horse wagon, nine shillings; loaded do., twelve shillings; four-horse wagon, fourteen shillings; loaded do., one pound; riding chair, six shillings; phaeton and pair, twelve shillings; ton of iron, eight shillings; hogshead of rum, five shillings." The Wiltsie ferry was consolidated with the Newburgh ferry in 1805,—a fate, it may be remarked, which also overtook the Bogardus and Anderson ferry, as well as a ferry which was subsequently established by John Peter DeWitt, from the Fishkill Long Wharf to the foot of Fourth Street at Newburgh. Prior to its consolidation with the Newburgh ferry, however, Abraham Schultz established a ferry from New Windsor to Fishkill, announcing, in 1800, that he had "provided a complete new ferry boat," which would "ply continually between New Windsor and Fishkill Landing," and that he intended "to pay particular attention to the business." It is said that this ferry was discontinued in 1812, but this is presumed to be an error. No ferry has been maintained, however, for a number of years.

Mr. William H. Bartley, who spent a half-century of his life in boating on the Hudson, principally in the vicinity of Newburgh, states that his brother, Jacob Bartley, was in the employ of Wiltsie and Carpenter for a number of years as their ferryman at New Windsor, sailing a pirogue from the dock immediately north of the Schultz dock to the Lower Landing. On the Fishkill side of the river the ferryman was Crom. Wiltsie, a slave owned by Martin Wiltsie, who also sailed a pirogue.* These vessels and two or more row-boats constituted the ferry appointments. At the Lower Landing, on the Fishkill side, Wiltsie had a large store-house and other accommodations, and sailed from thence to New York a line of sloops. The store-house was burned some years ago. The boats landed passengers at Newburgh whenever it was desired; indeed, a very considerable traffic was carried on between Newburgh and Fishkill.

General Business.—The early business men of the village, aside from those who were engaged in freighting, have a very imperfect record. Capt. Jonathan Lawrence kept store there, and Isaac Schultz & Son a tavern, in 1776. Abraham Van Deursen "opened a house of entertainment at the sign of the Confederation," in 1782. William Scudder opened a land-office in July, 1793. Benjamin S. Hoyt, "practitioner of physic and surgery," sold medicines in 1798. Matthew C. Lyon was a physician there prior to that time; he died in 1798. Richard Edgerton sold dry-goods and groceries, and carried on the shoemaking business; Sandford & Fitch sold dry-goods, ironmongery, crockery, etc.; Isaac Schultz & Son, dry-goods, groceries, and general merchandise; William Ward carried on the silversmith business "a few rods south of the ferry." The advertisements of these gentlemen appear in the New Windsor Gazette, a weekly newspaper, the publication of which was commenced by Jacob Schultz, Nov. 10, 1797. The freighters all kept general stores,—dry-goods and mackerel, silks and hardware, sugar and nails, and the customary stocks of the times. Nathan Smith and Henry Brewster were blacksmiths in colonial days. Isaac Schultz was a school-teacher before he became a merchant.

Famous Buildings.—The headquarters of Washington at the old Thomas Ellison house, immediately south of the old bounds of the old village, is referred to in another place. Aside from this there are no other buildings historically remarkable, except that known as the birthplace of DeWitt Clinton. Notwithstanding all that has been written to the contrary, we have little doubt that he was born here, and not in Deerpark or in Little Britain. Charles Clinton, of Little Britain, who was the clerk of the "proprietors," erected in the village a house, barn, etc., some time about 1760. He transferred his clerkship to his son, James, the father of DeWitt, in 1762; and in 1773 sold and transferred to him the property. James married Mary DeWitt, of Deerpark, and her first child, Alexander, was born there in 1765. In the spring of 1766 he commenced "housekeeping" in his house in New Windsor village, and there his son Charles was born in 1767, and his son DeWitt in 1769. After the death of his father in 1773, James removed to the homestead in Little Britain, and remained there during the Revolution. The only question at issue we believe to be whether James resided in New Windsor village, and that is apparently settled by letters from his father, dated at Little Britain and addressed to Capt. James Clinton at New Windsor, covering the date of DeWitt's birth, and by the facts stated in regard to the house and the business in which James was engaged. During the Revolution the house was occupied, at least a part of the time, as a hospital. It stands on the west side of the road near the foot of New Windsor hill, and although it has been repaired and changed somewhat, it has still the original framework of its first construction.

Presbyterian Church and Cemetery.—The only church in the village, the New Windsor Presbyterian Church, was organized Sept. 14, 1764. Its history is given elsewhere. Attached to it is a cemetery, in which repose the remains of many of the early residents not only of the village, but of the surrounding district.

ORANGEVILLE OR MOODNA.

The purchase and settlement of the district now known as Moodna was made by Nathaniel and Samuel Hazard some time between 1728 and 1740, who laid out a township plot under the name of Orangeville. After laying out their plot, they established a landing at Sloop Hill (a short distance below Smith's Half-way House), and erected a mill and a dwelling-house, the latter more recently owned by Nathaniel Sands, and the former, after many conversions, now constituting a manufactory of linen goods by Whiteside Brothers. At the time of the purchase by the Hazards, the bay at the mouth of the creek had a sufficient depth of water to float vessels of the largest class. Availing themselves of this fact, and as a part of their enterprise, they built a ship on the bank of the creek, just north of the shore road leading to Cornwall; but while the vessel was still on the stocks there came an extraordinary freshet (probably in the spring of 1741), and the soil being a quicksand filled up the mouth of the creek beyond the possibility of navigation for large vessels. They succeeded in getting their ship to the river by the aid of barrels; but the expense incurred, together with the destruction of their township plan, which was contingent upon their harbor, proved their ruin. Their mill subsequently passed to John Vanaurdel (1753), then to John Arthur; from the latter to Joseph Horton (1778); by the executors of Horton to John and James Thorne (1789), who sold to Samuel Sackett in May, 1803. Sackett sold to Lawrence & Van Buren in 1813; the latter to Wyckoff & Van Buren. William B. Leonard purchased it in 1845, and converted it into a cotton factory, and ran it as such up to 1860. The Whiteside Brothers purchased it in 1862, and changed its machinery to the manufacture of linen goods, but without success. During its occupation by Sackett, and subsequently under Lawrence & Van Buren, it had a very extensive patronage, and it was not an unfrequent occurrence to see a line of wagons a half-mile long waiting their turn to unload wheat at its door. The wharf which the Hazards constructed proved also, in the hands of their successors, a profitable venture. No little commerce was carried on from it as late as 1845, the shipments being mainly the products of the flouring-mill and of other manufacturing establishments, for which the valley became noted in later years, and which will presently be noticed. That part of the property which passed to Nathaniel Sands was occupied by him for many years, during a considerable portion of which he conducted a cider-mill and distillery. In the same vicinity Britton Moore had a tannery,—subsequently continued by Mr. Delamater, who also established a rope-walk and a saw- and plaster-mill.

Among the early settlers in the valley was Samuel Brewster, who built a saw-mill on the north side of the creek, just below the bridge at the foot of Forge Hill, and also (1755) a dwelling immediately opposite, now commonly known as the Williams house, and traditionally recognized as the headquarters of Lafayette.* The mill soon gave place to a forge and anchor-shop, known as Brewster's forge, at which, during the Revolution, a considerable portion of the chains were made which were used to obstruct the navigation of the river at Fort Montgomery and at West Point. The site of the old forge can easily be traced by the cinders and débris which are turned up by the plow.

A short distance east from the Brewster or Williams house was a flouring-mill erected by Jonas Williams, and subsequently conducted by himself and sons (1794), under the name of Jonas Williams & Co. Jonathan and Jacob Morrell came into its possession at a later period; they engaged in the manufacture of cut nails, and carried on a very extensive business. Caleb and Thomas Williams succeeded the Morrells and engaged in the manufacture of snuff, which they sold from their wagons throughout the country. Reid & Storm were the next owners; to the business of snuff manufacture they added that of fine-cut tobacco. The next proprietor was Mrs. Miller, whose "Roseleaf Snuff and Tobacco" enjoyed a world-wide fame and gave her a fortune. In the prosecution of her business rose-leaves were of course a necessity, to supply which she planted four acres with the variety known as the Philadelphia rose. The lot on which the planting was made is still known, but the roses and their fragrance have passed away. Mrs. Miller's business was continued for some years by her son-in-law, Andrew H. Mickle, who was at one time mayor of the city of New York.

About 1843, Leonard, Hone & Nicoll put up a factory for the manufacture of cotton goods on the site now occupied by the Highland paper-mills. The first story was of brick and the two upper frame. In September, 1845, it was destroyed by fire. In 1847 it was rebuilt wholly of brick, and run by Mr. Hazelhurst for a few years as a shoddy-mill. In 1850 the property was purchased by D. Carson & Co., formerly of the Carson mills, in Massachusetts (David and David F. B. Carson and Erastus Ide), and converted into a paper-mill, to which use it has since been devoted, with some changes in the proprietorship. It is now owned by James P. Townsend, of Newburgh, and is the only prosecuted manufacturing industry in the ancient township of Orangeville.

The hamlet has a post-office under the name of Moodna; the school-house of District No. 2 is also located there, and it has a few dwellings, principally occupied by operatives in the mills. It is not impossible that in the adjustments and readjustments of manufacturing industry which are constantly going on, the now almost neglected hydraulic power of Murderer's Creek at Moodna will again be utilized.

We have to add to this sketch simply that the name "Moodna" was bestowed by N. P. Willis, whose poetic mind could see nothing valuable in the historic name of Orangeville.

QUASSAICK VALLEY.

The water-power of the Quassaick, on the northern boundary of the town, was not employed at a very early period. The first record of its use was by Robert Boyd, Jr., who erected, in June, 1775, a forge for the manufacture of guns, bayonets, etc. He obtained a contract from the Revolutionary government of the State, by the terms of which he was to receive "three pounds fifteen shillings, New York money, for each good musket, with steel ramrod and bayonet and scabbard." In February, 1776, he was able to write that he had "the best gunsmith's shop in the colonies;" but nevertheless its capacity was limited from the difficulty in obtaining workmen. The first regiments organized in the State were mainly armed with guns of his manufacture. He relinquished the business some time about 1800, and converted the works into a plaster-mill. The next change was in 1808, when George Parker and Abner Armstrong advertised that they had "erected machines for breaking and carding wool at the plaster-mill of Robert Boyd, on the road leading from New Windsor to Newburgh, one mile from each place." The property was sold by Samuel Boyd to George Reid, who converted it into a paper-mill. From the Reid estate it passed to John Barker, who manufactured hats. Barker sold to Benj. Carpenter, at which time it was operated by John H. Waters, who manufactured woolen goods. Carpenter sold to George Crawshaw, Crawshaw to William H. Beede, Beede to Edward Haigh, by whom it was operated under the title of the "Valley Woollen Mills."

The second privilege (long known as Schultz' mill) was occupied by Governor George Clinton, who erected a grist-mill and a saw-mill. He sold the property to Hugh Walsh, including the adjoining farm, in 1790, and Walsh, on the 5th of July of that year, sold to Isaac Schultz. The property conveyed by Walsh consisted of thirty-two acres, extending west from Hudson's River to lands of Robert Boyd, and included the undivided half part of "grist-mill stream of water" and land under water on the Hudson. The mill stood a short distance west of the Hudson, on the east side of the old King's road. In 1794 (July 6th), Schultz sold to Daniel Byrnes the lot on the east, including one-half of the mill building, the division line being "the middle of the post next west of the north door of said mill," including one-half of the flume, etc., and two grist-mills were thereafter run under one roof, the proprietors being particular to say "their several mills" in their advertisements. Isaac Schultz continued his mill until his death in 1802, when it came into the possession of his brother Jacob, who sold it to Peter Townsend. The Byrnes mill and property attached passed from Dinah Byrnes, widow of Daniel, to Caleb Byrnes, who sold to Richard Trimble in 1801, and it was continued by him for some years. Trimble sold to Elisha Hale in 1835, and Elisha Hale to Philip A. Verplanck in 1837. Verplanck closed the race-way and suffered the mill to decay on its foundations.

The third privilege was occupied by Hugh Walsh, who retained one-half of the mill-stream in his deed to Schultz, and who, in company with John Craig, erected, in 1792, the paper-mill afterwards owned by his son, John H. Walsh, and now by his grandson, J. DeWitt Walsh. This mill is still in successful operation, and is situated at the extreme west end of the valley.

The fourth privilege was that embraced in the purchase from Jacob Schultz by Peter Townsend, and was known as the cannon-foundry. This foundry was erected by Peter Townsend, in 1816, on a site immediately west of the Schultz mill, and consisted of two furnaces and four boring-mills. Here, in July, 1817, was tested "the first cannon ever manufactured in the State of New York," and which, for superiority of "metal and accuracy of firing," had then never been excelled. The undertaking was not a financial success, however, and the property passed into the possession of the United States government and subsequently to John A. Tompkins, about 1836, who converted it into a machine-shop. Mr. Tompkins was accidentally drowned in December, 1838, and the property came into the possession of Charles Ludlow and Christopher B. Miller, from whom it passed to Mr. Sterritt, who converted it into a pin-factory. This business also failed, and Joseph Longking and Aaron F. Palmer took it for the manufacture of daguerrean instruments, cases, etc., but with no better success. The last occupant was John Gray, who converted it into a flour-mill. While being occupied by him it was destroyed by fire. Those who remember the activity which at one time prevailed here, can best appreciate the desolation that now sits with folded wings on its ruins.

West of the old Boyd mill, George Reid established a paper-mill, date not ascertained. Reid died in 1837 or 1838, and from his executors the property passed to John H. Walsh & Sons; from them to Samuel A. Walsh; from him to Charles H. Havemeyer; from Havemeyer's executors to Mrs. Havemeyer, and from her to Edward Haigh. This property, formerly the Quassaick Woolen-Mills, now the Windsor Woolen-Mills, is next east of the high bridge on Quassaick Avenue.

The last of the milling enterprises is on a site sold by John H. Walsh to Alexander Marshall; Marshall to Darlington; Darlington to Isaac K. Oakley; Oakley to Adams & Bishop. This mill has been for several years engaged in the manufacture of paper.

VAIL'S GATE OR MORTONVILLE.

Notwithstanding repeated efforts to change its name to Mortonville, the settlement long known as Vail's Gate retains that title in local records and in railroad connections. It is a hamlet at the junction of the New Windsor and Blooming-Grove turnpike and the Snake Hill turnpike, and immediately southeast of the junction of the Newburgh Branch and Short-Cut Railroads. The name is from Mr. Vail, an old resident, and for many years keeper of the gate on the Blooming-Grove turnpike. For the same reason it was at one time known as Tooker's Gate. It has a school-house, and a short distance east is the Vail's Gate or Union Methodist Episcopal church. The latter is one of the oldest Methodist societies in the county, having been founded as the John Ellison class in 1789. The Edmonston house is also located here; it will be referred to hereafter. East from the Methodist church is the John Ellison house, historically known as "Knox's Headquarters," and adjoining it is the Ellison grist-mill and the building known as the first Methodist church. The house and mill were erected in 1754, the church building in 1790. The latter was not strictly for Methodists, but for itinerant preachers of all denominations. From the occupation of the property by Maj. Charles F. Morton, we have the name of Mortonville, which he once succeeded in grafting upon the list of post-offices.

LITTLE BRITAIN.

The boundaries of the district known as Little Britain have never been very accurately defined. Not unlike ancient New Windsor, which is said to have extended twenty miles on the Hudson when it was but little more than two, it has been written that Little Britain embraced the entire country bounded east by the village of New Windsor, west by Montgomery, north by Newburgh, and south by Blooming-Grove, including part of the latter, as well as of Montgomery and Hamptonburgh. These traditional boundaries are not without some probability, if they are considered as representing the radius of the settlement more or less intimately associated with those made on the patent to Andrew Johnston, but the latter must be accepted as not only the centre of the district, but the seat of the name. His patent (see Map of Patents) lies west of the Little Britain church. The main road, leading from Newburgh to Goshen, runs through the centre of it. Beginning at the church, it extends west to the road that leads to the farm now owned by James Getty (opposite the residence of Joseph B. Burnet). On the south it is bounded by the south lines of the farm now or late of John S. Bull, and the farm now owned by Peter and George Welling. The north lines of the farms of Joseph H. Howell, Jarvis Knap, and the heirs of John R. Scott form its north boundary. It is one hundred chains in width, and two hundred chains in length, and is supposed to have contained 2000 acres. Its north and south lines now run about north twenty-two degrees east.* The patentee ran a division line through the centre of the patent, north and south, and sold it in lots or farms to different parties.

The first purchaser and settler on the patent was John Humphrey, in 1724, who located on the north part west of the division line, on the farm now or lately owned by Joseph H. Howell. The second purchaser was Peter Mullinder (as the name was then spelled), in 1729, whose farm lot of 250 acres adjoined Humphrey on the south. The third purchaser was Robert Burnet, in 1729; his farm adjoined that of Mullinder. The fourth was John Reid, the father-in-law of Burnet, who purchased at the same date, 1729. Charles Clinton, Mrs. Mary McClaughry, Alexander Denniston, and John Young were the next in order, in 1731. There was also a purchase by one Maillard (date uncertain), subsequently the Carscadden farm. These purchasers absorbed the patent. Mullinder, who came in in 1729, was an Englishman and perhaps a former resident of the section of London known as Little Britain. However this may be, in imitation of the custom in his native land, he named his settlement or farm Little Britain, and from him and his farm the title was accepted and extended not only to the patent, but to the district, in precisely the same manner that "my farm called Warwick" became applied to the town of Warwick. It will be admitted, of course, that the honor of conferring the name has been given to Charles Clinton, but without authority; on the contrary, Clinton was the last man who had regard for Britain in any of its aspects. He was of Irish birth and an exile, and had he had a name to bestow would not have selected one so suggestive of many of his misfortunes.

All through the large district to which the name was applied the great majority of the settlers were Scotch-Irish or English-Irish, and nearly all were Presbyterians. Agreeing very generally in their religious views, they were also remarkable for the uniformity of their political convictions. When it came down to the era of the Revolution, there were but few who were Tories or King's men, and these were mainly members of the Church of England, of whom there was a sprinkling in the neighborhood. Charles Clinton, through his sons, Governor George and Gen. James, and his grandson Governor DeWitt, has, perhaps, the most extended historical reputation in the politics of the State; while in the religious field the line of descendants from his sister, Mrs. Christiana Beatty, now represented by Rev. Charles Clinton Beatty, D.D., the influence of the Clinton blood is not less marked. The neighborhood was composed of men of strong natural abilities and marked character.

There are two churches in the district,—the Little Britain Presbyterian and the Little Britain Methodist Episcopal.

THE SQUARE.

The Square—by some now called Washington Square—is a part of Little Britain, although it is not completed in the town of New Windsor. Its name is from the fact that the public roads run in such direction as to form a diamond. These roads are that leading to Newburgh, the Goshen road, the Little Britain road, and the road to New Windsor. At the outbreak of the Revolution, it received the name of Liberty Square, a title by which it is also designated on Clinton's map of the town in 1798. The appellation is said to have been bestowed from the fact that there were none living on any one of the four roads, whose disloyalty was questionable. The Falls house, the headquarters of St. Clair and Gates, and the quarters of Lafayette are a part of the history of the Square.

RAGVILLE, ROCK TAVERN, ETC.

"Ragville" is the title of a hamlet of half a dozen houses and a blacksmith's shop, about two miles west of the Little Britain church. Its name came from a man named Davenport, who had a store there and exchanged goods for rags. The first property beyond was formerly the famous Morrison tavern and distillery, and further west Rock tavern. Both of these taverns were in early times important factors in the social and political life of the district. Rock tavern takes its name from the rock on which it is erected. Company trainings were held here, as well as political meetings and Fourth of July celebrations, although the former and the latter have not been heard of in the memory of the present generation. It was here also that the initiatory steps were taken in the organization of the present county of Orange. Both taverns were embraced in the road district known at an early date as Hunting-Grove, which extended west to the Otterkill, and included the settlement then known as Hunting-Grove, but more recently called Bushkirk's Mills and Burnside Post-office. The name of the settlement was bestowed by Nathan Smith, who established mills and a store there, and figured largely in local and State politics. A considerable portion of the district is now in the town of Hamptonburgh, while the name Hunting-Grove, after the adoption of Blooming-Grove by the inhabitants of

* These boundaries and many other facts have been kindly furnished by Mr. Joseph B. Burnet, surveyor, and for several years supervisor of the town.

"BROOKSIDE."

RES. OF ROBERT MORISON, LITTLE BRITAIN, ORANGE CO N.Y.

THE above is a view of the old Belknap homestead, which was purchased by Mr. Morison from Alexander Denniston in 1872. The latter bought it from George A. Denniston, who inherited it from his father, James Denniston, he having bought it from Benjamin Belknap in 1820. Benjamin inherited it from his father, Jeduthan Belknap, in 1817. The house, though somewhat changed, was built about the year 1770. The mill seen on the margin (still kept in repair and used by Mr. Morrison for lumbering) was built about the same time.

The old burying-ground on the place, where lie the remains of a number of the Belknap family, is still kept in repair by their descendants, and often visited.

that town, fell into disuse. Another of the once noted localities now lost to the town was Stonefield, the residence and grammar-school of Rev. John Mofatt, who had among his pupils some of the most noted men of earlier times.

IV.—REVOLUTIONARY LOCALITIES.

WASHINGTON'S HEADQUARTERS.

The headquarters of Washington at New Windsor were at the Ellison homestead, then of Col. Thomas Ellison, and subsequently of his son, William Ellison. The house was torn down some years ago. It stood on the brow of the hill on the east side of the road, immediately south of the line of the village of New Windsor. Washington came to this place in June, 1779, and again in the fall of 1780, and remained until the summer of 1781. The leading events in the army during this period were the revolt of the Pennsylvania troops under Gen. Wayne, in camp at Morristown, N. J., and the arrangement of the details of the campaign of 1781, which closed with the victory at Yorktown in October.

The circumstances which led to the estrangement between Washington and Hamilton, resulting in the withdrawal of Hamilton from his position as aide-de-camp, occurred here in 1781. It is referred to simply to correct the impression which prevails that Hamilton was the chosen counselor of Washington; that he and not Washington was the author of the reply to the Newburgh Letters, and that he and not Washington was the author of many of the public papers of Washington, including his Farewell Address. The facts are that after the episode at the Ellison house, Washington had no intercourse with Hamilton whatever, except such as became necessary in their official relations as members of the Constitutional Convention of 1786, and subsequently while Hamilton was Secretary of the Treasury during the first and part of the second term of Washington's administration. The story, as related by Hamilton, in a letter to Gen. Schuyler, under date of "Headquarters, New Windsor, Feb. 18, 1781," is as follows:

"Since I had the pleasure of writing you last, an unexpected change has taken place in my situation. I am no longer a member of the General's family. This information will surprise you, and the manner of the change will surprise you more. Two days ago the General and I passed each other on the stairs. He told me he had wanted to speak to me. I answered that I would wait upon him immediately. I went below and delivered Mr. Tilghman a letter to be sent to the commissary, containing an order of a pressing and interesting nature. Returning to the General I was stopped on the way by the Marquis de La Fayette, and we conversed together about a minute on a matter of business. He can testify how impatient I was to get back, and that I left him in a manner which, but for our intimacy, would have been more than abrupt. Instead of finding the General, as is usual, in his room, I met him at the head of the stairs, where, accosting me in an angry tone, 'Colonel Hamilton,' he said, 'you have kept me waiting at the head of the stairs these ten minutes. I must tell you, sir, you treat me with disrespect.' I replied without petulance, but with decision, 'I am not conscious of it, sir, but since you have thought it necessary to tell me so, we part.' 'Very well, sir,' said he, 'if it be your choice,' or something to that effect, and we separated. In less than an hour afterwards, Tilghman came to me in the General's name, assuring me of his desire, in a candid conversation, to heal a difference which could not have happened except in a moment of passion."

This interview Hamilton declined, and excused the step which he had taken to his dislike for the office of an aide-de-camp "as having a kind of personal dependence."

In regard to the occupancy of the house by Washington in 1779, the following note has been preserved among the papers of Col. Thomas Ellison:

"HEADQUARTERS, SMITH'S CLOVE, 21st JUNE, 1779.

" $\frac{1}{2}$ past 5 P.M.

"His Excellency, the commander-in-chief, thinks proper to accept your house as Headquarters, from the description I gave him on my return from thence last night. He with his guard set off immediately, and his baggage will follow. Your most obt. Humble Servt.

"To Col. ELLISON.

C. GIBB."

Gibb was then the captain-commandant of Washington's guard. During the winter of 1781, Mrs. Washington occupied the house in company with her husband.

PLUM POINT.

Plum Point, the site of the first European settlement in Orange County, lies a short distance below the Ellison house, and forms the north bank of Murderer's Creek at its confluence with the Hudson. The theory in regard to its formation is that in the convulsion attending the dissolution of the glacial period it was pushed out from its original bed by the pressure of water and ice. It has an area of about eighty acres, approached over a natural causeway. On the southeast side was located, in a very early part of the war, a battery of fourteen guns, designed to assist in maintaining the obstructions to the navigation of the river, which at this point consisted of chevaux-de-frise stretching across to Pallopel's Island. The battery was maintained during the war for the purpose originally designed, and for the protection of the works in the vicinity. It was known in official orders as "Capt. Machin's Battery at New Windsor." Outlines of its embrasures may yet be seen, and can be approached by visitors from the residence of the proprietor or by the old army road, which runs around the face of the hill from the Nicol homestead.

LAFAYETTE'S HEADQUARTERS.

The Brewster house, known as Lafayette's headquarters, is at Moodna, just beyond the paper-mills of James P. Townsend. Of its occupation by Lafayette there is only traditionary evidence; at best it was so occupied by him for a brief period in 1779, while Washington was at the Ellison house. The house, which is now occupied by tenants, has suffered very little change, the old stairways and the quaintly-carved mantels being retained, though showing the wear of time. The vault in the cellar is said to have been the place of deposit of the money known as the "Dutch loan," but on what authority does not appear. The building was erected by Samuel Brewster, it is said, in 1755, and after his death was occupied by his son-in-law, Jonas Williams. The fact that Mr. Brewster was an ardent Whig and a member of the Committee of Safety, as well as a most reputable citizen, may have brought Lafayette to his residence.

EDMONSTON HOUSE.

The Edmonston house, at Vail's Gate, is known as the headquarters of Gens. Gates and St. Clair.* Very little is said concerning their occupation of it, however; indeed, there is doubt in regard to the matter, it being traditionally asserted that the hospital stores and headquarters of the medical staff were here, and that the officers named were at the building on the opposite side of the road, where they were stationed during the winter of 1782-83. Dr. Thacher writes, under date of April 30, 1781, "I accompanied Dr. John Hart to New Windsor, to pay our respects to Dr. John Cochran, who is lately promoted to the office of director-general of the hospitals of the United States, as successor to Dr. Shippen, resigned." On the 15th of December, 1782, he writes, "Dined with my friends Drs. Townsend, Eustis, and Adams, at the hospital, in company with Gens. Gates and Howe, and their aides, Dr. Cochran, our surgeon-general, and several other officers. Our entertainment was ample and elegant." The hospital referred to was near the Temple on the camp-ground. The Edmonston building is of stone, and is said to have been erected in 1755. It stands a short distance from the point where the Short-Cut intersects the Newburgh branch of the Erie Railroad, and certainly does not present the appearance of capacity for a very large military family.

FALLS HOUSE.

The Falls house, Little Britain Square, was occupied by Governor George Clinton, as commander-in-chief of the military forces of the State, for a short time in October, 1777. Clinton and his brother, Gen. James, were in command at the forts in the Highlands at the time of their reduction, Oct. 7, 1777. The former was then a resident of the house subsequently of Capt. Charles Ludlow, a short distance north of New Windsor village. On the fall of the forts his family made hasty retreat to the interior, and found temporary refuge at the residence of Mrs. Falls. The troops who escaped from the forts, as well as the militia of the district that had not been engaged, were rendezvoused in the vicinity, and reorganized prior to their march for the defense of Kingston. While waiting for his men to come in, on the 10th of October, at noon, a horseman came near the camp, where being challenged by a sentinel, he replied, "I am a friend and wish to see Gen. Clinton." On being conducted to the Governor's headquarters he discovered that he had made a mistake. He had been sent by Sir Henry Clinton, of the British forces, with a message to Gen. Burgoyne, and after passing the Highlands had encountered troops in British uniform. Presuming that Sir Henry's forces had moved forward, he drew near the camp only to learn that he was within the lines of the American forces, some of whom were clothed in British uniform, which had been captured from a transport some time previously and had not been re-dyed. When he discovered his mistake he was observed to swallow something. To recover the document, or whatever it might be, Dr. Moses Higby, who was at the camp, administered a powerful emetic. This brought from him a small silver ball of an oval form shut with a screw in the middle. "Though closely watched," writes Clinton, "he had the art to conceal it a second time. I made him believe I had taken one Capt. Campbell, another messenger who was out on the same business; that I learned from him all I wanted to know, and demanded the ball on pain of being hung up instantly and cut open to search for it. This brought it forth." The ball was found to contain the following:

"FORT MONTGOMERY, OCT. 8, 1777.

"Nous y courons we come) and nothing between us but Gates. I sincerely hope this little success of ours may facilitate your operations. In answer to your letter of the 28th Sept., by C. C., I shall only say, I cannot presume to order, or even advise, for reasons obvious. I heartily wish you success.

Faithfully yours,

"GEN. BURGUYNE.

H. CLINTON "

Taylor, for that was the messenger's name, was placed in custody, and on October 14th was tried by court-martial as a spy. He pled his character as a messenger, but without avail,—he was sentenced to death. The final entry in reference to him occurs under date of October 18th, when Clinton's army was at Hurley: "Daniel Taylor, a spy, lately taken in Little Britain, was hung here. The Rev. Mr. Romeine and myself attended him yesterday, and I have spent the morning in discoursing to him, and attended him to the gallows. He did not appear to be either a political or a gospel penitent."

Lossing, in his "Field-Book," states—not without authority it is presumed—that Maj. Armstrong, the author of the Newburgh Letters, had his quarters at the Falls house, and that there those in the secret held their private conferences.

KNOX'S HEADQUARTERS.

A short distance west of Moodna, on the table-lands of New Windsor, stand the house and mills so long occupied by John Ellison, and erected by his father, Col. Thomas Ellison, in 1754, William Bull, the husband of Sarah Wells, being the builder, as appears by the original contract. It is a picturesque building of stone, with high ceilings, wainscoting, dormer-windows, heavy sash, and small panes of glass. Rochambeau is said to have occupied rooms in it during his brief visit to Washington, and at a later period it was similarly occupied by Gens. Knox and Greene. The record of occupation consists of a certificate signed by Gen. Knox, dated West Point, Sept. 9, 1783, stating that Gens. Greene and Knox, and Cols. Biddle and Wadsworth, "occupied three rooms, as military quarters, in Mr. John Ellison's house five weeks in the months of June and July, 1779;" and that "I, the subscriber (Gen. Knox), occupied three rooms as military quarters ten weeks in the fall of the same year; also, from the 20th of November, 1780, to the 4th of July, 1781, I occupied two rooms as military quarters; and from May, 1782, to September, I occupied one room for the same purpose, making fourteen weeks." Altogether his residence there covered a period of over one year, a portion of which time, probably from November, 1780, to July, 1781, his wife was with him. Tradition affirms that on one occasion Mrs. Knox gave an entertainment while here, at which Washington opened the dance with Maria Colden, daughter of Cadwallader Colden, Jr., of Coldenham; that among the guests were Gitty Wynkoop and Sally Jansen, of Kingston, who were great belles in their day, and that a French officer who was present gallantly inscribed the names of this trio of beauties with his diamond ring on one of the small window-panes in the sash of the principal room. The names remain to attest the truth of the story, the glass having been carefully and almost miraculously preserved for nearly one hundred years. One feels almost as deep an interest in these young women as in the graver military heroes who were there present. Mrs. Col. Hamilton gave her tradition of the assemblage to Mr. Lossing for his "Field-Book," but now that it appears on written record that she was not present, her story that Washington never danced has little value. Mr. Robert R. Ellison writes: "Maria Colden and Sallie Jansen were relatives of John Ellison, the former through his sister's marriage with Cadwallader Colden, Jr., and the latter through his wife, Catharine Jansen, of Kingston. Gitty Wynkoop was a visitor at Colden's with Sallie Jansen, and with Maria Colden attended the ball. On that occasion Washington did not open the dance with Maria Colden, but, the doors being thrown open, promenaded through the rooms with her. This statement has been a tradition in our family, members of which were present, and has been confirmed by others who were witnesses." The identity of Maria Colden is not fully established. Cadwallader Colden, Jr., had no daughter Maria, nor do we find a trace of her in Cadwallader Colden's letter, in which he gives the names of his children and also those of his sisters. The witnesses of her existence are her name on the glass and the tradition which links it with that of Washington:

* Gen. Gates was at the Ellison house (Knox's headquarters) in December, 1782.

"So perish forms as fair as those Whose cheeks now living blush the rose;
Their glory turned to dust."

About three hundred feet west of the house stands the building generally called the first Methodist church in the county of Orange. It has been noticed in another place. Its real connection with the early religious history of the town is more properly expressed in the term Union church,—a building open to all denominations, although Clinton enters it on his map of 1799 as Methodist. The Methodists certainly held services there until 1807.

THE CAMP-GROUND AND TEMPLE.

It would be as difficult, perhaps, to fix the periods at which some part of New Windsor was not occupied by either militia or regular troops during the Revolution as to specify the times when it was so occupied, or by what particular bodies of men. Aside from the militia companies, it is certain that at least a portion of the regiment of Col. James Clinton in the Canada expedition of 1775 was organized here. In 1776 the battery on Plum Point was mounted; in 1777, Governor Clinton reorganized at Little Britain the militia and fugitives from the Highland forts; in 1779-80, nine brigades of the Continental army were encamped here, and again in 1780, '81, '82, and '83. There is every reason to suppose that the well-known camp-ground of 1782-83 was also that of the previous encampments. However this may be, there is no doubt in regard to at least a portion of the grounds occupied in the years last named. Dr. Thacher writes, under date of Oct. 30, 1782: "At reveille, on the 26th inst., the left wing of the army, under the command of Gen. Heath, decamped from Verplanck's Point and marched to the Highlands; took up our lodging in the woods, without covering, and were exposed to a heavy rain during the night and day. Thence we crossed the Hudson to West Point, and marched over the mountain called Butter Hill; passed the night in the open field, and the next day reached the ground, where we are to erect log huts for our winter-quarters, near New Windsor;" and Chaplain Gano writes, "On my return to the army we encamped at New Windsor, and erected some huts and a place for worship on Lord's day." In the general order of Washington, April 19, 1783, calling for a detail of men "from the several corps in this cantonment," the names are given as follows: "Maryland Detachment, Jersey Regiment, Jersey Battalion, First New York Regiment, Second New York Regiment, Hampshire Regiment, Hampshire Battalion, First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, and Eighth Massachusetts Regiments." The encampment was marked out by Gen. Heath. The huts occupied by the soldiers were built in line on the slope of the hill on the farm late of Daniel Moores and Gilbert Tompkins. They were of logs, and in size fourteen by sixteen feet, with roofs and doors of split-oak slabs. They were six feet high, made tight with clay and wood, rising a foot or two above the roof. The roof sloped one way, and was steep enough to shed rain. One door and one window opened on the street opposite the fireplace. The subordinate officers had huts with two windows in the rear of the rank, and those of a higher grade occupied barracks near the Temple, in the vicinity of which was also the hospital and the bakery, and a short distance east was the burial-ground.

The space between the camp and the Temple was partly a swamp, which was crossed by a causeway made of logs. Immediately in front of the camp was the parade-ground. In the graveyard, now overgrown with trees, are still marked the resting-places of the dead. The Temple and other buildings are gone; the parade-ground has a portion of its flat stone flagging unremoved; part of the causeway remains; and some of the huts can yet be traced.

The Temple, to which so frequent reference has been made, was erected by Gen. Heath's order, for general purposes, although Mr. Gano says it was specially designed as a place "for public worship on Lord's day." It was officially known as "The Public Building," but was sometimes called "The New Building," to distinguish it from some previous structure. It was made of hewn logs, and was eighty feet long by forty wide, with barrack roof. The tradition is that it was dedicated by a carousal of so gross a nature that the title by which it was to be known, "The Temple of Virtue," was changed to "The Temple," but this may well be questioned, and the origin of the name assigned to its connection with the Masonic fraternity. All public meetings of the officers were held in it, and it was also used by the Masonic fraternity, of which order American Union Lodge accompanied the army.* It was in this lodge that Lafayette was made a Mason. When the cessation of hostilities was announced a celebration was held here, of which Thacher writes: "On the completion of eight years from the memorable battle of Lexington, the proclamation of Congress for a cessation of hostilities was published at the door of the public building, followed by three huzzas; after which a prayer was offered to the Almighty Ruler of the world by the Rev. Mr. Gano, and an anthem was performed by voices and instruments." The celebration was on a grand scale, and embraced similar ceremonies at West Point and at Fishkill. It was indeed a day of general rejoicing, and does not appear to have closed even at night, when a feu-de-joie rang along the lines, three times repeated, accompanied by the discharge of cannon, "and the mountain-sides resounded and echoed like tremendous peals of thunder, and the flashing from thousands of firearms in the darkness of the evening was like unto vivid flashings of lightning from the clouds,"—for, on the morning of the day on which it occurred, Washington, in his general order, called for a detail of men from "this cantonment" to "square and deliver at the New Building on Monday next, ninety-six pieces of timber seven inches square, of an aggregate length of three hundred and thirty feet," and requested "each commanding officer of a brigade to appoint an officer to assist Col. Gouvion in making preparations for the illumination," the officers so appointed to meet "at the New Building at twelve o'clock to-morrow" (20th). When this supplemental celebration was held does not appear, but it was at the Temple, and possibly on the 20th of April. It is one of the many cases in which Revolutionary events stop short at the statement of mere facts and leave description to be completed by conjecture.

In the Temple was also held the meeting called by Washington to consider the Newburgh Letters. With the details of this meeting the readers of this volume have already been made acquainted. In the order of time the meeting preceded the celebration, it having been held on the 15th of March. It was one of the most important assemblages ever held in the army; it was called to determine the question whether the army would rise superior to the grievances under which it had long suffered, or whether it would precipitate a separation between the military and civil powers to "the ruin of both;" it won, in its results, the plaudit, "Had this day been wanting the world had never seen the last stage of perfection that human nature is capable of attaining."

There was still another meeting at the Temple which was not without marked influence in the future of the nation,—the meeting for the organization of "The Society of the Cincinnati," the avowed object of which was to perpetuate among the officers of the army the memory of the relations of respect and friendship which had grown up among them during the trying and momentous scenes through which they had passed, "to endure as long as they shall endure, or any of their oldest male posterity, and at the failure thereof, the collateral branches who they may judge worthy of becoming its supporters and members." The incipient steps to the organization of this society are shown by Maj.-Gen. Heath's orders of May 3, 1783, in which he requested the officers of the Massachusetts line to meet "at the New Public Building" and elect one of their number "to meet the general officers, and such delegates as may be chosen by the other lines, on Tuesday next, at the above-mentioned place, for the purpose of considering the expediency of the officers of the army forming themselves into a military society." The meeting of delegates was held on the 10th, and a plan for organization submitted and referred to a committee, who revised and reported the same at a meeting held at Steuben's quarters at Fishkill, on the 13th, when it was adopted and signed by those present, under the indorsement, "Done at the Cantonment on Hudson River, in the year 1783." The controversies which subsequently grew out of this organization need not be considered in this connection. Surviving the hostility of its early opponents, the society now stands as the representative of the heroic age of the republic, a golden chain, through the medium of which the descendants of its members perpetuate the memory and services of their fathers.*

The encampment here was terminated June 23, 1783, and the troops not on furlough removed to West Point. The following orders by Washington explain the removal more fully:

"HEADQUARTERS, NEWBURGH, June 20, 1783.

"The troops of this cantonment will march on Monday morning, five o'clock, by the left. The senior brigadier in the Massachusetts line will conduct the column over Butter Hill to West Point. The baggage, with a proper escort, to go by water. These corps, with the troops already at West Point, will compose the garrisons of that post and dependencies. Major-General Knox will be pleased to expedite, in the best manner he is able, the building of an arsenal and magazines, agreeably to the instructions he has received from the Secretary of War." . . .

"HEADQUARTERS, NEWBURGH, June 21, 1783.

"When the army marches from this cantonment, a detachment is to remain to do the ordinary duties at Newburgh, etc. They will be relieved every nine days. For this duty four New Hampshire companies will commence to-morrow."

"HEADQUARTERS, NEWBURGH, Sunday, June 22, 1783.

"When the troops move off the ground, a surgeon or mate will remain with the sick of each regiment for a day or two until the huts can be made ready to receive them. A sufficient number of orderly men to take care of the sick must also remain with them."

The following advertisement shows that the removal was effected at the time appointed, although the headquarters of Washington at Newburgh was continued until August, and the detachment spoken of in his order remained until the disbandment in November:

"The troops of the cantonment near New Windsor having removed to the post of West Point, all farmers and others who have veal, mutton, poultry, and other small meats to dispose of, also vegetables of all kinds, are hereby invited to bring the same to this point, where they will find a ready market, and ample protection in their persons and property."

V.—REVOLUTIONARY INCIDENTS.

While New Windsor was the seat of many events of a general character connected with the war of the Revolution, its local history is not marked by those which were especially important. It was from its bosom that the then young and vigorous George Clinton, who had made his mark in the Colonial Assembly from 1768 to 1775, in opposition to the British ministry, sprang into the leadership of the rebellion in his native State; and although there were some who refused to follow him, the great majority of his townsmen were his firm supporters. The primary steps in the rebellion—the non-importation resolutions of the Continental Congress of 1774—were heartily approved, and in the subsequent organization of a "Committee of Safety and Observation,"

* The following original members of the society were from New Windsor: Robert Burnet, lieutenant, New York Artillery; James Clinton, brigadier-general; George Clinton, honorary member; Alexander Clinton, lieutenant, New York Artillery; Daniel Denniston, lieutenant, New York Artillery; George I. Denniston, lieutenant, New York Artillery; James Gregg, captain, Third New York Infantry; Jonathan Lawrence, captain, Sappers and Miners; Samuel Logan, major, Fifth New York Infantry; Joseph Morrell, ensign, First New York Infantry; William Strachan, lieutenant, New York Artillery; William Scudder, lieutenant, New York Artillery.

the action of the precinct was not uncertain. The signatures to the "Pledge of Association" and its military organizations have been given elsewhere. The records of those organizations show that wherever the flag of rebellion floated—whether amid the snows of Quebec or on the burning plains of Monmouth, at Fort Schuyler, Saratoga, and Yorktown—the precinct was honorably represented by her sons in its defense. A few incidents, not elsewhere recorded, are given here.

ARREST OF CADWALLADER COLDEN, JR.

It was not necessary, in New Windsor or in any of the towns of the county, that many of the duties devolving upon the Committee of Safety, such as the appointment of town officers, etc., should be performed, the local authorities having followed or led their constituents in the revolutionary movement; but the reorganization of the militia and the arrest of the persons who were classed as "inimical to the American cause" became its principal field of action. In many cases of arrest the New Windsor committee acted in concert with that of Newburgh. The most important action of this character, viewed from the point of social standing and local influence, was the arrest of Cadwallader Colden, Jr., at his residence in Coldenham, in the precinct of Hanover (now Montgomery). The story as related by himself states that, in June, 1776, between eleven and twelve o'clock at night, his house was surrounded by a company of armed men, who, on being questioned, stated that they had been sent by order of the joint committee of Newburgh and New Windsor, with instructions to search his house, which they proceeded to do. Standing guard over the premises until the next day, they then conducted him to the house of Mr. Jackson, in New Windsor, where he was confined twenty-four hours, although Mr. Thomas Ellison offered to become bail for his appearance. When taken before the committee, he was informed that the charge against him was that of being "inimical to the American cause." He replied that, while he had had convictions in regard to the duty of the people, and had expressed them at a time when he thought it possible to ward off the calamities of war, he had subsequently "entirely avoided interfering in any shape in public affairs." Given the choice of trial by the joint committee or by the county committee of Ulster, he accepted the latter, and was removed to the jail at Kingston. His case was brought before the general committee at New Paltz, July 4th, when, on his refusal to sign the pledge of association, and also to give his pledge of honor "that he would immediately equip himself for the field of battle, and in case of actual invasion go forth with the rest of his neighbors to action in defense of his country," he was again committed to jail. The joint committee represented on the trial that they had made the arrest under the conviction "that the committee of the precinct of Hanover were afraid to treat Mr. Colden as he deserved;" that although not in their district, he was more contiguous to them than to the committee of the district in which he lived; that in his original signature to the pledge of association, it was evident he only meant to secure a sanctuary for his person and property; that the protest which he had written against the appointment of delegates to the first Provincial Congress was "the evil seed sown in the county from which the whole of the fruits of toryism sprung, for, to their knowledge, upwards of sixty persons in the precinct of Newburgh had subscribed it." Other reasons were stated, and especially that the pledge of association was not a pledge of neutrality, "but a firm bond of union for mutual defense, which required activity." This bond he had plainly violated. Colden remained in jail for over one year, when he was permitted to reside, on parole, at the house of Jacobus Hardenburgh, in Hurley.

THE FALL OF THE HIGHLAND FORTS

When the general alarm occurred on the occasion of the loss of the forts in the Highlands (Oct. 7, 1777), the people of the village of New Windsor fled into the country for safety, leaving behind them in their haste their dwellings for occupation either by friends or foes, and, as the result proved in many cases, it made little difference which was the fortunate temporary possessor. William Bedlow writes that his family were unable to remove "several boxes and cases of china, some cases of pictures and looking-glasses, several tables (one with marble slab), chairs, window-curtains, some ornamental china, with images of Shakespeare and Milton in plaster-of-Paris, and a parcel of table furniture left in the closets," for the recovery of which he offered a reward in vain. Col. Ellison, tradition says, put his money and plate under the ground in his smoke-house, hung up his hams, and lighted a cob-fire under them. The hams were gone on his return, but the money was safe. Governor George Clinton apparently suffered with his neighbors, and perhaps to a greater extent. From the place of refuge of his family (Falls house, Little Britain) he writes, under date of Dec. 1, 1777: "I have a cot at my house out of which the militia stole the irons. Will you get it repaired for me, as I have no other bed or bedstead?" It will not be inferred that any of Governor Clinton's townsmen were guilty of these appropriations, but rather that they were by the class known as "skinnners," who were found in every camp, and who robbed friend and foe alike.

MORGAN'S RIFLEMEN.

It cannot be said, however, that the people of New Windsor village were altogether law-abiding. Under date of Aug. 7, 1775, Governor Tryon writes: "Eleven companies of riflemen, consisting of about one hundred men each, with ammunition, from the provinces of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, have lately passed through this province, crossing over Hudson's River at New Windsor in their march to the provincial camp near Boston." Tradition adds to this statement of fact, that just before the troops entered the village, a man, meanly dressed but otherwise of gentlemanly appearance, called at William Edmonston's and said that Col. Morgan was coming. He went on and stopped at William Ellison's, and there said that he was Col. Morgan. The troops soon arrived, and with them Col. Morgan. The deception practiced by the stranger incensed the colonel, and he handed him over to his troops, who tarred and feathered him without even the form of a trial. The boys of New Windsor enjoyed the matter heartily, and had no trouble in obtaining from Mrs. Rachel Cooper (who lived in the village and sold cakes and beer) a pillow of feathers for the purpose. Col. Morgan is described as "a man of powerful frame and stalwart courage." A large proportion of his troops were Irishmen. Upon their breasts they wore the motto "Liberty or Death," and with that inscription the swords of the officers were stamped. Wonderful stories of their exploits went to England; the written record of their services forms one of the brightest pages of American history.

SEIZURE OF SALT.

In a communication from Col. John Hathorn, of the precinct of Goshen, under date of Dec. 2, 1776, he writes, "That your memorialist had a small quantity of salt in Mr. William Ellison's store, at New Windsor; and that there was not more than he had engaged to his neighbors, and was obliged to keep for his own use; that a large number of men, whose names your memorialist cannot discover, without any legal authority, have taken out of said store as well the salt of your memorialist (except one bushel) as of other persons; and that your memorialist is in the greatest want of salt for his own use; that unless a check is put to such unjustifiable proceedings, your memorialist apprehends, from the seemingly disorderly spirit at present prevailing among the common people, his property, as well as those of others, will be very insecure."

A TEA RIOT.

Tea caused more trouble apparently than salt. Capt. Jonathan Lawrence was in command of Fort Constitution; his wife remained in charge of his store in New Windsor. The Congress of New York had resolved that no person should charge to exceed six shillings (one dollar) a pound for tea. The local committee complained "that Mrs. Jonathan Lawrence sold tea at eight shillings per pound, and that her husband made Fort Constitution a depot for that useless herb." The Congress replied (June 14, 1776), stating that "Capt. Lawrence, with all the commissioners at the fort, are discharged from their superintending. We are surprised at his conduct, and make no doubt you will treat him and all others according to their demerits, after a fair hearing." Lawrence was not very severely punished; at all events, he went through the war as a captain of sappers and miners, and drew half-pay for life for his services.

In July, 1777, James Caldwell and John Maley, of Albany, purchased tea in Philadelphia, and in transporting it to Albany had occasion to pass through New Windsor village. Stopping at the tavern of Isaac Schultz for the night, a mob of men and women speedily collected, and, under the plea that the tea was held at a higher price than six shillings, seized the load and sold it to themselves at that price. For the time being the town was supplied with tea. The Council of Safety of the State disapproved of the transaction, and decided that the owners of the tea "could obtain satisfaction for the injury in the ordinary court of law," and this was all the remuneration, probably, that they ever received.

DOMINIE ANNAN.

The incidents already quoted give an inside view of life in New Windsor village. If it is not very flattering, it is at least refreshing to meet with them, as they serve to break up the current of Revolutionary literature, which usually flows in the channel of patriotic devotion and heroic deeds. We turn from them, however, to our favorite district, Little Britain, where we find the following in reference to the Rev. Robert Annan, of the Little Britain Church: "In the fall of 1777 the people of Rhode Island, by reason of the great scarcity of supplies and provisions, applied to our State for aid. The Legislature, however, refused to send public stores, as they were needed at home. Meetings were held in several towns for the purpose of raising supplies by subscription, and among them one in Hanover precinct. It was attended by many prudent people, who seemed to agree with the Legislature that the surplus supplies should not be sent out of the State. There was a discussion, conducted with fairness and ability on both sides, but it seemed likely to be interminable. At this juncture, Annan sprang up and cut the matter short by exclaiming, 'As many as are in favor of assisting the people of Rhode Island and the cause of liberty, follow me!' Leaving the hall, he was surprised to find almost the entire assemblage at his heels."

BOY SOLDIERS.

The number of mere boys who found their way into the army was by no means inconsiderable. Lieut. Robert Burnet and Lieut. Alexander Clinton were but fifteen years old when they were commissioned. Aside from this general fact, it is related that there was a regularly-organized company of boys, from twelve to fifteen years of age, in Little Britain, who were "soldier boys" in earnest, having been several times on duty as home guards. The Hessian prisoners from Saratoga en route for Easton, Pa., passed through Little Britain and camped at Maj. Telford's tavern, then opposite the Burnet homestead. The prisoners were in charge of a company of Morgan's riflemen, who, in quest of rest themselves, turned the prisoners over to the custody of the boys, who guarded them during the night. During the night one of the Hessian women died, and was buried in the morning west of Maj. Telford's house. It was a long-remembered funeral by the boys. The woman's companion could only bury her and move on. It was a phase of war that to them was new, and for years the lone grave by the apple-tree received, perhaps, as much regard as though its inmate had been to them kindred.

VI.—CHURCHES, Etc.

The religious history of New Windsor has representation in church organizations both without and within its borders, viz.: The Church of England Mission, the Highlands or Bethlehem Church, the Wallkill or Goodwill Church, the Neelytown Church, the Associate Reformed Church at Little Britain, the Presbyterian Church at New Windsor, the Berea Church, St. George's Episcopal Church at Newburgh, St. David's Church in Hamptonburgh, St. Thomas' Church at New Windsor, and the Methodist Episcopal Churches at Vail's Gate and Little Britain. All the old churches in this list having been noticed in another part of this volume, we give here a history of the New Windsor Churches only as they now exist.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH.

In the early part of his parish labors the Rev. John Brown, D.D., of Newburgh, resided in New Windsor, and revived the church there (1818) under the title of St. Thomas' Church, of which he served as rector until 1847, dividing his time between that and St. George's. The parish was organized April 8, 1818, at which time the following wardens and vestry were elected, viz.: Wardens, Thomas Ellison, Charles Ludlow; Vestry, David Humphrey, Lewis DuBois, James Green, Gilbert Ogden Fowler, Joseph Morrell, Jonathan Bailey, Nathan H. Sayre, Jr., James Scott. In January, 1844, a small building in which the congregation had worshiped was burned down, and in 1847 the erection of the present church edifice was commenced, and completed in 1849. A rectory was erected in 1859, and sold in 1864. It is now owned and occupied by Mr. Robert H. Boyd.

In connection with this church we give, as a matter of record, the following extract from the will of Thomas Ellison, Jr., of New York, in 1793:

"I give and bequeath unto my brother, William Ellison, and my nephew, Thomas Ellison, and the survivors of them and the heirs of such survivors, all the lands I bought of Cornelius Tibout in New Windsor, Ulster Co., in the State of New York, containing in the several lots about fifty-five acres, in trust for a glebe for such minister of the gospel in communion with the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of New York as shall hereafter be settled and have the care of souls in the said town of New Windsor, and his successor for the time being, forever. And also I give unto my said brother, William Ellison, and my nephew, Thomas Ellison, the sum of six hundred pounds, New York currency, in such of my bonds as he and my nephew shall choose, to be kept out at interest, and the annual interest arising therefrom to be paid to such minister for the time being toward his support and maintenance; and if there should be no such minister at the time of my death, then my will is that the rents and profits of the said lands, and the interest of the said sum of six hundred pounds, shall yearly be put out at interest by my said brother, William Ellison, and my nephew, Thomas Ellison, their heirs and executors (but not to be at his or their risk), and shall become principal and be added to the said sum of six hundred pounds yearly, until such minister shall be settled and have the care of souls in the said town of New Windsor, who shall officiate as a minister for one-half of his time at least, and then the interest of the whole sum thus accumulated shall be yearly paid to such minister and his successors for the time being toward his and their support and maintenance. And whenever the inhabitants for the time being of the said town of New Windsor in communion of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of New York shall become a religious corporation, then the said lands and the securities for the said moneys shall be conveyed and delivered to such corporation for the uses and purposes aforesaid."

The following have been the rectors of the church: 1848-50, Rev. Edmund Embury; 1851-56, Rev. Reuben Riley (Rev. Beverly Robinson Betts, assistant); 1857-62, Rev. Christopher D. Wyatt;* 1862-63, Rev. R. H. Cressy; 1864-67, Rev. Benjamin S. Huntington; 1867-71, Rev. Richard Temple;† 1872, Rev. Haslett McKim, now rector.

The church edifice is a neat Gothic building of stone, and is situated on the table-lands a short distance south of the village of New Windsor.

NEW WINDSOR PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The New Windsor Presbyterian Church dates its organization from Sept. 14, 1764, at which time Joseph Wood, William Lawrence, Samuel Brewster, and Henry Smith were chosen elders. It was formally constituted May 5, 1766, by the Rev. Timothy Johnes, a committee of the Presbytery of New York. From the date of its constitution until 1805 it was associated with the Newburgh and Bethlehem societies in the support of a pastor, and from 1805 to 1810 with the latter. From 1810 to 1827 it enjoyed only occasional ministerial labors. On May 1, 1827, the Rev. James H. Thomas was employed in connection with the church at Canterbury, and was installed pastor of both churches Feb. 12, 1828. The connection with the Canterbury Church was dissolved in 1834, Mr. Thomas serving the New Windsor Church exclusively until June, 1835. Rev. James Sherwood was installed pastor Aug. 5, 1835, and continued in that relation until April, 1840. The pulpit was subsequently occupied by supplies,—Rev. N. S. Prime, Rev. Henry Belden, Rev. Isaac C. Beach, and Rev. James Bruyn. For several years past there have been no services held, although we believe a church organization is maintained. For its connection with the Bethlehem Church, and also with the Presbyterian Church of Newburgh, the reader is referred to the history of the latter church in the history of Newburgh.

The first building erected by the society was a small structure in the village of New Windsor. It is said that it was occupied as a hospital during the encampment, and was subsequently destroyed by fire.

The present edifice was erected in 1807. It is a small wooden structure with spire, and adjoins the present village on the west. In the ancient burial-ground attached, the oldest monument is that which records the resting-place of John Yelverton, one of the founders of the village, who died June 12, 1767, aged seventy-four years.

ASSOCIATE REFORMED CHURCH, LITTLE BRITAIN.

The early history of this church has been noticed in another chapter. Whatever may have been its previous status, its records date from 1765, September 11th, when Patrick McClaughry sold to James Jackson, Matthew McDool (Dowell), and Andrew Crawford a tract or parcel of land containing one acre one rood and twenty-three perches, being part of the patent to Andrew Johnston, the intention of the purchasers, as expressed in the deed, being "to erect a meeting-house thereupon to be appropriated to Divine service in the public worship of God, for the use of a Presbyterian minister and congregation in connection with the Associate Presbytery in Pennsylvania." On the site thus purchased a church edifice was erected, and was occupied by the congregation until 1826. It was a square building with a barrack roof. The entrance was in the middle on the east, and on each side of the door were stairs leading to galleries on the north and south sides. The pulpit was on the west, facing the entrance, and was one of the old-fashioned high structures with a sounding-board. On each side of the pulpit were square pews, with seats on all sides, so that part of the occupants had to sit with their backs to the minister. In front of the pulpit, and between that and the door, were long seats or slips, on each side of which were continued the box pews. On the south side of the pulpit the first pew was owned by the McDowells; the second, by Robert Burnet; the next and corner pew, by the Shaws and Kernochans. As it was not fully completed inside for several years after it was inclosed, descriptive recollections vary somewhat. Outside, the south and west sides were shingled; the west and north, clapboarded. One peculiarity it maintained among the early settlers,—it was universally called "The Meeting-House." In 1826 it gave place to the building which is now occupied by the society.

The first elders of the church were Matthew McDool (McDowell), Patrick McClaughry, and John Waugh. The first pastor was the Rev. Robert Annan, who was in charge in 1768. The records of the Associate Presbytery of Pennsylvania state,—

"Aug. 31, 1762, Mr. Robert Annan was called to the exercise of the pastoral office in the congregation of Marsh Creek and Cunawago, in Pennsylvania, and on the 8th of June, 1763, he was ordained and installed." April 15, 1767, he was called to "the congregation of Little Britain and Wallkill." April 21, 1768, the pastoral relation between him and the congregation of Marsh Creek and Cunawago was dissolved, and on

* Mr. Wyatt officiated also as rector of St. John's, Canterbury.

† Rev. John Morgan officiated.

Robert H. Wallace

Oct. 2, 1772, he was installed pastor "of the United Associate congregations of Little Britain and Wallkill."

Mr. Annan served the Little Britain and Neelytown (Wallkill) congregations until about 1783, when he removed to Boston. His successor was Rev. Thomas J. Smith, who was installed May 1, 1791. On his retirement the pastorate was vacant until 1812, when the Rev. James Scrimgeour, who had served as pastor of the Associate Reformed Church of Newburgh from 1803, was installed. He remained in the charge until his death, Feb. 4, 1825. Rev. Robert H. Wallace was his successor, Oct. 6, 1825, and served until his death, when he was succeeded by his son, Rev. R. Howard Wallace, who is now pastor.

The original Presbyterian connection of the church was maintained until a recent date, when it united with the "Old-School" branch of Presbyterians.

REV. ROBERT H. WALLACE, D.D.—It has been deemed appropriate to introduce the life-sketch of the Rev. Dr. Wallace by the insertion of the following paper, prepared in 1857 by Rev. John Forsyth, D.D., present chaplain of the United States Military Academy at West Point, for a memorial volume, on the occasion of the one hundredth anniversary of the Presbyterian Church of Little Britain:

"Mr. Wallace was born in the town of Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y., on the 12th November, 1796. His parents were natives of the north of Ireland, and were warmly attached members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and distinguished for their attachment to revealed truth and the strength and triumphs of their faith. They reached a good old age, and having adorned the doctrine of God their Saviour during many years by holy lives, we have every reason to believe that they are now, with the great multitude, before the throne.

"Their son, the subject of this sketch, belongs to the class of men which is popularly described as 'self-made.' As the pecuniary resources of his parents were limited, he was early thrown upon his own energies, and was forced to work his own way, amid difficulties, to the profession upon which his heart was fixed. His disadvantages were much increased by the removal of his parents to Susquehanna County, Pa., at that time a newly-settled region, with no institutions of learning above the common school.

"Mr. Wallace began his course of classical study at the Montgomery Academy, then under Rev. Dr. McJimpsey, between whom and his pupil there was formed an intimate and life-long friendship. In his eighteenth year Mr. Wallace made a personal profession of his faith in Christ, in connection with the church of which his parents were members; but, in 1821 he withdrew from that body and united with the church of Neelytown, to which Dr. McJimpsey then ministered. This church was under the care of the Associate Reformed Presbytery of New York, by which, in the autumn of the same year, he was received as a student of theology. The Presbytery then included such men as Drs. John M. Mason, McJimpsey, Phillips, Scrimgeour, and McLeod, and it was then usual to subject those who applied to be admitted to the study of divinity, but who had not gone through a regular academic course, to a thorough examination in the various branches of literature and science. Mr. Wallace bore this test, applied as it was by such men as have been named, and his attainments were declared to be equivalent to those gained in the ordinary collegiate curriculum. The approval of these strong men found later indorsement by Union College (now Union University), which in 1834 conferred upon Mr. Wallace the degree of M.A., and later that of 'Doctor of Divinity.'

"As the operations of the theological seminary (then at New York, but subsequently removed to Newburgh) were suspended, in consequence of the failing health of Dr. Mason, the principal professor, Mr. Wallace put himself under the directions of his former tutor and venerable friend, Dr. McJimpsey. He remained with him, prosecuting his theological studies, three years, the usual time required by the law of the A. R. Church, and was in due course licensed by the Presbytery of New York to preach the gospel, at a meeting of that body held in Newburgh, 15th September, 1824.

"For several years previous to his licensure, Mr. Wallace, in working his own way to the ministry, had been compelled to perform the double task of a teacher and a theological student. He had charge of several schools during this period, and in all of them he won the warm esteem of pupils and parents. But he found, as many others have done, the double labor of the school-room and study too much for his physical strength; and now, just as he had gained the object on which his heart had been so long fixed, it seemed as if he were destined to retain it in his grasp only for a moment, and must then part with it forever.

"At the time of his licensure disease appeared to have taken such firm hold of him that his physicians were very dubious about his recovery, and in any event judged that he must seek a field of labor in the mild regions of the South. He prepared at once to act upon this advice; but while 'man proposes God disposes,' and it was soon evident that his Divine Master had other plans in regard to him.

"He was appointed by the Presbytery of New York to supply the church of Little Britain, then virtually vacant in consequence of the age and bodily infirmities of its venerable pastor, Mr. Scrimgeour, who died a few months later. But it so happened that, through an exchange, his first sermon was preached in the pulpit of his friend and theological instructor, Dr. McJimpsey, at Neelytown. With this excellent man Mr. Wallace lived on terms of intimate friendship, which was broken only by death. Dr. McJimpsey was a man whom none could know and not love.

"Mr. Wallace spent the second Sabbath after his licensure in Little Britain, and thus was introduced into the field which he then expected he might never see again, but which he was destined to cultivate, amid many tokens of divine favor, for more than thirty years. This first visit to Little Britain was made in September, 1824. He was instantly and strongly urged to remain here as the pastor of the church, but he declined, as he wished to make an extended missionary tour in the service of the Board of Domestic Missions of the A. R. Synod of New York. He was, in fact, the first missionary employed by that board, and he continued in their service until the following September. During this tour he visited Bloomingburgh, White Lake, New Milford, Lawsville, Bethany, Mount Pleasant, Pa., Ithaca, Erin, York, Caledonia, N. Y., and even went so far west as Detroit, then on the confines of civilization.

"His journey was performed on horseback, over a region then covered for many a weary mile with the unbroken forest, but which is now thickly studded over—so marvelous are the changes wrought by enterprise in our country—with countless farms and villages. The appliances of comfortable travel were few and far between. Often the rude log hut was his only shelter. It was, in a word, a rough service, but we have no doubt it afforded him the invigorating exercise, the health-inspiring medicine needed by his enfeebled frame.

"Early in the autumn Mr. Wallace returned to Newburgh to attend meetings of Synod and Presbytery, and then to proceed to the South, where he proposed to spend the winter. Meanwhile a pressing call was put into his hands from the then vacant church of Caledonia, N. Y., and also from other places which he had visited proposals to settle were made to him. These he declined, and at the earnest solicitation of the fathers and brethren of the Presbytery he abandoned his plan of a Southern journey and accepted the call from the congregation of Little Britain. He was ordained and installed in this charge on the 6th October, 1825.

"Few fields presented at this time a more unpromising aspect than that into which Mr. Wallace was led that he might cultivate it in the name of the Lord. The church was old and dilapidated, the number of communicants was small, piety was at a low ebb in the church, while outside of it vice and irreligion abounded.

"Very soon after the settlement of Mr. Wallace measures were taken for a complete remodeling and an enlargement of the old church, a comfortable parsonage was purchased, the congregation rapidly increased, a new life began to manifest itself, and, in a word, it was plain that old things were passing away. As the years passed Mr. Wallace grew in the affections of his own people, and more and more won the warm regard of the neighboring churches, with whose pastors he has maintained the most fraternal relations. In New York, Newburgh, and elsewhere his appearance in the pulpit was ever a welcome sight to multitudes whose only regret was that the privilege was one so rarely enjoyed by them. He has been, indeed, always noted for his close keeping at home; rarely, if ever, did he leave his own pulpit, unless at the call of public duty or to recruit his enfeebled energies for a few weeks during the heat of summer.

"From the time of his admission into the Presbytery of New York as a student of theology until the present moment Mr. Wallace has always exhibited a warm affection for the Associate Reformed Church. Though the state of his health would not allow him to take a large share in what may be called the public business of the church, he has been a regular attendant at the meetings of the Presbytery and Synod, and when topics of importance have been under discussion he has taken a prominent part in the debates. Were it possible, we would gladly reproduce some of the speeches he delivered in Synod, especially on the question of close or catholic communion, as fine specimens of ecclesiastical eloquence. Unfortunately, no report of them has been preserved, and they live only in the recollection of those who heard them and who listened to the speaker with the most profound attention.

"On the occasion of the centenary and installation of his son as associate pastor, Mr. Wallace said that an old friend had remarked to him 'that he ought, indeed, to be a happy man in the review of the past and in the survey of the present.' The whole assembly gathered on that occasion doubtless adopted the sentiment. His ministerial course, when he entered upon his work, seemed as if it must be a brief one, yet he has been permitted to 'fulfill his course' for many years, to proclaim through all those the glorious gospel, to build up one of the old wastes, to prepare many souls to become jewels in the Redeemer's crown, and who shall be, we trust, his own joy and crown in the day of the Lord Jesus."

Dr. Wallace continued in the discharge of his pastoral duties at Little Britain for eleven years after the celebration of the centenary of the church and the publication of the above paper. He passed away on Feb. 9, 1868, at the ripe age of seventy-two, and closed with his death the record of a successful, devoted Christian pastor. His decline was gradual, and his spirit passed to the God who gave it on a quiet Sabbath day, his end being full of peace, and manifesting in a remarkable degree the triumphs of his faith. Appropriate resolutions were adopted by the congregation and the session of the Little Britain Church, and by the North River Presbytery, in connection with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, with which the church at Little Britain and its pastors united in 1867, from some of which the following extracts are made:

"Resolved, That the session has lost an able counselor, the ministry one of its brightest ornaments, a most able and prevailing man of prayer, the church an eloquent, powerful, and effective preacher and comforting, fatherly pastor, a genial, kind, and affable friend, an eminently complacent and pure gentleman."

"Resolved (by the Presbytery), That the example left us by our departed father and brother is one to be signalized as peculiarly distinguished for constancy, for devotedness to the work of the ministry, for childlike but mighty faith, for faithfulness in the simple preaching of the cross, and for perseverance, particularity, and importunity in prayer."

Dr. Wallace was an eminently courteous Christian gentleman, dignified in manner, but genial and cheerful in the discharge of the varied duties of the pastor. Whatever he undertook he carried through in an earnest, decided manner, and he was a type of an attractive but faithful minister of Christ. He was possessed of strong intellectual qualifications, was a logical writer and thinker, and as a speaker clear, terse, eloquent, and effective. His power in debate was most strongly and powerfully manifested in the assemblies of the church, where he exerted great influence. He was very systematic, possessed of an analytic mind, and performed all his labor according to a well-selected and carefully-elaborated rule of action. He was very successful as a pastor, loved and honored by all, and left behind him at his death a cherished memory adorned with good deeds and devoted self-sacrifice in the cause of the Master. He was buried in the ancient cemetery beside the church,

"Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap," surrounded by the dust of the "forefathers of the hamlet," his beloved wife, a former pastor, Rev. James Scrimgeour, early and later members of the session, and a multitude of the membership of the church. A massive Scotch-granite monument to Dr. Wallace stands in the churchyard at Little Britain, bearing upon its north side these words:

"Fourth Pastor of the Presbyterian Church
 Little Britain, where through nearly 44 years he founded, framed, builded, by pureness, by knowledge,
 by love unfeigned.

'Thou hast made him most blessed forever: thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.'
 Erected by his friends."

It would scarcely be proper to close this sketch of Dr. Wallace without reference to his son, Rev. R. Howard Wallace, A.M., who, after acting as the assistant pastor of the Little Britain Church for a number of years in pleasant association with his father, succeeded to the pastorate at the death of the former in 1868, and for nearly twenty-six years, amid the various changes incident to more than a quarter of a century of active service, has been the faithful, devoted, self-sacrificing, and successful minister of Christ to this people.

Mr. Wallace was born at Little Britain, Dec. 20, 1828. His earlier education was conducted by his father, and after careful preparatory training he entered Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., and was graduated with the highest honors of his class from that institution in 1850. Having determined to consecrate his life to service in the gospel ministry, he entered the theological seminary at Newburgh, and was graduated in 1853. The next year he was ordained to the ministry, and labored for two years following in Otsego County, N. Y. In 1856 he was invited by the session of the Little Britain Church to supply the pulpit during the illness of his father, the pastor, and in 1857 he was called by the church as colleague with and successor to his father. The installation services occurred in December of that year.

Although Mr. Wallace has received numerous invitations to take charge of other churches, and to engage in other Christian work during his long pastorate, a love for the place of his nativity, for the people and their descendants among whom his father labored so long, and a desire to see the work of the latter prosper and grow, has induced him to devote the best years of his life and the richest products of his mind to the Little Britain congregation. The long period in which he has occupied the pulpit of this church, added to the previous service of his father, nearly completes the extraordinary period of seventy years of pastoral labor by the same family. When that period shall have been attained, Mr. Wallace proposes to carry out a long-cherished purpose to make an extended tour in Europe and the remote East, and thus obtain that rest and physical and mental relaxation which failing health imperatively demands.

Mr. Wallace inherits many of the traits of his father, is an active, earnest, untiring worker, devoted to the leading Christian interests of the age, and a regular contributor to its current literature. During the late war he was granted absence by the church, and served in the army as chaplain of the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth New York Volunteers for several months. He studies with care the spiritual and material interests of the country, and by travel, reading, and close observation, though located in a retired neighborhood, has kept fully abreast of the discoveries and improvements of the age. He is an erudite scholar, and prepared his two sons for an advanced class in college, one of whom is now in the ministry, and the other a ruling elder in his native church.

UNION M. E. CHURCH, VAIL'S GATE.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Vail's Gate is called in old records the "Union Church of New Windsor," a name which was probably intended to imply that it was a neighborhood church in which professors of every creed had a common interest. It was the outgrowth of what was known in 1789 as the John Ellison class. Ellison had formerly belonged to the Church of England, which at that time had no organization in the vicinity, and hence he was readily led to give encouragement to the substitute which the Methodist Episcopal Church offered, embracing, as the creed of the latter did, substantially the creed of the Church of England, of which it was originally a branch. In 1791, Mr. Ellison erected a building near his residence at Mortonville, the first story of which he occupied as a store, and the second he fitted up as a hall for religious services. While itinerant preachers of all denominations were permitted to occupy this hall, it was specially reserved for those of the Methodist Church, from which it became known as the Methodist Church. It was occupied by the Union Church until 1807, when the present building, which has been somewhat modernized since its erection, was constructed, and now forms the oldest church edifice of the denomination on the west bank of Hudson's River. In 1809 it was made the head of the New Windsor circuit, with Rev. Thomas Woolsey and James Coleman preachers. At the quarterly conference of that year, held in the new Union church, then the only one in the circuit, Andrew Cunningham and Benjamin Westlake appeared as local preachers, and Henry Still, James Benjamin, Thomas Collard, and Jonathan Stephens as exhorters. The circuit embraced New Windsor, Sugar Loaf, Smith's Clove, Lower Clove, Oxford, Warwick, Amity, Butter Hill, Ketchumtown, Pochuck, Newfoundland, Deerpark, New Shawangunk (Bethel), Hamburg, Bellvale, Vernon, and Cornwall. This circuit, which will be recognized as covering a wide district of country, was subsequently divided and subdivided until it has finally substantially disappeared, the society at Mountainville only now being included with it. The first trustees of the church were elected April 6, 1804, and were Daniel Holmes and Samuel Fowler, of Newburgh, and Jabish Atwater (Atwood?), Samuel Dunsinberre, and Henry Still, of New Windsor. The following list of circuit preachers from 1810* to 1880 has been furnished by the present pastor, Rev. N. S. Tuthill:

1810, Samuel Fowler, Samuel Bushnell; 1811, John Keline, Hawley Sanford; 1812, John Keline, James Edwards, Stephen Jacob; 1813, Nathan Emory, Ezekiel Canfield; 1814, Luman Andrews, Bela Smith; 1815, Zalmon Lyon, Bela Smith; 1816, Zalmon Lyon, James Kline; 1817-18, J. Hunt, J. Brown; 1819, Almond Comber, Heman Bangs; 1820, Phineas Rice, Heman Bangs; 1821, Nicholas White, George Coles; 1822, Nicholas White, Gilbert Fowler; 1823, Gilbert Lyon, Friend W. Smith; 1824, Wm. Jewett, Friend W. Smith; 1825, Noah Biglow, Henry DeWolf; 1826, Jacob Hall, Luarters Stewart; 1827, Jacob Wall, Raphael Gilbert; 1828, Jarvis Z. Nichols, Raphael Gilbert; 1829-30, Benjamin Griffin, Humphrey Humphries; 1831, Phineas Rice, Hiram Wing; 1832-33, Cyrus Silliman, Noble W. Thomas; 1834, James Cabell, Nathan Rice; 1835, James Covell, John R. Rice, Thomas Edwards; 1836-37, Thomas Newman, LITTLE BRITAIN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Information solicited in regard to the history of this church has not been furnished. The records of the trustees (which we have been permitted to examine through the kindness of William R. Weed, Esq.) begin July 26, 1853, at which time the erection of a church edifice, thirty-four feet front by forty-four feet deep, was under contract with Harvey Alexander, and appears to have been completed and occupied in the fall of 1854. The church is near Jackson Avenue, and has a burial-ground attached. It is now in a circuit with Gardnertown.

BURIAL-GROUNDS.

In addition to the New Windsor Presbyterian Church burial-grounds, elsewhere noticed, there is one attached to the Vail's Gate Methodist Episcopal Church, one attached to the Little Britain Church, and one known as the "Mullinder Graveyard," west of the last named. There are quite a number of family burial-plots, including those known as the Clinton and the McClaughry, and nearly all of them are in a wretched condition. Woodlawn Cemetery, under the charge of an association organized under the State law, is being rapidly improved. The remains of many persons have been removed to it from other grounds both in Newburgh and New Windsor, and many respectable monuments have been erected.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CHARLES CLINTON AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

While many of the early settlers of New Windsor were of superior character and had many honored sons, there were none more so than Charles Clinton, through whose descendants the name of Little Britain has been made familiar to students of history in all parts of the nation. While by birth a native of Ireland, by blood Charles Clinton was English and Scotch,—on his paternal side a descendant of Henry Clinton, second Earl of Lincoln, on his maternal a descendant of a Scottish lady. With a company of relatives and neighbors in the county Longford, Ireland, he sailed for America in May, 1729, and founded his permanent home in Little Britain in 1731. He was well educated, and became a leading man in the province. He was appointed judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Ulster County, which office he filled with ability. In addition to his duties in this capacity, he became one of the most reliable surveyors in the country. He served in the French and Indian war of 1759–63; aided in the erection of churches and schools, in opening roads, clearing lands, and in advancing the cause of civilization; and above all gave to his sons not only an education which fitted them for any post of duty, but one on which was indelibly impressed a lofty patriotism, a hatred of tyranny, and a devotion to the cause of civil and religious liberty. He died at Little Britain, Nov. 19, 1773, in his eighty-third year.

His children were Catharine, James, Mary (the two latter died at sea), Alexander, Charles, James, and George. Alexander and Charles were physicians, and have been noticed in another part of this work, as has also George, the war Governor of the Revolution. James was a man of different type from his brother George. He shrank from political life, although political honors were his, preferring duty as a civilian-soldier. At the age of twenty he served as ensign, under his father, in the French and Indian war, and fought by his side in the taking of Fort Frontenac, now Kingston, in Canada. In 1763 he had command of the forces raised to resist the invasion of the counties of Orange and Ulster by the Indians, and when the war of the Revolution broke out he received one of the first military appointments from Congress, and soon rose to the rank of major-general. During the war he was in charge of the Northern Department, with his headquarters at Albany, and led an expedition against the Iroquois Indians, in which he distinguished himself as an engineer by cutting a road from the Mohawk to Lake Otsego, and in damming up the outlet of the lake so as to float boats over the bars of the upper Susquehanna. He took part in the siege of Yorktown, and after the war retired to his farm in Little Britain, where he resumed his occupation as a surveyor. At the urgent solicitation of his friends he became a member of Assembly, and of the convention which ratified the constitution of the United States. He was also a member of the convention of 1804, called to amend the Constitution of the State. In all these positions he showed marked ability. On the 12th of December, 1812, at the age of seventy-five years, he died where he was born, beloved by all who knew him, a brave, accomplished, and unambitious patriot and soldier.

The limits of this sketch will not permit a reference to the children of James and George specifically, but we may not pass the name of DeWitt Clinton, the third son of James, who was born March 2, 1769. He entered public life as the private secretary of his uncle; became at an early age member of Assembly and then a senator; member of the Council of Appointment; mayor of the city of New York for several years; member of the Canal Board; Governor of the State for two terms; a candidate for President against Madison, and invited by Adams to be Minister to England. The statute-book is filled with acts of a public nature originated by him, and while in the Court of Errors he gave the leading opinions, and established legal principles which have remained unchanged. Taken all in all, he was one of the most eminent and useful citizens this country has ever produced.

The Clintons, as a family, have been unsurpassed in our history. The Adams' only can boast of so long a line of great and useful men.

JOHN R. CALDWELL.

The family of this name were early residents of county Antrim, Ireland, and held an honorable place in that section. The coat of arms consists of three wells (cold wells), whence the name is said to have been derived. John Caldwell, grandfather of our subject, operated a large bleachery in county Antrim at the breaking out of the Irish rebellion. Richard, his son, and father of our subject, when a young man participated in the rebellion, was arrested and incarcerated in the same cell with Robert Emmet, tried and convicted of high treason, and sentenced to be executed with Emmet. At the last moment he was saved by Lord Cornwallis, then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and sent to America. Being possessed of some means, he settled at Salisbury Mills, Orange Co., operated a flaxseed oil-mill and engaged in trade. He married Maria, daughter of John Chandler, an early merchant of Blooming-Grove and a staunch patriot during the Revolutionary struggle in America. His father and brother also emigrated from Ireland and settled in Blooming-Grove, where the family is still represented. Richard entered the United States service during the war of 1812–15, and served as a captain in the Twenty-fifth Regiment of infantry. He died from exposure during the military operations in northern New York, on Nov. 22, 1812, at the early age of thirty-five years, and is buried in the village of Champlain, in this State. His wife died Jan. 23, 1877, aged eighty-eight years and six months. Of the two children, John R. Caldwell is the only survivor. His sister Mary became the wife of Dr. Marcus Sears, of Blooming-Grove.

John R. Caldwell was born at Salisbury Mills, July 12, 1810. When but two years of age his father died, and he went to live with his grandfather, John

Chandler, of Blooming-Grove, who died when he was but five. His early education was obtained at the common schools of Blooming-Grove. Subsequently he enjoyed three years of careful academic training at St. John's College, Annapolis, Md., of which his uncle, Rev. Dr. Rafferty, was president. When about sixteen years of age he entered the counting-house of his uncle, John Caldwell, commission merchant, in New York, where he remained two years. He then returned to Blooming-Grove, and entered upon the life of a farmer on the old Chandler homestead. In the fall of 1831 he purchased two hundred acres of land in the town of New Windsor of the Ellison estate, where he has since continued to reside. By careful agricultural operations he has much enhanced the value of the property, cleared it of stones and brush, and added other substantial improvements, including two residences, both of which are in use, one built in 1832, and the other in 1855. For fifty years he has been one of the most substantial and representative of the farmers of New Windsor, foremost in every good work, enterprising and progressive, and in the enjoyment of the respect and esteem of his friends and neighbors. For the past twenty years he has left the management of his farm largely to his sons, and devoted himself to travel and the management of important business interests for others in the West Indies and in the Southern States. His specialty in farming has been the production and shipment of milk. He has taken no active interest in public affairs, but lived a retired, modest, and unostentatious life. His home is one of the handsomest in New Windsor, and the grounds tastefully laid out, presenting a pleasing and attractive appearance. Mr. Caldwell is a prompt contributor to the worthy enterprises of his day, a man of integrity and moral worth, the adviser and counselor of many people, and a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Newburgh. He married on Sept. 13, 1831, Ruth, daughter of John Nicoll, of New Windsor, and has three sons,—William and John N. Caldwell are farming on the old homestead in New Windsor; Charles Caldwell is city surveyor of Newburgh.

ERASMUS DARWIN DRURY.

His grandparents were William and Eunice (Holt) Drury, early residents of Worcester, Mass., where the former was a prominent business man, serving in the Legislature of the State. Dr. John Waldo Drury, his father, was born in Worcester, Mass., on Oct. 21, 1791. He received careful academic instruction, and subsequently entered upon the study of medicine, attending lectures at the Vermont Medical College, Castleton, Vt., from which institution he was graduated with the degree of doctor of medicine. When only nineteen years of age he entered the United States army as a private soldier, and served during the war of 1812-15, participating in the battle of Plattsburgh, and in the other operations of the American forces in northern New York. In August, 1818, he located in the town of New Windsor, Orange Co., where he entered upon the practice of his profession, and where he passed the remainder of a long and active life. He enjoyed a large practice, was recognized as a skillful and successful physician, a superior surgeon, and held in the community in which he dwelt a prominent and representative place. He resided on the old Parshall homestead, but adhered closely to the demands of his profession in preference to farming pursuits. He died Oct. 8, 1847.

Dr. Drury was married on Jan. 2, 1822, to Jemima, daughter of Moses and Ruth (Miller) Parshall, with which family he began to reside when he first located in New Windsor. The children of the union were two in number, viz.: Erasmus Darwin Drury, the subject of this memoir, and Mary A. Drury, born Nov. 26, 1825. She married Robert Finley, of New Windsor, Oct. 18, 1848, and died May 3, 1863, leaving four children, namely, Moses D., Loanna F., Eura E., and Robert D. Finley, all of whom reside on a portion of the old Parshall tract.

The Parshall family is one of the oldest in the town of New Windsor. The ancestor of the family in this county was Israel Parshall, who was driven from France with the Huguenots after the Edict of Nantes. He located at the east end of Long Island, at a point then called Black River, where he passed his life and is buried. Jonathan Parshall, his son, purchased six hundred and seven acres of land belonging to the Markham tract in 1737. He paid for the land in installments, and did not receive the deed for it until 1753. For a time Jonathan Parshall occupied his purchase, but after the death of his wife he removed to Pittsburgh, Pa., where he died. He deeded his New Windsor estate to his two sons, Jonathan and David, both of whom passed their lives on the property. Jonathan married Jemima Terry, and had four sons and a daughter, of whom Moses was the third child. He also lived and died on the old homestead.

Mrs. Jemima Drury, his daughter, was born Jan. 6, 1806, and is the last representative of the family living on the Parshall homestead. She occupies a portion of the home tract, and is a well-preserved, intelligent, and interesting old lady. Her grandchildren, the children of E. Darwin Drury and of Robert Finley, are the sixth generation of the representatives of the Parshall family who have occupied the ancestral glebes of their forefathers.

E. D. Drury was born on the old home tract in New Windsor on Jan. 28, 1823. He received an excellent education at the high school in Newburgh, and at the Montgomery Academy, and devoted his life to the pursuit of husbandry in New Windsor, tilling the same soil that several generations of his maternal ancestors cultivated. His life was not a long one, but he manifested during his career characteristics that endeared him to many, and which made him justly popular in the community in which he dwelt. He was of a modest, retiring temperament, devoted to work and to the performance of domestic duties,—one who avoided public life, and who stood in the front rank of the successful farmers of his section. He was a warm supporter of church and kindred institutions, liberal and progressive in his views, and a member of the Goodwill Presbyterian Church of Montgomery. He died suddenly on Dec. 25, 1872. His wife was Mary E. Finley, to whom he was united on Nov. 20, 1845. She died Sept. 30, 1869. The children were Lamira, Charles W., John James, George W., and Frank. Charles W. Drury died on March 12, 1878. The remaining children are living at the old family seat, the sons already taking a place among the successful farmers of the town.

ROBERT BURNET.

The Burnet family of Little Britain is one of the oldest in the county. Robert Burnet, its progenitor, came from Scotland, near Edinburgh, about the year 1725. He first settled at Raritan, N. J., where he followed his trade as a tailor. In 1729 he purchased two hundred acres of the Andrew Johnson Patent at Little Britain. Accompanied by his brother, who subsequently returned to New Jersey, he erected a log cabin and made preparations for clearing and cultivation. He was also accompanied by John Reid, who purchased an adjoining farm-lot, and whose daughter, Ann, subsequently became his wife. He was a Scot of pure type, six feet two inches in height, a firm Presbyterian, and a rigid disciplinarian. He died in the year 1774, in the seventy-third year of his age. Seven children were the issue of this marriage, viz.: 1, James; 2, John; 3, Robert; 4, Thomas; 5, Patrick; 6, Sarah; 7, Mary. These children were multiplied in the second generation to thirty-four, whose descendants in the succeeding generations may now be found in different parts of the country in numbers beyond computation in a work of this character. Confining attention to a single branch, we notice briefly Robert Burnet (2d), the oldest son of James, the oldest son of Robert and Ann (Reid) Burnet. Robert (2d) was born in Little Britain, Feb. 22, 1762. He resided with his father until his fifteenth year, and attended the school of the Rev. John Moffat, a local academy in the vicinity of some note in its day. When the Revolution came on he joined a military company, mainly composed of boys of from fourteen to sixteen years of age, for home protection, and with this company was several times under arms, especially assisting in guarding the Hessian prisoners from Burgoyne's army in 1777, who, on their march through Little Britain, encamped for a night at Maj. Telford's tavern, opposite the Burnet homestead. In June, 1781, then nineteen years of age, he received from Governor Clinton a commission as second lieutenant in Col. Lamb's regiment of artillery, then stationed at West Point, and was with his regiment at the capture of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Returning with his regiment to West Point, he remained there until the disbandment of the army, and commanded the rear-guard in the march into the city of New York, as the British evacuated it, in November, 1783, where, after bidding Washington farewell at Fraunce's tavern, he folded up his epaulette and laid it away, a memorial which is still preserved. While stationed at West Point he was one of the delegates appointed to meet Washington at the Temple (March, 1783), and participated in the proceedings on that occasion. He was also present at a meeting of officers for the organization of The Society of the Cincinnati, of which he became a member. Released from military duty, he immediately entered upon his life-work at Little Britain. On the 9th of June, 1784, he married Rachel DeWitt, a niece of Mrs. Gen. James Clinton, and in 1785 purchased twenty acres of land from his uncle, Maj. John Burnet, and commenced housekeeping in the log cabin which his grandfather Robert had occupied on his first settlement. In 1791 he purchased the remainder of his uncle's farm, and took possession of the house which the latter had built. In 1801 he purchased of his father, James, one hundred acres, and thus became the owner of the original homestead of two hundred acres. In 1804 he erected the commodious mansion in which he resided at his death, now owned (1881) by his grandson, Joseph B. Burnet. He took an active part in the business affairs of his native town and county; was justice of the peace and town clerk for a number of years, and member of Assembly for two terms, 1800 and 1804. He was frequently an executor and an administrator of estates; among others of the estate of Gen. James Clinton and of Moses DeWitt, the latter his wife's brother. In person he was tall and erect, with a kindly face and presence,—a man whose integrity was never questioned. At the time of his death he was the last surviving original member of The Society of the Cincinnati, as well as the last surviving officer of the army of the Revolution. He died Nov. 24, 1854, in his ninety-third year. His wife, Rachel DeWitt, died June 4, 1830, in her sixty-eighth year. His children were: 1, Alexander C.; 2, Charles; 3, Jane; 4, Moses DeWitt, at one time sheriff of Orange County, and whose only surviving son, John Barber Burnet, resides in Syracuse; 5, Mary DeWitt; 6, Robert, Jr. The present owner of the Burnet homestead, Joseph B. Burnet, who has already been referred to, is the son of Charles (2d) and his second wife, Mary Ann Barber. Through threescore years of life he has fully maintained the characteristics of his ancestors, not only in personal appearance, but in public and private business relations. He has served six terms as supervisor of the town, and also as justice of the peace, and has the place of his grandfather in the church and in society. At the old homestead home of his grandfather was celebrated, under his auspices, on the 29th of October, 1879, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of the progenitor of the family.

JAMES W. MORRISON.

James W. Morrison was born in New Windsor, on Feb. 22, 1819, and was the fourth child of James and Harriet (Patton) Morrison. His father engaged in farming pursuits at Little Britain, and also kept the hotel at that point for several years. The other children were William P. (deceased), John H., and Jane H. (deceased wife of Samuel Weed).

Mr. Morrison started out in life, after the death of his parents, at the early age of nine years, and commenced work on the farm of his uncle, James Patton, at Washington Lake. He remained there until 1842, with the exception of four years, during which he was a clerk in the drug-store of John D. Phillips, of Newburgh. In 1842 he purchased a farm of 100 acres near Washington Square, and entered upon the life of a farmer on his own account. On Aug. 16, 1843, he married Sarah Jane, daughter of William and Nancy Stewart, of New Windsor, and removed to the old Stewart homestead, of which he has since become the owner, and which constitutes his present farm. His first wife died on April 3, 1868, leaving an only son, William J. Morrison, who was born Jan. 25, 1847, and who resides on the farm with his father. Mr. Morrison's second wife was Jane, daughter of Samuel Palmer, of New York, to whom he was united Jan. 6, 1869, and who died, leaving no children, on July 8, 1873. His present wife is her sister, Margaret E. Palmer, whom he married Sept. 15, 1874, and who has no children.

Mr. Morrison is recognized as one of the leading farmers of his section. He has taken no active interest in public affairs, but devoted himself closely to the cultivation of his fine farm of 170 acres. His buildings, both residence and outhouses, present a handsome appearance, and he is constantly adding to the architectural attractions of his place. The buildings were all erected by Mr. Morrison himself, under the mechanical supervision of his friend, Harvey Alexander, of New Windsor, and the frame-work of all was obtained from his own farm. All the appointments of the farm are complete; the land is thoroughly drained, well fenced, and carefully cultivated and intelligently tilled, and bears witness to the agricultural skill of Mr. Morrison, and to the years of labor and toil that he has expended upon it. He has made a specialty for many years of dairying and the manufacture of butter, and has sold this commodity for forty-one years to one firm in New York City. Though not a church-member, he has always lent liberal support to church and kindred institutions, and is one of the liberal, progressive men of his town, enjoying the respect and esteem of many friends. He attends the Second Presbyterian Church of Washingtonville, of which he is one of the trustees. He attended the Associate Reformed Church of Little Britain for many years (and his parents before him), of which he was also a trustee. He was a member of the building committee in the erection of the present house of worship, gave liberally to the building fund, and had the personal supervision of the work.

JOHN BEATTIE KERNOCHAN.

John Beattie Kernochan was born in New Windsor, on Oct. 26, 1821, on the place which constituted his homestead at the time of his death. His maternal grandparents were John Beattie, born 1751, died April 17, 1840, and Elizabeth, his wife, who was born in 1761, and who died March 31, 1840. The Beattie family was one of the early families of the town of New Windsor, and identified with its pioneer history from the earliest years. John Beattie resided where his grandson, the subject of this memoir, lived, and for many years was one of the strong representative farmers of his section. The parents of John B. Kernochan were John Kernochan, born Nov. 20, 1785, died Aug. 16, 1871, and Elsie (Beattie) Kernochan, born Oct. 9, 1784, died Dec. 21, 1827. The marriage occurred Nov. 7, 1815, and the children were Elsie J., who married Samuel McGill, of New Windsor; Sarah, wife of I. R. Goldsmith, of the same town; and John B., our subject.

The latter was deprived of a mother's care at the age of six years, and was reared to manhood in the

Thos. J. Fulton

Among the leading men of New Windsor for many years the subject of this notice occupied a prominent place. His parents were Thomas and Jemima (Frost) Fulton, who early emigrated from Dutchess County, and located upon the tract of land which had been taken up by their kinsman, Robert Johnston, near Bethlehem. Their log cabin, which was probably erected by Robert Johnston, stood in the orchard of the late Thomas J. Fulton, Jr. Subsequently the couple occupied the ancient dwelling that formerly stood on the lot now occupied by the residence of William S. Fulton. Here Thomas Fulton and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, enduring the privations, hardships, and dangers incident to a pioneer life. The former was born on Oct. 3, 1763, and died Oct. 26, 1814. His wife, who was born Nov. 5, 1767, died June 26, 1846. Their children were Jane, born Dec. 5, 1785, married Linus McCabe, died Sept. 18, 1852; Robert J., born Jan. 31, 1788, died Sept. 3, 1834; Martha, born Aug. 26, 1793, married William Couser, died Sept. 1, 1876; and Thomas J., born June 10, 1804, died July 13, 1875. After the death of Thomas Fulton his farm passed to the possession of his two sons, Robert J. and Thomas J. Fulton, and subsequently became the sole property of the latter.

Thomas J. Fulton, or, as he was more familiarly known, "Squire" Fulton, was born on the family homestead, near Bethlehem, on the date indicated above. His educational advantages were such only as the district school of his neighborhood afforded. At the age of ten years he was deprived by death of a father's care and protection, and thus early in life the management and cultivation of a portion of the family homestead devolved upon him. He met the situation manfully, and by industry, perseverance, and the exercise of good judgment took a place among the successful agriculturists of the town. He engaged in farming until the year 1859, when the management of the property passed to his son, William S. Fulton, with whom he continued to reside until his death, in 1875.

While Squire Fulton confined his life-work to the cultivation of his farm, it was in the larger field of public life that he manifested special activity and became most widely known. Early imbued with Democratic principles, he remained a steadfast adherent of that party throughout his life, and was frequently honored by his fellow-citizens by election to the leading offices of the town of New Windsor. He was supervisor for a number of years; a justice of the peace for thirty-two consecutive years, and until he declined further election; and was for several years one of the lay judges of Orange County. He was also assessor of the town for a number of years, and in his capacity of a justice he transacted a large amount of public business. He was a man of strong convictions, decided in his opinions, and possessed of excellent judgment. He frequently acted as the adviser and counselor of his friends, and was executor or administrator of a large number of estates, some of them of great value. His private life was free from fault; his integrity of purpose and deed was never questioned; and he was respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He took an active interest in church affairs, and was a valuable member of the Bethlehem Presbyterian Church, of which he was also a trustee, and a ruling elder for more than a quarter of a century. He settled his sons, Thomas J. and William S. Fulton, on farms adjoining, and lived to see his family grow up and his children prospering in the world.

Squire Fulton was married on Nov. 9, 1824, to Mary A. Schultz, of New Windsor, a representative of one of the pioneer families of the town. She was born June 26, 1807, and died in December, 1875. The children were Fanny E.; Mary J., widow of Samuel M. Clemence, late of Bethlehem; Harriet E., died Nov. 5, 1829; Thomas J., died Sept. 12, 1874; and William S. Fulton.

Thomas J. Fulton, Jr., lived where his family still reside, near Bethlehem, and was a useful man in his day and generation, filling positions of prominence in the town. He married, Oct. 28, 1858, Mary E., daughter of Jarvis Knapp, of New Windsor, who survives him, with their three daughters, Georgianna, Mary F., and Laura C. Fulton.

William S. Fulton resides on the old homestead built by his father in 1847. He is a member and trustee of the Bethlehem Presbyterian Church; was town clerk of New Windsor for six years, and assessor for the past seven years. He was elected a justice of the peace, but did not qualify. He married, Nov. 10, 1859, Phebe E., daughter of Sylvester M. and Annie M. Gregg, of Newburgh, and has three daughters,—Fanny L., Jennie M., and Anna S. Fulton. They and the children of the late Thomas J. Fulton, Jr., are the fourth generation of the family residing on the same property.

family of his grandfather, John Beattie. His educational training was limited to the common schools of his day. Upon attaining his majority he came into possession of the old Beattie homestead, which was children were three in number, viz.: Frances M., deceased, wife of Abner Mills, of Walkill, and Adelaide and Prudence M. Kernochan, who reside on the old homestead.

WILLIAM LUSK MCGILL.

His grandfather was Hugh McGill, who was born in the north of Ireland, where the family was in good circumstances. At the breaking out of the Irish rebellion, Hugh McGill, then a lad of seventeen years of age, participated in the revolutionary movements of the neighborhood, and narrowly escaped arrest by the English authorities. Getting on board of a vessel he came to New York, and subsequently engaged in farming at Little Britain, Orange Co. After a time he purchased a farm in Cornwall, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying about 1834. He married a Miss Hallock, and had three sons and a daughter. John and Samuel lived and died in Cornwall. Margaret, the daughter, married George Vanderheiden, of Troy, N. Y.

John B. Kernochan

devised to him by his grandfather, subject to the payment of certain legacies, and he entered upon the avocation of a farmer. On March 9, 1843, he was united in marriage to Jane, daughter of James and Prudence Denniston, of Little Britain, and a representative of another of the old, substantial families of the town.

Mr. Kernochan passed his entire life upon the farm upon which he was born. He was a careful and thrifty farmer, cultivating his land with intelligence and good judgment, and ranking among the first agriculturists of his section. While no aspirant for public place, he took an active interest in events transpiring around him, and used his influence for the good of the community in which he dwelt, and for the welfare of society in general. He was possessed of great firmness of character, exercised an independent judgment in most matters, and was one whose integrity and honesty was never questioned. He was a regular attendant upon the ministrations of the Associate Reformed Church of Little Britain, of which he was a member and trustee, and to which he contributed liberally. He acted as executor and administrator of a number of estates, and frequently as the advisor and counselor of his friends. He was an excellent business man, and carried on his various transactions in a methodical and exact manner. He died on June 15, 1875, and his wife on April 12, 1869. His

Hugh McGill (2d), eldest son of the above-mentioned Hugh, was born in the town of New Windsor in 1786. He grew to manhood in that town, and married Margaret, daughter of Richard Lusk. He began the life of a farmer first by renting, but subsequently bought the farm where his son, Samuel S. McGill, lives, in New Windsor, which became the family homestead. He died in 1833. His three sons were James B., a practicing physician, who died at Columbus, Ohio, in 1851; Samuel S., and William L. McGill.

The latter was born in the town of New Windsor, on July 7, 1813, and grew up on his father's farm, attending the district school during the winter seasons. After the demise of his father he farmed the homestead, in company with his brother, until Aug. 12, 1844, when he married Elizabeth, daughter of James and Elsie Kernochan. Soon after he purchased 100 acres of his present farm of the estate of Jabez Atwood. Subsequent additions make the area of the farm 225 acres in 1881.

Mr. McGill has been one of the most active and enterprising of the farmers of New Windsor for many years. While no office-seeker, he has always been a staunch supporter of Democratic principles, and taken an active interest in the local politics of his town. He has been a commissioner of highways for more than thirty years, a justice of the peace, and excise commissioner for a number of years. As a farmer he has been successful and painstaking, and by thrift and economy has been enabled to accumulate a good estate. Until quite recently he has made a specialty of the making of butter. He attends the Unitarian Church of Newburgh, and contributes liberally of his income to the encouragement of all worthy enterprises. He is a man of integrity and moral worth, and enjoys the confidence and respect of a large circle of friends. The children of Mr. McGill, William J. and Mary E. McGill, reside at home.

JOHN S. BULL.

The Bull family is one of the oldest in the county of Orange. Isaac Bull was born Feb. 15, 1772, passed his life as a farmer in the town of Monroe, and died Oct. 16, 1846. He was the father of the subject of this memoir, and was twice married, first to Hannah Mapes, who died March 16, 1812, in her thirty-sixth year, and secondly to Rachel Marvin, who died without issue Jan. 27, 1829, aged fifty-five years. The children of Isaac and Hannah (Mapes) Bull were eight in number, namely: Maria, born March 6, 1795, died June 21, 1818; Franklin, born March 11, 1797, died April 15, 1855; Sarah, born Nov. 30, 1798, married Francis Bowman; David, born Oct. 11, 1800, died December, 1880; Hiram W., born Feb. 7, 1802, died July 26, 1863; Daniel, born Aug. 23, 1805, died Sept. 14, 1813; Elizabeth, born Feb. 25, 1808, married Francis Bowman, died Aug. 12, 1873; John Springstead, born Nov. 26, 1809, died Nov. 17, 1876; and an infant, who died unnamed.

John S. Bull was born at Satterly, in the town of Monroe, on the date given above. He received a common-school education, and about the age of fourteen began the duties of life by clerking in the store of Barney Horton, at Hamptonburgh. After two years he returned to his home for a brief season, and then entered the employ of his brother-in-law, David H. Moffatt, who was engaged in the mercantile business at Washingtonville. He remained with Mr.

Moffatt until 1832, when he purchased the business and engaged in trade on his own account for a number of years longer. About the year 1840 he bought the old Clinton farm, in the town of New Windsor, of Walter Halsey, and entered upon the life of a farmer, where he continued to reside until his death in 1876. In 1855 he began the erection of the substantial stone residence in which his family live, and moved into it three years later.

J. S. Bull

The long mercantile career that Mr. Bull enjoyed previous to his turning his attention to agricultural pursuits well fitted him for success in any department of business life. As a farmer he was circumspect in his affairs, cultivating his land with good judgment, and utilizing the productive qualities of his farm to the fullest extent. He made a specialty of dairying for many years, and the excellent quality of his butter gave it a ready sale in the markets of the country. He was a careful business man, and his services were often in demand among his neighbors and friends who were in need of counsel, advice, and assistance. He was of a self-reliant nature, independent in judgment and action, and took a leading place among the progressive, intelligent farmers of his section. He participated somewhat in local politics, but was averse to the holding of public office. His integrity of purpose and deed was never called into question, and he sustained the reputation of an upright and honorable man. He was a member of the Blooming-Grove Congregational Church.

Mr. Bull was twice married. His first wife was

John Cromwell

The several branches of the Cromwell family in America claim descent from the same parent stock as that of the Protector, Oliver Cromwell. It is presumed that the ancestor of the American line was Col. John Cromwell, third son of Richard Cromwell, and a brother of the Protector.

John Cromwell, son of Col. John, emigrated from Holland to New Netherlands. He resided in 1686 at Long Neck, Westchester Co., afterwards known as Cromwell's Neck. He married, and left two sons, John² and James. The latter was born in 1696, and died in 1780. He married Esther Godfrey, and had children,—John,³ James, and William.

John Cromwell,³ of Harrison, Westchester Co., was born Dec. 5, 1727, and married Anna Hopkins, of Long Island, who was born Jan. 12, 1730. He was an active patriot during the Revolution, and endured many hardships in the cause of liberty. He died in 1805. His children were James, Daniel, John, Joseph, William, Naomi (who married Rev. Mr. Halsted), Esther (who married John Griffin, Jr., of North Castle), and Hannah (who married Wm. Field, of Cortlandt Manor).

James, eldest son of John Cromwell,³ and father of the subject of this sketch, was born Nov. 6, 1752. He married, May 15, 1782, Charlotte, daughter of Aaron Hunt, of Greenwich, Conn. She was born Nov. 18, 1762, and died in January, 1839. In early manhood James Cromwell worked Gen. Morris' farm at Morrisania. Subsequently he kept a grocery store in New York City for a short time, and then located at Sufferns, Rockland Co., where he worked at the trade of a blacksmith and at farming for several years. He finally purchased a farm in the town of Monroe, Orange Co. (then known as Southfield), where he passed the remainder of his days. He was an industrious and successful farmer, quiet, and unostentatious in manner, a member of the Society of Friends, and a man of integrity and moral principles. He died Dec. 23, 1828. His children were Hannah, who married David Griffin, of Westchester County; Rebecca, who married George Fritts, of Monroe; Daniel, a carpenter and builder, who lived and died in New York City; James, who farmed the family homestead in Monroe throughout his life; Oliver, who passed his life in Cornwall; Ann, who married John Haviland, of Westchester County;

David, who lived and died in Cornwall; Aaron; William and Mary, twins, who died young; William, formerly a merchant in New York, died in the old homestead; and John.

The latter, the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Monroe, July 26, 1803. He was reared upon his father's farm, and received only a district school education. On Oct. 12, 1826, he married Letitia, daughter of Abijah and Patience Haviland, of White Plains, Westchester Co. After the death of his father he engaged in the carting business in New York City until the spring of 1847, when, having met with success, and by thrift and economy having accumulated some means, he purchased of Leonard Nicoll his present farm of one hundred acres, in the town of New Windsor, where he has since continued to reside. He has been equally successful as a farmer, and taken a place among the prosperous and intelligent agriculturists of his section. He has devoted much attention to the cultivation of fruit, and for many years made a specialty of the dairying business. He occupies a pleasant home near Moodna, and now, in a ripe old age, is enjoying with contentment the fruits of a long life of industry, of devotion to duty, and of fidelity to principles of right living.

Mr. Cromwell has been a life-long member of the Society of Friends at Cornwall. He has led a quiet and retired life, and walked in the humble paths of existence, performing life's varied duties in a faithful manner, and resting content with the reflection that he was fulfilling all the purposes of Providence in a manly, Christian spirit. He has not participated actively in public affairs, although he has regularly cast his vote at elections. By a life of integrity and honorable dealing he has merited the confidence and respect of many friends.

Mr. Cromwell's first wife died in 1861, leaving four children, viz.: Walter, born Nov. 4, 1827, residing in California; James, born March 24, 1829, living at Bedford, Westchester Co.; Oliver, born July 24, 1831, residing in New Windsor; and David, born May 25, 1838, who is the county treasurer of Westchester County, at White Plains. On June 25, 1863, Mr. Cromwell was united to his present wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Charles and Ann (Conklin) Cox, of the town of Newburgh.

Melissa, daughter of James and Mary (Chandler) Gregg, of Bethlehem, Orange Co., to whom he was united Nov. 22, 1832, and who died, leaving no children, on March 12, 1833. His widow was Currence B., daughter of Samuel and Bethiah (Reeder) Moffatt, of Blooming-Grove, whom he married on Nov. 11, 1835. She was born Oct. 8, 1815. The children are Sarah Frances; Melissa, wife of Thomas H. Moffatt, of New York City; Josephine; Stephen M., living in Newburgh; Isaac J., residing at Washingtonville; Anna B., wife of Andrew Weyant, of Orange County; Austin C., farming the homestead property; and Emma L. Bull. Three daughters and a son reside at home.

NEWBURGH.

I.—GENERAL.

THE territory embraced in the town and city of Newburgh was a part of the lands purchased from the Indians by Governor Dongan in 1684, and subsequently conveyed by patent to Capt. John Evans in 1694. After the annulment of this patent in 1699, the entire district was conveyed by patent in small tracts, at different periods from 1703 to 1775, of which small tracts ten were included in the precinct of Newburgh as it was constituted in 1772, viz.: No. 1, German Patent, 2190 acres, issued Dec. 18, 1719; No. 2, Alexander Baird and Company, 6000 acres, Feb. 28, 1719; No. 3, Jacobus Kip and Company, 7000 acres, Oct. 17, 1720; No. 4, Richard Bradley and William Jamison, 1800 acres, May 27, 1729; No. 5, James Wallace, 2000 acres, Jan. 25, 1732; No. 6, Bradley children, 817 acres, March 26, 1739; No. 7, Francis Harrison and Company, 5600 acres, July 10, 1714; No. 8, John Spratt and Company, 1000 acres, April 12, 1728; No. 9, Melchior Gulch, 300 acres, Oct. 8, 1719; No. 10, Peter Johnson, 300 acres, Oct. 8, 1719.

SETTLEMENT OF THE GERMAN PATENT.

The first in order of settlement were the German Patent (No. 1), covering the present city of Newburgh and a portion of the town of Newburgh lying immediately north, including Balmville, and the patents to Melchior Gulch (No. 9) and Peter Johnson or Jansen (No. 10), near Middlehope. These settlements were composed of immigrants from the Palatinate of the Rhine, whose prior history may be briefly stated:

They were fugitives from the Lower Palatinate of the Rhine who found their way to England in the early part of 1708, and who, immediately after their arrival, petitioned the government to be transported to some plantation in America. On the 28th of April following the Board of Trade and Plantations reported that the petitioners were forty-one in number, viz.: ten men, ten women, and twenty-one children; that "they were very necessitous and in the utmost want, not having anything to subsist themselves;" that they had "been reduced to this miserable condition by the ravages committed by the French in the Lower Palatinate, when they lost all they had;" that they had "produced testimonials from the principal magistrates in the villages where they dwelt," which testimonials had been examined by the board and found that they gave "good character" to the petitioners;

that, in view of the facts stated, "they be sent to settle upon Hudson's River in the province of New York, where they" might become useful to the government, "particularly in the production of naval stores and as a frontier against the French and their Indians;" that they be supplied with tools and agricultural implements, and provision made for their support until they could "reap the fruit of their labor," and that, prior to their "departure, they be made denizens of the kingdom, for their greater encouragement in the enjoyment of the privileges accruing by such letters of denization."

On the 10th of August, 1708, Secretary Boyle

writes: "The Queen being graciously pleased to send fifty-two* German Protestants to New York, and to settle them there at her own expense, her majesty, as a further act of charity, is willing also to provide for the subsistence of Joshua de Kockerthal, their minister, and it is her pleasure that you pass a grant to him of a reasonable portion of land for a glebe, not exceeding five hundred acres, with liberty to sell a suitable proportion thereof for his better maintenance."

Letters of denization were issued to the immigrants (August 25th), and under a guaranty of 9d. a day per head for twelve months for their support, and a grant of land on which to settle, they sailed for the New World, enrolled as "The above-mentioned clergyman, Joshua Kockerthal, Sibylle Charlotte his wife, and Christian Joshua, Benigna Sibylle, and Susanna Sibylle, their children; also Lourentz Schwisser, husbandman, Anna Catharine his wife, and Johannes their son; Heinrich Rennau, stocking-maker and husbandman, Johanna his wife, Lourentz and Heinrich, their sons, and Susanna and Maria Johanna Liboschain, sisters-in-law; Andries Volck, husbandman, Anna Catharine his wife, Heironemus, Maria Barbara, and Anna Gertrude, their children; Michael Weigand, husbandman, Anna Catharine his wife, Tobias, George, and Anna Maria, their children; Jacob Webber, husbandman, Anna Elizabeth his wife, and Eve Maria and Eve Elizabeth, their children, Johannes Jacob Plettel, husbandman, Anna Elizabeth his wife, and Margaret, Anna Sarah, and Catharine, their children; Johannes Fischer, smith and husbandman, Maria Barbara his wife, and Andries his son; Melchior Gulch, carpenter and joiner, Anna Catharine his wife, and Heinrich and Margaret, their children; Isaac Turck, husbandman; Peter Rose, cloth-weaver, and Johanna his wife, Mary Wiernarm, husbandwoman, his mother-in-law, and Catharine her child; Isaac Feber, husbandman, Catharine his wife, and Abram their son; Daniel Fiere, husbandman, Anna his wife, and Andrew and Johannes, their sons; and Herman Schuneman, clerk."

Reaching New York in the winter, they were transferred from thence to the district then known as "Quassaick Creek and Thanskamir."† Of their private history we know nothing beyond the fact shown before the Commissioners of Trade, that they were men of good character, and the general fact that they had been stripped of their possessions by religious persecution; that they were followers of the doctrines of Luther and members of the Lutheran Church, and were knit together by common memories and a faith that had proved sufficient to sustain them amid the most severe trials and sacrifices. Unlike the pioneers in other localities, they brought nothing with them, and left behind no friends able to assist them. A scanty public stipend, too frequently withheld, was all that sustained the strong arms and willing hearts before which the dense forest yielded its sway, their humble cabins dotted the hillside, and a sanctuary in which to worship God arose.

Through the petitions which they sent in to the Council of New York, and through the records of their church which have been preserved, we are enabled, to some extent, to trace the progress of their settlement. On the 20th of May, 1709, they write that since the death of Lord Lovelace the provision for their support had not been complied with; that they were in great want of the same, and without it would not be able to perfect their settlement on the lands assigned them, and that nineteen of their number had changed their religion and turned Pietists, and withdrawn themselves from the Lutheran communion. The Council immediately granted them the supplies asked for; and at the same time appointed a committee to examine into the difficulties in their church. The latter were satisfactorily arranged; and at the request of the Council, Col. Thomas Wenham engaged to provide them "a needful and necessary support until the expiration of twelve months."

Soon after this (June 29th) their minister, Joshua Kockerthal, asked to be transported to London, in order to more speedily and satisfactorily arrange what had been done in favor of the company; but his request does not appear to have been granted. In October following, John Conrad Codweis, in behalf of the company, represented in a petition that a large portion of the allowance granted for its support remained due, and that unless it should be provided they must perish during the winter. Thereupon the Council (October 10th) ordered the advance of supplies, the company giving "their personal security for the repayment thereof in case it be not paid in England in a year." In other words, the colonial authorities were not disposed to assume the expenditure, trifling though it was, of "9d. a day per head" involved in the agreement which had been made by the home government with the immigrants for their support without definite instructions from the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations. The authority required was soon transmitted to the Council, and the payment made, including a special allowance to Joshua Kockerthal of £20 a year. In the spring of 1710 tools and building materials were distributed to them; also smith tools; iron and steel for horse-shoes, nails, and mending tools; medicines, books and paper, agricultural implements, and horses, cows, and pigs.‡

* Original number increased by subsequent arrivals.

† The precise date of their settlement is not known, but it is shown by a petition of William Chambers, of date May 9, 1709, for lands immediately south of Quassaick Creek, that they were here at that time, the tract which he wished to obtain being described as bounded north "by the widow Plettel and Quassaick Creek." The Widow Plettel's friends had evidently erected a cabin for her on lands adjoining the creek on the north. She afterwards married George Lockstead, and the lot on which she had first located was granted to her second husband, herself, and her children.

The patent which had been promised to the immigrants for the tract on which they had been located was not immediately granted. On their petition in 1713, Governor Hunter issued to Augustus Graham, surveyor-general of the province, a warrant directing him to "survey and lay out for the Germans at Quassaick Creek, in the county of Ulster, such quantity of land as is by them petitioned for and approved of in council," and further requiring that he should "survey for each of them his quantity distinctly." A survey was made under this order, on the 13th of April, 1714, but was not satisfactory, the immigrants representing in petition that, the land being "all upland," they were not able to obtain subsistence for themselves and families "for want of some meadow land for fodder for their cattle in winter." So the matter stood until 1718, when Kockerthal, in behalf of himself and associates, recited in petition that the survey had been made, the lands being described as "a tract on the west side of Hudson's River, in the county of Ulster, beginning on the north side of Quassaick Creek, and extending northerly up the Hudson River on a straight line 219 chains, and into the woods on that side 100 chains, containing 2190 acres;" which said tract had been "divided into nine lots, the which are numbered from 1 to 9, each lot containing a suitable quantity for each family to which they are appropriated, there being allowed for each head 50 acres, and 500 acres for a Glebe." Some changes were asked by the grantees. He desired that the farm assigned to him be added to the north side of the Glebe, and the same quantity given to him on the south side. This was granted; but the application to omit from the patents conveyance to "the wives and children" of the patentees was not conceded.

Before the final allotment came some changes also occurred in the original company. Johannes Jacob Plettel died on his passage to America or soon after his arrival, and his widow had married George Lockstead; Joshua Kockerthal had also died; Peter Rose had removed to Pennsylvania and transferred his in-

GERMAN PATENT.
E, Western Avenue; G, Glebe Land; K, King's Highway.

Dec. 18, 1719: "Lot No. 1, to George Lockstead and Anna Elizabeth his wife, Margaret, Anna Sarah, and Catharine, their children, 250 acres; No. 2, to Michael Weigand and Anna Catharine his wife, Tobias, George, and Anna Maria, their children, 250 acres; No. 3, to Herman Schunemann and Elizabeth his wife, 100 acres; No. 4, to Christian Henricke, 100 acres; No. 5, to Sibylle Charlotte Kockerthal, the widow of Joshua Kockerthal, and to Christian Joshua, Benigna Sibylle, and Susanna Sibylle, their children, 250 acres; No. 6, to Burger Meynders, 100 acres; No. 7, to Jacob Webber and Anna Elizabeth his wife, Eve Maria, and Eve Elizabeth, their children, 200 acres; No. 8, to Johannes Fischer and Maria Barbara his wife, 100 acres; No. 9, to Andries Volck and Anna Catharine his wife, George, Hieronemus, Maria Barbara, and Anna Gertrude, their children, 300 acres." To Melchior Gulch and Peter Johnson had previously been issued (Oct. 8, 1719) patents for 300 acres each, lying north of the principal tract. Forty acres were reserved for highways,* and 500 acres for a Glebe; and the whole tract was to be known and called "The Palatine Parish by Quassaick." The Glebe lot was assigned to Andries Volck and Jacob Webber, and

* The roads included in the forty acres reserved for that purpose are presumed to have been what is now known as Western Avenue and Liberty Street. Western Avenue formed the northern boundary of lot No. 3, and the southern boundary of lot No. 4, and extended two chains in width from the river to the west bounds of the patent. Liberty Street, originally the "King's Highway," was opened prior to the issue of the patent; Western Avenue was not opened until nearly a century later. The settlers made other roads. One ran from the river, from a point in the vicinity of Second Street, up the hill in a southwesterly direction, along the bed of what is now part of Colden Street, to the corner of First; thence to the corner of Grand and Western Avenues, and from thence toward Quassaick Creek, leaving the Cold Spring on the right. It was first called the "Walkill Road," and subsequently "Wagon Street." It was the principal road to the river. The first dwellings were on the line of Liberty Street.

their successors, for the use and behoof of the Lutheran minister and his successors forever,* for which purpose it was to be leased at a certain quit-rent, in whole or in parcels, for terms not longer than seven years, and was subject to the annual payment to the provincial authorities of "one peppercorn," if the same should be legally demanded.†

From the church books of the Lutheran congregation of New York, it appears that the successor of Joshua Kockerthal was Justus Falconier, who, it is said, was baptized "in the house of one of the trustees, the 19th April, 1710," and continued to serve the people at Quassaick "every year (i.e., by an annual visit) without any profit of the Glebe. He is deceased, 1723."

In the year 1725, William Christoffer Berkenmeyer arrived at New York, and entered upon the duties of pastor of the Lutheran Church there, and also filled the appointment of Falconier at Quassaick. Meanwhile the two trustees of the Glebe, Andries Volck and Jacob Webber, had sold out their lands and removed to Pennsylvania, and their places had been supplied by Zacharias Hofman and Tobias Weigand, son of Michael Weigand, who, in 1727, entered into a written contract with the Consistory of the Lutheran congregation of New York, by the terms of which the congregation at Quassaick were received into the communion of the former body, they consenting "that the Lutheran minister of New York, at his going to and from Albany," should visit Quassaick parish twice in each year, for which service he should receive the yearly rents and profits of the Glebe. The contract continues as follows: "As we (the trustees named) do herewith call, constitute, and appoint Mr. William Christoffer Berkenmeyer, Lutheran minister at New York, for our lawful teacher of the parish of Quassaick, to minister to us twice a year, as well in preaching the holy scriptures, and the symbolical books of our Lutheran Church, as in administering the holy sacraments of Christ's institution, promising to pay him the income, etc., and acknowledging him as our teacher, as also whenever he lands upon our shore to receive him and bring him back on board the vessel.

* "To have and to hold the said Glebe of 500 acres of the same tract of land and premises unto the aforesaid Andries Volck and Jacob Webber as first trustees, during their natural lives and their successors forever. But to and for the sole and only proper use, benefit, and behoof of a Lutheran minister to serve and have the care of the inhabitants of the same 2100 acres of laud, and their successors forever."

† All patents were conditioned upon the annual payment of a quit-rent. This payment was sometimes due in money, and often in wheat or other commodity. "Twenty shillings and one fat buck per annum" was the rent of the Evans Patent. The rent of one peppercorn implied a free grant. The rents of the larger patents produced an annual revenue to the government of considerable amount. After the Revolution the rents became due to the State. In 1786 it was provided that lands subject to these rents might be released on the payment of arrears, and fourteen shillings to every shilling of the annual dues. Many titles in fee were obtained under this commutation; there were also many forfeitures and sales. The last sale took place in March, 1826, and all the old rents finally extinguished. The arrears for quit-rents, then amounting to $53,380, were in 1819 taken from the general fund and given in equal proportions to the literature and school funds.

Moreover, since hitherto we can make no use of the bell given to our parish, we therefore give the said bell, by oral permission of his excellency Governor Burnet, to the Lutheran Church of New York. However, on this condition, if it should happen that we should be able to build a church of our own at any time thereafter, then the Lutheran Church of New York shall restore to us the same bell, such as it now is, or another of equal weight and value. Signed, sealed, etc., March 30, 1727." Mr. Berkenmeyer served until 1731, receiving thirty cheeples of wheat.‡

In the year 1733, Michael Christian Knoll was appointed minister at "Quassaick Creek, Weapon's (Wappinger's) Creek, and Hackensack." He served in the parish of Quassaick three times each year, receiving thirty cheeples of wheat each year. It was during his administration that the Palatines erected the building remembered by many of the former generation as the Glebe school-house, which stood in the burying-ground on Liberty Street. This was their church. The precise date of its erection cannot now be ascertained. It was a building of perhaps twenty feet square, with a roof running up from the four sides. In the centre of the roof a little cupola was erected in which hung the bell which had been loaned to the Lutherans of New York, the prior gift of Queen Anne. The building was without floor or chimney, an aperture in the roof, under the cupola, serving the latter purpose. In this building the people worshiped. In their poverty it was their palace, and not less acceptable to the Great Ruler than the costly edifices and gilded spires which men now dedicate to His service.

While these events were transpiring, a considerable change occurred in the population of the settlement. The Palatines were mainly farmers, and in the places of their nativity had occupied lands of the richest and finest soil, and such they sought to obtain in the New World. The sterile hills of Quassaick offered them no such attraction, while those of their number who had found their way to Pennsylvania had realized their expectations, and pressed their former neighbors to remove thither. Under these influences the majority of them sold their farms. The first sale was by George Lockstead and Michael Weigand, of the whole of lot No. 1, and half of lot No. 2, to Nathan Smith,§ from whom the western part of both lots was purchased by William Brown as attorney for Governor

‡ The agreement quoted appears to have been the result of a misunderstanding between Mr. Berkenmeyer and the Palatines, in 1726, concerning the produce of the Glebe lands, to which he considered himself entitled for his services, and which for some cause was withheld. Berkenmeyer first laid his complaint before the Governor, expecting him to interfere in his behalf. The Governor, however, declined to act in the matter, and wrote him a letter pointing out his mode of relief, saying that the courts of law were open to him where such cases were disposed of. The difficulty was settled by this contract.

§ Nathan Smith was a blacksmith by trade. He removed from Kingston and settled on the patent to William Chambers (New Windsor), from whence he came to the parish of Quassaick.

William Burnet,* and sold by him to Alexander Colden, who subsequently sold to Jonathan Hasbrouck.† The eastern part of lot No. 2 was sold by Michael Weigand to William Brown, for Governor Burnet, and to Burger Meynders. The former sold the southern half of the lot to Alexander Colden, by whom it was conveyed (1753) to Jonathan Hasbrouck. Meynders occupied the northeastern part of the lot until 1753, when he also sold to Hasbrouck, who thus became the owner of the largest portion of lots No. 1 and No. 2. Lot No. 3 was sold by Herman Schuneman to James Alexander,‡ from whom it was purchased by Alexander Colden and Burger Meynders,§ except two acres at the northeast corner reserved by Alexander. Meynders subsequently sold to Jonathan Hasbrouck, and Colden cut up a portion of his share into small parcels. Lot No. 4 was sold by Christian Henricke to William Brown, for Governor Burnet, from whom it was purchased by Cadwallader Colden for himself, Jacobus Bruyn, James Alexander, Phineas McIntosh, Daniel Denton, Michael Dunning, and Henry Wileman, by whom it was divided (1730-31) into lots, and was subsequently known as "The Old Town of Newburgh Plot."|| Lot No. 5, granted to the widow of Joshua Kockerthal, was sold by her children (1741) to James Smith, who sold one acre in the southeast corner to Alexander Colden; the remainder descended to Benjamin Smith. Lot No. 6, the first one north of the Glebe, was sold by Burger Meynders to Burras Holmes. Lot No. 7 was sold by Jacob Webber to Zacharias Hofman, August 5, 1724. Lots Nos. 8 and 9 were sold by Johannes Fischer and Andries Volck to Zacharias Hofman, Feb. 20, 1722.¶ Hofman held the lots until his death, when they were sold by his heirs. These changes brought the Glebe lands into occupation to some extent by the families of the original settlers or their descendants who had not removed from the place, and by strangers who had rented them; they also brought to the Colden plots a number of immigrants.

To the original settlers the new-comers were known as "the Dutch and English new inhabitants," terms

* "His Excellency Gov. William Burnet" is the language of the deed. Governor Burnet was a son of the distinguished Bishop Burnet. He was Governor of the province for a few years prior to 1728.

† The eastern part of lot No. 1 descended from Nathan Smith to Henry and Thomas, his sons, and was subsequently purchased by James Kenwick.

‡ James Alexander was the father of William Alexander, who served as an officer in the war of the Revolution, and who is familiarly known in history as Lord Stirling. He attained considerable distinction in the colony, and was largely interested in lands, not only in what is now Orange County, but in other parts of the State.

§ Son of the original patentee.

| The reader will not confound this title with that of "Old Town," by which the Glebe lands have been known in more modern times. Christian Henricke's land (lot No. 4) was that section of the present city of Newburgh lying between First Street and Western Avenue. It will be referred to hereafter as being the first to bear the name of Newburgh.

¶ The deeds from Webber and Volck are recorded in the Ulster County records. Webber sold for £110, and Volck and Fischer for £130, "to be divided between them."

which may be understood to mean "members of the English and Reformed Dutch Churches." Their acquisition was most favorable to the growth of the place. The association of which Governor Colden was the representative was influential, and the fact that they had established a township plot on the tract was soon noised abroad. Daniel Denton, so well known in Long Island history, apparently took considerable interest in the matter, and sent to the place his son James and his neighbor Richard Albertson. Duncan Alexander, the son of James Alexander, was also added to the list of inhabitants; while conspicuous in his efforts to induce settlements on the tract was Alexander Colden, who, in furtherance of the interest which he held, obtained (1743) the charter for the present Newburgh ferry, and at about the same time erected a grist-mill on the Quassaick. From a German settlement the place had passed, in 1743, almost wholly under the control of the Scotch-English, and had been inchoately christened with the Scotch name of Newburgh. Such possibilities as they saw in the "uplands" on which the Palatines had almost starved, to the latter were not vouchsafed, or if they were they were without the means to secure.

The increase in population brought with it also a change in the civil organization of the district. When they were first established on the patent the Palatines were not given local officers; justices and constables do not appear to have been known to them; the commission of crime is not recorded against them; their church was their government. Yet civil authority was made accessible to them, and the hand of the government extended to them in the collection of taxes, as part of the specifically undefined territory of the precinct of the Highlands, which was created for that purpose by an order of the court of sessions of Ulster County, Sept. 5, 1710. More definite boundaries and a more limited territory were given to the precinct in 1743, at which time "the parish by Quassaick" had become a comparatively important portion of its composition.

But to the church of the Palatines the influx of population was disastrous; under its touch this last link of their association was dissolved. Resuming the record, we find that Zacharias Hofman, one of the trustees of the Glebe, died in 1744, and that on the 23d of June, in the same year, Burger Meynders, Jr., was elected as his successor and "Tobias Weigand anew confirmed, which was done in the church there; none of the English and Dutch new inhabitants appearing, although they were knowing to our election." Three years later, on the 22d of July, pursuant to the terms of the patent, a meeting of all the inhabitants of the parish was held, and the new inhabitants, who were there in force, elected "Mr. Alexander Colden and Mr. Richard Albertson for their trustees," who took immediate steps to open the church to a minister of the Church of England, one of whom, the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins, was then stationed in the district.

The record continues: "Our (the Lutheran) minister coming there, did preach the 12th of July, without speaking to the new trustees. Sunday, the 19th, the church was full of people, taken out of the country from both sides of the river. Some justices of the peace, and some with swords and sticks, were there in the church, in the presence of the English minister, Mr. Watkins, who was come there the first time the same Sunday. Our minister, after oral and public protest at the door of the church, went into a private house upon the Glebe to do divine worship for the Lutherans.* In the year 1748, the 3d July, our minister preached in the church, to which Mr. Albertson did consent, because the English minister was not to come there that Sunday; but Mr. Colden did prohibit the church. The 2d October our minister was preaching in the church without speaking with the new trustees."

This appears to have been the last visit made by "our minister," Mr. Michael Christian Knoll. In behalf of himself and others, he presented to Governor Clinton a petition, dated May 12, 1749, setting forth the facts of the case substantially as here given, stating further "that the Lutheran inhabitants living on the said granted lands, being now reduced to a small number, the present inhabitants have taken occasion to deprive your petitioners of the said church and Glebe, and have lately hindered your petitioner, Michael Christian Knoll, from performing service in it, and forbade the tenants to pay the rents to your said petitioner, pretending that the said Glebe and church have reverted to the crown for want of Lutheran inhabitants to enjoy them, notwithstanding your petitioners do aver that within a convenient distance from the said lands as great a number of Lutheran families are living as are sufficient to make a congregation for divine service at those times when your petitioner, Michael Christian Knoll, by his agreement is called to preach at that place. Your petitioners therefore most humbly pray your excellency to grant to your petitioners, the minister and consistory of the Protestant Lutheran Church of New York, letters patent to confirm the said church and five hundred acres of land for the use of a Lutheran minister, for the benefit of the said Lutherans in that neighborhood." Another petition on the same subject was submitted to the Governor, by the same parties, on the 5th of October, 1749, in which it is positively asserted that "there live as tenants upon the Glebe and thereabout, on both sides of the river, more than thirty families" of the Lutheran confession. This paper and the documents accompanying it were read before the Council, October 29th, and the memorandum in reference to their disposition is: "Read, and Council of opinion that nothing can be done in this petition." In other words, the terms of the charter having been complied with in the election of trustees, the Council refused to set the result aside.

The decision of the Council practically terminated "The Palatine Parish by Quassaick," the original members of which had long previously removed from it, or had been laid away in its quiet churchyard. As a people, they were earnest, good men and women. Wherever they or their neighbors of subsequent immigrations are met, their record compares favorably with that of the immigrants from any other country. No citizens of more substantial worth are found under the flag of this their native land than their descendants; no braver men were in the armies of the Revolution than Herkimer and Muhlenberg. Had they done nothing in the parish but made clearings in its forests and planted fields they would be entitled to grateful remembrance; they did more,—they gave to it its first church and its first government; and in all its subsequent history their descendants have had a part. We close their record with wonder, not that they accomplished so little, but that they accomplished so much.

The affairs of the Palatine or Lutheran Church and of the Glebe remained in the position which has been stated until 1751, when Edmund Concklin, Jr., William Ward, Jacob Wandel, James Denton, William Smith, Richard Albertson, Thomas Ward, John Wandel, Caklass Leveridge, Henry Smith, William Mitchell, Alexander Colden, Nathan Furman, Daniel Thurston, Michael Demott, and Duncan Alexander presented a petition to Governor Clinton and Council, praying for letters patent conveying to themselves and their successors the Glebe lands, with a view to establish and maintain a minister of the Church of England and a schoolmaster; with power to divide the Glebe so as to reserve 200 acres for the use of a minister and schoolmaster, and cut up the remaining 300 acres into lots of one acre each, which lots, instead of being leased for seven years, should be leased forever, the lease-holder paying an annual rent; and also with power to "hold a fair on the said lands on the second Tuesday in April and October annually."

Notwithstanding the earnest remonstrance of the Lutherans, the Governor issued a warrant to William Smith, Esq., "His Majesty's Attorney-General," directing him to "prepare a draft of letters patent to Alexander Colden and Richard Albertson, trustees, etc., for the Glebe land of Quassaick, in the county of Ulster," in accordance with the terms of the petition, the lands to be held by the "said Alexander Colden and Richard Albertson, as first trustees, during their natural lives, and to their successors forever, for the sole use and behoof of a minister of the

* The tradition connected with this affair is that the Lutherans attempted a forcible ejection of the new inhabitants, but failed. In the melee the door of the church was forced from its hinges and one bulky Lutheran buried beneath it as it fell. He escaped with a few bruises, and the assailants retreated with most woeful countenances.

There is another tradition, that the bell previously noticed was taken from its place secretly at night and hidden in the swamp on the lands lately owned by William P. C. Smith, deceased; in which place it remained for thirty or forty years, when it was accidentally discovered and returned to its proper place. The bell was subsequently placed in the cupola of the academy, where it remained until 1831 or 1832.

Church of England, as by law established, and a schoolmaster, to have the care of souls and the instruction of the children of the neighboring inhabitants."

This was followed by a legal surrender, on the part of Colden and Albertson, of the lands held by them as trustees under the first patent; and on the 26th day of March, 1752, the letters patent previously ordered by the Governor and Council were issued, "constituting them and their successors one body corporate and politic, in fact and name, by the name of the Parish of Newburgh," and vesting in them the lands in question in trust "for the proper use, benefit, and behoof of a minister of the Church of England, as by law established, to have the care of souls of the aforesaid tract of 2190 acres of land, and of a schoolmaster to teach and instruct the children of the aforesaid inhabitants, and their successors forever, and to no other use whatever." The patent further granted to the trustees and their successors "free and full liberty and license to hold and keep a public fair upon the tract of 500 acres on the second Tuesday in April and October in every year forever hereafter, where, as well all the inhabitants of the aforesaid tract of 2190 acres of land, as those in the neighboring settlements and counties, and all other persons whatsoever, may buy and sell any horses, sheep and cattle, or any goods, wares, and merchandise whatsoever, without paying any toll or other fees for the same."*

The provision for the maintenance of a schoolmaster, and for an annual fair, as well as the denomination of the minister, were new features in the patent. Another new feature was the change effected in the name of the settlement. Under the first patent it had borne, as we have shown, the title of Quassaick; and by this name the place was legally known until the grant of the new patent, in which it was expressly directed that the settlement should be called "the Parish of Newburgh." Previous to the legal application of this name the place had been called Newburgh by the "new inhabitants," as already stated, as early as 1731.† In the petition of Alexander Colden, May 24, 1743, asking for letters patent to establish a ferry, it is said, "at a place now commonly called Newburgh Patent." In the petition of Colden, Albertson, and others, Nov. 4, 1751, it is said, "at a place called Quassaick, now commonly called Newburgh Patent, in Ulster County." As both of these papers were drawn by Colden, it would seem that to Colden belongs the honor of having conferred the title which the town and the city now bear. The name is of Saxon origin, the word new being the English orthography for the Saxon neow, and burgh is the Saxon burg with the English addition of the letter h.‡

One of the first official acts of the trustees under the new patent was the division of the Glebe into streets and lots, the designating of portions for the minister and schoolmaster, and the repair and seating of the church building. Soon after, a map was prepared showing the location of the streets and lots. The streets laid out on it are confined to the Glebe, with the exception of King Street, and are King, now Liberty; Second, now Grand; Hasbrouck, now Montgomery; Water, South, Clinton, Broad, and North. The streets named, however, with the exception of King and South Streets, were not opened until a subsequent period.§ The lots were occupied as follows: No. 1, by the church; 2, by three buildings owned by John Morrel and Dr. Morrison; 3, one dwelling by William Ward; 4, one dwelling by Henry Bend; 5, one dwelling unoccupied; 6, one dwelling by Joseph Albertson; 7, two dwellings by Martin Weigand; 25, one dwelling by Henry Don; 29, one dwelling by William Ward; 41, one dwelling by William Ward, Jr. The remaining lots were without buildings and occupied as follows: No. 8, John M. Young; 9 and 10, Patrick McCary; 11, Thomas Waters; 12, 24, 36, 48, and 60, Alexander Brower; 13, Samuel Sands; 14, Morrel and Morrison; 15 and 40, William Ward, Jr.; 16 and 39, Joshua Sands; 18, 53, 63, and 65, Joseph Albertson; 19, 31, and 43, Jonas Denton; 20, 32, and 44, Samuel Denton; 21, Dr. Isaac Brown; 22, Morris Fowler; 23, Thomas Brown; 26, Charles McCary; 28 and 71, Abel Belknap; 33 and 45, Jonathan Hasbrouck; 34, 35, 46, 47, 58, 59, and 70, Thomas Morrel; 37, Robert Morrison; 38, William Miller; 42, Thomas Ward; 50, 57, and 69, David Connor; 51, Thaddeus Smith; 52 and 64, Jeremiah Ward; 55 and 67, James Tidd; 66, Nathan Smith; 73, Isaac Belknap; 17, 49, 54, 56, 61, 62, and 68, and those west of King Street, vacant.

† It is reasonable to presume that had the name been conferred by the Germans in honor of the Elector John William, of the house of Newburg, it would not have been written with the final h.

§ The marginal notes on this map are as follows: "Lots Nos. 1 and 27 are reserved for church and churchyards, and No. 72 for a public landing and shipyard. The owners of the lots below King Street are Capt. Jonathan Hasbrouck, Nos. 33 and 45; Samuel Denton, Nos. 20, 32, and 44; Jonathan Denton, Nos. 31, 43, and 19; John Morrel and Dr. Morrison, Nos. 2 and 14; William Ward, Jr., No. 3, 15, 64, and 76; Joseph Albertson, Nos. 6, 18, 53, 63, 65, 67; Martin Weigand and others, No. 7; Patrick McCary, Nos. 9 and 10; Alexander Brower, Nos. 11, 12, 23, 24, 36, 48, 60; Thomas Morrel, Nos. 10, 22, 34, 46, 50, 59, 35, 47, 70; Abel Belknap, Nos. 71 and 20; Isaac Belknap, No. 73. N. B.—South Street, Broad Street, and North Street are each two chains wide, and all the rest each one chain. Each lot contains one acre of land, and is three chains and eighty-three links in length and two chains and sixty-five links in breadth." From the well-ascertained dates at which some of the lot-owners became residents, it is apparent that some of the entries on the map were made at a later period than the map itself.

* Such fairs are very common in England and Germany. In many of the counties of the province they were established by special enactment of the Assembly at an early period. The fairs were held on the spot above named down to the stormy times of the Revolution, were resumed after the war, and were held at different periods as late as 1805, at which time they had degenerated into mere exhibitions of race-horses. The last fair of which any record has been preserved was held on Tuesday, Oct. 14, 1805, when a premium of $200 was awarded "to the jockey riding the best horse on the course of Benjamin Case."

† "The Old Town of Newburgh Plot."

The records throw little additional light upon the period between the transfer of the Glebe to Colden and Albertson and the events immediately preceding the Revolution. The few facts that we have gathered, however, are worthy a passing notice in this history, as they serve to indicate the progress of the parish. It was during this period that the trustees of the Glebe erected a residence for their minister, and a residence and school-house* combined for their schoolmaster. The former was a building about thirty-five feet square, a single story and attic in height, with a rude portico. It stood on the parsonage lot, on the west side of what is now Liberty Street, just north of Gidney Avenue. It was here that Hezekiah Watkins, the first English minister, resided. The building continued to be occupied as a parsonage until after the commencement of the Revolutionary war, and subsequently became a tenant-house. The schoolmaster's house was a building of similar construction, and stood on the schoolmaster's lot on the west side of Liberty, nearly opposite Clinton Street. It had no portico, but was deeper than the parsonage-house, the school-room being placed in the rear. In this rudimental college Hutchins and Spierin presided, and gave instruction in the old-fashioned rule of Daboll and birch rods; made good scholars in "reading, writing, and arithmetic," and graduated at least two generations of worthy members of society.

In 1767, John Morrel and Joseph Albertson petitioned Governor Henry Moore for the establishment of more taverns at Newburgh. In this petition it is stated "that on the Glebe land there are about seventeen dwelling-houses, which are situated at or close by a very public landing-place† on Hudson's River, whither many people from the back parts of the country bring their produce to send it to New York, having at least three boats belonging to the place that constantly go from thence to New York and return back again with goods, which creates a very considerable trade;" that in order to accommodate this trade it had been thought necessary, for several years previous, "to permit taverns or public-houses to be set up at or near the said landing," for the better "entertainment of the country people;" that "until about two years ago" one of the petitioners had been permitted to set up a tavern and retail liquors, and kept "a very good and orderly house."‡ Notwithstanding these facts, "one James McClaghry, one of the commissioners for collecting the duty of excise for strong liquors, etc., in the county," had refused to grant permits to the petitioners, but had "granted a permit only to one Martin Wygant,§ who pays three pounds for the excise, whereas all the retailers together in the place when they were permitted did not pay more than two pounds." The petitioners urged the "absolute necessity for at least three or four taverns at the said landing-place, to accommodate the country people, travelers, and passengers;" and that unless so many taverns were licensed, the place would "become of no account and be deserted by its inhabitants." The petition bears date Feb. 4, 1767, and the statements contained in it are certified to by eighty-three persons "inhabitants of the county of Ulster," whose names show the change in the population of the settlement. What answer was given to this petition does not appear, but as the place has since become of some "account," it is reasonable to suppose that the prayer of the petitioners was granted, and that the dire calamities predicted, in case of refusal, were thus averted. It is a little amusing to note the language of the inhabitants of this august village of "about seventeen houses," and their reference to "people from the country."||

We next have, under date of Nov. 17, 1769, a petition to Cadwallader Colden, Lieutenant-Governor, and at that time acting Governor of the province, asking for a charter for the Newburgh Mission. This petition is signed by John Sayre, missionary; Chas. Robie, Cad. Colden, Jr., Samuel Fowler, and Joseph Watkins, vestrymen; and Robert Carscaden, Andrew Graham, and Josiah Gilbert, church wardens, and recites "that by the pious donations of several persons" the mission was then in the possession of sundry tracts of land, "now held for the church by deeds of trust only," and that from "the inconvenience arising from this and sundry other matters" in which the good of the church was essentially concerned, the petitioners humbly prayed for a royal charter, which was granted.

In 1770 (April 16th), John Sayre, missionary, Sam-near Liberty. It was a mere log cabin with a frame addition. During the encampment at Newburgh, Gen. Wayne had his quarters there. About 1780, Weigand removed to a more commodious building on Liberty Street, just north of the burying-ground, and the old tavern was occupied by the father of Gen. John E. Wool, and was the birthplace of that officer. Martin Weigand was a grandson of the original settler, Michael Weigand.

SETTLEMENT OF OTHER PATENTS.

Passing from the parish of Newburgh to the adjoining patents which have been enumerated, the following facts are of record in regard to their original proprietors and to their sale and settlement:

The Baird Patent (No. 2) was issued to Alexander Baird, Abraham Van Vlecque, and Hermanus Johnson. It was sold to Governor William Burnet, who through his attorney, William Brown, of Salem, Mass., sold 250 acres to Arthur McKinny, April 24, 1745; 250 acres to Andrew Todd, June 1, 1749; and twenty-six lots, numbered from 4 to 30, to Samuel Belknap, Dec. 25, 1749. The latter sold thirteen of the lots to his brother Thomas,[†] in 1754; one lot to Morgan Powell, in 1761; part of a lot to Josiah Talket, in 1765; part of a lot to Felix McLannen, in 1765; part of a lot to James Stickney, in 1766; four lots to Isaac Belknap, in 1753; four lots to Abel Belknap and four to David Belknap, in 1766. Thomas Belknap sold one lot to Samuel Sprague, in 1761, and part of a lot to Robert Beattie. Beattie was also the purchaser of a lot from William Brown, in 1769. The Belknaps and the purchasers from them, with the exception of Beattie, were Massachusetts people, and were the first principal colonists of New England who removed hither. For a number of years their settlement was known as Belknap's Ridge, but more recently has been classed as Coldenham, from the district post-office of that name.

The Kipp and Cruger Patent (No. 3) was issued to Jacobus Kipp, John Cruger, Philip Cortlandt, David Provost, Oliver Schuyler, and John Schuyler. It included the district east, north, and west of Orange Lake, and adjoined the Baird Patent on the south.[‡] It was the most densely timbered and the latest in occupation of any of the patents, except that to Bradley and Jamison. It was divided into six parts, which were subdivided into farm-lots. Early deeds are not recorded; but tradition affirms that Silas Gardner, with a number of lumbermen, entered the district on the southeast in 1767, and established the settlement known as Gardnertown. Henry W. Kipp held a very considerable portion of Jacobus Kipp's share, and is said to have built, prior to the Revolution, the house now occupied by Jeromus Thorne, and to have called the place "his Rocky Forest." Nicholas Stevens was a purchaser from him. William Lupton held the Cruger interest, in whose honor Mr. Solomon Birdsall conferred the name of Luptondale. Alexander McCoy was a tenant or settler under him, and Michael Redmond and John Abrams were among the earliest purchasers. A colony of Friends from Westchester County, composed of Daniel, Zephaniah, and Barak Birdsall, John Sutton, and John Thorne, settled on the patent about 1791. Daniel Birdsall bought the place which McCoy had partially cleared, and found there a log house with a bark roof, which he occupied. Barak Birdsall bought of Henry W. Kipp, and subsequently became the owner of the Nicholas Stevens place. The Birdsalls are still largely represented in the district.

The settlement of the Bradley and Jamison Patent (No. 4) cannot be traced in early records. It is said that Johannes Snyder and John Crowell were first purchasers there. St. Andrew's Church, at Walden, held a farm-lot in the patent by gift from Bradley.

The Wallace Patent (No. 5) was to James Wallace alone. It was purchased by Joseph Penny, who sold 200 acres to Robert Ross, and settled upon the remainder with his seven sons,—John, William, Robinson, Joseph, Peter, James, and Allen. Penny was from Wales, England. Ross was Scotch, and is said to have been the first settler on the patent, and to have established the name of Rossville, although the patent itself became known as "the Penny Patent."

The Bradley Patent (No. 6) was to Sarah, Catharine, George, Elizabeth, and Mary Bradley, and was taken in their name by their father, Richard Bradley, who was thus enabled to secure six tracts in separate locations (of which that in Newburgh was one), embracing 6000 acres. It was purchased and settled in 1768, by John Foster, William Foster, Richard Ward, and John Griggs. The Fosters being the most numerous, the settlement was called Fostertown.

The Harrison Patent (No. 7) was issued to Francis Harrison, Mary Tatham, Thomas Brazier, James Graham, and John Haskell. It was for 5600 acres, excepting and reserving 300 acres laid out for "Gillis, the German joiner," and 300 acres "for the children of or Peter Johnson." By subsequent transfers, James Alexander, John Provost, and Daniel Gomoze[§] became interested in the patent. It was sold in several parcels at different periods. The first purchaser was James Ellsworth, in 1716, whose lands were held by his widow, and after her death sold by his son, William Ellsworth, to Samuel Stratton, in 1753; Stratton sold to Jehiel Clark. The share of James Graham passed to Jurie Quick in 1719, who sold to Zacharias † Belknap paid £1500 for the lots, and sold one-half of them to his brother Thomas for £826. At that time it required ten pounds old tenor to make one pound sterling. Belknap paid, therefore, £150 sterling, or $375 New York standard, for his lots. This rule of computing pounds will apply to all other sales of lands at that time or prior.

‡ Described as beginning "at three black-oak saplings on the east side of the great pond, seven chains to the northward of the eel-fishing place or the beginning of Quassaick Brook." The eel-fishing place must have been a resort of the Indians; it could not have been known to the English at that time.

Hofman (Sept. 24, 1727). After the death of the latter the tract, as well as the lots held by him in the German Patent, were sold by his heirs, among others to Joseph Bloomer in 1754, and Michael Demott and the Dentons and Flewellings in 1764. James Alexander and John Provost sold to Arthur Smith and Jehiel Clark (May 9, 1751) one-half of the fifth part originally held by Haskell. Daniel Gomoz sold to Samuel and Daniel Fowler, Nov. 6, 1747, the remaining half of that part, consisting of 500 acres. The extreme northern portion of the patent was held at an early date by Jacobus Van Blarcken, whose interest was purchased by Wolvert Acker at sheriff's sale in 1772. The Smiths, Clarks, Bloomers, and Fowlers were English people, and were mainly from Westchester County. Van Blarcken and Acker were also from Westchester, but of Dutch extraction. With the exception of the Belknap colony, none of the settlers had a more controlling influence in the early history of the town than those who occupied the Harrison Patent, which, with the reservations above stated, covered the district now known as Middlehope.

The Spratt Patent (No. 8) was in two parcels,—2000 acres in Ulster and 1000 in Newburgh,—and was issued to Andries Marschalk and John Spratt, the latter taking the Newburgh tract as his "one-third." It was purchased by Joseph Gidney, in 1760, and settled by his four sons, Joseph, Daniel, David, and Eleazer, from whom it took the name of Gidneytown.

The Gulch Patent (No. 9) was to Melchior Gulch, and his wife and children, of the original company of Palatines, precisely as were the lots in the German Patent. A portion of it passed to John Fowler, and from him to Daniel Kniffin, in 1758; afterwards to Underhill Merritt, and more recently to the late Daniel Merritt. It is recorded as having been issued to Gellis, Gillis, or Jellis, Melchior or Melchor, "the German carpenter, now in his possession and occupation." The portion retained by his family descended to Jacob Gillis, as the name came to be written, who held it by right of primogeniture until about the commencement of the war of the Revolution.

The patent to Peter Johnson* (No. 10) is not of record, but depends for its existence upon the reservations in the Harrison Patent. With the Gulch Patent, which it adjoined, it was the first occupied land in the northeast part of the town. There is no record of its transfer.

The patent for 300 acres to Harrison and Company (not numbered) was to supply a deficiency in the first patent.

PRECINCT OF NEWBURGH.

The increase in population resulting from the settlement of these patents brought with it a change in the organization of the precinct. The old precinct of the Highlands, after serving the purpose of its creation for fifty years, gave way, in 1762, to the precincts of Newburgh and New Windsor, into which it was divided, the latter being constituted substantially as the town now is; while the former embraced the towns of Marlborough and Plattekill, in Ulster County, as well as the present town and city of Newburgh. Under the act establishing this division, the first annual meeting for the election of precinct officers was held at the house of Jonathan Hasbrouck (now known as Washington's headquarters), in the parish of Newburgh, on the first Tuesday in April, 1763,† when the following officers were chosen, viz.: Samuel Sands, clerk; Jonathan Hasbrouck, supervisor; Richard Harper, John Windfield, and Samuel Wyatt, assessors; Daniel Gedney and Benjamin Woolsey, poor-masters; John McCrary, John Wandel, Burras Holmes, Isaac Fowler, Umphrey Merritt, and Thomas Woolsey, path-masters; Nathan Purdy and Isaac Fowler, fence-viewers and appraisers of damages. After continuing for ten years, the precinct was again divided, and the Marlborough and Plattekill settlements erected as the precinct of New Marlborough. This division left to the precinct of Newburgh the territory covered by the patents already named, and its date (Dec. 11, 1772) is practically that of the organization of the subsequent town of Newburgh. John Flewellings, supervisor, and Samuel Sands, clerk, were its first principal officers, chosen at the election in April, 1773.

II.—REVOLUTIONARY EVENTS.

Such was the condition of the precinct of Newburgh when the discussions which preceded and produced the Revolution fixed the attention and engaged the sympathies of the people. When the news of the Boston massacre was wafted hither from New England, followed, as it was, by the tidings that patriot blood had been shed at Lexington, a large majority embraced with unflinching zeal the cause of their country. Yet few localities in the province had been more immediately under the influence of officers of the crown than was Newburgh. Lieut.-Gov. Colden had had his residence within a few miles of the village, and in the vicinity there were other persons intimately connected with the government whose influence tended to secure a degree of favor for the British ministry that would not otherwise have been obtained. After Colden's death, his son, Cadwallader, became the leader (if he was not so previously) of the opposition, and was regarded by the Whigs as especially "mischievous."‡ Aside from the influence exerted by the Coldens, other causes contributed, more or less, to divide the people of Newburgh on the great issue presented for their consideration; and it is a matter of surprise that in a population like that which then occupied the precinct, so many were found ready to peril life and fortune in the seemingly desperate strife.

The drama of the Revolution opened in Newburgh, as in so many other places, on the passage of the non-importation resolutions by the Continental Congress in 1774, which resulted in the formation, in every city, town, and precinct, of a "Committee of Safety and Observation." The city of New York took the lead by organizing a committee of one hundred, of which Isaac Low was chairman, and by sending circulars to all the towns and precincts in the province urging the formation of similar committees. About the same time a pamphlet, entitled "Free Thoughts on the Resolves of Congress," made its appearance and was scattered broadcast over the land. The people thus had the question fairly before them, and in their local meetings discussed the points involved. The result was soon apparent. The precincts of Shawangunk, Hanover, Wallkill, New Windsor, and Newburgh, in January, 1775, publicly burned the pamphlet, and at the same time organized the committees proposed. In Newburgh, a meeting was held at the house of Martin Weigand, on the 27th of January, 1775, when Wolvert Acker, Jonathan Hasbrouck, Thomas Palmer, John Belknap, Joseph Coleman, Moses Higby, Samuel Sands, Stephen Case, Isaac Belknap, Benjamin Birdsall, John Robinson, and others were appointed a "Committee of Safety and Observation."

The first duty devolving upon this committee was to attend a convention at New Paltz, on the 7th of April, for the purpose of selecting delegates to a Provincial Convention to be held at New York on the 20th of the same month. Newburgh was represented in the New Paltz meeting by Col. Jonathan Hasbrouck, Thomas Palmer, Wolvert Acker, and John Belknap, who voted to send Charles DeWitt, George Clinton, and Levi Pauling to the Provincial Convention, with full power "to declare the sense of this county relative to the grievances under which His Majesty's American subjects labor."

On the 29th of April following, the committee of New York drew up and signed a pledge to observe and maintain the orders and resolutions of both the Continental and Provincial Congress, and sent it for signatures to all the precincts and counties in the province.* Immediately on receiving the proceedings of the New York committee, the Newburgh committee placed a copy of the pledge at the hotel of Martin Weigand for signatures. The great mass of the people came forward voluntarily and subscribed their names; but a few timid ones, anticipating that the result of the controversy would be disastrous, or unwilling to risk the displeasure of the crown, shrank from the test, and the committee found it necessary to adopt energetic measures to induce them to unite in the movement. For this purpose a meeting was held at the house of Martin Weigand (May 15th), and Wolvert Acker appointed chairman, and Cornelius Hasbrouck, clerk. Resolutions were passed instructing the committee to visit those who had "neglected or refused to sign the association, and in the most friendly manner invite them to sign the same;"† that those refusing to sign "on or before the 29th of this instant" should be "deemed enemies of their country;"‡ that, in the opinion of the committee, "no person or persons whatsoever" should "have any kind of connection or dealings with" those who withheld their names, and that whosoever should have "any such connection ought to be treated in like manner, and be considered as an enemy of his country, notwithstanding he may have signed the association."‡ In other words, social ostracism was pronounced against a few well-known individuals, as the sequel shows, who were occupying the common ground of loyalty to the king,—which even the members of the association professed,—but who were also already quite active in inviting hostility to the movement for a "redress of grievances," and were especially instigating the negro slaves of the precinct to take part against their masters.§

On the 19th of May the Provincial Congress directed the committees holding the pledge to return the same before the 15th of July, "with the names of the signers and those who refused to sign;" and in accordance with this requirement, Wolvert Acker, the chairman of the Newburgh committee, made, on the 14th of July, the return called for on behalf of the precinct, embracing the names of one hundred and seventy-four persons who had signed the association, and fifty-four who had refused to do so. The return has been given in a previous chapter.||

On the day on which the return was forwarded, several of the persons who had refused to sign came before the committee and made affidavit of their intention to abide by the measures of the Continental Congress, being convinced that they had "no other alternative but to repel force by force, or submit to be slaves;" that they would "discourage the spirit of

* Coercive measures to induce persons to sign the association were forbidden, "the propriety of the measure, and the necessity of maintaining a perfect union in every part of the colony," being regarded as sufficient to induce signatures. Freedom of opinion was distinctly recognized, but coercion in the manner noted prevailed.

‡ Very stringent measures were adopted to hold the negroes from assisting the king. At the meeting referred to (May 15th) it was resolved, "that any person owning negroes in this precinct shall not, on any account whatever, suffer them to be absent from his dwelling-house or farm after sundown, or send them out in the daytime off their farm without a pass; and in case any negroes be found abroad, contrary to the above resolve, they shall be apprehended and caused to receive thirty-five lashes, or any number less, as the said committee shall deem proper." At a later period, when the militia was called away, a guard was maintained to prevent the negroes from insurrectionary violence. Slavery, always a source of weakness to the republic, was especially so during the struggle for independence; although to the honor of the slaves be it said that the majority of them were faithful to their masters.

opposition" which had prevailed, and bear and pay their "quota of all expenses" that might be incurred in the struggle; and that this their declaration was of their "own free will and voluntary consent." This increased the number of signers to one hundred and ninety-five, and reduced the number who sustained the king and his ministry to thirty-nine.

With the return of the signatures the organization of the "Committee of Safety and Observation" of the precinct of Newburgh was perfected, and that body installed as its revolutionary government. Scarcely had this organization been effected when active duties devolved upon the committee. A portion of those who had refused to sign the pledge, as well as a few who had signed the subsequent affidavit, became guilty of acts which, in its opinion, deserved punishment, and which it was determined should be administered. The first instance of this character is reported to the Provincial Convention of New York in a joint letter from the committees of Newburgh and New Windsor, and read at a session of the Committee of Safety on the 18th of July. The report is signed by Wolvert Acker and Samuel Brewster, and states that John Morrel, Adam Patrick, and Isaiah Purdy were not only "possessed of principles very inimical to the grand cause in which we are embarked, but whose conduct, ever since the commencement of these unhappy times, has been such as to disturb the public tranquillity." The persons named were arrested and taken to New York under guard, where they were examined by the Committee of Safety. They admitted many of the charges against them, and were ordered to be confined in the barracks; but were subsequently released "upon their contrition and promise of amendment," and the Newburgh committee instructed to treat them kindly unless they should commit further unlawful acts.

Under date of Oct. 27, 1775, it appears that Stephen Wiggins and David Purdy, being deemed guilty of unlawful acts, were arrested by order of the committee and sent to New York;† but the final disposition of their case does not appear. In January,

 We herewith send you three persons, who not only possess principles very inimical to the grand cause in which we are embarked, but whose conduct, ever since the first of these unhappy times, has been such as to disturb the public tranquillity and destroy that unanimity so necessary for the preservation of our liberties. Their names are John Morrel, Adam Patrick, and Isaiah Purdy. Herewith, gentlemen, you will also receive several depositions taken before John Nicoll, Esq., relative to the matter, which is all we have time to take at present; these we submit to the judgment of the honorable Congress, whether either or all of the persons alleged be worthy of confinement or not.—Archives.

† "This is to certify that we, the Committee of Safety and Observation for the Precinct of Newburgh, for the apprehension of two persons, viz.: Stephen Wiggins and David Purdy, did request and command Capt. Samuel Logan, of the minute company at New Windsor, to assist with eleven of his men in apprehending the said persons, he having attended and assisted one day and a half, with himself at the head of the following persons, viz.: John Robinson, ensign; David Mandevill and John Schofield, sergeants; one corporal, one clerk, and six privates. Capt. Logan's account, signed by Mr. Acker, our chairman, for the expenses of himself and men, for the time above certified, is just; and for his own and men's wages, we refer to be calculated by you."—Archives.

1776, Samuel Devine‡ was arrested and confined. He was subsequently released, but for some offense was again arrested in 1777, tried by court-martial, and sentenced to be hung. He was pardoned "under the gallows" by Governor Clinton. Samuel Fowler and Daniel Denton, who were among the signers of the affidavit, were also arrested and confined.§ The Flewellings were disaffected, and one of them joined Claudius Smith's band of cow-boys and was hung at Goshen in 1779. Renegades were also found among those who had signed the pledge of association, of whom Silas Gardner|| Benjamin Smith, Elnathan Foster, David Wyatt, and others were arrested and confined for indefinite periods,¶ and subsequently released on parole.

The reorganization of the militia of the precinct received early attention, and was conducted in conjunction with the general committee of the county, for the southern district of which a new regiment was constituted (Sept. 2, 1775), with the following field-officers: Jonathan Hasbrouck, colonel; Johannes Hardenbergh, Jr., lieutenant-colonel; Johannes Jansen, Jr., and Lewis DuBois, majors; Abraham Schoonmaker, adjutant; and Isaac Belknap, quartermaster. Two companies were organized for this regiment in Newburgh, the first commanded by Saml. Clark, and the second by Arthur Smith.†† In December following a

|| Silas Gardner was arrested in April, 1777, charged with "levying war against the United States of America, holding correspondence with and assisting the enemies of the said States." He appears to have been guilty of correspondence with the enemy, and to have associated with others in what has been modernly termed an "underground railroad" for passing through the country those who wished to join the British either in Canada or New York. His last act in this line was the safe conduct of the wife of Sir John Johnston to New York, for which service Sir John sent him a ring. He was tried by court-martial at Fort Montgomery, and sentenced to be hung, but was pardoned under the gallows and confined, but released on parole in 1778.—Proc. Proc. Cour.

¶ The parties referred to were apprehended and arrested, it is said, while on their way to join the enemy, and were James Flewellling, Elnathan Foster, John Flewellling, David Wyatt, Solomon Combs, Benjamin Smith, Stephen Wood, John Moffatt, Benjamin Darby, Timothy Wood, Robert Denton, James Cosmun, and Amos Ireland. They were sentenced to confinement in the jail at Kingston.—Proc. Proc. Cour., 872.

 Through a clerical error, Belknap was not commissioned. The commissions of the other officers bear date Oct. 25, 1775. The regiment was included in the Fourth Brigade with other regiments of Ulster and Orange County, under command of Brig.-Gen. George Clinton.

regiment of minute men was constituted, of which Thomas Palmer, of Newburgh, was colonel; Thomas Johnson, lieutenant-colonel; Arthur Parks, of Hanover, and Samuel Logan, of New Windsor, majors; Severyn T. Bruyn, adjutant, and Isaac Belknap, quartermaster. On the 23d of July, 1776, the Convention directed the general committee of the county to organize three companies (in all 201 men) of rangers to be employed "as scouting parties to range the woods" and prevent attacks by the Indians, and in such other service as might be required. Of one of these companies Isaac Belknap was appointed captain;* — Schoonmaker, first lieutenant; Petrus Roosa, second lieutenant, and David Clark, corporal. In addition to these regiments and companies, the committee was constantly engaged in promoting enlistments in the State and Continental regiments, and in the discharge of their duties found little leisure time.

The history of the services of the militia of the precinct cannot now be fully written; but the records preserved, and which have been already quoted, show that they were repeatedly called out† during the war, and rendered important service. Even the aged were not exempt from duty. The Provincial Convention, in 1778, invited those "who, in ordinary circumstances, would be exempts," to form companies to repel invasions and suppress insurrections.‡ This call was responded to by Martin Wiegand, Humphrey Merritt, Saml. Stratton, William Bloomer, Joseph Albertson, William Carscaden, Isaac Fowler, Reuben Holmes, William Ward, Jr., James Denton, Jas. Waugh, and others, and a company—of which Samuel Edmonds was captain; Nathaniel Wyatt, first lieutenant; John Stratton, second lieutenant, and Michael Lewis, ensign—organized and held in readiness for service.§

that the people of Newburgh contributed to the war. A depot for stores, under the charge of Andrew Taylor, deputy quartermaster-general, was established here in 1777, and was maintained until the peace. Of course it devolved upon the inhabitants of the district, in the absence of regular troops, to collect the various stores needed by the army, and to convey them to distant points. When the tidings of the terrible sufferings at Valley Forge were received, they came forward with every mode of conveyance in their possession, eager to transport provisions, and the extent of their services may be inferred from a letter of Col. Taylor to Governor Clinton, in which he states that "every sleigh and horse in the neighborhood is completely used up in this duty."

Nor was this all. The inhabitants of Newburgh were subjected to great inconvenience and privations from the fact that the militia of other sections were located here, the place being made a point of rendezvous by general orders,|| and the billeting of soldiers on the people was of frequent occurrence. To supply them with food involved a heavy tax on the inhabitants, and their own families were often reduced to want by complying with the demands thus made upon their stores.

On the reduction of Forts Montgomery and Clinton, in 1777, the people living near the river removed their families and goods into the interior, in accordance with the suggestions of the Committee of Safety, expecting that the expedition under Vaughan and Wallace would lay waste the village; but in this they were fortunately disappointed. The expedition passed by, bestowing no other attention on the settlement than the discharge of a few cannon. What was then the village was shielded from the passing shot by its position on the hill beyond the range of ship-guns, as well as by a dense growth of trees in many places along the river-bank, and hence escaped injury from that source. When the fleet returned, a continual cannonade was kept up from its transports, by which one man was killed on the ferry-boat;¶ but the presence of the militia deterred the predatory boat expeditions by which its presence was marked at Kingston. After passing the chevaux-de-frise, one of the frigates was anchored and remained for some time in taking soundings. The militia meanwhile was posted at Newburgh, New Windsor, and other points in the vicinity, and kept wakeful watch of the enemy's movements.

|| "NEWBURGH, Dec. 18, 1775.—Pursuant to the orders of Congress to the regiment under my command, to be in readiness upon any proper alarm, I have appointed the place of general rendezvous to be at the house of Martin Wiegand, in Newburgh Precinct.

But the precinct had not passed the ordeal uncouraged, although it escaped direct devastation by the enemy. In the defense of the Highland forts many of its men had been killed, and others taken prisoners. They had been summoned from their homes but a single day previous to that of the fatal battle; had left their families, as they had many times before, expecting an early return, but to their homes returned not. How great the anxiety, as the progress of the conflict was watched from the hill-tops,—how great the mourning, as the flames which had been lighted on the vessels-of-war proclaimed the result,—we may not know; we only read the expressive record that the poor taxes of the precinct rose from £50 to £800, and that special donations were collected for such poor whose husbands or parents were killed or taken prisoners at Fort Montgomery.”*

From this brief survey of local Revolutionary services and suffering, let us return to the events of more general interest that cluster around the precincts of Newburgh and New Windsor. When, in the spring of 1779, Washington was thrown on the defensive, he concentrated the Continental army in the Highlands and in Smith's Clove, and established his headquarters in the William Ellison house on the hill immediately south of the village of New Windsor.† Here he concerted measures to counteract the campaign of the enemy, who by moving on New London and the Connecticut coast hoped to draw the Continental forces in that direction and render the Highland forts an easy prey. Instead of meeting these anticipations, Washington sent Wayne to attack Stony Point, and the decisive action there compelled the enemy to abandon the Connecticut expedition and with it the reduction of West Point. Although found to be unenable and hence abandoned, the capture of Stony Point was one of the boldest and most successful strategic movements of the war. Finding that Washington could not be induced to leave West Point defenseless, Sir Henry Clinton organized a campaign against the Southern States. Retaining his headquarters at the Ellison house, Washington remained in comparative idleness. It was the darkest period of the war; without assistance from European powers, the cause of independence was acknowledged to be hopelessly lost. Ultimately that assistance was secured; France furnished an army and a fleet; Holland sent money; confidence revived; the Continental forces were recruited, and under the drill of Steuben rivaled in discipline the armies of Europe. Threatening an attack on New York, and thereby obliging Sir Henry Clinton to retain his reinforcements at that place, Washington changed his plans, and before Sir Henry was aware of it, had moved his forces from New Windsor and was far on the march towards Yorktown.

Soon after the successful termination of the siege of Yorktown (Oct. 7, 1781), the main portion of the American army returned to the Hudson River; and Washington (April, 1782) made his headquarters at the Hasbrouck house, in Newburgh. For a short time in the autumn of 1782 the army was encamped at Verplanck's Point, where a junction was effected with the French army, which until that time had remained in Virginia. Immediately after this junction the latter marched to Boston, and the American army crossed the Hudson and went into winter-quarters above the Highlands,—portions being stationed at New Windsor,‡ at Fishkill, and in the vicinity of Walden. Gens. Knox and Greene were quartered at the house of Mr. John Ellison (late Capt. Charles Morton's); Gens. Gates and St. Clair were quartered at the Edmonston house, near Ellison's; Wayne, at the old hotel of Martin Weigand, in Newburgh; and the Baron Steuben, at the house of Mr. Samuel Verplanck, in Fishkill.§ During the summer of 1783 a portion of the army was in tents on the plain now occupied by the upper streets of the city, and passed through the usual exercises of camp-life under the careful drill of Baron Steuben. A portion of the army remained in camp here until the 3d of November, when it was formally disbanded.

For a long time prior to the breaking up of the army, discontent had prevailed among the soldiers and officers respecting the arrearages in their pay. On the 30th October, 1780, Congress had passed resolutions granting half-pay for life to the officers, but these resolutions stood on the faith of a government with no funds to enable it to perform its engagements; and after their passage, the Articles of Confederation had been adopted, which made the consent of nine States necessary to give validity to any act appropriating public money; and nine States had never been † Oct. 30, 1782.—At reveille, on the 26th inst., the left wing of the army, under the command of Gen. Heath, decamped from Verplanck's Point and marched to the Highlands; took up our lodgings in the woods, without covering, and were exposed to a heavy rain during the night and day. Thence we crossed the Hudson to West Point, and marched over the mountain called Butter Hill; passed the night in the open field, and the next day reached the ground where we are to erect log huts for our winter-quarters near New Windsor.”—Thacher's Journal, 323.

The Rev. Mr. Gano writes in his journal: “On my return to the army we encamped at Newburgh (New Windsor), and erected some huts and a place for public worship on the Lord's day. We had three services a day and preached in rotation.”

The camp-ground at New Windsor can still be distinctly traced by the ruins of the huts occupied by the soldiers. Part of the ground had probably been previously occupied by the New York militia.

§ With the exception of the house occupied by Gen. Wayne, these buildings are now standing. It may be of interest to add that the Life-guard of Washington occupied tents where the old malt-house, on Liberty Street, now stands. The store-house of the commissary-general was where the Union Presbyterian church stands.

opinion she was stationed there to prevent our sinking any more; but Gen. Webb informed me yesterday he thought she wanted to get higher up, as she had boats constantly sounding the channel. Gen. in favor of the half-pay resolutions. Under these circumstances, and considering the very scanty supplies that were furnished to the army, it was quite natural that discontent should prevail.

Complaints were frequently made to Washington, who was fully sensible of the sufferings of his companions in arms, and the most earnest appeals were made by him to Congress to satisfy their claim; but Congress depended entirely on the States, and thus was powerless to accomplish the end desired. The army now resolved to take the matter into their own hands, and Col. Nicola, an experienced officer and a gentleman of high character, was selected to communicate to Washington their wishes and fears. In May, 1782, Nicola addressed a letter to Washington, at Newburgh, in which, after some general remarks on the deplorable condition of the army, and the little hope that their services would be rewarded by Congress, he discussed the different forms of government with a view to show that republics were, of all others, the least stable, and the least adapted to secure the rights, freedom, and power of individuals, and then made a formal tender to Washington, on behalf of those for whom he acted, of the title of king. "In this case," says the writer, "it will, I believe, be uncontroverted that the same abilities that have led us through difficulties apparently insurmountable by human power to victory and glory,—those qualities that have merited and obtained the universal esteem and veneration of the army,—would be most likely to conduct and direct us in the smoother paths of peace. Some people have so associated the idea of tyranny and monarchy as to find it difficult to separate them. It may, therefore, be requisite to give the head of such a constitution as I propose some title apparently more moderate; but, if all other things were once adjusted, I believe strong arguments might be produced for admitting the title of King, which I conceive would be attended with some advantage."

We are aware that it has been denied that this was an offer of the title of king, yet the whole tenor of the letter leads to the opposite conclusion. That it was so regarded by Washington is evident from his reply, in which he says, "With a mixture of surprise and astonishment I have read with attention the sentiments you have submitted to my perusal. Be assured, sir, no occurrence in the course of this war has given me more painful sensations than your information of there being such ideas existing in the army as you have expressed, and which I must view with abhorrence and reprehend with severity. For the present the consideration of them will rest in my own bosom, unless some further agitation of the matter shall make a disclosure necessary. I am much at a loss to conceive what part of my conduct could have given encouragement to an address which seems to me big with the greatest mischiefs that can befall my country. If I am not deceived in the knowledge of myself, you could not have found a person to whom your schemes are more disagreeable. At the same time, in justice to my own feelings, I must add, that no man possesses a more serious wish to see ample justice done to the army than I do; and, as far as my power and influence, in a constitutional way, extend, they shall be employed, to the utmost of my abilities, to effect it, should there be any occasion. Let me conjure you, then, if you have any regard for your country, concern for yourself or posterity, or respect for me, to banish these thoughts from your mind, and never communicate, as from yourself, or any one else, a sentiment of the like nature."^{*}

This rebuke effectually checked monarchical tendencies, but it did not remove the evils under which the army suffered; on the contrary, the grounds of discontent continued rather to increase. Congress proposed to reduce the army, and to discharge many of the officers. Washington, fearing the result of the measure, urged the compensation of the officers and men. "When I see," he adds, "such a number of men, goaded by a thousand stings of reflection on the past, and of anticipation on the future, about to be turned into the world, soured by penury, and what they call the ingratitude of the public; involved in debts, without one farthing of money to carry them home, after having spent the flower of their days, and, many of them, their patrimonies, in establishing the freedom and independence of their country; and having suffered everything which human nature is capable of enduring on this side death; I repeat it, when I reflect on these irritable circumstances, unattended by one thing to soothe their feelings or brighten their prospects, I cannot avoid apprehending that a train of evils will follow of a serious and distressing nature. . . . You may rely upon it, the patience and long-suffering of this army are almost exhausted, and there never was so great a spirit of discontent as at this instant." This letter explains fully the situation and motives of the army, and the power of the restraining influence of Washington.

The negotiations for peace were now in the hands of commissioners; and, in view of the speedy dissolution of the army, the officers determined upon one more effort to secure that which they claimed as their right. Previous to going into winter-quarters (December, 1782), they presented a petition to Congress, proposing to accept, instead of the money actually due to them, a commutation of the half-pay stipulated by the resolutions of October, 1780, which, they flattered themselves, would be less objectionable than the half-pay establishment. Some security that the engagements of the government would be complied with was also requested. But in consequence of the divisions in Congress upon other subjects, the important point in this petition—the commutation of the half-pay of the officers—remained undecided in March, when intelligence was received of the signature of the preliminary and final articles of peace between the United States and Great Britain. Soured by their past sufferings, their present wants, and their gloomy prospects; and exasperated by the neglect with which they believed themselves to be treated, and by the injustice that they supposed was meditated against them, the ill temper of the army was almost universal, and seemed to require only a slight breath to cause it to burst forth into a flame.

Early in March a letter was received from the committee in attendance upon the session of Congress, stating that they had failed to accomplish the object of their mission. On the 10th of the same month an anonymous paper was circulated, requesting a meeting of the general and field officers at the public building* on the succeeding day; and stating that an officer from each company, and also a delegate from the medical staff, would be expected. The object of the convention was avowed to be "to consider the late letter from their representatives in Philadelphia, and what measures (if any) should be adopted to obtain that redress of grievances which they seemed to have solicited in vain."

On the same day an address to the army was circulated, admirably adapted to work on the passions and to excite the most desperate resolutions. In this paper the writer reviewed the services of the army,—the toils and privations that had been encountered in securing the independence of the States; adverted to the injustice with which the army had been treated, and urged the necessity of some decisive action. "I would advise you, therefore," he concluded, "to come to some final opinion upon what you can bear, and what you will suffer. If your determination be in any proportion to your wrongs, carry your appeal from the justice to the fears of government. Change the milk-and-water style of your last memorial,—assume a bolder tone,—decent, but lively, spirited, and determined, and suspect the man who would advise to more moderation and longer forbearance. Let two or three men who can feel as well as write be appointed to draw up your last remonstrance; for I would no longer give it the suing, soft, unsuccessful epithet of memorial. Let it be represented, in language that will neither dishonor you by its rudeness, nor betray you by its fears, what has been promised by Congress and what has been performed,—how long and patiently you have suffered, how little you have asked, and how much of that little has been denied. Tell them that, though you were the first, you would wish to be the last to encounter danger, and though despair itself can never drive you into dishonor, it may drive you from the field; that the wound often irritated and never healed may at length become incurable; and that the slightest mark of indignity from Congress now must operate like the grave and part you forever; that in any political event the army has its alternative. If peace, that nothing shall separate you from your arms but death; if war, that, courting the auspices and inviting the directions of your illustrious leader, you will retire to some unsettled country, smile in your turn, and 'mock when their fear cometh on.' But let it represent, also, that should they comply with the request of your late memorial, it would make you more happy and them more respectable; that while war should continue, you would follow their standard into the field, and when it came to an end, you would withdraw into the shade of private life, and give the world another subject of wonder and applause; an army victorious over its enemies,—victorious over itself."

Persuaded as the officers generally were of the indisposition of the government to remunerate their services, this passionate address made a profound impression; and nothing seemed wanting but the assemblage fixed for the succeeding day to produce the most disastrous results. "Fortunately," says Marshall, "the commander-in-chief was in camp; and his characteristic firmness did not forsake him in this crisis. The occasion required that his measures should be firm, but prudent and conciliatory; evincive of his fixed determination to oppose any rash proceedings, but calculated to assuage the irritation which was excited and to restore a confidence in government." This course he at once adopted; and in the general orders of the next day he noticed the anonymous paper, and expressed the conviction he felt that the good sense of the officers would guard them against paying any "attention to such an irregular invitation;" but his own duty, he conceived, "as well as the reputation and true interests of the army, required his disapprobation of such disorderly proceedings. At the same time, he requested the general and field officers, with one officer from each company, and a proper representation from the staff of the army, to assemble at twelve o'clock, on Saturday, the 15th March, at the New Building, to hear the report of the committee deputed by the army to Congress. After mature deliberation, they will devise what further measures ought to be adopted as most rational and best calculated to attain the just and important object in view."

These orders changed the whole aspect of affairs, and the meeting called by the anonymous writer was not held. By a master-policy Washington had placed himself, as it were, at the head of the movement for redress, and had appointed in regular form a time and place of meeting. On the day succeeding the publication of these orders a second anonymous address made its appearance, from the same pen which had written the former, in which the writer affected to consider the orders in a light favorable to his views.

* The "public building" here referred to was sometimes called the "new building" and "the Temple." The title of "new building" is understood to have been used to distinguish it from a building which had been erected in the early part of the war in connection with the barracks of the militia of the district. It was situated on what is now the farm of Mr. William McGill, in New Windsor, and was used for public assemblies. (See History of New Windsor.)

"Until now," said he, "the commander-in-chief has regarded the steps you have taken for redress with good wishes alone; his ostensible silence has authorized your meetings, and his private opinion has sanctioned your claims. Had he disliked the object in view, would not the same sense of duty which forbade you from meeting on the third day of the week have forbidden you from meeting on the seventh?"*

On the 15th, the convention of officers assembled at the New Building, and Gen. Gates took the chair. There was a full attendance of officers; and deep solemnity pervaded the assembly as the commander-in-chief stepped upon the platform to read an address that he had prepared for the occasion. Amid the most profound attention Washington commenced reading: "GENTLEMEN: By an anonymous summons an attempt has been made to convene you together. How inconsistent with the rules of propriety, how unmilitary, and how subversive of all order and discipline, let the good sense of the army decide." Pausing for a moment, he drew out his spectacles, carefully wiped and adjusted them, and while doing so remarked, "These eyes, my friends, have grown dim, and these locks white in the service; yet I have never doubted the justice of my country."† The effect was electrical. The whole scene, when we consider the time, the place, the man, the object of the convention, was hardly surpassed in interest by any other event of those eventful days.

Resuming his address, Washington exhibited the anonymous letters as "designed to answer the most insidious purposes," while their ostensible object was simply to secure the redress of grievances. He then noticed more particularly the remedies proposed in the letters for the assumed injustice of Congress. The alternative presented, said he, of "either deserting our country in the extremest hour of her distress, or turning our arms against it, which is the apparent object, unless Congress can be compelled into instant compliance, has something so shocking in it that humanity revolts at the idea. My God! what can this writer have in view by recommending such measures? can he be a friend of the army? can he be a friend to his country? rather is he not the insidious foe plotting the ruin of both, by sowing the seeds of discord and separation between the civil and military powers of the continent."

* The writer of these letters was Major John Armstrong, at that time a young man of twenty-six, and aide-de-camp to Maj.-Gen. Gates. Some years after the letters were written, Armstrong acknowledged their authorship; but insisted that they were written "at the solicitation of friends, as the chosen organ to express the sentiments of the officers of the army, and were only an honest and manly though perhaps an indiscreet endeavor to support public credit, and do justice to a patient, long-suffering, and gallant army." Although entertaining a different opinion at the time the letters appeared, Washington, in 1797, writes: "I have since had sufficient reason for believing that the object of the author was just, honorable, and friendly to our country, though the means suggested by him were certainly liable to much misunderstanding and abuse."—Sparks' Life of Washington.

† Ann. Bio. Dict., 827. Irving's Washington, iv.

He then explained what appeared to him to be the cause of delay in the action of Congress, pledged himself to exert whatever abilities he possessed in order to obtain the demands of the army; and assured them that, previous to their dissolution as an army, Congress would cause all their accounts to be fairly liquidated, and that they would "adopt the most effectual measures in their power" to render ample justice to the army "for its faithful and meritorious services."

Concluding with a direct appeal to those present, he exclaimed, "Let me conjure you in the name of our common country, as you respect the rights of humanity, and as you regard the military and national character of America, to express your utmost horror and detestation of the man who wishes, under any specious pretences, to overturn the liberties of our country; and who wickedly attempts to open the flood-gates of civil discord, and deluge our rising empire in blood. By thus determining and acting, you will pursue the plain and direct road to the attainment of your wishes; you will defeat the insidious designs of our enemies, who are compelled to resort from open force to secret artifice; you will give one more distinguished proof of unexampled patriotism and patient virtue rising superior to the pressure of the most complicated sufferings; and you will, by the dignity of your conduct, afford occasion for posterity to say, when speaking of the glorious example you have exhibited to mankind,—had this day been wanting, the world had never seen the last stage of perfection that human nature is capable of attaining!"

These sentiments, says Marshall, from a person whom they had been accustomed to love, to reverence, and to obey; the solidity of whose judgment, and the sincerity of whose zeal for their interests were alike unquestioned, could not fail to be irresistible. No sooner had the commander-in-chief withdrawn from the room than Gen. Knox moved, and Gen. Putnam seconded, a resolution tendering the thanks of the convention to "His Excellency, and assuring him that the officers reciprocated his affectionate expressions with the greatest sincerity of which the human heart is capable." This resolution was unanimously voted; and, on motion of Gen. Putnam, a committee, consisting of Gen. Knox, Col. Brooks, and Capt. Howard, was appointed to prepare resolutions on the business before the convention, and report in half an hour.

The committee, after consultation, reported a series of resolutions, which were passed unanimously. These resolutions expressed unshaken confidence in the justice of Congress; and that the representatives of America would "not disband or disperse the army until their accounts" were "liquidated, the balances accurately ascertained, and adequate funds established for payment;" and that in this arrangement the officers expected "that the half-pay, or commutation for it, should be efficaciously comprehended."

It was further resolved, "that the officers of the American army view with abhorrence and reject with disdain the infamous propositions contained in a late anonymous address to the officers of the army, and resent with indignation the secret attempts of some unknown person to collect the officers together, in a manner totally subversive of all discipline and good order."

The triumph of right was complete. The storm which had threatened to overwhelm the infant republic was hushed. Washington immediately inclosed to the president of Congress the proceedings, accompanied by a letter in which he again urged prompt attention to the subject. Not only did he assume the entire justice of the claims of the army; but, for the first time in his history, he asked a personal favor of Congress. "Having," he wrote, "from motives of justice, duty, and gratitude, spontaneously offered myself as an advocate for their rights, it now only remains for me to perform the task I have assumed, and to intercede in their behalf, as I now do, that the sovereign power will be pleased to verify the predictions I have pronounced of, and the confidence the army have reposed in, the justice of their country."

Immediately on the reception of Washington's dispatches, Congress passed, with the concurrence of nine States, the resolution commuting the half-pay of the officers into a sum in gross equal to five years' full pay; and the result was received by the army with great satisfaction.

Meanwhile the peace commissioners had concluded their labors, so far as arranging the articles between Great Britain and the United States was concerned; but the exchange of ratifications was contingent upon a similar exchange between the contending European powers. It was feared for some time that the obstacles to a general pacification would not be overcome. These fears, however, were entirely dispelled by a letter from Lafayette, in March, announcing a general peace. In April, official notification was received of the exchange of preliminary articles and the cessation of hostilities, and the commander-in-chief announced the joyful intelligence to the army in his orders of April 18th. "The commander-in-chief," reads this interesting paper, "orders the cessation of hostilities between the United States of America and the King of Great Britain to be publicly proclaimed at the New Building to-morrow at twelve o'clock, and that the proclamation which will be communicated herewith be read to-morrow evening at the head of every regiment and corps of the army; after which the chaplains, with the several brigades, will render thanks to Almighty God for all his mercies, particularly for his overruling the wrath of man to his own glory, and causing the rage of war to cease among the nations."

Although the proclamation referred to extended only to the cessation of hostilities, yet it was regarded as the sure precursor of an event to the accomplishment of which had been devoted the toils and sufferings of a long and doubtful contest; and as the morning sun of the 19th tinged the mountain-tops it was hailed with reverberating peals of rejoicing. In this feeling Washington joined. "The commander-in-chief," continues the orders, "far from endeavoring to stifle the feelings of joy in his own bosom, offers his most cordial congratulations on the occasion to all the officers of every denomination, to all the troops of the United States in general, and in particular to those gallant and deserving men who have resolved to defend the rights of their invaded country so long as the war should continue, for these are the men who ought to be considered as the pride and boast of the American army, and who, crowned with well-earned laurels, may soon withdraw from the field of glory to the more tranquil walks of civil life. While the general recollects the almost infinite variety of scenes through which we have passed with a mixture of pleasure, astonishment, and gratitude,—while he contemplates the prospect before him with rapture,—he cannot help wishing that all the brave men, of whatever condition they may be, who have shared in the toils and dangers of effecting this glorious revolution, of rescuing millions from the hand of oppression, and of laying the foundation of a great empire, might be impressed with a proper idea of the dignified part they have been called to act, under the smiles of Providence, on the stage of human affairs; for happy, thrice happy, shall they be pronounced hereafter who have contributed anything, who have performed the meanest office in erecting this stupendous fabric of Freedom and Empire on the broad basis of independency; who have assisted in protecting the rights of human nature, and establishing an asylum for the poor and oppressed of all nations and religions." . . . "The adjutant-general will have such working parties detailed to assist in the preparations for a general rejoicing as the chief engineer, with the army, shall call for, and the quartermaster-general will also furnish such materials as he may want."

The details of the "general rejoicing" at Newburgh, New Windsor, and other points of encampment, on the 19th of April, 1783, have not been preserved. The order of Washington, and the notes by Thacher and Heath,* indicate, however, that it was conducted with the most imposing military and civil ceremonies; that, as had been done on a former occasion,† the army lined the banks on both sides of the river, with burnished arms and proudly floating banners, and at a given signal paused and presented arms. The pealing of thirteen guns from West Point now awoke the echoes of the hills, and was followed by a feu-de-joie which rolled along the lines from West Point to the utmost limits of the camp. The "thrilling fife-note and drum's heart-kindling beat" then called the hosts of freedom to the assembly, where patriot knees bent low in prayer with Chaplain Gano, and at its conclusion voices and instruments joined in Billings' anthem, "Independence."

These services concluded, the army returned to quarters and united in festivities suited to the occasion. As the day closed, the signal-guns from West Point again called the soldiers to arms, and the feu-de-joie again rang along the line. This was three times repeated, accompanied by the discharge of cannon, "and the mountain sides resounded and echoed like tremendous peals of thunder, and the flashing from thousands of fire-arms in the darkness of evening was like unto vivid flashings of lightning from the clouds." Then the beacons on the hill-tops, no longer the harbingers of danger, lighted up the gloom and rolled the tidings of peace on through New England, and shed their radiance on the blood-stained field of Lexington.

Released in a great measure from the cares and anxieties which had so long pressed heavily upon the commander-in-chief and the army, the discipline of the camp was relaxed; officers and men desiring them were granted furloughs, while the facilities for social intercourse were improved to the fullest extent by those who remained in camp. Entertainments were given by all the principal officers; at headquarters Mrs. Washington was surrounded by all the court of the camp. In the reception and dining-hall a dinner and supper were daily served as plentiful as the country could supply and as good as could be made by Continental cooks. The repast ended, French wines for our French allies and those who affected their tastes, and more substantial Madeira for Americans of the old school, circulated freely, and were served with little silver mugs, or goblets, made in France for Washington's camp equipage. In the summer time, the guests soon withdrew from the table to the open grounds; but in the autumn, the long evenings were frequently passed around the table, beside the blazing fire. On such occasions apples and hickory-nuts mingled with the wine, and the amazing consumption of the former by Washington and his staff was a theme of boundless wonder to the French guests.*

* Verplanck relates the following anecdote, in connection with this subject, as occurring in Paris: "The American minister (we forget whether it was Mr. Crawford, Mr. Brown, or one of their successors) and several of his countrymen, together with Lafayette, were invited to an entertainment at the house of a distinguished and patriotic Frenchman, who had served his country in his youth in the United States, during the war of our independence. At the supper hour the company were shown into a room fitted up for the occasion, which contrasted quite oddly with the Parisian elegance of the other apartments, where they had spent the

In July, accompanied by Governor Clinton, Washington made the tour of northern New York, and discussed the question of improvements in internal navigation. On his return he was requested, by the president of Congress, to attend the session of that body at Princeton. In consequence of the illness of Mrs. Washington, however, he could not comply with the request until the 18th of August, on the morning of which day he took his final departure from Newburgh.

The definite treaty of peace was signed on the 23d of September. After its ratification by Congress, that body issued a proclamation (October 18th),† by which "that part of the army which had stood engaged to serve during the war, and by several acts of Congress had been furloughed, should be absolutely discharged after the 3d of November from said service; and the further service in the field of the officers on furlough dispensed with, and permission given to them to retire from service, no more to be called to command."‡ On the passage of this proclamation, Washington, then at Rocky Hill, N. J., prepared his "Farewell Orders to the Army of the United States," which were dated in advance of their delivery (November 3d), that they might be read at the same hour at all the points of encampment. In these orders he briefly reviewed the events of the past, and suggested the general line of policy which, in his opinion, should be pursued by the army in the future; promising his recommendations to Congress in its behalf, and invoking "the choicest of Heaven's favors" upon all its members, whose efforts had secured "innumerable blessings for others!"—with this benediction drawing the curtain of separation and closing the military scene to him forever.

On the morning of Nov. 3, 1783, the patriot army assembled for the last time. At the head of each regiment and corps the proclamation of Congress and the farewell orders of Washington were read, and the formal and last word of command passed along the evening. A low, boarded, painted ceiling, with large beams; a single, small, uncurtained window, with numerous small doors, as well as the general style of the whole, gave at first the idea of the kitchen or largest room of a Dutch or Belgian farm-house. On a long rough table was a repast just as little in keeping with the refined kitchen of Paris as the room was with its architecture. It consisted of large dishes of meat, uncouth-looking pastry, and wine in decanters and bottles, accompanied by glasses and silver mugs, such as indicated other habits and tastes than those of modern Paris. "Do you know where we are?" said the host to Gen. Lafayette and his companions. They paused for a few moments in suspense. They had seen something like this before, but when and where? "Ah, the seven doors and one window," said Lafayette, and the silver camp-goblets, such as our marshals of France used in my youth! We are at Washington's headquarters on the Hudson, fifty years ago."

† By a proclamation of Congress, adopted October 18th, all officers and soldiers absent on furlough were discharged from further service; and all others who had engaged to serve during the war were to be discharged from and after the 3d of November. A small force only, composed of those who had enlisted for a definite period, were to be retained in service until the peace establishment should be organized.—Irving, iv, 434.

lines. "Painful," says Thacher, "was the parting scene; no description can be adequate to the tragic exhibition. Both officers and soldiers, long unaccustomed to the affairs of private life, turned loose on the world to starve and become a prey to vulture speculators. Never can that melancholy day be forgotten when friends, companions for seven long years in joy and sorrow, were torn asunder, without the hope of ever meeting again, and with prospects of a miserable subsistence in future."^{*}

Maj. North, who was also a participant in this parting scene, thus writes: "At the disbandment of the Revolutionary army, when inmates of the same tent or hut for seven long years were separating, and probably forever, grasping each other's hand in silent agony, I saw the Baron Steuben's strong endeavors to throw some ray of sunshine on the gloom,—to mix some drop of cordial with the painful draught. To go, they knew not whither; all recollection of the art to thrive by civil occupation lost, or to the youthful never known. This hard-earned military knowledge, worse than useless; and with their badge† of brotherhood a mark at which to point the finger of suspicion—ignoble, vile suspicion!—to be cast out on a world long since by them forgotten. Severed from friends, and all the joys and griefs which soldiers feel! Griefs, while hope remained—when shared by numbers, almost joys! To go in silence and alone, and poor and hopeless; it was too hard! On that sad day how many hearts were wrung! I saw it all, nor will the scene be ever blurred or blotted from my view. To a stern old officer, Lieut.-Col. Cochran,‡ from the Green Mountains, who had met danger and difficulty almost at every step from his youth, and from whose furrowed visage a tear till that moment had never fallen, the good baron said what could be said to lessen deep distress. 'For myself,' said Cochran, 'I care not; I can stand it; but my wife and daughters are in the garret of that wretched tavern. I know not where to remove, nor have I means for their removal!' 'Come, my friend,' said the baron, 'let us go; I will pay my respects to Mrs. Cochran and your daughters, if you please.' I followed to the loft, and when the baron left the poor, unhappy castaways, he left hope with them, and all he had to give! A black man, with wounds unhealed, wept on the wharf; there was a vessel in the stream bound to the place where he once had friends. He had not a dollar to pay his passage, and without it the vessel would not take him. Unused to tears, I saw them trickle down the good baron's cheeks as he put into the hands of the black man the last dollar he possessed. The negro hailed the sloop, and as he passed from the small boat on board, 'God Almighty bless you, master baron!' floated from his grateful lips across the parting waters."

SUBSEQUENT GENERAL HISTORY.

Amid these tragic scenes, the scanty record of which is so touching, the army of the Revolution passed away, and the new era of national independence was ushered in. The poverty of the departing soldiers scarcely exceeded that of the people of Newburgh. Money they had in abundance, but it was almost worthless; lands they had, but not the means for their successful cultivation; business they had none,—they were very poor; so poor indeed that in 1785 they petitioned the Legislature for relief, reciting in their memorial: "That by reason of the necessary supplies which we have afforded for the support of the late war, as likewise from the depreciation of paper currency, and the unavoidable losses incident to the said war, added to the large quantity of personal service, which rendered it impossible for us to cultivate our farms as usual, we are become so impoverished that we are unable to pay our just debts, and, through the scarcity of specie, we are unable upon the credit of our lands to hire money for the purpose aforesaid; the frequent and many lawsuits in justices' and other courts, the enormous costs that accrues on small debts, issuing executions, taking effects and selling the same for not near the value, oppresses and reduces many poor families to the want of the necessities of life, that nothing remains to us in prospect but unavoidable ruin, unless we are relieved by the wisdom of the Legislature."[‡] But though poor, it had a vigorous population, which had been increased in number by refugees from New York, who had been compelled to remove from that city on its occupation by the British forces in 1776, and whose property there had been ^{*} Thacher's Journal, 346. There were but few troops at Newburgh or New Windsor at this time, those who had not been furloughed having been removed to West Point. The description by Thacher is of the scenes at the latter place, and of which Washington was also a witness.

[†] "HEADQUARTERS, NEWBURGH, Wednesday, Aug. 7, 1782.—Honorary badges of distinction are to be conferred on the veteran non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the army who have served more than three years with bravery, fidelity, and good conduct: for this purpose a narrow piece of white cloth of an angular form is to be fixed to the left arm on the uniformed coats; non-commissioned officers and soldiers who have served with equal reputation more than six years are to be distinguished by two pieces of cloth set in parallel to each other in a similar form. Should any who are not entitled to these honors have the insolence to assume the badges of them, they shall be severely punished. On the other hand, it is expected those gallant men who are thus designated will on all occasions be treated with particular confidence and consideration. The general, ever desirous to cherish a virtuous ambition in his soldiers, as well as to foster and encourage every species of military merit, directs that whenever any singularly meritorious action is performed, the author of it shall be permitted to wear on his facings over the left breast the figure of a heart in purple cloth or silk, edged with narrow lace or binding. Not only instances of unusual gallantry, but also of extraordinary fidelity and essential service in any way shall meet with due reward. . . . This order is also to have retrospect to the earliest stages of the war, and to be considered as a permanent one."

[‡] Robert Cochran, of Cumberland County (now in Vermont), was commissioned major of Third New York Battalion, Nov. 21, 1776; lieutenant-colonel of Second New York, July 1, 1780.

[‡] This petition is dated Feb. 10, 1785, and is one of two petitions from the precinct "of one tenor and date." It is signed by sixty-eight persons. It was this, and similar petitions from other places, that gave rise to the law of April 18, 1786, entitled "An act for emitting the sum of two hundred thousand pounds in bills of credit," under which individuals were enabled to obtain the bills which were issued by mortgage on real estate. By this measure universal individual bankruptcy was avoided, and the people enabled to resume their long-suspended business avocations. The law expired in 1806.

High Street; Smith Street; Montgomery Street; and First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Streets, the latter from the river to Montgomery Street. Wagon Street intersected the "Wallkill road," as it was called. The streets on the Glebe were, in the main, easily connected. South Street, the dividing line, originally laid out directly west to the west bounds of the patent, was first opened from Liberty Street to the river; west of Liberty Street its course was subsequently changed* and what is Gidney Avenue formed. North Street was also opened from Liberty Street to the river. Such, with the addition of Liberty Street, already noticed, were the opened streets of the present city of Newburgh in 1791.

The precinct of Newburgh continued to be recognized by that name until 1788, when, by an act of the Legislature "for dividing the counties of the State into towns," passed March 7th of that year, the title of "precinct" gave place to that of "town." The boundaries, however, remained unchanged, and as they at present exist.

The history of the Glebe has been brought down to the period of the Revolution. The Rev. John Sayer, the successor of Mr. Watkins, resigned the charge in 1775, and during the war the church had no minister. The school, however, was continued by Mr. John Nathan Hutchins,† who, in addition to his duties as teacher, read prayers in the old church on the Sabbath. On the death of Mr. Hutchins, in 1782, Mr. Richard King was selected as teacher; and in 1790, the Rev. George H. Spierin performed the duties of minister and schoolmaster. Changes had also occurred in the trustees. Mr. Alexander Colden died in 1775, and his place had been filled by Isaac Belknap; and on the death of Mr. Albertson, Mr. Henry Smith was elected his successor.

It was during the year 1790 that the discussions commenced which subsequently terminated the control of the Episcopal Church over the Glebe. In June of that year, Col. Cadwallader Colden was elected trustee,‡ to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Henry Smith; and almost immediately after his election those opposed to the church raised the question of his eligibility, he being a non-resident although a freeholder on the patent. To meet the difficulty, Colden proposed an amendment of the charter so as to permit the election as trustees of persons residing within twelve miles of the patent who were freeholders thereon; and the trustees adopted a petition to the Legislature to that effect.

The opponents of the church immediately drew up a counter-petition, asking the Legislature "that no act relative to the premises be passed until the collected sense of the parish be taken." This petition, or remonstrance, was very numerously signed, and led to the calling of a meeting, by the trustees, to take the whole subject into consideration. The call was issued on the 7th, and the meeting held on the 10th of February, at the house of Martin Weigand, at 2 o'clock P.M. The inhabitants of the patent, regarding the affair as an attempt on the part of the church to divert the revenues of the Glebe from the support of a school to which they had been wholly applied since 1775, were thoroughly aroused and attended the meeting in large numbers. After a turbulent discussion of considerable length, the proposition to amend the charter was rejected.§

The result of this meeting led to, in May following, the resignation of Colden as trustee, and of Spierin as schoolmaster.|| Colden's resignation was accepted; and, on the 16th May, Isaac Hasbrouck was elected his successor, having received fifty-one votes and William Seymour sixteen. The resignation of Spierin produced no other action than a resolution to divide the income of the Glebe equally as compensation for the duties of minister and schoolmaster respectively, until the 28th of May, when the trustees conferred with Spierin on the subject, and obtained his consent to be inducted.¶

Mr. Spierin continued to serve as minister and schoolmaster until 1793 or '94. Meanwhile the subject of the disposal of the revenues of the Glebe was more or less discussed. The membership of the Episcopal Church had dwindled away until very few of that denomination remained; and the inhabitants belonging to other churches, as well as those who were opposed on principle to even an inferential association of the church with the conduct of the public schools, renewed their efforts to get the revenues exclusively applied to the support of a schoolmaster. The old trustees insisted upon maintaining ‡ Feb. 10, 1791.—A motion was then made and seconded, whether there shall be an alteration of the charter or not. After some debate upon the question, it was agreed that the sense of the people should be taken by ballot, and was carried in favor of those against the alteration by a majority of thirty-four.—Minutes.

|| May 3, 1791.—The trustees met at the house of Martin Weigand, and being opened, Col. Colden observed that upon consideration of the difficulties that seemed to attend the trusteeship since he was elected, and in all probability were likely to be continued, it appeared that the inhabitants of said patent were very much divided; and therefore concluded that it might tend to restore peace and harmony among them, and so be for the public good of the parish, for him to resign his office as trustee, and accordingly he delivered his resignation. The Rev. Mr. Spierin proposed not to have anything to do with the Glebe school any further, which the trustees agreed to. Agreed also, by said trustees, that the income of the Glebe lands be equally divided between Mr. Spierin and the schoolmaster.—Minutes.

¶ Minutes, May 28, 1791.

* Minutes of trustees of Glebe, Sept. 22, 1791.—"Whereas, there is a vacancy of eight rods left on the south side of the minister's lot for a street, which, running through wet ground and over a high hill, is impracticable,—agreed, to enclose said road, and allow a road of four rods wide to run through the lot from opposite Martin Weigand's to the northward of a piece of swamp land adjoining said high hills."

† The fact here stated is from a manuscript found among the papers of Isaac Belknap. The paper recites that, owing to the scarcity of money and other difficulties in collecting the Glebe rents, Mr. Hutchins' salary had not been fully paid, there being due him at the time of his death the sum of eighty-two pounds one shilling and sixpence.

their agreement with Mr. Spierin; and, having no other alternative, the people held a meeting and elected William Seymour and Phineas Howell trustees, and voted that the Glebe rents should be paid to them. This action led to a compromise, in virtue of which both the old and the new trustees resigned their places, and Timothy Hudson and Phineas Howell were chosen their successors.*

In this way the revenues of the Glebe passed from the control of the Episcopal Church. History repeated itself. The very means—the elective franchise conferred on the inhabitants by the charter—which the Episcopalians had employed to wrest the privileges of the patent from the Lutherans, had been successfully used for their own overthrow in the hour of similar numerical weakness. The Glebe passed wholly into the hands of the people, and its limited but useful system of free education was divested of sectarian control.

The concluding years of the century were marked by the formal incorporation of the Presbyterian and the Associate Reformed Churches, and by the establishment of the Newburgh Academy. An attempt had been made to organize the latter institution in 1791, and for that purpose authority was asked from the Legislature to establish a lottery,—a mode of raising money for such purposes very common at that time. This petition failed, and during the pendency of the difficulties in regard to the Glebe, little was done. In 1795, however, the project was again taken in hand by the trustees of the Glebe, and the present academy building was erected.

Meanwhile, the progress of the town had not been confined to the German Patent. As lands were cleared and planted, grist- and saw-mills were erected, and the ancient forests, "through which one could not see the sunshine," were filled with the hum of industry. The first mill, by authenticated records, was erected by Alexander Colden about 1743; was subsequently known as Hasbrouck's, and more recently as Dickson's mill. The second was erected by Abel Belknap, situated west of the present New Mills, and known subsequently as Niven's mill. From thence west on the Quassaick, in successive order, were Foster's saw-mill, Gardner's grist-mill, Gardner's saw-mill, Belknap's saw-mill, and Burr's grist-mill, the latter occupying the site and privilege of a mill erected by Captain Thomas Machin in 1786-87, for the coinage of copper. On the Tent-Stone Meadow Creek, Penny's grist-mill, Hartshorn's mill, Penny's saw-mill, and Hasbrouck's saw-mill were early erections, as were also Denton's saw-mill and Smith's saw-mill on the Fostertown Creek. On Denton's (now Powelton) Brook, Nehemiah Denton established a grist-mill, and a store and a landing on the Hudson; further north, William Bloomer had a blacksmith-shop, and Michael Demott a hotel, and, with the neighboring farmers, made, prior to the Revolution, a village at Balmville, nearly if not fully as large as that on the Glebe. Daniel Smith went there subsequently and built a store and a wharf, from which he sailed a sloop to New York; while on Jew's or Acker's Creek, in the extreme northeast part of the town, were Tooker's mill and Acker's mill. In the vicinity of all these mills were hamlets,—in most cases a smith's shop, and occasionally a "store" of goods of all kinds "for cash or barter," but principally the latter, for of the former there was little in circulation. Besides mills and hamlets there were many well-cultivated farms, and substantial dwellings which had supplanted rude log cabins. The lumber business of the town was especially heavy, and large quantities of ship timber, planks, and staves were forwarded to market. The public landing which the trustees of the Glebe had established at the foot of North Street was almost entirely devoted to the shipment of lumber, and vessels were loading and rafts forming there almost constantly. Ship-building was also carried on to a considerable extent, at different points, by William Seymour and others; and Newburgh ships entered into the Liverpool trade, and her smaller vessels engaged in coasting and in trade with the West India islands. A more thriving town was not found on the banks of the Hudson, nor one in which the industry of the people had more substantial reward.

In 1797 the village had attained to such size that it was found necessary to establish a fire department; and for this purpose a law was passed by the Legislature defining the fire limits of the village, and directing the election of five trustees, "to be called the Trustees of the Fire Company in the Village of Newburgh." The fire limits defined by this act included that portion of the town lying south of an east-and-west line running six rods north of the academy; and the district thus defined was "to be called the Village of Newburgh," the freeholders in which were empowered to elect annually not less than three nor more than five trustees, who should have the appointment of firemen and the control and management of a fire department.† This was the first crude form of village authority.

† The third section of this act reads as follows: "The said trustees, to be chosen as aforesaid, or a major part of them, shall have full power and authority to nominate and appoint a sufficient number of firemen (willing to accept), not exceeding twenty to every fire-engine now provided, or hereafter to be provided, for the use of the said village, out of the inhabitants being freeholders or persons renting property to the value of one hundred dollars per annum, to have the care, management, working, and using the said fire-engines, and other tools and instruments now or hereafter to be provided for the extinguishment of fires within the said village, which persons so to be nominated and appointed as aforesaid shall be called the firemen of the village of Newburgh, who are hereby required to be ready at all fires, as well by night as by day, to manage, use, and work the other tools and instruments aforesaid."

By other sections of the act firemen were exempted from service as constables or as jurors of inquest; and the trustees had power to remove firemen for cause, to make all necessary rules and regulations, and, in case of fire, to command the assistance of all "able-bodied inhabitants in said village" to extinguish the same. The inhabitants of the village were also required to furnish their houses with suitable fire-buckets.

* Minutes, Sept. 22, Oct. 13 and 27, 1794.

In September, 1797, the publication of The Mirror—the second newspaper published in Newburgh—was commenced by Philip Van Horne, and in 1799 passed into the hands of Joseph W. Barber. In 1798, The New Windsor Gazette was published at New Windsor by Jacob Schultz, but was soon after removed to Newburgh and called The Orange County Gazette. This paper was subsequently sold to David Denniston, the name being changed to The Citizen. It was afterwards merged in The Rights of Man,* a paper established by Elias Winfield, for whom it was printed by Benoni H. Howell. The Mirror gave place to The Recorder of the Times, and the latter to The Political Index.

These papers are mentioned in their order for the purpose of introducing the facts in the religious history of the town which led to their publication. As the Revolution had severed the old connection between Church and State, the people of America were naturally led to consider what should be the future political relation of the Church. These discussions finally subsided on the adoption of the Federal Constitution, as that instrument expressly declared that Congress should "make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." But besides these debates, there were other and mightier agencies operating in the direction of skepticism. Voltaire and his friends had already begun the work of unsettling the religious faith of Europe; they shook, as it were, the very pillars of the Church, and desolated France with the terrible revolution of '98. The doctrines taught by Voltaire and Paine were accepted by many prominent and able men in the United States; but at no place did the anti-religious sentiments prevail to a greater extent than in Newburgh. The Citizen first, and subsequently The Rights of Man, hoisted the infidel flag; there was a regularly organized society of infidels, and a blind man, by the name of Elihu Palmer,† was induced to visit the village weekly and deliver lectures at the academy in opposition to the Bible. Besides the above-named newspapers, Paine's "Age of Reason," Tyndall's "Christianity as Old as the Creation," and works of a similar character, were republished under the auspices of the society and circulated with all diligence.

"That there was infidelity, and organized infidelity," says Dr. Johnston,‡ "I have no reason to doubt. Nay, I have my information from one who was a member of what was styled 'The Druid Society.' It was one of the branches of the 'Illuminati Society,' at the head of which was Weishaupt, of Germany, the leading object of which, according to his representations, was destruction to all organized governments, 'civil and divine.' Hence the Bible was the avowed object of their hatred, as well as all that pertained to the church of God and her institutions. I have a number of facts, dates, and particulars on this subject, which would help posterity to know more of the sad effects of infidelity in Newburgh the latter end of the last and the commencement of this century than is generally known at present. A clergyman informed me that after preaching here he was attacked in the evening by a fierce dog, set on by several who were reputed members of the Druid Society. The place where the attack was made was near the large elm-tree on Liberty Street. I presume many have heard it stated (and I have never heard it controverted) that in the afternoon or evening of the day in which the ordinance of the Lord's Supper was dispensed by our officiating clergyman, a mock administration was performed at a spring‡ within the limits of the corporation, by formally presenting to a little dog a cracker and a small quantity of water, using the words of our blessed Redeemer when he instituted the holy supper."

"It ought to be known," continues Dr. Johnston, "that the principal actor in this impious transaction did not long survive. On the following Sabbath evening he was found in his room with the door locked, apparently in a fit, convulsed with awful spasms, and he died without being able to utter a word. Whether he had taken anything with a view to self-destruction, or whether it was the immediate act of God, without his voluntary agency, we know not. This occurred in July, 1799. In the graveyard there is a stone with the following inscription: 'The Tomb of ———, who died July 2d, in the year of the Christian Era, 1799, aged 34 years.' For a time it seemed as if these infatuated men had determined that there should not remain in Newburgh and its vicinity a vestige of Christianity."

Dr. Johnston's account of the objects and doings of the infidels of Newburgh comes to us somewhat colored perhaps by religious prejudice; but the main facts are generally conceded to have been as he states them. Mr. James Donnelly, a member for a short time of "The Druids," and Mr. Jacob Schultz, the editor of the first anti-infidel paper, the last living witnesses of the events referred to, agreed that the accounts given by Dr. Johnston and by Abner Cunningham|| were exaggerated, especially in reference

* In the Autobiography of Rev. Dr. Johnston, a paper under the title of The Temple of Reason is mentioned (p. 94). The paper referred to was probably The Rights of Man, which was the only infidel paper published at that time.

† The Rev. Elihu Palmer was born at Norwich, Conn., about the year 1763, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1787. He was early settled as a minister of the gospel; but he subsequently changed his faith to Universalism, and from that passed over to infidelity. In 1793 he was attacked by yellow fever, which left him entirely blind. He died at Philadelphia in 1805.

‡ Autobiography of Rev. John Johnston, D.D., p. 92, etc.

§ The place referred to is said to have been a spring on the premises lately owned by Edward R. Johns, Esq., south of the iron-works. It was destroyed by excavations.

|| "Fate of Infidelity," by Abner Cunningham, in which the author professes to reveal the fate of several of the leading Newburgh infidels. The files of the village papers show that the statements which he makes are incorrect in many instances. "D. D.," says Cunningham, referring to David Denniston, "a printer, three days after, fell in a fit, and died immediately." This is not true, for Denniston edited The Rights of Man to the deaths of several of the participants in the scenes described. Mr. Donnelly stated that the Druids "first organized as a debating society, and were composed of the best men in the place. Many of the members became infidels after they had joined the society, and then changed the association into an infidel club," when a good many withdrew, including himself. He regarded it as "a great mistake to assert that all the members were bad men and came to violent deaths." Mr. Schultz stated that Dr. Phineas Hedges, whose sudden death Dr. Johnston refers to, "it was always understood, died in a fit brought on by nervous excitement. The circumstances were these: I printed an article in my Gazette in which Dr. Hedges and the infidels were handled severely. The doctor was very much excited over it, and came down to New Windsor to ask the privilege of a reply. I told him that I must see his reply before I would agree to print it; but that if it was couched in proper terms, he might expect its publication. The next I heard was that the doctor had died in a fit. Some of the ardent anti-infidels said it was a visitation of God; but this was not generally believed.* The discussions of that period will always be remembered by me; and after a lapse of sixty years I have come to regard the acts of my contemporaries in a softer light than that in which I then looked upon them."

While these corrections are due to the memory of the dead, the files of The Rights of Man and of The Recorder of the Times—the first the advocate, and the latter the opponent, of the doctrines taught in Paine's "Age of Reason"—give ample evidence of the violence of the discussion, and of the efforts made to overthrow all religious worship. According to a statement in The Recorder of the Times, these efforts gradually subsided after the close of the century.

III.—VILLAGE OF NEWBURGH.

At the opening of the present century the inhabitants of the German Patent threw off the township titles into which it was principally divided, and, for the purpose of securing better municipal government, united in an application to the Legislature for an act to incorporate the village of Newburgh, a title which had been adopted in the act of 1797, organizing the fire department. In response to the application, the Legislature passed, on the 25th of March, 1800, an act of incorporation, defining the bounds of the village and authorizing the election of trustees and other officers. The act further provided that the trustees should have power to make, ordain, and publish such by-laws, rules, and regulations as should be deemed meet and proper, particularly in reference to public markets, streets, alleys, and highways; to abate slaughter-houses and nuisances generally; to determine the number of inns or taverns, and grant licenses to the same; to restrain the running at large of geese, cattle, hogs, and other animals; to erect and regulate hay-scales; and to have general powers "relative to anything whatsoever" that should concern the "public and good government" of the village thereby created.†

The act took immediate effect, and on the first Tuesday in May after its passage seven trustees, three assessors, three fire-wardens, a collector, and a treasurer were elected; and the board of trustees organized under the presidency of John Anderson.‡ The immediate duties devolving upon them were comparatively light, and beyond the erection of a public market and the leasing of the stalls, the partial grading of Water Street, and the adoption of a few general regulations, very little was done.

Immediately after the incorporation of the village, an act was passed (March 20, 1801) constituting and appointing Robert Browne, John DeWitt, William Seymour, Levi Dodge, Johannes Miller, Hugh Walsh, George Clinton, Jr., Jacob Powell, John McAuley, Charles Clinton, William W. Sackett, George Gardner, and all such others as should associate for that purpose, a body corporate and politic by the name of "The President, Directors, and Company of the Newburgh and Cocheton Turnpike Road," with a capital of $126,000, for the construction of a road from Newburgh to the Delaware River.§ The stock was soon taken and the road constructed. In its effect upon the prosperity of the village it was of far greater importance than that of municipal organization, opening as it did an avenue of trade extending for many miles into the interior, and connecting the southern tier of counties with the city of New York, via Newburgh.||

Meanwhile the affairs of the Glebe demanded attention. The trustees under the charter were acting, in a measure, in defiance of its provisions by denying to the church any participation in the revenues, and by appropriating the whole income to the support of schools. To remove the legal disabilities under which the trustees labored, the Legislature passed, in 1803, † Newburgh was the second incorporated village in the State. The village of Lansingburgh was the first.

‡ The records of the board from 1800 to 1804 have not been preserved; but from published reports it appears that John Anderson was president from May, 1800, to 1802; Levi Dodge from May, 1802, to 1803; Jacob Powell from May, 1803, to 1804, when George Monell was elected.

§ The arched bridge at Bridgeville, Sullivan Co., which was completed in 1807, bears the only monument to the directors of this road now remaining on its line. In the parapet on the eastern abutment of this bridge a marble slab was inserted with the inscription: "Jacob Powell, President; George Monell, Treasurer; William H. Weller, Secretary; Jonathan Hedges, Charles Clinton, Levi Dodge, Daniel Stringham, Jonathan Fisk, Cyprian Webster, Reuben Neely, Daniel C. Verplanck, Hamilton Morrison, David Crawford—Directors, 1807."—Quindlen's "Sullivan County," 537.

after this, and was subsequently connected with the American Citizen and Watch-Tower, a paper printed in New York. He died Dec. 13, 1803, of a malignant fever. He was a man of considerable ability.

* The Mirror of July 9th thus speaks of Dr. Hedges: "In justice to his memory, it ought to be observed that he was a man possessed of a strong mind, and this mind highly improved and cultivated by the principles of general science and the knowledge of the philosophy of nature."

"an act to alter and amend the charter of the Glebe lands in the German Patent, in the village of Newburgh," by the terms of which the inhabitants on the patent were empowered to elect, on the second Tuesday in May, annually, three persons to "officiate as trustees of the aforesaid Glebe." The act also ordered that the moneys arising from the annual income should forever thereafter be appropriated solely to the support of schools; that $200 should be paid annually to the trustees of the academy, and that the remainder of the income should be paid to other schools which were then, or should be thereafter, established on said Glebe: "Provided," that if at any time thereafter "a minister of the Episcopal Church should be inducted on said patent," then the trustees should have power to "pay annually for the support of said minister" such proportions of the moneys as should be "reasonable, according to the true intent and meaning of the charter." Under this act an election was held at the house of Edward Howell (May 10, 1803), when Daniel Smith, William H. Smith, and John Harris were chosen trustees.

Thus the matter remained until 1805, when the members of the Episcopal Church determined, if possible, to regain possession of the income of the Glebe, and to re-establish the provisions of the old charter. With a view to accomplish this the bishop appointed the Rev. Cave Jones agent for the church, and Messrs. Jonathan Fisk and Walter Case were employed as counsel. To allay public excitement a card was issued by the agent and the counsel for the church, in which they pledged themselves that in case the church should succeed in establishing her claim to the Glebe, the income therefrom should be appropriated, according to the true intent and meaning of the charter, for the support of a free school for the children of the poor residing on the patent; and that in renewing leases all things should be made "commodious and agreeable to the parties concerned."

To this card was appended a call for a meeting of the male inhabitants of the patent who were members of the Episcopal Church and entitled to vote at other elections, to be held at the old Episcopal Church building, on Monday, Nov. 4th, for the purpose of choosing "two Trustees of the Parish of Newburgh, according to the true intent and meaning of the charter granting the Glebe on the said Patent."

The meeting was held; the votes offered by those who were not members of the Episcopal Church were rejected; eleven votes only were received, and Jonathan Fisk and Joseph Hoffman were chosen trustees. They then proceeded to reorganize the church, by the election of wardens and vestrymen, so that it might be in a proper position to maintain its authority by an appeal to the courts.

For the purpose of determining the legality of the law of 1803, an action of ejectment was immediately brought by the church against Michael Nestle, who held a portion of the Glebe by virtue of a lease from the trustees elected pursuant to that act. The cause was tried Nov. 26, 1806, at the Orange Circuit Court, before Mr. Justice Tompkins, and the church was nonsuited. At the succeeding term, a motion was made to set aside the nonsuit, and argument was made before Justices Van Ness and Spencer. Mr. Fisk, on the part of the church, held that the original intention in granting the patent evidently was that members of the Episcopal Church alone should be permitted to vote at elections for trustees, and that to deny this position would be to defeat the intention of the charter. The act of 1803, he held, was void, as the Legislature had no power to divest the church of any rights vested by the charter in the original grantees of the Glebe. J. Radcliffe and T. A. Emmet, on the part of the trustees under the act of 1803, held that the original charter was to "German Lutherans. On their removal from the tract, the remaining inhabitants, being of the Church of England or Episcopalians, met together, elected trustees, surrendered the original patent, and obtained a new charter to them and their successors. If none but persons of the same religious denomination with those named in the original grant had a right to vote, then the Episcopalians, in 1750, had no right to elect trustees;" that there was as "much ground to object to the charter of 1752, under which the plaintiff claims, as to the act of 1803, under which the defendant holds; and that the Episcopalians, in 1750, acted in the same manner towards the Lutherans as the Presbyterians, in 1803, acted towards the Episcopalians."

But while in the argument of counsel the case was made to depend entirely upon the question of the right of the inhabitants of the patent, irrespective of church membership, to vote at elections for trustees, the point raised was not decided by the court. In his opinion, Mr. Justice Van Ness avoided the issue presented, for the avowed purpose of leaving the matter open to a compromise; but held that the trustees elected under the act of 1803 were the trustees de facto, and were hence clothed with competent authority to grant the lease to Nestle, and that a new trial ought to be denied.

Mr. Justice Spencer, however, met the question presented, and held that "right of election" was "expressly given, by the charter, to all male inhabitants of the German Patent who were above the age of twenty-one years," and that, "the plaintiff having failed to show any title," the defendant could not be disturbed in his possession. Although not regarded as a decision on the merits of the case, these opinions destroyed all hope of re-establishing the jurisdiction of the church over the Glebe, and further proceedings were stayed.*

* The case may be found at length in 3 John. Rep., 115. No further legal proceedings were taken.

The records of the trustees of the village contain many proofs that they were not neglectful of the duties devolved upon them by the charter. In 1804, a public meeting was called by them for the purpose of adopting a plan for supplying the village with water; and during the same year a night-watch was organized. In 1806, public hay-scales were erected, and several improvements made in the streets. Private enterprise, too, began to yield its fruits. Turnpikes were opened in different directions,* thus increasing the commercial facilities of the town; and the Bank of Newburgh was established in 1811. The results of these and kindred enterprises are forcibly illustrated in the fact that, from the overwhelming indebtedness, which rested like an incubus on the town at the close of the war of independence, in thirty years it had attained such a position of wealth that it paid one-fourth of the tax of the entire county.

But while the citizens of Newburgh were thus engaged in these various enterprises the cloud of war again darkened the national horizon—the

SECOND WAR WITH ENGLAND

—so disastrous to trade in all its branches. Notwithstanding its embarrassments, however, they never wavered in their devotion to their country. From first to last, by resolutions passed in conventions, by the expression of their sentiments through the ballot-box, by the prompt offer of volunteers, and by the contribution of men to actual service, they evinced their unflinching purpose to resist the "attacks of domestic enemies, and the insolent aggressions of foreign powers." Soon after the declaration of war the local military companies were ordered on duty and stationed at Staten Island;† and, at a later period, Newburgh was temporarily made the rendezvous of the companies of grenadiers, light infantry, and riflemen of the Thirty-fourth Brigade.‡

Among the many facts which showed the temper of the people of Newburgh during the war may be noticed the contribution of clothing, by the ladies of the village, to the volunteers in service on the northern frontiers;§ the detestation expressed, on all public occasions, of those who sympathized with the common enemy, or who esteemed the blessings of peace paramount to national honor;|| and the very spirited celebration of Perry's victory on Lake Erie. On the latter occasion the trustees of the village united with a committee of citizens, viz.: Solomon Sleight, William Ross, Isaac Belknap, Jr., John S. Hunn, John Anderson, John Mandevill, Seth Belknap, John W. Morrell, Joseph Reeve, and Hezekiah Belknap. The national flag was displayed in all public places in the village and from the masts of the vessels lying in the harbor; there was a public collation and sundry patriotic toasts at the Newburgh Coffee-House, and a procession and a very general illumination in the evening. These arrangements were entered into heartily by all classes of citizens, and the exercises on the occasion were long held in remembrance.¶

But sadness as well as joy entered into the history of the town during the war. The embargo act detained in foreign ports many American vessels corps now on duty on our northern frontiers whom your Excellency may suppose to be most in want of them. The unremitting attention which has marked your Excellency's conduct since the declaration of war, towards the protection of our northern frontier and maritime coast, and your constant endeavor to alleviate the situation of our fellow-citizens who are in the military service, will, I hope, sufficiently apologize for troubling you with the disposition of this small tribute of respect to those brave and patriotic defenders of their country's rights. With considerations of much respect and esteem,

"I am yours, sincerely, W. ROSS.

"His Excellency, Gov. TOMPKINS."

¶ One of the resolutions adopted in 1813 is as follows: "Resolved, That we consider the Tories of the present war as having a much better title to the halter than the Tories of the Revolution, having had a longer time to get weaned from their unnatural mother."

§ The Political Index of Sept. 30, 1813, contains a lengthy account of this celebration. "Never," says that paper, "did such universal joy pervade the breasts of American citizens as has been manifested on a recent occasion; and never has that joy been more distinctly, unequivocally, and universally expressed by the citizens of Newburgh and its vicinity than has been done on receiving the official letters announcing the late affair on Lake Erie. . . . On the arrival of the news, a Federal salute was fired from the U. S. corvette 'John Adams,' moored opposite the village, which vessel was decorated with the flags of different nations during the progress of the celebration. . . . At 1 o'clock P.M. the trustees, with upwards of one hundred citizens, partook of a collation at the Newburgh Coffee-House, after which, Joseph Morrell being chosen president and Solomon Sleight vice-president, toasts were drank, and a song written for the occasion by the editor of the Index was sung by Joseph Reeve. . . . At 7 o'clock P.M., at the signal of a cannon, all the windows in the village were brilliantly illuminated; some were ornamented with transparent paintings designative of the occasion, others inscribed with the names of our naval heroes, whose deeds are destined to illumine the historic page: all of which had a handsome effect, and, connected with the occasion, fired the soul with a proud satisfaction of being an American, and made the conscious heart to swell with forebodings of the rising glory of America. A numerous procession of citizens, headed by the band of music, now marched through the principal streets of the village. At nine o'clock the lights were extinguished and the village enrobed in darkness."

A tradition connected with this celebration relates that the official news of Perry's victory was brought to Newburgh by the corvette "John Adams," referred to by the Index, and that the vessel arrived in the bay on Sunday morning, and immediately fired a salute. The people, many of whom were in attendance upon divine service, were in great consternation and rushed into the streets, fearful that an enemy's vessel had passed the Highlands and had commenced a bombardment of the village. Presently the "Adams" ran up the "Stars and Stripes," and sent a boat on shore with the news, which was received with cheer after cheer. In the general joy the Sabbath was forgotten.

* The Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike was organized in 1801. In 1808, the Newburgh and New Windsor turnpike was chartered, connecting at New Windsor with turpikes to Cornwall and Monroe. In 1810, the Newburgh and Sullivan turnpike penetrated the heart of the present county of Sullivan; and in 1812, the Newburgh and Plattekill turnpike opened to the Newburgh market a rich agricultural section of southern Ulster. (See "Trade and Commerce.")

† The company of artillery under the command of Capt. Henry Butterworth, and the uniform companies of light infantry under the command of Capt. Alexander Denniston and Charles Birdsall, of this town, have been ordered by His Excellency the Governor, to be in readiness to march to New York on the 15th inst.—Index, Aug. 11, 1812.

‡ "GENERAL ORDERS—Albany, Sept. 1, 1813.—The companies of Grenadiers, Light Infantry, and Riflemen of the 34th Brigade will rendezvous for service at Newburgh, on the 8th September inst., at ten o'clock in the forenoon. . . ."

§ "NEWBURGH, Dec. 5, 1812.—SIR: Accompanying this your Excellency will find a package of two hundred and eighty woolen stockings and eighty mittens. They are forwarded to you by the ladies of this village, with the request that you will send to those of the volunteer manned more or less by Newburgh men, whose uncertain fate caused solicitude in no small circle of friends; on the ocean American merchantmen were captured, and among their crews who languished in Dartmoor prison Newburgh also had its representatives; mourning for his untimely fate and plaudits for his heroic example followed the announcement of the death of Lieut. Ludlow, who, standing beside the gallant Lawrence on the deck of the "Chesapeake," fought the English ship "Shannon" (June, 1813), and who, twice wounded and a prisoner, followed the body of his commander to its grave in Halifax, and on his return fell from his chair a lifeless corpse.

GENERAL INCIDENTS.

The history of the village and of the town was marked by many incidents of more or less moment in a local and temporary point of view during the early part of the century; those which may be regarded as of historical significance, however, were few. Among the more important were the introduction of the Baptist and the Methodist Churches, the reorganization of the Episcopal Church, the establishment of the theological seminary, and the visit to the village by Lafayette. The latter event was the occasion of public exercises in which the people of a large district of country participated. A meeting was held at the Orange Hotel on Aug. 17, 1824, and a committee of arrangements appointed, composed of the "members of the corporation of the village of Newburgh, together with William Ross, Selah Reeve, John D. Lawson, Ward M. Gazlay, John S. Hunn, Francis Crawford, David Ruggles, Samuel Williams, John W. Brown, Abraham M. Smith, Isaac N. Seymour, Walter Case, Samuel R. Betts, Leonard Smith, Daniel Smith, Levi Dodge, John Mandevill, Luther Halsey, Edmund Griswold, Thurston Wood, Joseph Morrell, William Belknap, John Belknap, Eleazer Gidney, John P. Dodge, and Jonathan Noyes." From this committee a delegation was sent to New York to consult the general, and, in pursuance of arrangements for that purpose, beacon-fires* on the mountains, on the evening of Sept. 13th, announced that the visit would be made the next day. The streets were decorated with arches and evergreens and strewn with flowers; inscriptions suspended, and the village crowded to its utmost capacity with people; four companies of cavalry and five companies of infantry (under command of Col. John W. Brown) performed escort duty. The general arrived about six o'clock in the evening on the 14th, and was escorted to the Orange Hotel, where the addresses of welcome were delivered. At about 9 P.M. he attended a banquet by his Masonic brethren of Hiram Lodge, where he was received with Masonic honors and was addressed by the Rev. John Brown. Supper was served at 12 M., and 2 A.M. the general took his departure for Poughkeepsie.† The lateness of the hour of his arrival and the shortness of the time of his remaining prevented the more extended demonstrations which had been designed.

Perhaps no local event, however, aroused so much local attention as the organization of the Highland Bank. At that time (1832-34) banks were chartered by the Legislature, and were regarded as part of the legitimate spoils of political parties,—charters being given to members of the party in power, who in turn apportioned the stock among their associates. The charter of the Highland Bank was measurably within the limits of this rule, although the petitions for it were based on an apparent local necessity for additional banking capital. The Bank of Newburgh, established twenty years before, and, with the exception of the Bank of Orange County, at Goshen, the only bank in the district, enjoyed a monopoly of the banking business of a large section of country. Its stockholders were naturally opposed to an encroachment on the privileges which had been granted to them, and did not hesitate to remonstrate,—assuming that it was amply able to supply all the legitimate commercial discounts that were required, that no further banking capital was necessary, and that the "sole object of many of the petitioners was to obtain directorships."‡ But the petitioners were active, and sent from Newburgh, Glenham, Matteawan, Walden, Cornwall, and Monroe a formidable list of advocates. The bill was vigorously fought in the Legislature,—passed the Assembly and was defeated in the Senate (April, 1833). At the succeeding session the application was renewed by the petition of two thousand persons. In the mean time the granting of the charter was made a question in the choice of members of the Assembly. The Democratic and the "National Republicans"§ were then the parties of the day; but the introduction of the question of rechartering the Bank of the United States changed the political associations of many, among others that of Isaac R. Van Duzer, a rising and somewhat distinguished politician of the county. After having been twice returned to the Assembly, he was dropped by the Democrats and immediately taken up by the opposition.|| A close canvass succeeded. The town of Minisink, which had given Jackson 417 majority, followed Van Duzer's lead and gave him 426. Newburgh, on the other hand, which had only given Jackson a small majority, cast 686 votes for Gilbert O. Fowler and the Democratic ticket, and only 260 for Van Duzer,—a result which was due almost entirely to the Highland Bank question, and which secured the return to the Legislature of Gen. Fowler, its principal advocate. With a shrewdness quite common in later days, Fowler made the granting of the charter a political privilege. Opposition thus became hopeless; the Bank of Newburgh quietly withdrew an application which it had made for an increase of capital, and the charter passed the Assembly by a vote of 109 to 4, and the Senate by 27 to 3. The institution was soon successfully organized, and proved the necessity for its creation in the demands for accommodation which it was enabled to supply to the business of the place.

The expansions and speculations which swept over the country in 1835-37, and in the origin of which, viewed from one stand-point, the organization of the Highland Bank was an element, were not without their influence on the village; real estate advanced to prices which, in many instances, have not since that time been realized, and hundreds of citizens found themselves suddenly comparatively rich by a process which they did not understand; but neither the business of the banks nor of the village was materially speculative, and when the suspensions of 1837 came on they were little felt, except, of course, in the immediate channels of association with the universally depressed trade and commerce of the nation, and in the locking up of banking capital in suspended paper and extensions. In another form, the history of 1786 repeated itself: instead of loaning bills of credit, the free banking law gave to individuals the power to convert their real estate into active capital by its mortgage for bills of circulation, and Mr. Thomas Powell and others associated under it and established, in 1838, the Powell Bank, which afforded relief to trade.

It was during this period that the construction of the New York and Erie Railroad was commenced, and the Legislature was asked to aid the project by a loan of the credit of the State. Previous to this application, the citizens of Newburgh had secured a charter for a road from the Hudson to the Delaware River, with a view to reach the coal-beds of Pennsylvania; but this charter had been permitted to become void. When the loan was proposed, an effort was made to connect the Delaware and Hudson road with the Erie, and thus give to Newburgh the eastern terminus. Through local jealousies and bickerings between the leading capitalists of Newburgh and of Goshen, in regard to the route which should be given to the road, Newburgh lost the prize which her people hoped to grasp. The road to the Delaware, however, was rechartered, and a portion of the route was graded.

Under the financial revulsions of 1837, work was suspended on both the Erie and the Delaware; but on the former it was soon resumed and the road completed from Piermont to Goshen. The effect of the opening of this section was even more disastrous to Newburgh than had been anticipated. The census returns, which, for the decade ending with the year 1840, had exhibited an increase in population of 2509, gave only 68 as the increase.

At this time difficulties arose in the prosecution of the work on the Erie road, and fresh efforts were made to secure to Newburgh some of the advantages of its construction. This was accomplished by an agreement on the part of the Erie Company—confirmed by an act of the Legislature releasing the company from its liabilities to the State—to construct a branch road to Newburgh. This road was completed in 1849, and, with the Erie, was the beginning of the railroad system which now so completely bisects and intersects the county,—literally covering it with a net-work of iron rails.

Without the financial ability to so control the enterprise of other communities as to render the modern avenues of communication which they have constructed tributary to the interests of Newburgh, the capitalists and business men of the place have made a bold struggle for years against the combinations which have threatened its overthrow. At each successive stage of the changes growing out of the general development of the country, successive generations have met the requirements which have been laid upon them. The labor, the liberality, and the capital which was necessary in 1801 to carry the Cochection turnpike to completion was, considering the comparative value of capital and labor, equal to that involved in the construction of any railroad in the county. But it was not the only undertaking of that character: its capital of $126,000 was followed by a capital of $5000 in the New Windsor turnpike, $90,000 in the Newburgh and Ulster turnpike, $35,000 in the Newburgh and Sullivan turnpike, $14,000 in the Newburgh and Plattekill turnpike, and $14,000 in the Snake Hill turnpike,—making a total of $284,000 expended for roads prior to 1820. This sum was, of course, shared to some extent by residents along the lines of the roads, but the greater part was drawn from Newburgh. The expenditure on the abandoned Delaware Railroad was undertaken single-handed, and was followed by a subscription to the construction of the Erie Branch of one-third its cost, and an additional sum of $145,000 by loan or indorsements. Scarce had this requirement been met when the construction of plank-roads to Ellenville and to Shawangunk were undertaken, involving an expenditure of about $150,000; and further capital was drawn out for the Warwick Branch and for the Duchess and Columbia Railroad. On all this expenditure but a single bonded debt ($10,000) was incurred. The wonder is not that so little, but that so much has been done; that in the struggles of half a century the place has not been remanded to the comparative desolation which has overtaken other communities, rather than to have maintained a certain and substantial growth.

Sharing to some extent in the ventures which were followed by the panic of 1857, the business of the village was more or less affected by the revulsions of that period; but this was due to outside associations rather than to local causes, and though for a time the embarrassment of a single firm, largely interested in several commercial and mechanical enterprises, threatened general disaster, that result was happily averted. A single wreck, if such it may be called, of any considerable magnitude was thrown upon the shore,—the Powell Bank; not because of its insolvency, but through the necessity of employing its capital in other channels, a change which was effected without loss to the public. The business of the village soon resumed its activity, and the decade closed with prosperity.

WAR OF THE REBELLION.

The local incidents of the succeeding decade, embracing principally the war of the Rebellion, have their record in the publications of the times, and need not be repeated. For over four years, in the going hence and in the return of volunteers,

"In the town—through every street—Tramp, tramp, went the feet!"

every church-spire became a staff from which floated the national flag, and every pulpit its forum; the duties, the anxieties which the conflict imposed entered into the daily life of the community. In their contributions to the prosecution of the war, it cannot be said that the people of Newburgh faltered in sustaining the constitutional government. Growing out of political issues which had divided parties in some degree for half a century, the discussion of the questions which the war evolved was more or less tinged with political associations during its entire progress, and many men were prejudiced or exalted at the behest of factions; but the underlying sentiment of the great mass of the community was with the government. Before the drums of the conflict had begun the call for volunteers, the first company of men in the subsequent forces of the State was in organization,* and in rapid succession other organizations followed, anticipating or redeeming the fullest requirement of the national and State authorities. Briefly recapitulated,† these organizations were: 1. Company B, Third Regiment, recruited in March and April, 1861; 2. Company B, Thirty-sixth Regiment, recruited in May and June, 1861; 3. Company I, Seventy-first Regiment militia, recruited principally from Company L, Nineteenth Regiment; 4. Companies A and B, and parts of C, D, and G, Fifty-sixth Regiment, recruited

* The following is a copy of the first recruiting handbill issued in Newburgh. The volunteers enlisted under it were included in Co. B, Third Regiment, Capt. S. W. Fullerton, Jr.:

A recruiting office has been opened at the office of Fullerton & Van Wyck, corner Second and Water Streets, Newburgh, for the purpose of enlisting a company of volunteers, in pursuance of the provisions of the act passed April 16, 1861, entitled 'An act to authorize the equipment of a volunteer militia, and to provide for the public defense.' Two hundred able-bodied men wanted, who will be armed, equipped, and paid by the State.

between July and October, 1861; 5. The Seventh Independent Battery, in part, recruited with Fifty-sixth Regiment; 6. Companies D, E, F, I, and L, Nineteenth Regiment militia; miscellaneous enlistments, prior to July, 1862, 111. Under the calls of July and August, 1862, 470 men were required from the town, and 501 furnished, 217 of whom were enrolled in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, and 166 in the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Regiment. The call of July, 1863, required 443 men, of whom 90 were furnished; but it was merged in the calls of October, 1863, and of February, March, and July, 1864, requiring 756—number furnished, 827, of whom 71 were not credited. The total of enlistments (including re-enlistments) was 2250—the total of men required 1226. The public subscriptions and loans of the town (including at that time the village), for the promotion of enlistments and for bounties, were: 1861, by individual subscriptions $7385, bonds of the village $5000; 1862, individual subscriptions $17,512; 1864, town bonds $175,100,—total, $204,997. In addition to this sum, the town expended for special relief (1863–64) $1075.50; expended by aid society and in contributions to the Christian Commission, $12,387.31, raising the total to $218,459.81, and the further sum of $321,320† for special income and internal revenue taxes to Jan. 1, 1865,—a grand total of $539,779.81.

CITY OF NEWBURGH.

The sacrifices imposed on the town by the war were not without their compensations. The depressions in business incident to the suspensions of trade and the derangements of mechanical and commercial enterprise were succeeded by activity in the channels which the war developed; speculation became rife; the prices of real estate and the compensation of labor were greatly enhanced; the expansions or inflations of the times, illegitimate and unsubstantial though they may have been, marked their career in monuments of substantial progress. Born of the impulses of the new era, the village passed (April 22, 1865) to incorporation as the CITY OF NEWBURGH, and elected its first mayor and a Common Council; a visible police was established; the streets were given location and bounds by commissioners for that purpose; the facilities for public education were multiplied; the abodes of mechanics and artisans were made to vie with those of the wealthy of preceding generations; the homes of the wealthy to emulate the palacés of Europe. Perhaps many of these results were in advance of the necessities of the day, and inflicted subsequent detrimental burdens on the community; nevertheless were they the outgrowth of the war.

REVIEW.

Having traced the founding and the development of the town and city of Newburgh through its salient points, it is scarcely necessary to remind the reader that "things are not now as they once were" either in town or city. The prosperous hamlet of seventeen houses in 1765, the poor hamlet of the Palatines of 1709, are not alone among the changes of the past. The old Bank of Newburgh, and the building immediately opposite, are the only structures that remain of those which graced Water Street half a century ago. One by one, by removal or by fire, the wooden buildings of the Orange Hotel block, and those on the same side of the street as far as the old stand of Joseph Hoffman, which was the last to fall before the march of improvement,* gave place to those of the present; while fire swept off the stores on the east side from Third Street south to the middle of the block, and from First Street north to the brick building south of the Highland Bank.† Reviewing these changes in general terms, it may be remarked that the vicinity of Colden's Gore was the original business centre of the city; and when the Bank of Newburgh was chartered, an effort to locate the banking-house there was only defeated by a majority of one vote in the board of directors. In 1812 the stores on the west side of the Gore were erected, and were occupied—counting from First Street north—the first by James Denniston, the second by Selah Reeve, the third by Lott & Chambers, the fourth by John Anderson, Jr., the fifth by Samuel Williams,‡ and the sixth by William H. Smith, beyond which came the old stand of James W. Miller. On the opposite side of the street was the brick store of Jacob Carpenter, then occupied by A. Gourlay & Co.,§ now the corner of Water and Carpenter Streets, and beyond this, on the corner of the old road to Gardner's Dock, was the brick store of Chauncey Griswold, while at the head of the Gore stood the old Colden house. Water Street was then extended south, and the Colden house, falling partly within its line, was removed; and about the same time the old road to Colden's Dock was closed and First Street opened.

† This sum is partly estimated. The totals in some other instances are only those on record, and are believed to be less than the actual amounts.

* "That venerable old wooden building, on the corner of Water and Second Streets, with its humble front and moss-covered roof,—its sign of a sheaf of wheat, denoting its occupant as one who furnishes the staff of life,—has been knocked into rubbish under the impulse of improvement. After having served nearly half a century as a place of business to that patriarch among our citizens, Joseph Hoffman, it has had to move the way of many sublunary things, to make room for a more costly and elegant specimen of art. Workmen are now employed in laying the foundation of a substantial brick edifice on a spot which so long sustained the old yellow wooden building, and around which were clustered so many associations connected with the history of Newburgh."—Telegraph, July 15, 1841.

Soon after, John D. Lawson erected, on the northeast corner of First Street, a block of wooden buildings, which were destroyed by fire, and were succeeded by the warehouse of Daniel Farrington and other stores. These buildings were also destroyed by fire, and the present block took their place. About 1835, the Colonnade Row was erected by Col. James Denniston, and the banking-house of the Highland Bank by John Ledyard. The fine building adjoining the Highland Bank on the south was erected by John Flanagan. The buildings on the east side of Water Street, south of Third, were erected by Messrs. Reeve & Falls, John Lawson, John Jamison, John Clugston, and Samuel G. Sneden, and the block was completed in its present form by Benjamin Tyler. On the west side of Water Street, between Second and Third, the first brick house was built by John Brown, an Irish refugee of the rebellion of 1798, and was subsequently occupied by his sons, John and James S. Brown; the buildings from thence north to Third Street, including the old store of John McAuley, gave place to the present structures, erected by William Walsh, C. A. Jones, and others. On the east side of the street, the Messrs. Crawford erected, in 1827, the buildings now standing on the northeast corner of Third Street, the upper part of the second of which was occupied as part of the Mansion House adjoining on the north; the brownstone front was erected by A. K. Chandler on the site of a portion of the original Mansion House.|| The succeeding brick stores were erected by Eli Hasbrouck, John Farnam (1832), and William L. Smith; John P. DeWint filled up the street leading to his wharf with the building now 102 Water Street; the old Farmers' Hotel of Benjamin Case, corner of Water and Fourth, gave place to the present structure, erected by Cornelius C. Smith. On the opposite side of the street, the Orange Hotel was erected in 1816; the buildings between the Orange Hotel and the Bank of Newburgh were erected by John P. DeWint in place of the wooden block destroyed by fire in 1837; Jacob and Sebring Fowler erected the Fowler drug-store, and Gardiner's old Newburgh Coffee-House¶ gave place

|| The Mansion House was erected by Hugh Walsh about 1798. It was one of four buildings erected by him, the second being now No. 100 Water Street, the third that on the northwest corner of Water and Fifth Street, and one on Western Avenue. They were all of the hipped-roof style of architecture. The Mansion House is now represented by Nos. 86 and 88 Water Street. Its original bar-room is now No. 84. Its use as a hotel was discontinued in 1834, when it was offered at auction sale, as appears from the following notice in the Telegraph in March of that year: "Col. David Crawford offered at auction sale, Jan. 29, 1834, three lots on Water Street, 17 by 75 feet (the old Mansion House property). The north lot brought $4900, the next $4525; the sale of the third was stopped, the owner regarding the price too low."

¶ An advertisement in the Rights of Man, Jan. 6, 1800, offering this property for sale, supplies the following description of it and its surroundings at that time: "An elegant, well-built, three-story house, and another adjoining it, known by the name of the Newburgh Coffee-room and Coffee-house; also a commodious kitchen round the corner, a good well of water with a pump before the front door. Said houses are situated on the corner of Water Street and Fourth Street, opposite to the public ferry." There were no buildings on the opposite side of the street, and the river flowed over Front Street.

to the more substantial structure on the corner. Between Fourth and South Streets, on the west side, there was but one brick house as late as 1837; that was owned and occupied by John D. Lawson. A blacksmith-shop succeeded; a stoneyard, and the residences of Uriah Lockwood and Mr. Purdy, the latter on the corner of Water and Fifth; two or three frame buildings came next, and the barn of David M. DuBois, and a high garden wall filled out the corner of Water and South. The present structures were placed there by Jacob Brown, who also erected the block on the opposite side of the street; from whence south to Fifth no material change has been made for years. The building on the southeast corner of Fifth and Water is a modern structure, and soon after its erection the upper part was finished for a lodge-room, at very considerable expense, by Orange County Lodge, I. O. O. F. An old wagon-wright's shop adjoining was removed soon after by Edward Wait; James McCann's hotel is now a store; Robert Gardner's confectionery remains; the northwest corner of Fourth and Water was the residence of William Seymour.

Front Street was opened in 1833, and was mainly the river-front, filled in except where covered by docks, which, by its construction, were extended to the east side. Prior to that time the extensive brewery of Law, Beveridge & Co. had been erected on the river-side; the Messrs. Crawford erected their large store-house in 1828,* and a similar building was put up by Benjamin Carpenter in 1829. The latter is now included in the store-house of Homer Ramsdell & Co., and the former was destroyed by fire in 1873. In 1833, Isaac R. Carpenter commenced the erection of the United States Hotel and the construction of the long wharf;† the latter was graced with a passenger house and the most famous bell on the river. Previous to that time the landing was near the east line of Front Street; it was here that the "Chief Justice Marshall" horrified the town by the explosion of her steam-chest. South of First Street was the old Colden,-Denton,-Gardner,-Powell store-house and wharf, the birthplace of the steamers "Highlander" and "Thomas Powell," whose reputations have been preserved, while those of the "Baltimore," the "Legislator," the "Providence," the "William Young," the "James Madison," the "Superior," and the "Washington" have passed away with the purpose which they filled. The original store-house was destroyed by fire; its successor was removed and incorporated with that of Carpenter's in the establishment now of Homer Ramsdell & Co. South of the Powell wharf was that of the Newburgh Whaling Company, whose massive store-house remains. Adjoining the latter the river-front was unoccupied except by a single fisherman's dwelling and reels; then came the docking venture of John W. Wells; then the large brick house (destroyed by fire a few years ago) known as the Bath Hotel, built by Thomas Colden as a resort for invalids in quest of the pure air north of the Highlands; then the old "Red Store-house," on a wharf in part constructed by Jonathan Hasbrouck prior to the war of the Revolution, and at which the barges of Gen. Washington were moored while he occupied the Hasbrouck house; and finally the brewery of James Renwick, on the Bigler wharf, whose proprietor founded there a small city, with a church and a few dwellings, and an innumerable number of lots and streets now mainly traced in legal records. Neither Western Avenue nor Colden Street were opened through until after the commencement of the present century. The former was first occupied by the Cohecton Turnpike Company, who cut a road-bed four rods wide through the bluff west of Colden Street. This cut was long known as the "dug-way," and the plateau on either side was unoccupied until the Carpenter foundry was erected on the corner of Grand Street. A frame hotel and stable occupied the corner on Colden Street for nearly half a century, and on the opposite side of the avenue was a steam grist-mill and a blacksmith-shop. Near the north end of Colden Street was the rude stone tavern kept by Thomas Gardner, a building said to have been as old as headquarters, and the birthplace of Gen. Gardner of the Confederate service, in command at Port Hudson in the war of the Rebellion. None of the business streets of the city have been more improved during the past twenty-five years, unless it be Front Street.

But without further specification, the assertion is justified that the resident of even forty years ago would now fail to recognize Front Street, Water Street, or Colden Street, except by a few ancient landmarks whose proprietors have not responded to the spirit of change; the plain old farmer with his Jersey wagon loaded with pork or butter, long since lost to trade, would himself be lost in the magnitude of the single freighting establishment which has taken the place of its progenitors; the lad who cast his fortunes on the Pacific in 1847, and carried with him visions of the orchards and open lands west of Liberty Street, would find, in the new streets and the many dwellings which to-day sweep from north to south, and shut out the sun from his old play-ground,

* "Among the improvements of the present season, we ought not to forget the substantial and commodious warehouse erected by the Messrs. Crawford, as it seems to indicate that the increase of business in the village requires extended accommodations." Index, Oct. 18, 1828.

† "The improvements on the Ferry Wharf are on the most extensive scale, we might almost term it, magnificent scale. This wharf is being constructed by Col. I. R. Carpenter, and is to be extended to the utmost limits warranted by the State grant of the land under water, that is to say, five hundred feet from high-water mark. Its increased breadth at the outer extremity, one hundred feet, will add much to the convenience and safety of passengers going on board or landing from the steamboats; while the splendid new hotel which Col. Carpenter is also erecting at the junction of the wharf with the mainland will not only offer a noble subject to all who pass the village on the river, but will be of essential comfort to persons waiting for steamboats, or whose business confines them to the water's side."

For the beauty of its private residences the city had not a high reputation fifty years ago, though perhaps its standard was quite up to the requirements of the age. The Ruggles house, in Washington Place, and the residences adjoining on the north, were, when erected, regarded as the most elegant, and views from the former found their way into the sketch-books of the times. Then came the Storms house (late Edward R. Johnes, south of the iron-works), and the residences of William Roe and David Crawford, on Montgomery Street; Francis Crawford (now Harvey Weed); John W. Knevels, north of the Washington Street school-house; Daniel Rogers,* between High and Grand Streets, and Benjamin Carpenter, adjoining, and those of Isaac R. Carpenter, Odell S. Hathaway, John W. Brown, and Frederick J. Betts (at Balmville). Now charming cottages and sumptuous villas are to be seen in every direction, and year by year the hills and plateaus in the city and vicinity are more and more crowded with the abodes of wealth, not only of modern structure but those whose walls have been rebuilt and enlarged; among the latter, the former residence of Jacob and Thomas Powell, now of Homer Ramsdell; that of Samuel Downing, now of William W. Carson; and that of William Leach, now of S. R. Van Duzer, the latter mainly the result of the skill of the late Dr. Hull. While on Water Street may be readily detected the prevailing architecture of places of business at different periods, on Grand, Liberty, and indeed on almost all of the upper streets may be seen that of residences, the headquarters house representing the earliest. More creditable to the city are those of the later period, from the fact that they are a perpetual tribute to the memory of Andrew J. Downing, who, born amid the scenes which have been so briefly sketched, grafted his pure and artistic perceptions not only upon the community in which he lived, but upon the nation.

In the architecture and appointment of its churches, its schools, and its public buildings improvement is everywhere apparent in the city. The years are but few since it could with truth be written, "In Newburgh are many very ugly places of worship; and as the city rises abruptly from the river, their ungainly proportions are, of course, prominent in every direction;" but it can be written with truth no longer, for since it was penned (1857) not less than $250,000 have been expended by different denominations in the building and in the improvement of church edifices. Perhaps in no class of buildings is the change more marked, unless it be in those which have been erected for free schools.

Not the least in the evidences of progress are the dispositions which have from time to time been made of the Glebe. Covering nearly one-half of the territory of the city, it has necessarily entered into much of its history. Each half-century has brought its changes. Under the act of April 10, 1855, by which persons holding its lands by lease were enabled to obtain titles in fee-simple, by the payment of such sums of money as would yield an annual interest equal to the annual rent, a very considerable portion of the tract has been converted into fee-simple titles. The annual income, which, until 1869, was expended yearly in the support of schools, has, since that time, been found to establish an income upon which to found a School of Design, an object which, when accomplished, will indeed be a monument to the ancient bequest, from which will flow, if not the temples and the mighty works of ancient Rome, generations of mechanics converted by its instrumentality into thinkers as well as practical workers.

IV.—VILLAGES, HAMLETS, STREAMS, Etc.

The town of Newburgh is in the extreme north-eastern part of the county. It has a river-front of seven miles, and extends westward from eight to eleven miles. It is about sixty miles in a northerly direction from New York, eighty-three miles south of Albany, fifty miles east of the Delaware River, one hundred and twenty miles from the head of Cayuga Lake, and two hundred and fifty miles from Lake Erie in a straight line. It contains 26,870 acres of land, and had, in 1875, a population of 3543. The surface of the town is stony, and is broken into high hills, which run northeast and southwest. The soil is composed of deposits of clay, sand, and loam, and along the river is warm, productive, and well cultivated. In the western part of the town the soil is not so deep and warm, and requires more laborious culture. The rock formations are principally slate and lime.

The city of Newburgh lies in the southeast part of the original town of Newburgh. It contains 1570 acres of land, and has a population of 17,433. It has a river-front of about two miles. Its harbor is the best on the Hudson, extending (including the frontage of the town) a distance of about eight miles, with a width from one mile to one mile and a quarter, and a depth of from five to seven fathoms, and is protected from storms by ranges of mountains which, extending from the river in a northerly and westerly direction, describe nearly a semicircle.

The city and the town are alike remarkable for their healthfulness of climate, and for the variety and beauty of their natural scenery. As has been already stated, the city was originally settled by German Palatinates; the town by English immigrants from the eastern provinces and from the county of Westchester. The character of the population of the former was gradually changed, and that of the latter became divided into English, Scotch, and Irish nation-lities. The site of the city was first called by the Algonquin title Quassaick, from the root terms qussuk, signifying stone or rock, and ick,—literally, stony land. The present name was first applied by Alexander Colden in 1743, and is from Newburgh, a town in Scotland, on the river Tay, which it resembles in many of its physical features.*

*The residence of Daniel Rogers, the two Crawford mansions, and that of James S. Brown were erected about and prior to 1834.

BALMVILLE.

A small collection of houses two miles north of the city of Newburgh, and named from a large tree growing there commonly called Balm of Gilead, which is remarkable for the strong balsamic scent of its leaves and buds.† The place was part of the original German Patent; was formerly called Hampton, and was one of the commercial centres of the town as early as 1767. In later times the freighting business was conducted here by Daniel Smith, and subsequently by the Messrs. Butterworth. The village has a district school, a burying-ground, and one or two shops. In the vicinity are several fine country-seats.

MIDDLEHOPE.

A small hamlet four miles north of the city of Newburgh, and formerly called Middletown because halfway between Newburgh and Marlborough. It has a post-office and a store; a Methodist and a Presbyterian Church; a district school, and a cemetery under the title of "Highland Cemetery," owned by an association organized under the general statute of the State. After the establishment of a post-office here, considerable difficulty arose out of the fact that there was another of the same name in the county; and, at the suggestion of the Postmaster-General, a meeting of the residents in the neighborhood was held for the purpose of changing the title. At this meeting several names were proposed and rejected, until finally the late Mr. James P. Brown, recollecting that there was a village in Scotland, the land of his birth, by the name of Hopeton, proposed that of Middlehope, which was adopted.

* The first application of the present name was to that portion of the patent long known as the "Old Town of Newburgh Plot" (1731). It was next applied to the parish (1752), then to the precinct (1763), then to the town (1788), to the village at its incorporation (1800), and retained in the title of the city.

† In regard to this remarkable tree,—which is certainly the "oldest inhabitant" of the town,—Mr. Gilbert Williams, now (1875) in his eighty-ninth year, and who became a resident in its vicinity in 1808, relates that when in Nova Scotia (where he resided for nine years prior to 1832) he became acquainted with John Cosman, who was an apprentice to William Bloomer before the Revolution, who stated that while he was an apprentice he had shod horses under it many a time, and that it was a large tree then. Mr. Williams measured the tree in 1832, and its circumference (two feet from the ground) was fifteen feet two inches. He measured it again in 1868, and found it to be nineteen feet five inches, showing its growth to have been four feet and three inches in thirty-six years. His own recollection of the tree added to Cosman's carries it back at least a hundred years, from which data and that of its rate of growth he is convinced that its age is much greater than that given to it by the Demott tradition. The tree was evidently planted by some person, as it is not an indigenous one. The first settlers were there in 1793, and may have brought it with them, but the probabilities favor a later period. It is decaying now, and will soon be gone.

THE DANS KAMER.

"De Duyfel's Dans Kamer!" (the Devil's Dance Chamber), so the point of land forming the north-western head of Newburgh Bay was described by some Dutch skipper more than two centuries ago. It has ever since borne the title of The Dans Kamer. The first notice of it occurs in the journal of De Vries, under date of April 26, 1640; and as De Laet, in his very minute description of the river, written in 1624, makes no mention of it, the name must have originated between 1624 and 1640. An explanation of the origin of the name is found in certain religious rites of the Indians, which were often performed here. These rites consisted in the worship of their God Bachtamo, and were denominated "devil worship" by the Dutch. For the celebration of this worship, the Indians held meetings prior to starting on expeditions of hunting, fishing, or war, to ascertain whether they would be successful or not. "At these meetings," says a paper describing the natives of New Netherland, written in 1611, "conjurers act a wonderful part. These tumble, with strange contortions, head over heels; beat themselves, leap with a hideous noise through and around a large fire. Finally they all raise a tremendous caterwauling, when the devil appears (they say) in the shape of a ravenous or a harmless animal,—the first betokens something bad, the second something good." Lieut. Couwenhoven witnessed an exhibition of this character at the Dans Kamer during the war with the Esopus Indians, in 1663.‡ The spot was dedicated to this rude worship, and was so occupied for perhaps a hundred years after the discovery of the Hudson. In point of fact, there were two dance chambers,—the first being the rocky point which juts out into the river, called in the original deed "the little dans kamer;" and the second, the plateau occupied by the Armstrong residence, which is specified in the same instrument as "the large dans kamer." The little dans kamer has a level surface of perhaps half an acre, and is separated from the mainland by a marsh over which the water flows at times, while the large dans kamer embraces a plot of ten acres.

HAMPTON.

This name was given by William Acker, son of Wolvert Acker, to the farm of his father, now the residence of Mr. Alexander Young, and is said to mean "a house or farm on a hill." It is in the extreme northeastern part of the town, and has a landing on the Hudson, from which Wolvert Acker established a ferry (known as Acker's Ferry) soon after the Revolution.

FOSTERTOWN.

This is a hamlet about four miles northwest from the city. The patent on which it is located was first settled in 1768, by John Foster, William Foster, ‡ "Documentary History of New York." The dances were discontinued under an order of the English government.

Richard Ward, and John Griggs. The lands of John Foster were sold by him to James Innis, the father of William Innis; and the place owned by William Foster is now or lately occupied by David Wyatt. The descendants of Richard Ward and John Griggs continue to hold the lands of their fathers. The Fostertown Methodist Episcopal Church is in this neighborhood. There is also a district school.

ROSSVILLE.

This is the name of a section of the town about six miles northwest of the city of Newburgh, and was originally covered by the Wallace Patent. As previously stated, this patent was purchased by Joseph Penny, who sold about 250 acres to Robert Ross, and divided the remainder among his sons. Mr. Ross is said to have been the first to settle on the patent, where he established a tannery. As early, probably, as 1770 he built a substantial stone house, which is still standing, and forms a part of the residence of John L. Aderton, who now owns the place. The sons of Robert Ross—Alexander and William—subsequently attained distinction in the town, and their birthplace was called Rossville.* There is a Methodist Episcopal Church here, a district school, and a post-office and store. The post-office address is Savill, a name of no local significance; it was bestowed by the late Chauncey F. Belknap in honor of his son, Savill.†

LUPTONDALE.

This is a district and not a hamlet. It lies in the northwest part of the town, about seven miles from the city, and is not unfrequently called "Quaker Street." Mr. Birdsall, who bestowed the name, states, "They call the road west of the lake Rocky Forest, the name given to it by Mr. Kipp, and I gave this road the name of Luptondale in honor of William Lupton, who owned this part of the old patent."

ROCKY FOREST.

This district embraces the western part of the patent to Jacobus Kipp and Company. Orange Lake adjoins it on the east, and from its elevation the views from many of its dwellings are unsurpassed in extent and variety. The name was conferred from the phy-

* Alexander Ross filled a number of military and civil offices with the approbation of the public. He died in 1826. His children were William, James, Alexander, Emeline, Mary, and Agnes. Emeline was the first wife of George W. Kerr, Esq., of Newburgh; Mary married Anthony Houston,—D. C. Houston, Col. Engineers U.S.A., and Theo. Houston, vice-president of the New York, Ontario and Western Railroad, are her sons; Agnes married Thomas T. Keene, now of Oshkosh, Mich. William Ross has been noticed elsewhere. (See "Bench and Bar.")

† The name and the post-office had their origin in Mr. Belknap's office. The circumstances were these: An old gentleman from Rossville called at Mr. Belknap's office, and in conversation on neighborhood matters Mr. Belknap jokingly asked him why they did not have a post-office there? The gentleman replied he did not suppose one could be obtained. "Nothing easier," said Mr. Belknap, and turning to his desk he drew up a petition, which was signed by himself and Mr. Thomas George and forwarded to Washington, expecting that that would be the last of it. The department, however, regarded the application as having been made in good faith, and established the office and appointed a post-master.

sical features of a portion of the district, which was originally and emphatically a rocky forest. Henry W. Kipp, son of Jacobus, was the first settler here, and continued his residence as late as 1778, when he was enrolled as an exempt for military tax.

GARDNERTOWN.

This is a small settlement four miles northwest of the city of Newburgh, so called from Silas Gardner, one of the first settlers. There is a neat Methodist Episcopal church here, also a store or tavern, a district school, and one or two shops. A short distance south of the church stands the old residence of the original proprietor,—a massive stone structure of a style of architecture quite prevalent a century or so ago. In the same vicinity is the mill owned for many years by David Bond, but originally established by Gardner.

GIDNEYTOWN.

The settlement known as Gidneytown originally embraced the patent to John Spratt, which was purchased about the year 1760 by Eleazer Gidney, whose four sons, Joseph, Daniel, David, and Eleazer, about that time settled upon it. A part of the original purchase remains in the possession of the family.

DUBOIS' MILLS.

The water-power of the Quassaick Creek was first applied to practical use at the place long known as DuBois' Mills, about one mile and a half west of its confluence with the Hudson. Alexander Colden erected a mill here as early, probably, as 1743. This mill was one of the oldest, if not the first built, in this region. Colden sold it, and parts of lots No. 1 and No. 2 of the German Patent, to Jonathan Hasbrouck, by deed dated May 3, 1753.‡ It remained in the possession of the Hasbroucks until after the Revolution, and during the war was frequently occupied by the militia when called out on alarms. The Hasbroucks sold it to a Mr. Van Keuren. From him it was bought by a Mr. Dickson, who occupied it in 1798. Subsequently it became the property of Gen. Nathaniel DuBois, who erected in connection with it a saw-mill and a fulling-mill. It remained in his hands upwards of forty years. After his death it was purchased by a Mr. Weygant, who sold it to James R. Dickson. Mr. Dickson removed it (October, 1859), enlarged the water-power by a substantial stone dam, thus forming a lake covering some twenty-nine acres, and erected a large brick flouring-mill with six run of stone. Messrs. Enoch Carter and William B. Sanxay purchased from Mr. Dickson, and conveyed the property (1871) to the Messrs. Chadwick, who converted it into a bleachery of cotton cloths and erected additional buildings.

‡ The price paid by Hasbrouck was $1050 for 100 acres, "together with the grist-mill and the appurtenances thereof, the mill-house, the mill-dam and dams, also the bolting-chests or boxes, bolts, bolting-cloths, wheat-screens, and all other implements and utensils."—Uster Record of Deeds, E. E., 501.

NEW MILLS.

The second enterprise of this sort, in the vicinity of DuBois' Mills, was Abel Belknap's (subsequently Daniel Niven's) grist-mill, about a mile and a quarter west of the city, south of the Cocheton turnpike, —now reconstructed and occupied as a woolen-mill. It was erected by Mr. Belknap some years prior to the Revolution, and was continued by Mr. Niven until his death in 1809. The third was undertaken by Chancey, Joseph, Thomas, and Daniel Belknap, under the firm of C. Belknap & Co., who erected, in 1802, a large flouring-mill, and constructed a canal—the first, probably, in the State—to supply the water-power. This mill soon came to be called the "New Mills," and the name was extended to the hamlet which grew up around it. At the time of its erection it was one of the largest mills in the country; and for several years its proprietors were the only Newburgh firm represented on 'change in New York. It said that when it was built there was but one dwelling—a log house—between it and the then village, and a considerable portion of what is now Broadway (Western Avenue) was still covered with heavy timber. It was purchased from the Belknaps by the late James Halstead, from whom it passed to William H. Beede. It was destroyed by fire (Oct. 6, 1846), and a new mill was erected on its site by Mr. Beede, in 1847. Mr. James Ross is its present owner. The district is now known as

WEST NEWBURGH.

A fine school building, erected by the Board of Education of the city, is located here; the Third (or Grace) Methodist Episcopal church; a fire-engine and house; the lime-kilns of Messrs. W. R. & C. L. Brown; several stores and manufacturing establishments, the latter including two tanneries; and also a considerable number of improved dwellings. The Highland Hat-Works are a short distance west.

POWDER MILLS.

About four miles northwest of the city, in the town of Newburgh, are the powder-works of Lafflin & Rand. The mill privilege here was originally occupied by Foster's saw-mill. It was purchased by Asa Taylor in 1816, who erected mills for the manufacture of powder. Mr. Daniel Rogers purchased the property in 1817, improved the mills, and converted them into over thirty substantial stone structures. He continued the manufacture of gunpowder until 1838. Mr. Rogers' sons subsequently conducted the works for a few years. The present owners enlarged the works, which are now, as they were under Mr. Rogers, among the most complete and extensive in the country.

BELKNAP'S RIDGE.

This is about four miles west of the city. Its name is in honor of the Belknap family, who purchased and settled here in 1749-50.

EAST COLDENHAM.

A name originally given by Governor Colden to his settlement in the town of Montgomery, and still retained there, but subsequently extended to the hamlet in the southwest part of the town of Newburgh, about six miles from the city. The East Coldenham post-office is located here; there is also a hotel and one or two shops.

ORANGE LAKE.

This body of water lies in the northwestern part of the town, and covers about 400 acres. Its aboriginal name was Quassuk, or stony pond, from the large number of bowlders on its western shore. The present name was conferred by the Rev. Dr. James Wilson, who resided in its vicinity. It is fed by internal springs, and by small streams which flow into it. Its outlet is the Quassaick Creek. The principal fact of historical interest in connection with it is the erection of a coinage-mill, near its outlet, by Capt. Thomas Machin, about the year 1787-88. Capt. Machin began to build a grist- and saw-mill here in 1784, and gave the name of New Grange to the place. In 1787 he formed a copartnership with several residents of the city of New York for the purpose of coining money. The firm was soon after incorporated with a similar company chartered by the State of Vermont,* and continued business for a few years. The coins of this mill are to be found in specimens of Vermont currency of 1787, etc., and are probably those known as "Vernon Auctori." No coins of other States were issued, as operations were conducted solely under the Vermont charter.

QUASSAICK CREEK.

This stream is composed of the outlet of Orange Lake and of the Fostertown and Tent-Stone Meadow

* On the 18th of April, 1787, Capt. Machin formed a copartnership with Samuel Atlee, James F. Atlee, David Brooks, James Grier, and James Giles, all of New York. The term specified for its continuance was seven years, with a capital of £300. The firm seems to have been formed for the avowed purpose of coining copper, providing Congress, or any of the State Legislatures, enacted a law allowing individuals to coin money. As the object was to make money, a small capital was considered sufficient for the undertaking. On the 7th of June following that firm formed a copartnership with one then existing, which consisted of four partners,—Reuben Harman, Esq., William Coley, of Bennington Co., Vt., Elias Jackson, of Litchfield Co., Conn., and Daniel Van Voorhis, goldsmith, of the city of New York,—for a term of eight years from the first of the following July, that being the limitation of an act of the Legislature of Vermont to said Harman for the coining of copper.

At Machin's mills perhaps a thousand pounds of copper was manufactured, as appears by his papers, in the year 1789, previous to which time little seems to have been done. The business appears to have been discontinued in 1790, for in a letter from J. F. Atlee to Mr. Machin, dated Vergennes, Oct. 14, 1790, he expresses a wish that the concern might arrive at a settlement on equitable terms, and compromise their matters without a tedious and expensive lawsuit. —Simms' "History of Schoharie County," 596.

Capt. Machin died at Charleston, Schoharie Co., April 3, 1816, aged seventy-two years. During the Revolution, he superintended the construction of the chain and other obstructions to the navigation of Hudson's River, and rendered other important service. He settled in Newburgh at the close of the war, and subsequently removed to Schoharie County. "In the camp and in retirement his qualifications were holden in very high consideration."

Creeks. Though sometimes called Chambers' Creek, from the fact of its having been the north bounds in part of the patent to Chambers and Sutherland, its Indian name now prevails. Its water-power is very durable, and has been largely employed from an early period. The question of the right of the creek to be regarded as the natural outlet of the lake was made a subject of legal controversy in 1825, it being assumed by the contestants that that outlet was a small stream further west; but this assumption was not sustained by the court.

FOSTERTOWN CREEK.

This stream rises in Ulster County, flows through Fostertown and Gidneytown, and empties into the Quassaick Creek. At Gidneytown it takes the name of Gidneytown Creek.

TENT-STONE MEADOW CREEK.

This creek rises in a large swamp in Ulster County, known many years ago as the Tent-Stone Meadow. It flows through Rossville, and empties into the Quassaick at the powder-mills. The name of the creek is given as recorded on a map of the town made by W. W. Sackett, in 1798, now on record in the office of the Secretary of State, Albany.

BUSHFIELD'S CREEK.

This creek has its source in a swamp in the town of Plattekill, known as the Stone Dam Meadow from the fact that across the south end of the swamp is a stone dam about one hundred and fifty yards long, three feet high, regularly built and now in good preservation. Neither the period at which it was erected, nor by whom it was built, are known.* The creek issues through a sluiceway in this dam and empties into Orange Lake. Its original name was Beaver Dam Creek; the present name was given in honor of James W. Bushfield.

DENTON'S CREEK.

A small stream having its source west of Middlehope and flowing south and east to the Hudson south of Balmville. It formerly furnished power for a lathe near the public highway, and also for the grist-mill of Nehemiah Denton (from whom its name was given), near its confluence with the Hudson. On the map of survey in 1717 it is called Brandywine Creek, a name suggestive of the "tipple" of the surveyor rather than of the quality of the water.

POWELLTON BROOK.

This is the outlet of Powellton Spring. It flows to the Hudson a short distance north of North Street.

RACCOON HILL.

This is north of King's Hill, and is so called from its having been infested with raccoons.

* The early settlers attributed the erection of this dam to the beavers. The work is certainly not beyond the skill of these ingenious animals.

ACKER'S CREEK.

A small stream which runs through the northern part of the town for a short distance and joins the Hudson in the town of Marlborough. It was formerly called Jew's Creek, from a Mr. Gomoze, a Jew, who held a portion of the Harrison Patent. The present name is a memorial of Wolvert Acker, who had a grist-mill and a saw-mill upon it.

TROUT BROOK.

This brook flows north through Middlehope and empties into Acker's Creek.

POLL ROSE'S POND.

A sheet of water on Broadway (Western Avenue) near the New Mills; more recently called Taggart's Pond. The outlet at the south end formerly furnished power for a turning-lathe. The original name was from a woman who lived many years at the head of the pond on the avenue.

SPRINGS.

Powellton Spring is on the Powell estate, north of North Street. Ledyard's Spring is on the Ledyard farm, west of New Mills. Cold Spring is south of Washington Street, near the public school. The latter was for some years the principal source of supply of water for the village, and the former were examined in connection with the increase of the supply in 1852.

FITZPATRICK'S POND.

This pond, known to some extent as Carpenter's Pond, is west of Powell Avenue and north of Gidney Avenue. It originally covered about half an acre.

KING'S HILL.

An eminence in the northwest part of the town, over the crown of which passes the boundary line between the towns of Newburgh and Montgomery. The name is derived from a Mr. King, an old settler, whose descendants still reside in the town.

CRONOMER'S HILL.

This is about three miles northwest of the city, and is so called from having been the residence of an Indian named Cronomer, prior to the Revolution. One of the lots on the farm late of J. Cornish is still known as "the hut lot," where Cronomer had his cabin. Tradition affirms that Cronomer once pointed out a deposit of lead-ore on this hill, and that, during the Revolution, it was examined with a view to opening it; but where it was located does not appear.

LIMESTONE HILL.

A ridge of limestone about two miles northwest of the city of Newburgh.

MUCHATTOES HILL.

This extends from the southern part of the town into New Windsor. The Newburgh almshouse is situated on the northeastern spur, and along its eastern base are several finely-cultivated farms and vineyards. The northeast front of the hill is almost perpendicular, while the west side is smooth and of gentle declivity. It was known for many years as Snake Hill, from the fact of its being infested with snakes at the early settlement of the town.

WASHINGTON'S HEADQUARTERS.

The building now so generally known as "Washington's Headquarters at Newburgh" is situated on Liberty Street, in the south part of the city. It is constructed of rough stone; is one story high, fifty-six feet front by forty-six feet in depth, and is located on what was originally lot No. 2 of the German Patent. The title to the lot was vested, by the patent referred to, in Herman Schone-man, a native of the Palatinate of Germany, who sold, in 1721, to James Alexander, who subsequently sold to Alexander Col-den and Burger Meynders, by whom the property was conveyed by Jonathan Hasbrouck. The southeast corner of the building, more particularly shown by the walls and the timbers of the roof remaining in the attic, is the oldest portion, but by whom erected is not positively known. The northeast corner was erected by Hasbrouck in 1750, and the west half was added by him in 1770, and one roof thrown over the whole. The dates of the additions are cut upon stones in the walls. The building was made the headquarters of Washington in the spring of 1782, and remained in his occupation until Aug. 18, 1783. The general incidents occurring during that period have already been narrated. As is shown by the account which he rendered to the government, Washington maintained here his own household.* While in his occupation the large room, which is entered from the piazza on the east, known "as the room with seven doors and one window," was the dining- and sitting-room; the northeast room was Washington's bedroom, and the room immediately adjoining on the left his private office.† The family room was that in the southeast; the kitchen was the southwest room; the parlor the northwest room, and between the latter and the former was the store-room,‡ hall, and staircase. The property remained in the Hasbrouck family until 1849, when the title became vested in the people of the State under the foreclosure of a mortgage given to the commissioners to loan certain moneys of the United States. By act of the Legislature, passed April 10, 1850, it was placed in the care of the board of trustees of the village of Newburgh, to be preserved as nearly as possible as it was at the time of its occupation by Washington. The building was at once restored, by a committee appointed by the board of trustees, and the place formally dedicated on the 4th of July, 1850. The care of the property passed to the city authorities, by the city charter, where it remained until 1874, when the Legislature appointed,

* No part of the building was occupied by the Hasbroucks, as has generally been supposed, during Washington's residence.

† Tradition has assigned this room to Hamilton; but it is now conclusively known that that officer was not a member of Washington's staff at the time, nor even a visitant.

by act of May 11th, a board of trustees to hold and maintain it. A large, and in some departments valuable, collection of manuscripts and relics is now deposited in the building, for which, as well as for the initiatory steps by which the State authorities were induced to purchase the property, the public are mainly indebted to the late Enoch Carter, although many articles of value have been added by other parties, and especially by the State and the Federal authorities.* The trees now growing were planted by residents of Newburgh and vicinity.

THE VALE.

Originally a beautiful valley extending up the Quassaick Creek for half a mile from its mouth. A few years ago it was a favorite resort, and frequently visited by strangers, but is now mainly occupied by the Branch Railroad and the Pennsylvania Coal Company. There is a tradition that, in the house once occupied by Mr. Richard Trimble, and more recently by Mr. Hale, Mr. Roe, and others, but which was known in the days of the Revolution as Ettrick Grove, an attempt was made to betray Washington, whose headquarters were then at the Ellison House, New Windsor. Ettrick Grove was then occupied by Col. Ettrick, a zealous Tory. The story goes that Washington had accepted an invitation to dine with Col. Ettrick, who had, meanwhile, made arrangements with a company of Tories to take him prisoner. Washington, warned of the design, ordered a detachment of the life-guard, dressed in the English uniform, to be on the ground before the arrival of the Tories. When this detachment made its appearance, Washington's host, supposing them to be his Tory friends, stepped up to him and accosted him as his prisoner. Washington looked at his troops for a moment and replied, "I believe not, sir, but you are mine." The treacherous host was spared his life, through the intercession of his daughter, who had betrayed her father's intention, and he was permitted to remove to Nova Scotia. The story has some elements of probability.

PUBLIC STOCKS.

By colonial law, minor offenses were punished by confinement in the public stocks, or by public whipping, and each town and precinct had its whipping-post and stocks. Those erected in Newburgh were in Water Street, opposite the Highland Bank, and were standing after the commencement of the present century. A map of the property of Thomas Colden, made in 1791, shows the location. The stocks consisted of a frame resembling a heavy square box, on the edge of which were seats. The bar for confining the feet of prisoners was about fourteen feet in length, and was secured by heavy padlocks. Near the centre of the frame stood the whipping-post, which was some ten feet high, with arms placed in an angular position. The stocks were probably removed in 1810 or '12.

NEWBURGH MARKET.

The act incorporating the village gave the board of trustees power to establish a market and lease the stands, and a building for that purpose was erected at the foot of Third, now the west line of Front Street. The first leasing of stands occurred in 1811, when Jas. Lyon, Ed. Griswold, Chas. Birdsall, and David Tice were licensed as butchers,—Birdsall and Griswold occupying two stands each. Wm. Mathewson also occupied one for several years. The building was of wood, one story high, and open as represented in the engraving. Third Street divided and ran on the north and south sides of the market to the ferry and public landing. During the winters, when the stands were not occupied, the lads had merry times in riding down "McAuley's Hill," as Third Street was called, and shooting through the market. The building was removed in 1822 or '23, and about the same time a new market of improved architecture was erected by John Neely, on the north side of Third Street, east of Water. The amended charter of 1836 relieved the trustees from the duty of providing a market building, and that then in use was removed or converted to other use.

HAY-SCALES.

The Hay-scales were a landmark on Western Avenue for over a quarter of a century. They were erected in 1806, and by the subsequent opening of Grand Street were left standing on a small triangle at the junction of that street and the avenue, where they remained in use until Jan. 8, 1838, when they were prostrated during a remarkably heavy gale of wind. The scales were of peculiar construction, and were composed of a beam from which chains were suspended for raising the teams which were to be weighed. The north end was inclosed for a weighing-room, and the roof was extended south to cover the beam. It will be inferred, of course, that the structure was the approved pattern of the times; platform scales were then unknown.

V.—CENSUS RETURNS.

Although enumerations of the inhabitants of the several precincts of New York were made at an early period, the returns are very imperfect. The early tax and military rolls, which have been given elsewhere, supply more correct information. An enumeration of the inhabitants of the precinct was taken in 1782, pursuant to an act of the Provincial Convention entitled "An act for taking the number of white inhabitants within this State," passed March 20th of that year. It gave a population to Newburgh of 1487, divided as follows: Males under 16, 429; over 16 and under 60, 252; over 60, 37. Females under 16, 368; over 16, 371. Number of persons making Newburgh their place of abode "by reason of the invasion of the enemy," 154, viz.: Males under 16, 36; over 16 and under 60, 26; over 60, 6. Females under 16, 42; over 16, 44.

* The State contributed trophy and other guns from the old arsenal. Thirty trophy guns were added by order of Hon. W. W. Belknap in 1873.

In 1785 the precinct was divided into road districts, and a record made of the persons assessed for highway labor. This list embraces three hundred and nineteen names. In addition to these general facts, the following list of persons assessed for highway labor in 1785 is of value:

The several censuses taken since 1782 exhibit the following results:

Year.	Population.	Increase.	Year.	Population.	Increase.
1790.....	2365	878	1840.....	8,953	1150
1800.....	3258	893	1850.....	9,001	68
1810.....	4627	1369	1860.....	11,425	2424
1814.....	5107	480	1855.....	12,773	1348

1830.....	6424	256	1870.....	20,561	3174
1835.....	7783	1359	1875.....	20,996	433

These returns include the population of the town and of the village prior to, and of the town and city since, 1865. An enumeration taken in the year 1814 gave the population of the village as 2323; in 1817, 2464; in 1821, 2877; in 1822, 3566; in 1855, 9256. The population of the city in 1870 was 17,021; in 1875, 17,322. The population of the town in 1870 was 3542; in 1875, 3538. While the increase in population has been slow, it has not receded in any decade.

VI.—NEWBURGH POOR SYSTEM.

Provision for maintaining the poor was included in the act creating the precinct of Newburgh. The first record in relation to the subject, aside from the annual election of overseers of the poor, occurs in 1769, when £30 were raised "for the support of the poor for the year ensuing." In 1771 the following rules were adopted at the annual precinct meeting, viz.:

"RULE FIRST.—Voted, as an encouragement to all succeeding Poor Masters, the more faithfully to discharge their duty in their office, by preventing all unnecessary charges and needless costs on the inhabitants of the Precinct, and also as a reward for their good services, we freely vote them the sum of £10 each, to be paid out of the money voted to be raised for the use of the poor or out of such fines as may be raised for the same use.

"RULE THIRD.—Voted, that no Poor Master for the time being shall for any cause whatever relieve or cause to be relieved, or made chargeable, any person or persons whatever that may by law be transported; or any private person who can be made accountable according to law; on pain of perjury, and making themselves liable to pay all such charges, and forfeit to the use of the poor twenty shillings and charges of prosecution, to be recovered before any of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace."

In 1775, £50 were raised for the poor; in 1777, £100; in 1778, £200. At the annual meeting in the latter year it was "Voted, That donations be collected in this Precinct to be applied to such poor whose husbands or parents were either killed or taken prisoners at Fort Montgomery."

1780.—"Voted, That £800 be raised for the poor."

1800.—"Voted, To hire a house for the accommodation of the Poor."

1805.—"Voted, That the Overseers of the Poor be authorized to contract with one or more persons to take the whole of the poor, and to put out the children as they shall see best for the town."

The increase of population made it necessary to provide larger accommodations for the poor; and in 1814 an act of the Legislature was passed, authorizing the construction of a town poor-house. The town voted (April 1st) a tax of $1500 for that purpose, and appointed John Mandevill and Benoni H. Howell overseers of the poor, to act with Andrew DeWitt, John D. Lawson, Eleazer Gidney, and Henry Butterworth, commissioners, "to direct the building of the house and to take the whole management of the same." A site was selected on the northeast corner of Water and North Streets, and a building completed in the course of the year. The system was conducted with success and economy, as the following figures from the annual report will show, viz.:

1827—House Expenses.		Receipts.
Victualing, clothing, etc.	$297.71	Tax.....	$750.00
Wood.....	81.87	On hand.....	385.41½
Doctor's bill.....	64.19	Fines, etc.....	17.81½
Keeper's wages.....	50.00
Temporary relief.....	651.75		$1153.23
	$1144.52

In 1830 the receipts were $2172.64½, and disbursements $1158.58½. In 1831, receipts, $3160.69½; disbursements, $1648.64; expenses of almshouse, $872.72½.

In 1830 the Orange County poor-house was erected, at a cost of $12,000; and on the 22d April, 1831, the Legislature authorized the sale of the Newburgh poor-house and lands, which was soon after effected, and the proceeds were applied to the payment of the county poor tax. Connection with the county system was continued until 1852, when the rapidly-increasing charges for temporary relief aroused public attention and investigation. The subject was first brought before the Board of Supervisors by Mr. Enoch Carter, supervisor, and the abuses of the county system were thoroughly exposed. At the instance of Mr. Carter, the board adopted the following resolution, viz.:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this Board of Supervisors, it would be for the mutual interest of the citizens of Newburgh and of Orange County that an application be made to the Legislature by the citizens of the town of Newburgh for the passage of an act paying to the town of Newburgh her proportionate interest in the present county house, and also empowering said town to provide a town house for her own poor, the expense of which shall be borne by the town of Newburgh."

The inhabitants of Newburgh immediately responded to the action of the Board of Supervisors by a public meeting held at Crawford's Hall, on the evening of the 11th of December, Mr. George Cornwell, chairman, and James W. Fowler, secretary. The subject was discussed by Messrs. N. Reeve, J. J. Monell, William C. Hasbrouck, and G. C. Monell; and a series of resolutions, offered by J. J. Monell, were adopted. A committee of twelve persons—viz.: Messrs. John W. Brown, David W. Bate, William C. Hasbrouck, J. J. Monell, John Beveridge, Homer Ramsdell, Gilbert C. Monell, Lewis W. Young, Chas. Drake, Enoch Carter, Charles U. Cushman, and Rev. John Forsyth—was appointed to prepare, and report at a subsequent meeting, an act to be passed by the Legislature to re-establish a town system for supporting the poor.

At a meeting held Dec. 30th, Mr. Brown, from the committee for that purpose, submitted the draft of a law, accompanied by an able report illustrating the necessity of the movement, stating, among other facts, that "Previous to 1840 the sums expended for temporary relief seldom, if ever, exceeded $1600 for the county, and $600 for this town. The Superintendent's report for 1838 exhibits this item at $1589.27 for the county, of which $560.90 was for the town of Newburgh. The report for 1839 exhibits the same item at $1658.45 for the county, of which $585.90 was for the town of Newburgh. This item of expenditure has grown with a steadily and rapid growth, until we find it set down in the Superintendent's report for the year 1852 at $12,802.13 for the county, of which $6451.90 is set down as expended in the town of Newburgh. But it is due to the occasion to say, that notwithstanding the figures of this report and the known integrity of its authors, the committee have good authority for saying that the expenditure for temporary relief for the last year was little short of $14,000 for the county, and $8000 for the town of Newburgh."

The act applied for passed the Legislature March 23, 1853. By its terms the town of Newburgh was established as a separate and distinct poor district, and a corporation created by the name of "the Commissioners of the Almshouse of the Town of Newburgh." The commissioners named in the act, viz.: Henry Wickoff, David W. Bate, David H. Barclay, George Gearn, Alfred Post, and Eugene A. Brewster, immediately entered upon the discharge of their duties, and a farm was purchased and the erection of suitable buildings commenced under contract with Mr. John Little, Jr. The building was completed and opened Dec. 10, 1853, and was occupied by six persons from the town of Newburgh, and forty-nine (exclusive of insane) from the county poor-house, being the number apportioned to Newburgh under the act of separation. By the act incorporating the city (1865), the town and the city are united in the system.

The operation of the system during the first fifteen years of its existence is stated in the fifteenth annual report of the commissioners, from which it appears that during that period the receipts from all sources were $152,332.87, and the expenses, including buildings, etc., $149,365.87; average yearly cost by tax, $4558.77; average yearly cost of each pauper, $53.82—weekly, $1.03; estimated saving, as compared with the county system, in fifteen years, $108,378.93.

VII.—TURNPIKES AND PLANK-ROADS.

The organizations of the Newburgh and Cohecton, Newburgh and New Windsor, Newburgh and Sullivan, Newburgh and Plattekill, and the Snake Hill Turnpike Companies have already been referred to.* In the autumn of 1849 the construction of a plank-road from Newburgh to Ellenville was proposed. In January (14th), 1850, a meeting of citizens was held at the United States Hotel,—Homer Ramsdell, president, and Robert Proudfit, Jr., secretary,—and on motion of David Crawford a committee of twenty-five was appointed "to go out to Ellenville, in company with engineers, and inquire into the practicability of constructing a plank-road thither, and the best route for the same." The committee employed Mr. W. A. Perkins, engineer, to make a survey of the route, who, on March 13th, submitted a report at a public meeting. The report presented a survey of three routes, southern, northern, and middle, with an estimate of the cost of each; and, on motion, it was resolved that "measures be taken to organize a company for the construction of a plank-road to Ellenville, with a capital of $100,000." Committees were appointed to ascertain the amount of stock that would be subscribed, and the land damages claimed, by persons residing on each of the proposed routes. On March 24th a meeting of subscribers to the stock of the "Newburgh and Ellenville Plank-road Company" was held at the United States Hotel,—Homer Ramsdell, president, and E. Pitts, secretary,—and, on motion, proceeded to the election of nine directors, when the following-named gentlemen were chosen:

Newburgh, Homer Ramsdell, E. W. Farrington, David Crawford, Thornton M. Niven, William Fullerton; Ulsterville, A. R. Taylor; Walden, A. F. Schofield; Shawangunk, James G. Graham; Bruynswick, Richard Jackson.

At a subsequent meeting of the directors, Homer Ramsdell was elected president; E. W. Farrington, vice-president; T. M. Niven, secretary; and David Moore, treasurer. At a meeting of the directors, held April 5th, it was resolved to adopt the southern route; and at a meeting on the 11th, it was agreed to put the work under contract as soon as $100,000 should be subscribed.

Immediately after this action, those in favor of a northern route organized the "Newburgh and Shawangunk Plank-road Company," and, at a meeting held April 18th, elected Robert A. Forsyth, Cornelius C. Smith, John B. Jamison, Odell S. Hathaway, Richard A. Southwick, Jacob V. B. Fowler, of Newburgh, and James G. Graham, S. M. Bruyn, and Jas. N. Mitchell, of Shawangunk, directors; Jacob V. B. Fowler was elected president; Robert A. Forsyth, treasurer; and R. A. Southwick, secretary.

Both companies were organized under the general statute of May 7, 1847, and the roads were completed in December, 1851.† The capital stock of the Ellenville road, paid in, was $79,770. To complete the work and pay existing indebtedness, the Legislature passed an act authorizing the issue of $44,000 in preferred stock, and fixing the whole capital at $124,000. The capital stock of the Newburgh and Shawangunk road, paid in, was $30,000. Both roads were subsequently converted into turnpikes.

VIII.—BANKS.

Bank of Newburgh.—The Bank of Newburgh was incorporated by act of the Legislature, passed March 22, 1811, on the petition of Jacob Powell, John Mc-Aulay, Chancey Belknap, and Jonathan Fisk. The capital named was $120,000, in shares of $50 each; and the State reserved the right to subscribe to the stock any amount not exceeding one thousand shares. The first directors were Isaac Belknap, Jr., Jacob Powell, Selah Reeve, Chancey Belknap, Freegift Tuthill, Leonard Carpenter, Samuel S. Seward, Jonathan Hedges, Francis Crawford, James Hamilton, John D. Lawson, and Richard Trimble, elected by the stockholders; and William Ross and Jonathan Fisk appointed on the part of the State. The stock was all taken soon after the passage of the act of incorporation; and on June 15th the corner-stone of the present banking-house was laid. The building was completed and the bank was opened for business on September 9th.

The charter of 1811 continued until 1830, when the stock held by the State was withdrawn, the bank was reorganized under the safety fund law, and the capital increased to $140,000. In 1851 the capital was further increased to $200,000, at which time the bank was reorganized under the general banking law. In September, 1852, the capital was increased to $300,000.

The first president of the bank was Isaac Belknap, Jr., and the first cashier, John S. Hunn. Wm. Walsh succeeded Mr. Belknap in 1827, and served until his death in 1839, when John Chambers was elected. Mr. Chambers served until his death in 1854, when George W. Kerr was elected. Mr. Hunn was succeeded in the cashiership by Frederick W. Farnum; Mr. Farnum by Wm. M. Vermilyea; Mr. Vermilyea by Levi Dodge; Mr. Dodge, in 1836, by George W. Kerr; and Mr. Kerr, in 1854, by Francis Scott. On July 5, 1864, the bank was organized as a national bank,—George W. Kerr, president, and John J. S. McCroskery, cashier,—and its capital raised to $800,000.

WILLIAM L. F. WARREN was for many years a director in the Bank of Newburgh and also in the Savings-Bank. The Warren family are supposed to be of Norman descent, and were among the first settlers of New England. Richard Warren, who was borne to our shores by the historic "Mayflower," located at Plymouth. John Warren came to America about 1630, and settled at Watertown, Mass. Another John Warren settled at Salem in 1630. Peter Warren settled at Salem, and from him descended Gen. Joseph Warren, of Bunker Hill fame.

The Newburgh branch of the family, represented by the subject of this memoir, are descendants of the John Warren who settled at Watertown. The earliest mention of the name at Newburgh is found on the records of the First Presbyterian Church, where, under date of July 23, 1783, the marriage of "John Warren, of Mass., and Elizabeth Belknap, of Newburgh," is recorded. This John Warren, the grandfather of our subject, was the youngest son of Josiah and Hephzibah (Hobbs) Warren, and being left an orphan during his infancy, was raised by his Aunt Beulah, wife of John Hobbs, of Brookfield, Mass. At the age of nineteen he joined the patriot army against the mother-country, and remained in active service throughout the Revolutionary war. He was engaged in several of the most important battles of that trying struggle, and for his bravery at Bunker Hill and Monmouth received the thanks of his commanding officers, and was subsequently raised to the rank of captain. He came with the Massachusetts line to the encampment at New Windsor, and while there became acquainted with Miss Belknap, a lady of rare intelligence and personal beauty, to whom he was married at the date given above. After the close of the war he engaged in business in Newburgh for some time, but subsequently removed to Troy, and thence to Saratoga Springs, where he died on Christmas Day in the year 1823. His wife died June 21, 1837. The children were John H., born 1786, died at Montezuma, N. Y., 1823; Cynthia M., born Aug. 2, 1788, married Miles Beach, of Saratoga Springs; Stephen R., born November, 1790; William L. F., born Feb. 4, 1793; Elizabeth B., born 1795, married Dr. R. R. Davis, of Syracuse; Caroline S., born 1798, married Benjamin Carpenter, of Newburgh; and Mary A., born 1800, married James H. Darrow, of Saratoga Springs.

William L. F. Warren, only son of John H. and Fanny (Kellogg) Warren, was born at Marcellus, N. Y., July 3, 1811. He began life in Newburgh as a clerk in the employ of his uncle, Benjamin Carpenter, of whose family he became an inmate when a mere lad. He early learned correct business habits, and thoroughly familiarized himself with the principles of trade and commerce, and in 1837 became a member of the firm of B. Carpenter & Co., with which he was connected until its dissolution. A man of modest and retiring temperament, he confined himself strictly to the prosecution of private business, and engaged but little in the strife and turmoil of political life. He was actively associated throughout his career with the progressive movements of his day, and was prominent in many public and private enterprises. He was a man of positive convictions, and firm in support of what he thought to be right. He filled for several terms, and with marked ability, the office of president of the board of trustees of Newburgh; was a member of the board of water commissioners, and also of the board of almshouse commissioners; was a director of the National Bank of Newburgh from its organization until his death, a director of the Warwick Valley Railroad, and a member of the board of trustees of the Newburgh Savings-Bank. He sustained throughout a long business career in Newburgh a reputation for integrity and uprightness which any one might justly envy him, was prompt in the discharge of every duty, a liberal contributor to church and kindred interests, and left behind him at his death the recollection of virtues that will never be forgotten so long as the incense of memory burns on the altars of hearts that loved him. He married Catharine, daughter of John H. Walsh, and died Oct. 22, 1879.

After the demise of Mr. Warren appropriate resolutions were passed by the institutions with which he had been connected, from which we make a few extracts, as best showing the character of the man and the place which he filled in the hearts of the people among whom he passed so many years of his life.

At a special meeting of the board of directors of the National Bank of Newburgh, held Oct. 23, 1879, the following, among other resolutions, were passed :

"Resolved, That in meeting to pay our tribute of respect to the memory of our late associate, William L. F. Warren, a director of this bank ever since its organization, and for many years prominently connected with the commercial and municipal affairs of this community, we feel our inability suitably to express our profound sorrow and deep sense of the loss we, as individuals and as a board, have sustained by his death.

"Resolved, That in the character of Mr. Warren a strict integrity, a firm fidelity to trusts, a sound judgment, and a steady energy in the discharge of duty, which all who knew him recognized, were united with a genuine kindness of heart which those who knew him best appreciated most.

"Resolved, That the ability, intelligence, and punctuality with which Mr. Warren discharged his duties as a member of this board, and his steady devotion to the best interests of the institution we represent, will be held by his surviving associates in honored and lasting remembrance."

Similar resolutions were passed by the board of directors of the Warwick Valley Railroad, in which cheerful and sincere testimony is borne to Mr. Warren's "wise counsels," "eminent financial abilities," "unfailing devotion to the true interests of the company," "his kindly and social nature," and "strict integrity" in the performance of "the varied duties of trust committed to his care."

Branch Bank of Newburgh.—In 1818 the directors of the Bank of Newburgh determined to establish a branch at Ithaca; the arrangements for which were perfected, and the institution went into operation on February 15, 1820, under the following officers: Luther Gore, president; Charles W. Connor, cashier; Benj. Johnson, Joseph Benjamin, Levi Leonard, Calvin Burr, Herman Camp, and Charles A. Morrell, directors. The branch continued in operation until 1830, when, on the expiration of the old charter, it was discontinued.

Highland Bank.—In 1833 application was made to the Legislature to incorporate the Highland Bank; but the bill was lost in the Senate. This result was followed by a meeting of citizens at the Mansion House, April 20, 1833, "to take into consideration such measures as might be deemed necessary to obtain an increase of the banking capital of Newburgh." Of this meeting Selah Reeve was chosen president; Daniel Farrington and Robert Lawson, vice-presidents; and Abraham M. Smith and Aaron Belknap, secretaries. After the passage of a resolution regretting the defeat of the bill, committees were appointed to renew and circulate petitions to the next Legislature. The second application was successful; the charter passed the Legislature April 26, 1834.

The charter capital of the bank was $200,000. Nathaniel Jones, Egbert Jansen, Robert Fowler, Nathaniel P. Hill, John Forsyth, James Belknap, Aaron Noyes, Noah Matthewson, and Christopher Reeve were appointed commissioners to receive stock subscriptions. In a few weeks nearly double the capital required was subscribed, and a pro rata distribution of the stock became necessary.

The bank was organized July 21, 1834, under the following officers: Directors, Gilbert O. Fowler, Samuel Williams, Jackson Oakley, Thomas Powell, Charles Borland, Jr., Daniel Farrington, Benj. H. Mace, James Belknap, Benj. Carpenter, Nathaniel Jones, Abm. Vail, Robert Fowler; Gilbert O. Fowler, president, and James Belknap, cashier. Mr. Belknap subsequently resigned, and Thos. C. Ring was elected. Mr. Ring resigned in 1838, and Robert Burnet held the office until his death in 1840, when (May 10th) Alfred Post was elected. Mr. Fowler served as president until his death, when George Cornwell was elected. On the death of Mr. Cornwell (November, 1867), Mr. Post was elected president and M. C. Belknap, cashier. Directors in 1867: Alfred Post, John W. Brown, David Moore, Ed. R. Johnes, Jas. W. Taylor, Peter V. B. Fowler, Robt. Denniston, Thaddeus Hait, John Lomas, Walter S. Vail, George A. Elliott.

The capital of the bank was increased to $350,000 ($100,000 from surplus, and $50,000 new stock), Jan. 1, 1865. It was organized as a national bank April 22, 1865, and its capital increased to $450,000.

Powell Bank.—The Powell Bank was organized Dec. 12, 1838, as an associated bank, with a capital of $135,000. The first directors and officers were: Directors, Thomas Powell, Samuel Williams, Daniel Farrington, Benjamin Carpenter, Charles Halstead, Homer Ramsdell, William L. F. Warren; Thomas Powell, president; Samuel Williams, vice-president; Thomas C. Ring, cashier; Nathaniel R. Belknap, teller. The capital stock was held by Hiram Bennett, A. & M. H. Belknap, Benjamin Carpenter & Co., Daniel Farrington, A. P. Johnes, H. Ramsdell, Roe & Darby, Thomas Powell, George Sneed, and Samuel Williams.

In January, 1843, the stockholders, with the exception of Thomas Powell and Homer Ramsdell, withdrew their stock, and the institution became an individual bank, with a capital of $110,000,—Thomas Powell, president; Homer Ramsdell, vice-president; and T. C. Ring, cashier. Messrs. Powell and Ramsdell subsequently increased the capital to $175,000. The bank was discontinued in 1857.

Quassaick Bank.—The organization of the Quassaick Bank was based on the assumed necessity for a larger banking capital to accommodate the business of the village. The directors of the Bank of Newburgh endeavored to supply this want by increasing the capital stock of that institution $100,000; but this addition proved inadequate to the demand. On Thursday evening, Sept. 4, 1851, a meeting of citizens was held at the Orange Hotel for the purpose of considering the subject. David Crawford was chosen chairman, and O. M. Smith secretary. After addresses by William Fullerton, W. E. Warren, S. W. Eager, T. M. Niven, and others, a committee was appointed to name suitable persons for directors, and also to suggest a title for the institution. On the report of this committee a board of directors was nominated, and "The Quassaick Bank" adopted as the title.

On March 31, 1852, the bank was formally organized by the adoption of articles of association, and commenced business with a capital of $130,000 in the spring of that year. The first officers were: Directors, E. W. Farrington, J. I. Crawford, I. R. Carpenter, Asa Sterling, Isaiah Townsend, Charles U. Cushman, John Jamison, W. K. Mailler, James Patton, John J. Monell. A vacancy in the board was filled at the ensuing election in May by the election of David Moore. At the organization of the bank E. W. Farrington was chosen president, Jonathan N. Weed, cashier, and W. H. Gerard, teller. D. Gillis Leonard succeeded Mr. Farrington in May, 1862, and Odell S. Hathaway was elected in September, 1864, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Leonard in May of that year. James N. Dickey was elected teller in 1863. The capital of the bank was increased to $200,000, September, 1852; and to $300,000, March, 1854. It was organized as a national bank June 3, 1865, the capital remaining unchanged. Isaac K. Oakley is now (1880) president, and Jonathan N. Weed, cashier.

Newburgh Savings-Bank.—By act of the Legislature passed April 13, 1852, E. W. Farrington, John J. Monell, Charles U. Cushman, Robert L. Case, Robert A. Forsyth, Richard A. Southwick, Odell S. Hathaway, Gilbert C. Monell, David H. Barclay, Adam Lilburn, Samuel W. Eager, Cornelius C. Smith, Robert Sterling, Robert D. Kemp, Charles Drake, David Moore, John H. Waters, James I. Crawford, James Patton, William K. Mailler, Benjamin Carpenter, T. M. Niven, and their successors were constituted "a body corporate and politic, by the name of The Newburgh Savings-Bank." The bank commenced business Jan. 1, 1853, with the following officers, viz.: Robert L. Case, president; O. S. Hathaway and E. W. Farrington, vice-presidents; Charles U. Cushman, secretary and treasurer. In 1854, E. W. Farrington was elected president; Charles Halstead, Jr., treasurer; G. C. Monell, secretary. In 1858, Daniel B. St. John, president; Thomas C. Ring, treasurer; J. R. Wiltsie, secretary. These officers were continued until 1872, when the Rev. John Forsyth was elected president. He was succeeded by J. DeWitt Walsh, who served until January, 1873, when Mr. St. John was re-elected, and Mr. Ring entered upon his seventeenth year as treasurer. The deposits on July 1, 1859, were $124,000; July 1, 1875, $2,467,700.

In the summer of 1866 the directors commenced the erection of the building now occupied by the bank,—Vaux, Withers & Co., architects; Franklin Gerard, mason; McClung & Deyo, carpenters. It was completed in 1868, and occupied by the bank in October of that year. Its cost was about $130,000, which was paid from the earnings of the bank.

THOMAS C. RING.—Benjamin Ring, grandfather of Thomas C. Ring, was born in Wales, and emigrated to Pennsylvania, where he erected mills on the Brandywine. He married Rachel James. Their children were eight in number.

The battle of Brandywine was fought partly on the farm of Benjamin Ring, whose house was headquarters for Washington and staff, Lafayette, Pulaski, Knox, and others, when making themselves acquainted with the surrounding country and deciding on the battle-ground.

Although Benjamin Ring was a Quaker, and on that account prevented from taking an active part in the war, it was well known that he was a strong sympathizer with the patriot cause. Just before the battle an American spy informed him that it would be unsafe for his family to remain, that they had better leave, taking with them what valuables they could carry.

His wife, daughters, and young son, who drove, hastily left in a carriage, carrying with them $900 in gold, a quantity of silver plate, and other articles, in all amounting to quite a large sum, which, the roads becoming blocked by troops, they were obliged to abandon, and made their escape across the fields.

Benjamin Ring, with two companions, joined them on horseback, and after seeing them to a place of safety returned to Washington, who had just heard that his retreat was likely to be cut off. Hearing the conversation, he rode up to Washington and pointed out a way by taking which he would cut off nearly two miles. He said that he would pilot them, but being stout and advanced in years, would not be so suitable as his friend, William Harvey, a young man and a fine horseman, and one in whom the general could feel every confidence. By hard riding across fields and over fences the balance of the army was rejoined and the retreat made in safety.

Benjamin Ring's house, which was of stone, was used as a fort alternately by the contending parties. The roof was riddled with grape-shot, one six-pounder going through the gable, and there was not a place on the walls large enough to lay one's hand that did not bear a mark. Everything inside the house was destroyed, the farm was cleared of cattle, and not a fence left on the place.

Nathaniel Ring, son of Benjamin, was born in 1767, and emigrated to Cornwall, N. Y., at an early day. He was a millwright by trade, and captain of a sloop between New York and Cornwall for a score of years. His wife was Martha, daughter of Hon. Jeremiah Clark, of Cornwall, to whom were born seven children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the sixth. Nathaniel Ring died in 1850, and his wife in 1854.

The maternal grandfather of Thomas C. Ring, Jeremiah Clark, was born in Bedford, Westchester Co., N. Y., in 1730. He married Martha Newman on Nov. 27, 1752; was elected a ruling elder of New Windsor Church July 6, 1783, and died May 30, 1808. He was a man of much influence and prominence, and a firm friend of liberty and national union. He passed the greater part of his life at Cornwall. He was a member of the first Provincial Congress from Orange County in 1775, of the second Provincial Congress in 1775 and 1776, and of the fourth Provincial Congress and Representative Convention in 1776 and 1777, at the last session of which the first constitution of the State of New York was formed, at Kingston, April 20, 1777. He was member of Assembly of New York from Orange County, beginning with the first Assembly of the State, which met at Kingston Sept. 1, 1777, and of the Assemblies of 1778-79, 1780-81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89. He also filled the offices of sheriff and lay judge of Orange County.

Thomas C. Ring was born at Cornwall, Orange Co., on Oct. 21, 1804. His early life was passed at home, where he enjoyed the advantages of a common-school education. At the age of thirteen he left the protecting care of his parents, and with no capital other than strong hands and an industrious and ambitious spirit started out to encounter the duties of life. He commenced as a clerk in the employ of Oliver G. Burton, at West Point, who kept a general store and supplied all varieties of goods to the military academy at that point. After three years Mr. Burton died, and Mr. Ring returned to the parental roof for the brief period of four months, during which time he assisted his father in his brickyard.

In 1821 he removed to Newburgh, and entered the employ of Matthias G. Miller, a general trader at that place, as a clerk. The firm subsequently changed to Miller & Smith, and besides carrying on a general mercantile business, ran a sloop between Newburgh and New York, known as the "Neptune." This vessel capsized near the Highlands in the year 1822, and between twenty and thirty persons were drowned. About 1825 Mr. Ring was appointed a clerk in the bank of Newburgh, and filled that position for two years. In 1831 he became clerk on board of the steamboat "Albany," plying between New York and Albany. In 1832, owing to the prevalence of the cholera in New York, the trips of that vessel were discontinued for one season, during which period Mr. Ring was clerk on board of the "New Philadelphia," running between the same ports. In 1833 he returned to his former position on the "Albany," where he remained until the fall of 1834. At that time he was appointed cashier of the Highland Bank of Newburgh, and acted in that capacity until 1838, when he resigned. In 1839 he became the cashier of the Towell Bank of Newburgh, and remained in that connection until 1864, the bank, however, commencing measures for voluntary liquidation in 1857. In 1858 Mr. Ring was appointed treasurer of the Newburgh Savings-Bank, a position that he has since filled with singular fidelity and success. From 1858 to 1864 he was superintendent of the ferry running between Newburgh and Fishkill.

Mr. Ring is recognized as one of the old, substantial citizens of Newburgh, and is held in high esteem by all classes of people. Starting out in life with small means and at a tender age, he has, by close application to duty and industrious and regular habits, achieved success in the various undertakings in which he has engaged, and won for himself the reputation of an upright and honorable man. When he first entered the Newburgh Savings-Bank the total deposits at that institution aggregated about $28,000. This amount, owing to careful management, judicious investment, and the confidence of the public, has since regularly increased, until on March 1, 1881, the deposits at the bank amount to $3,154,540, and the loans to $3,174,442.

The life of Mr. Ring has been passed in a quiet and unostentatious manner, and free from the turmoil and confusion of political strife. He has been actively identified with the social, educational, and material development of Newburgh, and contributed to the encouragement and sustenance of its institutions. He was treasurer of the village of Newburgh from 1854 to 1864; one of the members of the first board of education under the State law; secretary of the Newburgh Gas-light Company from 1867 to 1881; is the president of the Newburgh and Cohecton and of the Newburgh and New Windsor Turnpike Companies, and has been treasurer of Cedar Hill Cemetery since its organization in 1870. He has acted as executor of a large number of estates, and filled other fiduciary positions in a correct and faithful manner. In 1826 he was a member of a uniformed company of the State militia, under Capt. John D. Phillips, and is the last survivor of the forty-five members of the company at that date. In 1823 he participated in the reception of Gen. Lafayette, upon the visit of that distinguished friend of America to this country. Great changes have occurred in Newburgh since Mr. Ring's residence there, and but few are left to tell the story of its social and material life sixty years ago with so much distinctness and accuracy as himself. He loves a dog and gun, is physically well preserved, his memory is strong, and he is still fulfilling the duties of life in a faithful and successful manner. He is an attendant upon the ministrations of St. George's Episcopal Church, of which he has been one of the vestrymen.

Mr. Ring has been twice married,—first, in 1832, to Miss Mary Ann Osborne, who died, leaving no children, Dec. 28, 1833, in her twenty-fifth year; and secondly to Miss Catharine Speir, in 1837. She was born July 31, 1810, and died Sept. 6, 1869. Of this union were born A. Smith Ring, ex-city treasurer of Newburgh, and the treasurer of the Fireman's Fund; Anna R., deceased, wife of Munson G. Muir; and Clara Belknap, who died in infancy.

JOHN RAPELYE WILTSEE.—Hendrick Martensen Wiltsee, the ancestor of the many families of that name in America, emigrated from Copenhagen, in Denmark, early in the sixteenth century. He performed active service in the Esopus war in 1663, was captured and reported killed by the Indians, but, effecting his escape, settled on a farm at Hell Gate, L. I. He was married in 1660, and had three sons,—Martin, Hendrick, and Myndert. From Martin, fourth in degree from Hendrick Martensen Wiltsee, and his wife, Jane Suydam, whom he married in 1733, are descended the Fishkill Landing Wiltseys. The family has been numerous and prominently represented in Dutchess County since its first settlement, having emigrated from Long Island in 1734, locating at the Landing and at Sylvan Lake, and owning two tracts of land aggregating thirteen hundred acres. Johannes Wiltsee was commissioned by William Tryon, Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the province of New York, on Feb. 10, 1773, as first lieutenant in Capt. Joseph Horton's company of foot, attached to Col. Brinckerhoff's regiment of militia in Dutchess County. The name has been variously spelled Wiltsee, Wiltse, and Wiltzie.

John R. Wiltzie was born at Sylvan Lake, East Fishkill, Dutchess Co., June 5, 1814. His father, John C. Wiltzie, who died in 1820, at the early age of thirty-eight, was a farmer by occupation, and for a number of years prior to his demise filled the office of justice of the peace by gubernatorial appointment. His mother was Lavina Rapelye, a native of Long Island, and a representative of the ancient family of that name, who were early expelled from France, where they belonged to the nobility, because of their religious convictions, and who were among the first settlers on Long Island. The first white child born on the island was a Rapelye.

The early life of Mr. Wiltzie was passed on the paternal farm with his mother, three brothers, and two sisters, his educational advantages being limited to the instruction given at the neighboring district schools during the winter months. At the age of fifteen he began life as an apprentice with B. F. Buckingham, of Newburgh, in the trade of saddle and harness making, with whom he remained until 1835, receiving during this period, as compensation for his services, his board and washing only. On May 1, 1835, having become proficient in the trade, Mr. Wiltzie commenced business for himself at No. 8 Water Street, Newburgh, where he remained until 1861, being succeeded by his son, G. Fred Wiltzie. During a portion of the time, until 1861, Mr. Wiltzie had engaged to some extent in insurance business, and after retiring from his manufacturing enterprises he connected with his insurance matters the banking and brokerage business, which he has since continued to carry on, his being the first and only undertaking of the kind that ever existed in Newburgh. His son, Arthur V. Wiltzie, is associated with him in business, and since 1869 the firm of John R. Wiltzie & Son have occupied their present commodious rooms in the savings-bank building.

During his long residence in Newburgh, and his participation in its affairs, Mr. Wiltzie has sustained the character of a straightforward and conscientious business man, of a decidedly original and independent cast of mind, strong in his convictions, tenacious of his views, and adhering firmly to what he conceived to be just and right though he were compelled to stand alone. He has been intimately connected with various institutions of the city, and has ever felt a just pride in its material prosperity. As a manufacturer he was second to none in his line, being thoroughly educated to his trade and animated by a commendable ambition to produce the best goods to be found in the American market. On Feb. 5, 1855, he was elected a member of the board of trustees of the Newburgh Savings-Bank, and has held the office from year to year to the present time, being the oldest member of the board of record, and the secretary of the institution since 1855. He was one of the few men who took hold of the bank after its projectors had failed to make it a success, the most of whom resigned and their seats being declared vacant. The deposits at that time were only about $28,000. Mr. Wiltzie was instrumental, with others, in inducing sterling business men to join in making the bank a success, the deposits in 1881 amounting to $3,714,501. On Jan. 5, 1870, he was appointed secretary and treasurer of the Newburgh and Cohecton Turnpike Company, and has since filled that position. Though no politician, he filled the position of deputy internal revenue assessor for some years, and until the abolition of the income tax. During his term of office he had the satisfaction of having all his decisions on parts of the revenue law coming before him sustained by the department at Washington. The vigorous state of health which Mr. Wiltzie enjoys he attributes to his annual visit to the Adirondack Mountains, and his fondness for the rod and gun, which he has habitually used for the last half-century. On July 24, 1869, he was elected president of the "Hudson River Association for the Protection of Fish and Game," an office which he still fills.

In the institutions of Freemasonry and Odd-Fellowship Mr. Wiltzie has also taken an active interest. He is a member of Hudson River Lodge, No. 607, F. and A. M.; of Highland Chapter, No. 62, R. A. M.; of King Solomon's Council, No. 31, R. A. S. M., and of Hudson River Commandery, No. 35, K. T. In Odd-Fellowship he has been especially honored. He was initiated in Highland Lodge, No. 65, at Newburgh, in 1842, and passed to the highest office of the lodge during the first year of his membership. He was admitted to the Grand Lodge in April, 1843, and was appointed D. D. Grand Master in 1844, during which time he instituted several lodges. He entered the Encampment Branch of the order May 9, 1845, and passing through the chairs in Mount Hebron Encampment, No. 2, became a member of the Grand Encampment, and filled the position of D. D. Grand Patriarch for the district of Orange in 1845 and 1846. He was elected Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge in 1850, and in 1851 was elected Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Southern New York. At the annual election in August, 1852, he was unanimously elected to the position of Grand Master of that jurisdiction, filling the office with signal ability and success, and winning the confidence and esteem of the members of the order.

John R. Wiltain

Mr. Wiltsie has also taken a prominent place in musical circles in Newburgh, and was one of the original members of the Orange County Musical Society. In religious affairs he was formerly a member of the Dutch Reformed Church of Newburgh, and filled the offices of elder and deacon for many years, and of superintendent of the Sabbath-school for seven years. He is now a member of the first Presbyterian Church, and has been superintendent of the Sabbath-school for five years. As county secretary for the State, he instituted the first Sabbath-school teachers' association in Orange County. He has been a member of the board of counselors of the Home of the Friendless since the organization of that institution.

Mr. Wiltsie married for his first wife, on Oct. 17, 1837, Elmira, daughter of Robert Lawson, Esq., who died in January, 1843, leaving one son, G. Fred Wiltsie. For his second wife he married Mary Susan, daughter of Rev. Luke A. Spofford, of Massachusetts, and sister of Judge Henry M. Spofford, of Louisiana, and of A. R. Spofford, librarian to Congress. Her father was a lineal descendant of Israel Putnam. Of this union were born six children, viz.: Arthur V.; Elmira, wife of James T. Joslin, of Newburgh; Henry, now young; Harriet M., Charlotte E., and Laura S.

Bank Suspensions.—The Bank of Newburgh and the Highland Bank suspended specie payments May 12, 1837. On the morning of that day the directors and officers held a meeting and passed the following among other resolutions:

Resolved, That during the suspension of specie payments by the New York City banks, it will be prudent and necessary for the village banks to retain their specie for the use of the town and county, to be used in the ordinary business of the county.

Resolved, That the banks will, therefore, for the present, suspend paying specie for the redemption of their bills—other than such as may be offered by our citizens to obtain small sums for the prosecution of their accustomed business."

At eleven o'clock, the same day, a meeting of citizens was held at the Orange Hotel,—John Ledyard, chairman; Christopher Reeve and David Sands, secretaries. After reading the resolutions adopted by the banks, their course was approved.

In consequence of this action, the banks were able to supply specie to the public during the whole of the period of suspension. On Sept. 1, 1837, the Bank of Newburgh held $23,921 in specie, and the Highland Bank $15,450. The suspensions of 1857 were made in a similar manner. While amply prepared to redeem their circulation in gold and silver, the suspension of New York City banks rendered the same course necessary on the part of those of Newburgh. The suspension of specie payments growing out of the war of the Rebellion practically began on Dec. 30, 1861, when the New York City banks suspended, and has continued since that time, under the substitution for gold and silver of an irredeemable national currency.

IX.—INCORPORATED COMPANIES.

NEWBURGH WHALING COMPANY.

The precise date of the organization of this company cannot now be ascertained, but the first entry of stock was made Dec. 31, 1831. On Jan. 24, 1832, the Legislature passed an act incorporating the company, by the terms of which "William Roe, John P. DeWint, Abraham M. Smith, John Harris, Benoni H. Howell, Samuel Williams, Benj. Carpenter, Christopher Reeve, and Augustus F. Schofield," and such others as were then or might thereafter be associated with them, were empowered to engage "in the whale fishery in the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and elsewhere, and in the manufacture of oil and spermaceti candles." The capital stock was fixed at $200,000, in shares of $50; but the company was authorized to commence business as soon as $50,000 should be subscribed and paid in. The persons named in the act were to be the first directors of the company, and were also to act as commissioners to receive subscriptions to the stock. Directors were to be elected on the first Tuesday in January of each year; the company authorized to purchase and hold real estate to an amount not exceeding $25,000, and to have and perform all the rights and privileges of an incorporated company, with the only restriction that "no foreigner" should "ever be a stockholder, or anywise interested in said company."

The company was immediately organized under this act, and William Roe appointed president, Aaron Belknap, secretary, and Abraham M. Smith, agent. The books were opened for subscriptions, and $109,000, or 2186 shares, of the capital stock taken. On April 1st the company purchased the ship "Portland," for $15,250; in August the ship "Russell," for $14,500; and in May following the ship "Illinois," for $12,000. During the same year they also erected a large storehouse on Water Street, near First Street, and a commodious wharf. The ships purchased were fitted out and made two voyages each. The "Portland" was under command of Capt. Cook; the "Russell" under Capt. Brock; and the "Illinois," first voyage, Capt. Leonard, second voyage, Capt. Merchant.

The business of the company was continued until 1837. In 1834, Charles Ludlow, David W. Bate, John Harris, Edmund Sanxay, Abraham M. Smith, James G. Clinton, Daniel Farrington, David M. DuBois, and John Chambers were chosen directors. In the presidency, John D. Lawson succeeded Mr. Roe in 1833, and Charles Ludlow succeeded Mr. Lawson in 1834. Uriah Lockwood succeeded Mr. Belknap, and James Belknap Mr. Lockwood, as secretary. The last voyage made was by the ship "Portland," Capt. Cook, which arrived in New York in March, 1837, with 2100 barrels whale oil, 350 barrels sperm oil, and 19,000 pounds of bone. The cargo sold for about $40,000.

The enterprise, however, failed to yield the profit anticipated, and was abandoned. Receivers were appointed, the ships and other property sold, and the stockholders paid back their original subscriptions with the addition of a small dividend. The existence of the company ceased in 1840; and in 1846 its books, with the exception of an imperfect day-book, were destroyed by the fire which consumed the store of Daniel Farrington, in which they were deposited.

NEWBURGH STEAM MILLS.

In the early part of the year 1844 a stock company was formed for the purpose of erecting mills for the manufacture of cotton goods. The capital agreed upon was $100,000, and the subscriptions to the stock were completed on May 25th. On June 5th the company was formally organized, and John Forsyth, Hiram Bennett, David Crawford, Aaron P. Johnes, Homer Ramsdell, Benjamin Carpenter, Christopher Reeve, Uriah Lockwood, and Daniel Farrington, elected directors; Hiram Bennett, president; Homer Ramsdell, vice-president; Daniel Farrington, treasurer; and Uriah Lockwood, secretary. On June 12th the directors selected the site, and soon after commenced the erection of the necessary buildings. The works were completed and the manufacture of cotton commenced in 1845, since which time the mills have continued in operation, and partial time kept during the most trying revulsions. A large portion of the original stockholders have disposed of their interest, and a majority of the stock is now held by the estate of Thomas Garner, and is under the superintendency of Mr. HORATIO B. BECKMAN. The main building is 250 feet long by 50 feet broad, and has five floors beside the basement,—one floor being devoted to each of the processes of cotton manufacture. In addition to this building is another 90 by 40 feet.

GAS-LIGHT COMPANIES.

Newburgh Gas-light Company.—This company was organized in May, 1851, with a capital of $65,000. The following gentlemen composed the first board of directors, viz.: Homer Ramsdell, David Crawford, E. W. Farrington, and John J. Monell, of Newburgh, and J. A. Sabaten, of Albany, and S. Sabaten, of Newark, N. J. David Crawford was elected president, and J. J. Monell, secretary and treasurer of the board. Gas was first lighted in the latter part of September, 1852.

Consumers' Gas-light Company.—This company was organized in 1879, and its works constructed. The Newburgh Gas-light Company was consolidated with it in 1881.

X.—SUPPLY OF WATER.

Prior to 1817 the village of Newburgh was mainly supplied with water by wells; but, as population increased, it became necessary to procure a supply from other sources. Private enterprise, for a time, relieved the more pressing demand. In 1804 the board of trustees took the subject in hand, and submitted to the inhabitants a plan for forming a stock association, which resulted in the incorporation, by an act of the Legislature, passed March 7, 1806, of the "Newburgh Aqueduct Association." Beyond this, however, nothing appears to have been done until 1809, when, on March 27th, the Legislature passed an act empowering the trustees to procure a supply of water for the use of the village, and for that purpose to enter upon the possession of any springs or streams of water within the corporate bounds; provided, that there should, "in all cases, be left a sufficiency of water in said spring or springs so taken, for the use of the owner of the lands wherein the said spring or springs are situated, and his heirs and their assigns forever;" and further, that compensation should be made for the property so taken. Two hundred and fifty dollars were to be raised annually by tax to meet the expenses incurred, and the act of 1806 was repealed. The sum named in this act proved to be insufficient, and no further proceedings were had until 1812, when a meeting of the citizens was held (February 29th), who sanctioned the levying of a higher tax by the trustees; but the latter regarded a compliance with the wishes of the former as illegal, and directed the raising of only the amount specified. This was the first water tax levied.

In May, 1813, the trustees determined to contract with Jonathan Hasbrouck, the owner of Cold Spring, and Walter Case and Jacob Powell were appointed a committee for that purpose. No arrangement, however, was made with Mr. Hasbrouck, and the subject rested until June 20, 1814, when the trustees "Resolved, That we will proceed with all convenient speed to supply the inhabitants of the village of Newburgh with pure and wholesome water;" and as Water Street was about to be paved, that water-logs be laid before that work was done. In 1815 the difficulties under which the trustees labored were partially removed by an amendment to the charter of the village, by which $2000 could be raised annually by tax for contingent expenses and for the introduction of water. An effort was then made to purchase a spring owned by Mr. Mandevill, late the property of Jno. J. Monell; but it was not successful. Nothing further was done until 1816, when the trustees appointed a committee to examine the water lots of Jacob Ritchie, in the vicinity of Grand and Third Streets, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the supply which could be obtained from that source. Experiments were made by this committee, who subsequently reported that the yield was not sufficient. The proposition to take the Cold Spring was then renewed, and an agreement was made with Mr. Hasbrouck for that purpose. The water was to be taken from a "pen-stock" which had been erected on Liberty Street for supplying the brewery of Robert Dunlop, and conveyed "from hence down Ann Street to Colden Street, thence through Colden and Water Streets as far north as the ore of Harris & Miller."

At this stage of the proceedings the Court of Chancery (Aug. 26, 1816), on the application of George Gardner, through whose lands the outlet of the spring passed, granted an order restraining the trustees from further action, as, under the act of 1809, they were required to leave sufficient water in the spring for the use of those interested in it as a source of private supply. The trustees referred the subject to their counsel, Mr. Henry, of Albany, who, after examining the act, advised them that he considered it inexpedient to make a motion to dissolve the injunction. The trustees then agreed (Jan. 10, 1817), to ask the Legislature to "repeal the act of 1809, and substitute, in lieu thereof, a law for the same purpose based upon more just and constitutional principles as to the mode and extent of contracting for or taking the water to be introduced into the village." This action was approved by the citizens, at a public meeting held on March 29th, and the act applied for passed the Legislature April 7th. This act authorized the trustees to take, for the use of the village, such sources of supply as they might deem necessary. In case of disagreement with the owners of the property so taken, the subject of damages was to be referred to Wm. Thompson, Daniel C. Verplanck, and Abm. H. Schenck, who should fix the amounts to be paid. The trustees immediately made application to Jonathan and Eli Hasbrouck, George Gardner, and Patrick McGahey (the guardian of the heirs of Charles Mackin), for the sale of their several rights in the Cold Spring. Jonathan Hasbrouck demanded $10,000; Eli Hasbrouck, $5000, Geo. Gardner, $5000, and the heirs of Charles Mackin, $500. The trustees regarding the sums as altogether too large, applied to the commissioners named in the act, who awarded to Jonathan Hasbrouck $2000, to Eli Hasbrouck $100, to Geo. Gardner $1500, and to the Mackin heirs $50. The award was accepted by the trustees, and the several sums paid. The deed from Jonathan Hasbrouck, however, was made subject to a previous contract with Robert Dunlop, then held by James Law, for supplying his brewery with water. The construction of the works was resumed, and, in addition to those already named, logs were ordered laid through Smith and Liberty Streets. In 1819 the Legislature passed an act enabling the trustees to fund the water debt, then amounting to $5000. In 1821 a larger supply of water being deemed necessary, the trustees purchased the Ritchie lots, on Grand Street, from John Ledyard, for the sum of $450; and in 1829 sold the property, with the exception of the spring, for $4715. Subsequently, an additional source of supply was found on the lands of Wm. P. C. Smith, and a reservoir built near the residence of the late Rev. Dr. Johnston.

Such—with the addition of several large reservoirs —were the Newburgh water-works prior to the introduction of a supply from the Little Pond. In regard to this source, it may be remarked that the proposition to secure it was first made in 1835, and was renewed, in various forms, until its final adoption in 1852. To trace the several plans which were, from time to time, submitted to the public on the subject is unnecessary. It is sufficient to say that after a full examination of the Powellton Springs, the Gidneytown Creek, and the Little Pond, the people of the village almost unanimously approved the latter as a source of supply; and in March, 1852, an act appointing commissioners for the purpose of constructing the works was passed by the Legislature. In accordance with the terms of this act, on the report of the commissioners, an election was held (Nov. 15, 1852), when 821 ballots were cast for, and 16 against, the plan of supplying the village with water from the Little Pond. The works were put under contract in 1853, and $93,976.91 were expended by the commissioners. In addition to this sum, the trustees expended in 1852, $950.16; in 1854, $7007.87; in 1855, $2778.60; in 1856, $750.16; in 1857, $1646.88; in 1858, $4796.01; in 1859, $1541.36; and from March 1st of the latter year until Jan. 1, 1860, about $2000,—making a total of $115,448.75. The act, however, contemplated an outlay of only $100,000, for which sum bonds were issued.

The works have been materially enlarged since the introduction of the supply, viz.: in 1867, by the connection of Silver Creek with Little Pond, and in 1872-73, by the laying of a new main connecting directly with the pond. The total of expenditures for construction, etc., from 1852 to 1875, was $381,031.16. In 1855 the water-rents were $8369; in 1875, $29,307.71. Of all classes of distributing pipes (exclusive of service pipes) there is a fraction over eighteen miles. The annual report of the commissioners and of Maj. E. C. Boynton, the superintendent, for the year 1875, supplies complete details of receipts and expenditures.

NEWBURGH FERRY.

On May 24, 1743, Alexander Colden presented a petition to the Hon. George Clark, Lieutenant-Governor of the province, and Council, for letters patent enabling him to establish a ferry between Newburgh and Fishkill. This petition, after reciting the patent to the Palatinates, states "That as there are now many settlements on both sides of the Hudson River, persons frequently have occasion to cross over from one side of the river to the other, but are often obliged to wait a considerable time for a passage over the same, there being no ferry established on either side thereof: that your petitioner is willing to provide proper boats and persons constantly to attend for the transportation of passengers, horses, and goods across the said river to and from the aforesaid tract of land, now commonly called the Newburgh Patent; and has obtained liberty of the owners of the land on the easterly side of the said river to land or take on board any passengers that shall have occasion to cross the said river with their horses and goods, which will be of great use and benefit to travelers and other persons that may have occasion to cross said river." The petitioner asked that the letters patent be issued to himself, his heirs and assigns forever, for "all the soil under the water one hundred feet into the river from the high-water mark, the whole length of the patent (219 chains), that he may be enabled to make proper wharves and landing-places;" and also that "His Honor and the Council" should establish "such ferriage fees" as they should deem reasonable.

The petition was accompanied by a statement showing the "Rates heretofore taken by way of Ferriage for crossing Hudson's River above the Highlands," as follows:

"For every Man and Horse	£0	6s.	0d.
For every person without a Horse.....	0	2	0
And if bad weather, a Man and a Horse.....	0	10	0

The following were the "Rates" proposed to be taken:

"For every Man and Horse.....	£0	2s.	6d.
But if three or more together, for each Man and Horse.....	0	2	0
For a single person only.....	0	1	0
For each footman (if three or more together).....	0	0	9
For every Horse or single beast.....	0	1	6
But if three or more together, for each	0	1	3
For every Calf or Hog.....	0	0	6
For every Sheep or Lamb.....	0	0	4
For every full Barrel.....	0	1	0
For every empty Barrel.....	0	0	4
For every Pail of Butter.....	0	0	3
For every Firkin or Tub of Butter.....	0	0	6
For every bushel of Salt or Grain.....	0	0	3
For every hundred-weight of Iron, Lead, &c.....	0	0	9
For every Chaise, Kitterin, or Sleigh.....	0	4	0
For every Wagon and Cart.....	0	6	0

and so in proportion for all things according to their bulk and weight."

At a meeting of the Council, May 24th, the patent asked for was granted, and the petitioner thereby invested with the "sole keeping of a ferry between any and every part of the said tract, and for the soil under water (so far only as his own land run), 100 foot into the water from high-water mark, under the yearly quit-rent of five shillings" at the "rates proposed to be taken."

Immediately after receiving the patent, Colden complied with its provisions, and continued for several years in the exercise of its privileges. Sail- and row-boats were used for the purpose of ferriage; a landing place was constructed at the foot of First Street, and the enterprise conducted with considerable system. What became of the ferry during the Revolution does not appear, but it is of record that a ferry called the "Continental ferry" was maintained from Fishkill. Its owners in 1782 were Martin Wiltsie and Jacob Carpenter. The place of landing was at the foot of Third Street. In 1782 it changed its regular place of landing from Newburgh to New Windsor, and this change, coupled with the fact that the Colden charter, as well as all similar grants, was regarded as void in consequence of the Revolution, was the occasion of the establishment of a new ferry "at Fishkill and Newburgh landings, where the public (or Continental) ferry was formerly kept" by Peter Bogardus, of Fishkill, and John Anderson and James Denton, of Newburgh, who announced that they had "built boats for the purpose of attending said ferry, of the best construction, for the transporting of wagons and horses, and a good scow for the convenience of transporting loaded wagons," and that the prices of ferriage would be as they were before the war, viz.:

"For a footman.....1 shilling.	Four-horse Wagon.....14 shillings.
Man and horse.....2 shillings.	Loaded do.1 pound.
Two-horse Wagon.....10 shillings.	Phaeton and pair.....12 shillings.
Loaded do.12 shillings.	Ton of Iron.....8 shillings.
Riding Chair.....6 shillings.	Hogshead of Rum.....5 shillings.
and so in proportion for every other article."

This ferry was continued until after 1826, under the proprietorship of John P. DeWint. Its place of landing was changed to near the foot of Fourth Street, and was subsequently consolidated with the Colden ferry, as hereinafter stated.

The Colden charter was sold by the heirs of the patentee (Dec. 15, 1802) to Leonard Carpenter for the sum of $2500. On Oct. 24, 1804, Leonard Carpenter sold to Jacob Carpenter one-half of the charter for the sum of $1250. In August, 1805, the New Windsor and the Colden ferries were combined, the joint owners being Leonard and Jacob Carpenter, Martin Wiltsie, Martin Wiltsie, Jr., and Peter Bogardus. On Oct. 26, 1825, Ann and Catharine Bogardus, heirs of Peter Bogardus, sold their interest in the ferry to Benjamin Thorne for $200; and on November 9th Mr. Thorne sold the interest thus purchased to J. P. DeWint for the same sum. On April 1, 1826, Bridget, widow of Leonard Carpenter, sold to Alexander R. Carpenter her right in the ferry for the sum of $300. On the same day Alexander and Jane B. Carpenter sold to Isaac R. Carpenter their interest,—the former for the sum of $2800, and the latter for $2500, the difference in the sums being made by the addition of the third held by Mrs. Carpenter to that of Alexander. Isaac R. Carpenter was now the owner of the entire interest held by his father; to which he added, by purchase, March 1, 1827, from Henry B. Carpenter, the interest formerly held by Jacob Carpenter. On Feb. 25, 1832, Mr. Carpenter purchased from the heirs of Martin Wiltsie, Sr., all the right, title, and interest of their father for the sum of $8000; and sold (November 27th) to John P. DeWint one-half of the interest purchased for $6000. On March 1, 1833, Martin Wiltsie, Jr., sold to Mr. DeWint and Isaac R. Carpenter, by whom the ferry was now conducted in partnership, all his right, title, and interest for the sum of $5000; and on March 26th of the same year Carpenter purchased the entire right of DeWint, and became sole proprietor. On May 1, 1835, Mr. Carpenter sold the ferry to Mr. DeWint for the sum of $52,000; and on May 30th of the same year Mr. DeWint sold the whole to Thomas Powell for $80,000. Mr. Powell remained the owner until 1850, when, on October 15th, by deed of gift, the property passed to his daughter, Mrs. Frances E. L. Ramsdell.

Sail- and row-boats alone were used until 1816, when a horse-boat was launched at Newburgh (July 16th), and commenced her trips on August 8th. The Political Index of August 10th says, "The team-boat 'Moses Rogers' passed from this village, on Wednesday last, to Fishkill Landing with the following load: one coach and horses, a wagon and horse, seventeen chaises and horses, one horse, and fifty passengers." The "Rogers" was succeeded by a horse-boat called the "Caravan," a flat-bottomed vessel with a wheel in the centre. She was run in connection with the sail-boat "Mentor" and the horse-boat "Duchess" (the latter built by Mr. DeWint for his ferry), and was subsequently converted into a steamer under the name of the "Jack Downing." In 1828 the steamer "Post-Boy" was built at Low Point and placed on the line. Her engine was made in Philadelphia, and was a very unique affair. Her name was subsequently changed to "Phoenix." She gave place to the "Gold Hunter," which was built by Mr. Powell, at Newburgh. The "Fulton," the "Williamsburgh," and the "Union" were successively purchased by Mrs. Ramsdell, by whom also the present ferry-houses were erected. The "Union" having been destroyed, Mrs. Ramsdell had its place supplied (1880) by an iron boat, constructed by Ward & Stanton, of Newburgh, and which bears the name of "City of Newburgh." The deed from Mr. Carpenter requires the proprietors of the ferry to continue the landing at the foot of Second Street, and to preserve an open and free passage to and from the public street.

XI.—NEWBURGH POST-OFFICE.

From the destruction by fire of the records of the Post-Office Department at Washington in 1836, it is impossible to ascertain the date of the appointment of the first postmaster, or of the establishment of the office at Newburgh. From the records of the auditor's office, in which the accounts of the postmasters are kept, the books of which were preserved, it is ascertained that the office at Newburgh commenced rendering accounts Jan. 1, 1796, and that Ebenezer Foote was the first postmaster. It is therefore presumed that the office was established some time during the month of December, 1795. A list of all the postmasters, prior to 1810, is annexed, each appointee holding the office up to the time of the rendering of accounts by his successor, to wit:

Ebenezer Foote, from Jan. 1, 1796.	Daniel Birdsall, from Oct. 1, 1802.
Harry Caldwell, from Oct. 1, 1797.	Chester Clark, from July 1, 1810.

The following have been appointed since 1810:

Aaron Belknap, March 26, 1812.	Joseph Casterline, Jr., May 4, 1853.
Tooker Wygant, Nov. 26, 1830.	Ezra Farrington, May 22, 1861.
A. C. Mulliner, May 23, 1833.	James H. Reeve, Nov. 1, 1866.
Benj. H. Mace, Nov. 23, 1836.	Henry Major, May 7, 1867.*
Oliver Davis, June 17, 1841.	Jos. Lomas, Aug. 22, 1867.
James Belknap, May 18, 1843.	Ezra Farrington, July 19, 1869.
Samuel W. Eager, Aug. 6, 1849.	John C. Adams, April 1, 1875.

* A special officer of the Post-Office Department, who held the place in consequence of the refusal of the Senate to confirm the appointments of President Johnson.

The early mails of the district were carried and letters received and delivered by post-riders, who, for their own convenience, as well as for the convenience of those wishing to send letters, appointed stations for that purpose. The Newburgh station was, for many years, at the tavern of Michael Weigand; the New Windsor station, at the "Glass House" in the village of New Windsor. Letters were left at these stations until called for. The Newburgh office was the second† in this section of the county; its delivery included letters for Marlborough, Plattekill, New Windsor, etc.

XII.—FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The fire department of Newburgh was organized under an act of the Legislature, passed March 24, 1797, by which the inhabitants of the town residing east of Liberty Street and south of an east and west line running six rods north of the academy, were authorized to elect five trustees, "to be called the Trustees of the Fire Company of the Village of Newburgh," who should have full power "to nominate and appoint a sufficient number of firemen, not exceeding twenty to every fire-engine" then provided or thereafter to be provided for the use of the said village, "out of the inhabitants being free-holders or persons renting property to the value of one hundred dollars per annum, to have the care, management, working, and using the said fire-engines and other instruments." The persons so appointed were to be called "the firemen of the village of Newburgh;" they were required "to be ready at all fires, as well by night as by day," and were exempted from service as constables or as jurors of inquest. Prior to the passage of this law, there is no record of the existence of an engine, or apparatus, or of any organization for the extinguishment of fires, nor is there record of any proceedings under the law, although it is probable that an organization was made in accordance to its terms. The act was superseded by the act of incorporation (1800), under which the powers which it conferred were vested in the trustees of the village. The minutes of the latter body make no reference to the department until May, 1806, at which time two fire companies are of record, both fully organized and supplied with engines. At what precise date these companies were organized cannot be shown; but from a certificate issued by the board of trustees in 1802, both companies were clearly in existence at that time, from which fact it may be inferred that the trustees of the village found the department organized, and simply accepted the work which had been done.

From May, 1806, the record of the department is essentially complete. The two companies which were in existence at that time were composed of the following members:

† Montgomery, or "Ward's Bridge," was the first. (See "Trade and Commerce.")

- No. 1.—Wm. L. Smith, Enoch E. Tilton, Walter Burling, Henry Tudor, Ward M. Gazlay, Gilbert N. Clement, Minard Harris, John Carskaden, Caleb Sutton, George E. Hulse, John Coleman, John Hoagland, William Adey, Andrew Preston, Nicholas Wright, John Forsyth, Walter Case.
- No. 2.—John Harris, Jonathan Fisk, John Richardson, Selah Reeve, Joseph Reeve, John Anderson, Jr., Leonard Carpenter, James Hamilton, Samuel I. Gregory, William Gardiner, Nathaniel Burling, Solomon Sleight, Jonathan Carter, Hiram Weller, Samuel Wright, Hugh Spier, Thos. Powell, Cornelius DeWitt, Joseph Hoffman, Cadwallader Roe, Daniel Nivin, Jr., Benoni H. Howell, Sylvanus Jessup.

The house of Company No. 1 was ordered established (July 17, 1806) "near the house of Robert W. Jones, on Eight-rod Street;" and the house of No. 2 (May 17, 1810) was located on "the northeast corner of the Presbyterian church lot."

No further reference to these companies appears in the minutes of the trustees—except lists of their officers—for several years. On Dec. 9, 1823, a meeting of citizens was held at Crawford's hotel, and a resolution adopted requesting the trustees to "purchase a new engine for the protection of the village against fire." In compliance with this request, the trustees, on January 1st, following, contracted with E. Force, of New York, for a new engine at a cost of $750. On the 20th of the same month they purchased the lot on the corner of Montgomery and Second Streets for the sum of $92, and subsequently laid a tax of $1200 for the erection of an engine-house thereon and to pay for the engine. In addition to this sum, the Washington Insurance Company of New York contributed $100; the Fulton Insurance Company, $100; and the North River Insurance Company, $50, towards the purchase of the new engine. The new engine was completed in March, 1824, and the question at once arose among the firemen which company should be honored with its use and preservation. After a sharp discussion the question was decided by the trustees (March 18th) in favor of Company No. 1, by the casting vote of the president of the board. The company immediately reorganized under the title of No. 3, and a new company was soon after raised for the old engine. During the same year the engines were removed to the new engine-house.

The first hook-and-ladder company, if such it may be called, was organized March 3, 1810, by the addition to the two fire companies of eight men, viz.: Joseph Carpenter, Elijah Boardman, James Donnelly, Benjamin Anderson, Thomas Phillips, Jr., William Thayer, Nathaniel Boyd, and Samuel Burtis. This organization continued until Aug. 5, 1828, when three persons were selected from each company and a more independent organization effected. The implements of the company were housed in a shed which was erected in the rear of the engine-house. New ladders, etc., were procured in 1852, and a suitable house (now the police station) erected on First Street. The company has borne, at different times, the names of "Clinton" and "Brewster," the latter since April, 1861, in honor of Hiram S. Brewster, for several years its foreman.

In 1835 (May 6th), on the petition of John McClelland, James G. Clinton, Francis Bolton, and others, the trustees organized Washington Engine Company, No. 4, and ordered a new engine from James Smith. On July 1st they purchased a lot on Western Avenue for $300, on which a small, but then regarded as suitable, building was erected for the company. The new engine was delivered in a rough coat of paint, and was subsequently finished in a very complete manner at the expense of the company. More modern and of more power than No. 3, it took the rank to which it was entitled. Songs and music were written in its honor; its company overflowed with the most vigorous element in the community.

In 1837 (July 4th), Niagara Engine Company, No. 5, was organized by the trustees, on the petition of Samuel J. Farnum, Albert Noe, C. A. Gardiner, and others. On August 22d a lot was purchased on South Street, a house was ordered erected thereon, similar in every respect to that occupied by No. 4, and a contract made for the construction of an engine. This machine was a duplicate of No. 4, and the question of superiority led to many spirited contests.

In 1840 the membership of several of the companies exceeded the number fixed by the trustees, and it was proposed that the surplus should be permitted to act as volunteers. The trustees referred the subject to a committee, who reported (July 18th) against the plan. This result led to an "indignant parade" on the part of the volunteers of Company No. 5; but the excitement soon subsided, and the cause of complaint was removed by the adoption (Sept. 14th), on the part of the trustees, of a resolution permitting each company to have a membership of fifty.

In 1844 (Aug. 22d), a meeting of citizens authorized the purchase of a new engine for Company No. 3; and the trustees (Dec. 2d) contracted with James Smith, of New York, for its construction. The engine was delivered in the spring of 1845, and was finished in an elegant manner by the company. It was the first "piano" machine. In 1849 a new engine was purchased for Company No. 4; and, in 1850, one for Company No. 5; both of the improved style. The engine of No. 4 was again exchanged in 1861.

The first hose company was organized in 1840. Its officers (Jan. 1, 1841) were William Scott, foreman; Rensselaer Whited, assistant, and Abel Belknap, Jr., secretary and treasurer. At this time the only hose carriage was a "jumper" attached to Engine No. 3. The occasion of its organization was the prior organization by a number of boys of a hose company, of which Maxwell Wiley was foreman, Cornelius O. Madden, assistant, and E. M. Ruttenber, secretary, whose purpose it was to perform in this way the taking of the "jumper" to and from fires, to which duty they were invariably generously assigned by the members of the engine company. The sages of the corporation had "no power" to recognize boys as members of the department, and, lest they should do some mischief, appointed men who, if too old to run with the machine, could see to it that due decorum and solemnity was observed in the discharge of that duty. Columbian Hose is the offspring of this company.

The introduction of water from Little Pond brought with it several changes in the apparatus of the department. Engine Company, No. 1, became Excelsior Hose Company, No. 1, and, in September, 1852, Columbia Hose Company, No. 2. Ringgold Hose Company, No. 1, was organized Feb. 1, 1854. Neptune Hose Company was organized Sept. 6, 1858; name changed to Leonard Hose Company, No. 3, and, in 1873, to Leonard Steam Fire-Engine Company, No. 2. Chapman Hose Company, No. 4, was organized in September, 1859. Cataract Engine Company, No. 3, was changed to Lawson Hose Company, No. 5, in 1871, when the engine purchased in 1845 was sold. Washington Engine Company, No. 4, was changed to Washington Steam Fire-Engine Company, No. 4 (now No. 1), in 1872, and the first steam fire-engine purchased by the city assigned to its care. The hand-engine purchased for the company in 1861 was rebuilt and transferred to West Newburgh, in charge of Highland Engine Company, No. 3. The engine of No. 5 was sold in 1872, the company having been disbanded some time previously. The department is now composed of one hook-and-ladder company, one hand-engine company, two steam fire-engine companies, and four hose companies. The estimated value of the property of the department is $60,000. The steamers now in use cost $4200 each.

The first engines are remembered by many of our citizens. No. 1 was a plain old-fashioned machine of very limited power. No. 2 was what was called a Philadelphia engine; it was manned by a double rank of men at each end, one rank standing in part on the deck and in part on a folding platform. The manning force was about sixteen, but as the deck men could not be relieved when the engine was in motion, they were of limited usefulness. The forte of the engine was in throwing a small stream at what was then regarded as a great distance; it was able to send water and spray about ninety feet. No. 3 was a heavy machine and the only suction engine of the three. It was the fancy engine of the village, and the first to bear a specific name, that of "Cataract."

The houses now occupied by the department are modern structures. The first was erected for Neptune Hose Company (now Leonard steamer), in 1859; the lot costing $400, and the house $1247.75. It is of brick, two stories high, and located on North Water Street. Hook-and-Ladder Company and Ringgold

Hose Company were granted new buildings in 1862. A lot for the former (on Western Avenue) was purchased for $600, and for the latter (on Colden Street) for $950. The plans of the buildings were by John D. Kelly, architect; the contract for erection was awarded to Little & Kelly (June 21, 1862), for $2835. The house of Hook-and-Ladder is of brick, two stories; that of Ringgold, two stories, with basement, and brownstone front,—the latter a contribution by the company. Chapman Hose Company exchanged the shed on Liberty Street, in which it was organized, for a new house on South Street in 1863. The lot was purchased (August 17th) for $400; the building was from plans by J. D. Kelly, and cost $1975.33. Washington Company's house was enlarged, under contract with J. D. Kelly, architect, in June, 1868, at a cost of $608.48. The house occupied by Highland Company was erected in 1867, under contract with Brown &

McMeekin, for $2990; the lot cost $350. The original engine-house, so long occupied by Engines 1, 2, and 3, though enlarged and improved, yielded to the demand for a more fitting structure in 1875. The plans for the new building were by E. K. Shaw, architect, and the work executed under contract with Wm. McMeekin, for $5494. The lot was enlarged by the purchase of adjoining property at a cost of $1600. The building is two stories high and basement; pressed brick and Ohio stone trimmings. It supplies accommodations for Columbian and Lawson Hose Companies.

Chief Engineer.—The duties of chief engineer, for several years after the organization of the fire department, were performed by the president of the board of trustees and by the fire wardens. Benoni H. Howell, it is said, was the first engineer; the date of his appointment is not recorded. He was succeeded by James Belknap, and he by Benj. F. Buckingham, who filled the station for six years prior to 1850, when William Lisle was appointed. In 1851 the trustees gave to the fire department the power to nominate an engineer and two assistants; and (May 1st) Cicero A. Gardiner was elected chief, and Isaac Wood, Jr., and John W. Thomas, assistants. On May 1, 1853, Isaac Wood, Jr., was elected chief, and John W. Thomas and J. A. McCartney, assistants. In 1853 the department failed to elect, and the trustees appointed Benj. F. Buckingham, chief, and Aikman Spier and Jas. T. Hamilton, assistants. In December, 1854, the trustees adopted more strict regulations for conducting the nomination, under which, in January following, the department elected John K. Lawson, chief, and J. A. McCartney and John Proudfoot, assistants. In 1857, John D. Kelly was elected chief, J. H. H. Chapman, first assistant, and J. J. S. McCroskery, second assistant. In 1859, J. H. H. Chapman, chief, J. J. S. McCroskery, first assistant, and Hugh McCutcheon, second assistant. Chancey M. Leonard was elected chief in 1861, and served until 1874, when he was chosen mayor of the city. His assistants were,—1861, H. S. Brewster, James C. Taggart; 1863, John B. Stansbrough, John W. Forsyth; 1865, John DeLancy, James C. Farrell; 1866, James T. Van Dalsen, Archibald Hays; 1869, Archibald Hays, Patrick Herbert; 1873, Archibald Hays, John Fitchey. In 1874, Archibald Hays was elected chief, and John Fitchey and O. S. Hathaway, Jr., assistants. In 1875, William Nixon, chief, and Elkanah K. Shaw, Robert W. Hamilton, and Michael Barry, assistants.

Fire Department Fund.—In 1851 an incorporation of the fire department became necessary, in order to make available the provisions of an act of the Legislature, passed the previous year, requiring the payment by insurance companies of a certain percentage of their receipts for the benefit of local fire departments. To accomplish this object the several companies appointed committees, who agreed to the terms of an act of incorporation, which was submitted to the Legislature, and became a law July 1, 1851. This act directed the organization of a board of trustees, composed of representatives from each company, to "manage the affairs and dispose of the funds of the corporation;" and the corporation, by its by-laws, established a "Fire Department Fund," the income of which should be appropriated to the relief of indigent or disabled firemen, or their families, if such cases should arise. This fund, on July 24, 1851, amounted to $175.68; and, although repeatedly drawn upon for the purpose for which it was constituted, is now about $7000.

XIII.—NEWBURGH REGATTA ASSOCIATION.

The Newburgh Regatta Association was organized in the spring of 1837, through the exertions of Capt. Henry Robinson. Capt. Charles Ludlow was elected president, and J. J. Monell secretary. The first regatta took place June 27, 1837, when the following four-oared boats were entered, viz.:

1. "Gazelle," scarlet, red and white dress, red and white cap, New York.
2. "Highland Wave," black, white dress, blue and white cap, Newburgh.
3. "Gull," blue, blue and white dress, straw hat, New York.
4. "Wave," black, blue and white dress, blue and white cap, New York.
5. "Halcyon," green, green and white dress, blue and white cap, New York.
6. "Pearl," white, blue and white checked dress, straw hat, New York.
7. "Minerva," East India Particular, red and white dress, red and white cap, New York.
8. "Corsair," black, green and white dress, red cap, Newburgh.

The distance rowed was five miles, and the time made by the winning boats as follows, viz.: "Wave," 32m. 38s.; "Gull," 33m. 38s.; "Corsair," 35m. The prizes were awarded by J. J. Monell, who delivered an appropriate address on the occasion.

The regatta of 1838 was for the benefit of the Newburgh Library Association. The following were the boats entered, viz.: "Galatea," "Highland Wave," "Corsair," and "Scilla." Time: "Galatea," 24m. 35s.; "Wave," 24m. 50s.; "Corsair," 25m. 46s.; "Scilla," 27m. Another regatta was held in 1839, but the record has not been preserved.

The association was reorganized in 1856, and a regatta was held July 4th of that year. Three races were run, viz.: By four-oared boats, double-scutt boats, and single-scutt boats. For the first race, the "W. H. Terboss," the "Jacob Swartzter," and the "Whitehall," of New York, and the "Witch of the Wave," of Cold Spring, were entered. The first prize was taken by the "Terboss" in 27 minutes, the second by the "Swartzter" in 27½ minutes, and the third by the "Whitehall." For the second race, the "Enoch Carter," the "T. C. Ring," the "Geo. W. Shaw," the "S. Roach," and the "Fanny Fern" were entered. The first prize was won by the "Carter" in 30 minutes, the second by the "Ring," and the third by the "Shaw." The third race was won by the "Gale" in 36 minutes.

The regatta of the association on the 4th of July, 1857, was one of more than usual historic interest from the fact that it was the occasion of the début of the famous oarsmen, Joshua and William H. Ward. The race was a double scull, and the distance full four miles. The Wards rowed in the "Fanny Fern," and carried off the first prize; time, 33 minutes and 30 seconds. The regattas of the association were among the first on the Hudson, and from them and the oarsmen which they developed sprang, in a great measure, all the principal contests which have occurred in this country, whether local or international.*

XIV.—NEWBURGH HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The first horticultural society of Newburgh was organized Jan. 13, 1829,—Rev. John Brown, president; Selah Reeve and William Roe, vice-presidents; Aaron Belknap, treasurer; John W. Knevels, corresponding secretary; Tooker Wygant, recording secretary. The first exhibition of the society was held Aug. 28, 1829, when premiums were awarded for twenty-four different kinds of culinary vegetables, and also for melons, grapes, peaches, and twenty specimens of flowers. The officers for the succeeding year were,—Rev. John Brown, president; David Ruggles and Charles Ludlow, vice-presidents; the other officers remaining as during the previous year. The society continued annual exhibitions for several years, but ultimately ceased. Its successor, the Newburgh Bay Horticultural Society, was organized in 1862,—H. W. Sargeant, president; Odell S. Hathaway and Robert Sterling, vice-presidents; Alfred Post, treasurer; E. W. Gray, recording secretary; J. C. Rennison, corresponding secretary. The society has held annual and semi-annual exhibitions since its organization, and developed a previously latent interest in the higher branches of garden culture.

XV.—CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, Etc.

CHURCHES.

St. George's Episcopal.—The history of the first church (the German Lutheran), as well as that of the introduction of the Church of England, has been given elsewhere. The latter, as the successor to the income of the Glebe, continued its existence under the name of St. George's until 1775. During the Revolution it was without a rector, and at the close of the war it had become literally destroyed. On Nov. 4, 1805, the church was reorganized under the old name of St. George's, and Rev. Cave Jones was inducted as rector. "So fearfully small," says Dr. Brown, "was the number of her friends here that it was found necessary to resort to the neighboring parishes for a sufficient number even to form an incorporation." At this time the special purpose of the reorganization was a legal one, such a step being deemed necessary in order to a recovery of the old church and Glebe. Of the trial at law which ensued it is unnecessary to speak, as a full account of it is given in a previous chapter. The following is the record of the reorganization:

"Nov. 4, 1805.—At a meeting of the persons attached to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, it was unanimously agreed that the Protestant Episcopal Church of the parish of Newburgh should be known, as heretofore, by the name of St. George's Church; and that the election for church wardens and vestrymen of said church should be held annually on Tuesday in Easter week at the Protestant Episcopal church, on the German Patent, in the said parish of Newburgh.

"The following wardens and vestrymen were elected: Arthur Smith and George Merritt, wardens; Wm. W. Sackett, Gilbert Colden Willet, Samuel Floyd, Thos. Carskadden, John Garrit, David Fowler, Henry Caldwell, and Justin Foote, vestrymen; and Jonathan Fisk and Joseph Hoffman, trustees of the Glebe."

"Jan. 28, 1806.—On motion, Resolved, That Mr. Sackett, Mr. Fisk, and Mr. Carskadden be a committee to wait on Mr. Foster for his consent that our minister, next time he preaches in this parish, preach in the academy.

"On motion, Resolved, That Mr. Fisk, Mr. Hoffman, and Mr. Carskadden be a committee to open and repair St. George's church in this parish." (The old Lutheran church.)

"April 8, 1806.—At a meeting of the wardens and vestrymen of St. George's Church, in the parish of Newburgh, held on Tuesday, the 8th day of April, 1806, at the house of Robt. R. Dolph, in the parish of Newburgh, for the purpose of electing two wardens and eight vestrymen: George Merritt in the chair; J. Fisk, clerk. The following were chosen: Henry Caldwell and David Fowler, wardens; Wm. W. Sackett, G. C. Willet, Samuel Floyd, Thos. Carskadden, Justin Foote, Francis Smith, John Garrit, and Wm. Taylor, vestrymen.

"On motion, Resolved, That Mr. Fisk be clerk to the vestry and wardens.

"On motion, Resolved, That Henry Caldwell be treasurer of this church.

"On motion, Resolved, That Messrs. Floyd, Hoffman, Fowler, and Willet be a committee to procure subscriptions and solicit donations for the purpose of enabling the church to support a clergyman.

"Mr. Graham and Mr. Colden, a committee from St. Andrew's, applied to St. George's to ascertain if this church will unite with them in the support of a clergyman. On motion, Resolved, That this church will unite with St. Andrew's in the support of a clergyman; and that Mr. Fowler, Mr. Caldwell, and Mr. Fisk be a committee to confer with the said committee from St. Andrew's, and conclude the terms on which such clergyman shall be employed by our united support, and that the said committee also confer with the Episcopal Church at Goshen and ascertain if that church will unite with this and St. Andrew's to support a clergyman."

"July 28, 1806.—Committee on pastor reported that they had not been able to meet with committees from St. Andrew's and Goshen.

"Aug. 4, 1806.—Committee reported that the church at Goshen, St. Andrew's, New Windsor, and Newburgh had agreed to unite in supporting a clergyman."

The pastor whose services were secured under the agreement of August 4th, above quoted, was the Rev. Frederick Van Horne, who resided at St. Andrew's (at the time probably the strongest congregation in the proposed circuit), who continued in that capacity until 1809, when he removed to Ballston. The Rev. Mr. Mackin succeeded him, but remained in the field only a few months; and during the next year (1810) an engagement was made with Rev. Mr. Powell, rector of St. Andrew's, Coldenham, by St. George's Church, for the one-third of his time. This state of things continued until 1815, when the Rev. Dr. John Brown entered upon the duties of rector of St. George's Church, having preached his inaugural sermon on December 24th of that year. Dr. Brown, then only in deacon's orders, had just commenced his ministerial labors in Trinity Church, Fishkill. By the advice of the late Bishop Hobart, he was induced to perform a third service in Newburgh for many Sundays in succession, during which period "the Holy Communion was administered for the first time in the parish since the Revolutionary war to the small number of three."* During the first year of Dr. Brown's incumbency the number of persons confirmed was 37, and 28 were admitted to the holy communion. Dr. Brown continued in full charge of the work of the parish until January, 1859, when Rev. Caleb S. Henry, D.D., was engaged as assistant minister, and served until March, 1861. In October, 1859, Rev. Hobart Chetwood was engaged in the same capacity, and served until June, 1860. He was succeeded in October by Rev. John W. Clark, who served until November, 1862, when the office was discontinued. Revs. T. M. Riley, John F. Potter, John Downie, and Alexander Davidson successively served as assistants to the rector until October, 1868, when the Rev. Octavius Applegate was elected assistant minister with duties involving the active rectorship. Dr. Brown resigned in 1880, but holds the honorary position of Rector Emeritus; Mr. Applegate that of Rector.

The first edifice occupied by the congregation of St. George's was, as before mentioned, the one erected by the Lutherans, and long known as the old Glebe school-house. When the Episcopalians ceased to occupy this church is uncertain, but it was probably very soon after the war of the Revolution began. In 1815 the congregation was temporarily accommodated, through the kindness of the late Mr. Thomas Ellison, of New Windsor, in a building on Liberty Street, known as the McIntosh house. Here it remained for some years. The church edifice (St. George's) was begun in 1816, and was consecrated by Bishop Hobart, Nov. 10, 1819. The increase of the congregation rendering more room necessary, a gallery was put up in 1826, and at the same time an organ was purchased. In 1834 the building was enlarged, and the steeple was added, in which a fine-toned bell was hung. The church was again enlarged and beautified in 1853, at an expense of $9000. At that time the tasteful and commodious Sunday-school room and vestry was built on the south side of the church. The church edifice is the Doric style of architecture. It has a front on Grand Street of 45 feet, and is 90 feet in depth. Its pews furnish accommodations for 650 persons.

The accommodations furnished by the enlargement of the church, however, failed to meet the requirements of the congregation, and in March, 1859, the rector and vestry of St. George's purchased the edifice originally erected by the congregation of the Union Associate Reformed Church. This building was thoroughly refitted and improved in its architecture, and in the following May it was consecrated for Episcopal worship under the name of St. John's chapel. The enterprise failed of success, and the building was (1864) sold for other purposes. In the mean time the necessity which its purchase was designed to supply had found accommodation in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, the organization of which sprang from a desire, on the part of several members of St. George's parish, to extend the influence of the Episcopal faith over a field wider than that which it was thought could be successfully embraced under a single church jurisdiction. The proposition to divide the old parish and erect an additional one was made in 1858, but no steps were then taken to accomplish that object. On May 12, 1860, the proposition was renewed, and a formal application was made to the rector of St. George's, in accordance with the laws of the Episcopal Church, for his official consent to the organization of a new congregation within the limits of his parish.

The application received the consent of the Rev. Dr. Brown, and the congregation of St. Paul's Church was soon after informally organized. On June 5th the members of the proposed new congregation extended a unanimous call to the Rev. Hobart Chetwood, at that time assistant minister of St. George's Church, to be their pastor. This call was accepted by Mr. Chetwood,—the acceptance to take effect at the termination of his engagement to the old parish, Nov. 1, 1860. By the subsequent action of the vestry of St. George's, Mr. Chetwood's connection with that parish ceased on June 23d, and on June 25th he consented to enter at once upon his duties as minister of St. Paul's. The organization of the church was completed September 11th by the election of David M. Clarkson and William E. Warren, wardens, and F. C. Withers, Hiram Falls, H. H. Bell, William Bogert, R. V. K. Montfort, John Gordon, E. W. Gray, and G. J. Appleton, vestrymen. Mr. Chetwood exchanged with Rev. H. P. C. Melville during the winter of 1866. Rev. Dr. Lundy served as assistant minister from Sept. 1, 1867, to his death in April, 1868. Rev. Dr. Irving was his successor for six months. In June, 1872, Mr. Chetwood resigned the rectorship, and in September following Rev. Rufus Emery became his successor.

The first service of the church was held in the Highland Academy (now the Home for the Friendless), on Sunday, July 1st. Within a fortnight after that date a lot was purchased on Grand Street, at a cost of $4100, and a contract entered into with Mr. John Little for the erection of a chapel. The building was opened for divine worship on the first Sunday in October (Oct. 7, 1860). Its cost, including furniture, was about $2300. On June 1, 1864, the erection of a church edifice was formally inaugurated, with the express intention of prosecuting the undertaking to inclosure, leaving the nave, tower, etc., to the future. The corner-stone was laid on Thursday afternoon, Aug. 24, 1865, by Rev. John Brown, D.D., under appointment of the bishop of the diocese. The building, although in occupation and supplied with an organ, etc., awaits completion in the respects already mentioned. The expenditure so far made is about $35,000.

St. George's Mission.—St. George's Mission was begun June 4, 1871, in an upper room, called McConkey's Hall, on Western Avenue. In October following two floors of a tenement were engaged and fitted up for service as well as Sunday-school, which were continued from Oct. 29, 1871, until Feb. 16, 1872, when the chapel, which had been erected in the mean time, was occupied. The cost of the chapel, including lot, furniture, etc., was $4353.16. Revs. Boss, Smith, and G. W. Hinkle have been the ministers in charge.

REV. JOHN BROWN, D.D.—Probably no man in Orange County is more widely known and revered for his many excellencies of character, and the devoted Christian work that he has done through a long series of years, than is the subject of this memoir. Born in New York City May 19, 1791, his collegiate training was obtained at Columbia College in that city, whence he was graduated in 1811, being the valedictorian of his class, and its last living representative to-day. Selecting the sacred ministry as his calling in life, he engaged in ecclesiastical studies under Bishop Hobart, and was ordained deacon of the Protestant Episcopal Church at St. Paul's, New York, in 1812. At the request of the bishop he went to Trinity Church, Fishkill, which had then been without a rector for seventeen years, and reorganized the congregation. During the same period he was induced to hold a third service in Newburgh for many Sundays in succession, during which time "the Holy Communion was administered for the first time in the parish since the Revolutionary war to the small number of three." In 1815 he was ordained priest by Bishop Hobart, at St. Paul's Church, New York, and during the same year removed to Newburgh, having received and accepted a call to St. George's Church of that city, an ecclesiastical body reaching back in its origin to the year 1729, at which time the first missionary was sent to that field by the English "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts." Dr. Brown preached his inaugural sermon on Dec. 24, 1815. He also reorganized St. Thomas' Church, New Windsor, and was chosen rector of that parish also, dividing his time between the two parishes until 1844, when he resigned the New Windsor charge.

When Dr. Brown entered upon the discharge of his duties as rector of St. George's Church a vast amount of work required to be done. The prosperity of the church had been sadly affected by the Revolutionary war, and its organization well-nigh effaced. A reorganization of the parish had been effected on Nov. 4, 1805, but only a slight degree of spiritual prosperity had been enjoyed up to the time of Dr. Brown's installation as rector. During the earlier years of his rectorship he performed a large amount of missionary work in this section of country, and exerted himself faithfully to the building up of his own parish and the extension of the Episcopal form of worship in other sections of the county. In this field he organized St. John's Church at Monticello, Grace Church at Middletown, and later the churches at Cornwall and Marlborough. He also revived the church at Goshen, St. Andrew's at Walden, St. Peter's at Peekskill, and St. Philip's at Garrison's, holding services at intervals in those places until the churches were able to support a minister. For many years he was the only minister of his church on the west side of the Hudson between New York and Catskill. Under his rectorship the church edifice of St. George's parish was consecrated by Bishop Hobart, Nov. 10, 1819, and the subsequent repairs and alterations were made. His active individual work continued until January, 1859, when an assistant minister was engaged, Dr. Brown retaining the rectorship. That state of affairs continues at the present writing (1881), at which time Rev. Octavius Applegate is the assistant minister, with duties involving the active rectorship.

The services of Dr. Brown in his own parish are more fully referred to in its history on preceding pages of this work. His life has been a singularly devoted one, full of self-sacrifice and of zeal in the cause of the Master. His influence has ever been exerted in the encouragement and support of the various benevolent, educational, and philanthropic movements of the day, and to the maintenance and consecration of the institutions of his locality. Throughout the long passage of years, years fraught with many trying scenes, many sad vicissitudes, he has ever remained the same faithful, sincere friend, the same earnest exemplar of Christian devotion and simplicity. His spoken as well as printed discourses have ever breathed the spirit of a pure religion, and the good that has been accomplished by them is immeasurable. Now in his ninetieth year, the oldest minister of his denomination in the State, he can look back with satisfaction upon the record of a life well spent, conscious that he enjoys the respect and love not only of his own people but of the community at large, and calmly awaits the welcome call to the higher life beyond.

Aside from his services as a Christian minister, Dr. Brown has also been actively identified with other movements of a secular character in Newburgh. As a member of the board of trustees of the Newburgh Academy, and subsequently of the free schools, he performed valuable service, and as a member of the Horticultural Society, chaplain of the Masonic fraternity, chaplain of the Nineteenth Regiment of Militia, and in connection with other local organizations and enterprises, his labors have been arduous and efficient.

Dr. Brown married on Nov. 15, 1819, Frances Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Ludlow, the ceremony being performed by Bishop Hobart at St. George's Church. Mrs. Brown lived to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of her wedding, and died April 18, 1872. Six children were the issue of the union, namely, Mary, who married Daniel T. Rogers; Margaret T. L., who married George W. Kerr, president of the National Bank of Newburgh; Augusta P., who married Moses Ely; Helen; Anna W., who married Eugene A. Brewster, a leading lawyer of Newburgh; John Hobart; and Charles L.

The Church of the Corner-Stone.—Aug. 8, 1875, Bishop Cummings, of the Reformed Protestant Episcopal Church, held service in the American Reformed church, and on the evening of the 25th "The Church of the Corner-stone" was organized under the general statute of the State of New York, and the following officers elected: Wardens, Daniel T. Rogers and Walter C. Anthony; Vestrymen, James G. Graham, J. Wilson Stratton, William J. Roe, Jr., George Middleton, Robert L. Case, James G. Birch, Edward Haigh. Benjamin F. Clark, secretary and treasurer; James G. Birch, superintendent of Sabbath-school. Regular services were subsequently held in the lecture-room of the Associate Reformed church. Rev. Dr. Leacock was called to the rectorship in October, and entered at once upon the discharge of his duties. In November ground was broken for the erection of the church edifice on South Street; and on the 24th of that month the contract for building was given to Thomas Dobin at $4969. The structure is of Gothic style, and has a frontage of 33 feet. Seating accommodations are provided for about 250 persons. It was first occupied on Easter-Sunday (April 16), 1876.

First Presbyterian Church.—The adherents of the Presbyterian faith who first came to Newburgh were connected with the Bethlehem Church in Cornwall, which was founded about 1726. From this parent stem sprang the church of New Windsor, which was organized Sept. 14, 1764, when the sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Moffat, and Joseph Wood, William Lawrence, Samuel Brewster, and Henry Smith were chosen elders. The Rev. Timothy Johnes, afterwards and for many years pastor of the church of Morristown, N. J., was appointed stated supply of the church by the Presbytery of New York, and served in that capacity from May 5, 1766, until October, 1767, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Francis Peppard, who remained until 1773. During the pastorate of Mr. Peppard the district was divided into four parts, viz.: Bethlehem or New Cornwall, Murderer's Creek, New Windsor, and Newburgh, in each of which trustees were appointed for the purpose of raising funds and taking charge of the temporal affairs of the church in their respective neighborhoods, thereby creating, as it were, four informal societies.

The withdrawal of Mr. Peppard left the station vacant, and measures were taken to secure the services of the Rev. John Close. While these arrangements were pending, however, the Marlborough Society invited the trustees of the Newburgh district to unite with them in temporarily settling the Rev. John McCallah over both districts. This invitation was accepted, and Mr. McCallah entered upon his duties Sept. 26, 1773. But his labors in Newburgh could have been only for a few weeks, as in November of the same year, the arrangements for that purpose having been perfected, Mr. Close was invited to take the vacant charge, and soon after entered upon the duties of pastor. The war of the Revolution, however, prevented his formal installation, and, a large portion of his time being occupied as chaplain in the militia, the public services of the church were very irregular. In consequence of these facts, the informal society in Newburgh appears to have maintained a separate organization during the war, Elder William Lawrence performing the pastoral duties.

Immediately after the war, this informal society, strengthened by the addition of several persons who became permanent residents on the disbandment of the army, obtained the building which had been erected by the army as a store-house for clothing, where it appears to have held public worship in the winter of 1783 or spring of 1784. The records of the church state that divine service was held here in 1784, and that the congregation was formally organized in the same year. The minutes of the meeting held for the purpose of organization are as follows:

"In pursuance of an act entitled 'An act to enable all Religious Denominations in the State to appoint Trustees, who shall be a body corporate for the purpose of taking care of the Temporalities of their respective congregations and for other purposes,' passed the 6th day of April, 1784, the congregation or Religious Society desirous of forming themselves into a regular well-constituted congregation or society, agreeable to the Canon of the Church of Scotland, at Newburgh, did, on the 12th day of July last past—being stated attendants on Divine worship by Elder William Lawrence—advertise a meeting of the said congregation, agreeable to the said Act, to meet at the house of Adolph DeGrove, for the purpose of electing, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, Trustees for the good purposes intended and mentioned in the said act; and being convened at the time and place aforesaid, did, in the first place, by plurality of voices, nominate and appoint Mr. Asa Steward to act with the said William Lawrence as Returning Officers, who proceeded to open the poll, and after taking that part of the said congregation or society convened on the occasion and present agreeable to said Act—Adolph DeGrove, Daniel Hudson, Thomas Palmer, Joseph Coleman, and Isaac Belknap, were appointed and legally elected Trustees for the said congregation or society, agreeable to the said Act. 2d. We then proceeded to elect a Clerk to insert the certificate of the Returning officers.

"Be it remembered, that we, William Lawrence and Asa Steward, having been legally elected and appointed the Returning officers at the election held at the house of Adolph DeGrove, at Newburgh, the 12th day of August, 1784, for the purpose of electing Trustees for taking care of the Temporalities of the congregation or Religious Society at Newburgh, aforesaid, agreeable to an Act entitled 'An Act,' etc., do hereby certify, that Adolph DeGrove, Daniel Hudson, Thomas Palmer, Joseph Coleman, and Isaac Belknap, were legally and unanimously elected as Trustees for the purpose aforesaid, and that the said persons so elected, and their successors forever hereafter, shall be known by the name, style, and title of the Trustees of the Presbyterian Congregation at Newburgh. In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals the 12th day of August, in the year of our Lord, 1784."

As the congregation was quite too feeble in means and membership for the support of a pastor, it was resolved at a meeting held Feb. 8, 1785, to unite for this purpose with the church of New Windsor. The records declare that "the congregation assembled at the meeting-house, William Lawrence, ruling elder, being moderator. It was agreed

- "1. To join in union with the congregation of New Windsor.
- "2. That the Trustees for the congregation of Newburgh be empowered to form a union with the Trustees of New Windsor congregation, for promoting the preaching of the Gospel, not exceeding seven years, nor under five."

A joint meeting of the trustees named was soon after held (Feb. 11, 1785) at the house of Adolph DeGrove, at which Abel Belknap presided. Daniel Hudson, Joseph Coleman, Isaac Belknap, and Adolph DeGrove represented Newburgh, and Abel Belknap, Samuel Logan, Leonard Nicoll, Silas White, Benjamin Birdsall, Isaac Schultz, and Samuel Brewster represented New Windsor. After conversation it was 'unanimously agreed between the trustees of the said congregations for joining the union for seven years.'

In April, 1785, application was made to the Presbytery for the appointment of Mr. Close to be the stated supply of both churches. The request was granted, and he continued to labor here until 1796. During the first year of his service Mr. Close preached in Newburgh one-third of his time, for which he was paid £23. He was succeeded by the Rev. Isaac Lewis, who served the congregation as stated supply until the spring of 1800, when he became the pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Cooperstown. On May 6, 1800, the Rev. Jonathan Freeman was installed pastor of the united church, and the first pastor of that of Newburgh. He resigned the charge in 1804. His successor was the Rev. Eleazer Burnet, who was ordained and installed pastor Nov. 20, 1805, and who held the station until his death, in 1806. The Rev. Dr. John Johnston, then a licentiate, first preached in Newburgh about the time of Mr. Burnet's decease, and occasionally supplied the united churches during the winter of 1806-7. He was ordained and installed as pastor on Aug. 5, 1807.

In the spring of 1810 the connection between the two churches was dissolved; and the services of Mr. Johnston were henceforth confined to Newburgh. Here he continued to labor with unwearied diligence and great success until February, 1855, when he was prostrated by severe illness, which subsequently terminated his life.

The congregation was supplied during Dr. Johnston's illness and until the summer of 1856 by Mr. S. H. McMullen, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Philadelphia. On September 20th of that year the Rev. W. T. Sprole, D.D., was chosen pastor, and on October 28th following was installed. He resigned in July, 1872, and was succeeded by Rev. W. K. Hall, who was installed in October of that year.

The building in which public worship was first held was one erected by the commissary-general as a clothing store-house while the army of the Revolution was encamped here. It stood on the site subsequently occupied by the old first church, and was destroyed by fire about the year 1790. Dr. Johnston says it was burnt on a Sabbath day, after service had been held in it. From an inventory of their corporate property in a return made to the Legislature, the building appears to have belonged to the congregation in 1787, and, from the statement in the records that the "congregation assembled at the meeting-house" (1785), it is probable that it was transferred to them soon after the war.

There seems to have been some difference of opinion in regard to the location of the church after the old building was burnt; but in February, 1791, the trustees voted that "the lot of land where the house formerly stood, with the addition that Mr. Smith proposes to make, be accepted in preference to any other location" as the site for a new church. On December 20th of the same year the trustees agreed to erect a church 50 by 55 feet, with the addition of a steeple. The ground was staked out May 25, 1792, and on the 31st of the same month the deed for the lot was executed by Mr. Benjamin Smith. During the interval between the destruction of the old building and the occupation of the new church, the minutes state that the meetings of the congregation were "held at St. George's church,"—i.e. the old Lutheran church. The new building must have been occupied in 1793, as it is of record that during that year pews were erected and sold. But the interior of the building remained in a half-finished condition until after the settlement of Dr. Johnston, who says that it was without gallery, plastering, or pulpit, "a mere shell." "I often preached standing on a carpenter's bench, with a few boards standing in front on which to rest the precious Bible." Very soon after Dr. Johnston was settled the interior was properly fitted up, and made more tenable. In 1828 an unsuccessful effort was made to erect a new church of stone, 66 by 70 feet, at a cost not exceeding $9000. Finally, as more accommodation was imperatively demanded, it was determined to repair the old building, which was done in 1828. Formerly the pulpit was at the north end, and the pews were old-fashioned square ones. Though the audience-room was unchanged in size, the introduction of slips enabled it to hold a larger number than it did before. Under this alteration the building remained until its removal, in July, 1871.

On July 25, 1857, the trustees, at a regular meeting, adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

"Whereas, The circumstances of the church and congregation render it imperative that a new edifice be erected for their accommodation, and having the assent and concurrence of the pew-holders and members, as appears from the subscriptions for said object, therefore

"Resolved, That we proceed to accomplish the same, according to the plan and specifications drawn by Mr. F. C. Withers, which has been submitted for the consideration and adoption of the subscribers, and that the following persons be a building committee to supervise the same as carry it forward, viz.: S. R. Van Duzer, E. R. Johnes, J. J. Monell, Henry Ball, Isaac Stanton, and George Clark.

"Resolved, That the church edifice be erected upon the lot on the northwest corner of Grand and South Streets."

The site fixed upon was purchased, and a contract was made with Mr. George Veitch, builder, for the construction of the new edifice for $27,500. The work was begun Aug. 8, 1857. The building was dedicated Nov. 4, 1858, and on Thanksgiving morning (Nov. 10) the iron cross was fixed on the spire.

The building is in the early geometrical style of Gothic art, and is composed of a nave with clere-story, north and south aisle, a tower and stone spire at the east end of the north aisle, and a porch on the south. A lecture-room and a minister's room are provided at the west end of the building. The walls are of blue-stone laid in random courses, and graystone dressings to the copings, windows, doorways, buttresses, water-tables, etc. The pews are of yellow pine, and afford comfortable accommodations for 830 persons. The principal dimensions of the building, internally, are as follows, viz.: nave, 97 feet long, 60 feet high, and 25 feet wide. The aisles are 84 feet long and 17 feet wide. The lecture-room is 42 feet long and 26 feet wide. The tower is 20 feet and 8 inches square at the base, and its height is 63 feet, making, with the spire and cross, a total of 135 feet from the ground. The extreme length of the building, including lecture-room, is 159 feet; and its width, including porch, 85 feet. The total cost of the building, with interior fittings complete, including land, iron fence, bell, etc., was about $43,750. An organ, built by Geo. Jardine & Son, of New York, and costing $3000, was obtained in September, 1860. It only remains to add that the congregation sold their old place of worship to the Union Church, in March, 1859.

REV. JOHN JOHNSTON, D.D., was born in the township of Montgomery, Ulster Co., N. Y. (now Crawford township, Orange County), on the 28th of January, 1778. His great-great-grandfather went from England to Ireland in connection with the army under King William, and fought in the battle of the Boyne, July 1, 1690. When the army was disbanded he remained in Ireland, and settled in the county of Cavan. There the father of Rev. Dr. Johnston, William Johnston, the youngest of thirteen children, was born Dec. 1, 1743. In 1774 he emigrated to this country and settled in the province of New York, intending to return to his native land at the end of seven years. But meeting Jane Moncriff, who came to America in company with her brother Charles in 1775, he made her his wife in 1777, and was compelled by the troublous condition of the times, and the force of family ties and connections, to abandon his original idea of returning to Ireland. He had a good education, and was employed nearly seven years in teaching school in one neighborhood. He was an industrious and worthy man, and passed most of his life farming in Montgomery.

Mr. Johnston passed the earlier years of his life at work upon the paternal farm, and often engaged in plowing from morning till night when so small that he was compelled to seek assistance in extricating the plow from the furrow. Before he was nine years of age himself and a younger sister traveled four miles a day, winter and summer, to attend the nearest district school of their locality. In the fall of 1794 he entered a neighboring store for the winter, and in the spring, being offered by his father a choice between a business life and an education, he chose the latter, and after working hard on the farm for the summer, on Dec. 14, 1795, he entered upon a course of study under the direction of Rev. Jonathan Freeman, pastor of the congregation at Hopewell. In the spring of 1797 he entered an academy at Montgomery in charge of Reuben Neely, where he remained two years. At the expiration of that time he attended the academy at Kingston, Ulster Co., taught by Timothy Smith, continuing there until the sudden and unexpected death of his father. This sad visitation of Providence, occurring at such an unfortunate period of Dr. Johnston's career, produced a train of thought solemn and trying, and he was often led to inquire, "What shall I do—what is best to be done?" It was finally decided, however, that in spite of the necessary sacrifices that had to be made his educational training should continue, and that he should enter Princeton College.

In the latter part of October, 1799, he left his mother's house, about twenty miles west of Newburgh, and did not reach Princeton until the next Saturday week, progressing as fast as the public conveyances would carry him. He entered the junior class of the college. Among his classmates were Nicholas Biddle, of Philadelphia, Dr. John E. Cook, of Virginia, Rev. Dr. John McDowell, of Philadelphia, Henry E. Watkins, Edward D. Watts, and John G. Gamble, of Virginia. Dr. Johnston was graduated in the class of 1801, and having decided to enter the ministry, he returned to Princeton to study divinity under Dr. Smith. But owing to the destruction of the college building by fire on March 6, 1802, the theological students were scattered, and a few months later Dr. Johnston arranged to continue his studies under Dr. McMillan, in western Pennsylvania. In the summer of 1803 he was taken under the care of the Presbytery of Ohio as a candidate for the gospel ministry, but his means being exhausted, he was forced to intermit his theological studies for a time, and to engage in teaching. Securing a position as tutor in a gentleman's family in Maryland, he remained there until May, 1805, when he returned to Princeton and resumed his studies, being also appointed tutor of the sophomore class in the college. He continued in this position until September, 1806, when he resigned and was licensed to preach the gospel by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, in the city of Trenton, on October 8th of the same year. Returning to his home he received appointments from the Presbytery of Hudson to preach in Newburgh, New Windsor, Florida, and Pleasant Valley, all of which congregations were then vacant. Soon after he received and accepted a call as pastor from the united congregations of New Windsor and Newburgh, and on Jan. 27, 1807, was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of Daniel Bull, of Orange County.

Mr. Johnston had preached several times in Newburgh and New Windsor at the close of 1806 and the beginning of 1807. He began his regular service on April 1st, although he was not ordained and installed until Aug. 5, 1807, the services of ordination taking place at New Windsor. He took up his residence in Newburgh in May, 1807, and resided at that place until his death, and from December, 1813, in the same house. In the month of April, 1810, he was released from the charge at New Windsor, the congregation of Newburgh having presented through the Presbytery a call for the whole of his services. He continued to discharge the duties of pastor over the Newburgh Church for the remainder of his life.

It would be beyond the scope of this work to describe in detail the pastoral experiences and labors of Dr. Johnston during his long service as a Christian minister in Newburgh. At the outset of his ministry the state of morals in the city was lamentably bad. The Society of Druids, an association organized to teach and propagate infidel views, was flourishing, and infidel publications were scattered there broadcast; intemperance and drinking to excess even at funerals was not uncommon; the Sabbath was not regarded, and games and sports of all kinds were indulged in on that day. Dr. Johnston met this state of affairs in a resigned, Christian spirit, labored modestly and faithfully in his proper sphere to overcome the tendencies of the times, and from that time throughout the long years of a devoted ministry his influence for good in the community was immeasurable. Frequent revivals occurred under his pastorate, and many were added to the church. Besides his home labors he performed much missionary work under the direction of his Presbytery, and he was many times a delegate to the synods and assemblies of his denomination. He was possessed of a genial and happy spirit, and made many friends in the community in which he passed his life. In 1840 he was elected a trustee of the College of New Jersey at Princeton, a position in which he felt great pride and which he held until his demise. One of the last public acts of his life was to attend the session of the board of trustees at Princeton. In 1848 the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Lafayette College, Easton, Pa. He preached his last discourse on Jan. 14, 1855. During the closing months of his life he was unable to appear in the pulpit, but his salary was regularly continued to him by his congregation as some recognition of his long and faithful services. He died on Aug. 23, 1855, and over his remains was erected a handsome monument, having, among other words, this inscription: "The Citizens of Newburgh, cherishing an affectionate veneration for one who for nearly half a century adorned his sacred office by his purity and fidelity, and in every relation of life commanded the respect of all who knew him, have united in erecting this monument to his memory."

It is fitting to add in this connection a few remarks regarding her who for nearly half a century was the partner of Dr. Johnston's joys and sorrows, the helpmeet of his home. Her wise and affectionate counsels aided him in doubtful and difficult cases. She managed with discretion his domestic concerns, sought out the poor and afflicted and supplied their wants, and visited, nursed, and watched with the sick and the dying. She was a faithful co-worker with him in the discharge of his ministerial duties, and contributed largely to his success and usefulness among his people during forty-eight years. She died March 2, 1857. The children were ten in number, of whom six are now living. Mrs. Lewis D. Lockwood and Mrs. George Lawson, of Newburgh, are daughters.

Second Presbyterian Church.—The proposal to organize a Second Presbyterian Church was first discussed in 1837, but nothing was done until April, 1838, when Dr. Johnston preached an earnest and forcible sermon on the subject. At his suggestion a meeting was held to consider the propriety of sending a colony from the old church. The meeting was held in the First church, May 15, 1837, William Walsh being chairman, and J. H. Wells, secretary. After discussion, it was unanimously "Resolved, That measures be immediately taken to forward the enterprise."

Accordingly, Messrs. J. H. Corwin, Abel Belknap, and O. M. Smith were appointed a committee to ascertain the number of persons willing to unite for this purpose. On May 22d, at an adjourned meeting, the following-named persons were reported as ready to associate and walk together as a church, viz.: O. M. Smith, Helen M. Smith, Saml. Tuthill, Sarah Tuthill, Jefferson Roe, Mary Roe, Eliza C. Boice, William H. Wells, Robert Sterling, Isabella Sterling, Asa Sterling, John H. Corwin, Cynthia Corwin, James P. Buchanan, Sarah Buchanan, Daniel D. T. Blake, D. McDowell, Abigail Waters, J. R. Hardenburgh, Wm. M. Johnson, Jane E. Johnson, Eli Corwin, Jr., Abel Belknap, Sarah M. Belknap, Henry Tice, Jr., Charlotte Tice, Edgar Perkins, Ann Forsyth, Abigail Wells, William Waller, Henry Vail, Seth Belknap, George M. Gregory, Hiram K. Chapman, Jane Chapman, Peter H. Foster, Mary S. Foster, William Townsend, Lydia C. Parkham, George T. Hoagland, Betsey Harris, Mary E. Waterfield, James H. Reynor, Job Clark.

It was immediately and unanimously resolved to apply to the Presbytery, which was to meet on June 9th, for an organization as the Second Presbyterian Church of Newburgh. Mr. William Sterling was deputed to present the application and to ask for supplies for six months from the Presbytery. The request was granted, and the church was organized June 15th, by a committee of the North River Presbytery, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Johnston, Prime, and Ostrum. The following persons were chosen ruling elders, viz.: J. H. Corwin, Hiram K. Chapman, Abel Belknap, James P. Buchanan. Mr. Ostrum gave the charge to the church, and Mr. S. I. Prime to the elders.

The first public service was held in the court-room in the academy, when Rev. S. I. Prime preached from Amos vii. 5: "By whom shall Jacob arise, for he is small." The pulpit was for some time supplied by the Presbytery. On August 20th, Messrs. Peter H. Foster, Jefferson Roe, Edgar Perkins, Samuel Tuthill, O. M. Smith, and Henry Tice, Jr., were chosen trustees.

During the greater part of 1838 and 1839 the Rev. Abram C. Baldwin supplied the pulpit. In the former year the prospects of the infant church were very seriously affected by the disruption of the Presbytery. Most of those concerned in starting it, who had strong Old-School affinities, returned again to the old church, which adhered to the Old-School Assembly. The Second Church recognized that which styled itself the constitutional. Though weakened by this cause, the church made vigorous efforts to grow. The Rev. William Hill was the first pastor, and filled the office until the winter of 1843, when he was deposed by his Presbytery for what was deemed heretical doctrine on the subject of Christian perfection. After a vacancy of some months, the Rev. John H. Lewis became the pastor, and discharged the duties of the office very acceptably until called to Bethlehem in 1845. He was succeeded for a short time by the Rev. J. C. Beach, and next by the Rev. John Gray, who remained as supply until the spring of 1851, when a division arose in the congregation on the question of his settlement as pastor. Before this matter was adjusted a vote of the church was taken, and by a majority of one it was resolved no longer to receive supplies. This vote closed the doors of the meeting-house and virtually disbanded the society, which had never become strong.

In 1840-41 the society erected the meeting-house at the corner of High Street and Western Avenue, at a cost of $6600, in which divine worship was observed until the church ceased to exist. The building was designed to accommodate about 600 persons. It was sold, in 1852, to the Second Methodist Episcopal Church.

Calvary Presbyterian Church.—The circumstances which led to the organization of this congregation, as well as its subsequent history, are briefly stated in a historical sketch, which was published by the trustees in connection with their annual report, August, 1857. In this paper it is said that the Rev. S. H. McMullin, who had served as supply during the illness of the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, performed the duties of his engagement until about three months after Dr. Johnston's death. After hearing several other candidates for the vacant pastorate, "a day was fixed," says the sketch to which reference is made, "on which, according to notice given, the congregation were to select a pastor. When, however, all had assembled, a question arose as to whether females should be permitted to vote, which was decided in the affirmative. The vote was taken and resulted, 100 for Mr. McMullin and 74 for another person. Messrs. William K. Mailler and Robert Sterling were then appointed commissioners to prosecute the call before the Presbytery, and the meeting adjourned.

"At the meeting of the Presbytery, when the call was considered, a remonstrance was presented by the minority of the congregation against the settlement of Mr. McMullin. In consequence of this remonstrance the Presbytery intimated to the commissioners that they would not, in all probability, permit the call to be prosecuted, and it was withdrawn without any formal action being taken.

"Immediately after the return of the commissioners a meeting of the congregation was held to hear their report, when it was resolved, by a majority of votes present, 'that the commissioners be directed to prosecute the call.' The Presbytery, however, continued to regard the call as inexpedient; and a meeting, called for the purpose of its consideration, failed to accomplish the result desired.

"The situation of affairs becoming known, the following paper, asking for certificates of membership and dismission, was presented to the Session of the church on the 27th day of August:

"To the Session of the First Presbyterian Church of the Village of Newburgh:

"On the first day of September, 1856, the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery of North river met in the session-room of the First Presbyterian Church. Present, B. T. Phillips, Wm. H. Kirk, F. T. Williams, ministers; and Peter V. B. Fowler and Benj. Tyler, elders. The petition of the persons above named was presented, asking to be organized into a Presbyterian Church, to be known as 'The Calvary Presbyterian Church of Newburgh;' and after the examination of their certificates it was, in motion, 'Resolved, That the request be granted.' The applicants then formally agreed and covenanted to walk together in a church relation, according to the acknowledged doctrine and order of the Presbyterian Church. Messrs. Wm. G. Gillespie and John McClelland were then unanimously elected ruling elders by the congregation. Mr. Gillespie was duly ordained, and Mr. McClelland and Mr. Gillespie (the former having previously served as an elder in the First Presbyterian Church) were formally installed as elders of the Calvary Presbyterian Church of Newburgh.

"On the 15th day of September, Rev. S. H. McMullin was unanimously elected pastor of the church. The call was presented to him at a meeting of the presbytery, held at Buttermilk Falls on Tuesday, Oct. 14th, and accepted by him; and on the 16th day of the same month he was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry and installed pastor of the church in the court-house at Newburgh. The services on the occasion were conducted by Rev. Dr. Jones, of Philadelphia, who preached the sermon; Rev. E. K. Brower, who offered the ordaining prayer and proposed the constitutional questions; Rev. B. T. Phillips, who gave the charge to the people; and Rev. F. C. Masters, who gave the charge to the pastor.

"On the 20th October an election for trustees was held in the court-house,—Elders John McClelland and Wm. G. Gillespie presiding,—which resulted in the choice of Messrs. Moses Upright, Wm. K. Mailler, Walter H. Gorham, Wessel S. Gerard, Peter Ward, and Charles Johnston.

"The first meeting of the session of the church was held on Friday evening, Oct. 17th, at the residence of Mrs. C. Sly, in High Street. At the meeting of the session on the 31st October the following persons were admitted on profession of faith: Mrs. E. C. Gillespie, Mrs. M. A. Casement, Miss M. Casement; and the following by certificate: Asa Sterling, Phoebe E. Sterling, Margaret Sterling, Mary Sterling, Nancy Sterling, Robert Sterling, Maria Sterling, Wm. K. Mailler, Hannah P. Mailler, Mary E. Halstead, Zipporah Clark, Ann Barr, John L. Westervelt, Catharine Westervelt, Susan A. Jessup, Margaret Shields, Jane Shields, John Little, Ann Little, Isabella M. McMullin, Benj. Tyler, Julianna Tyler, Mary Boyd, Marietta Watkins, Jane Ellen Roe, Maria Minor, Deborah Blake, William and Sarah Gervin.

"The first communion of the church was celebrated on the first Sabbath in November, 1856, at which time the membership had reached 81.

"Soon after the organization of the church it was determined to erect a suitable edifice, the public services in the mean time being held in the court-house. A subscription was opened and a sufficient sum subscribed during the winter of 1856 to justify the trustees in purchasing a site on Liberty Street and procuring a plan for the building. From different plans which were submitted, one drawn by Messrs. Gerard & Boyd was selected; and, estimates having been invited, the contract for erecting the building was awarded to Mr. John Little. A building committee of three trustees, viz.: Messrs. Mailler, Gorham, and Ward, was appointed; and Mr. Withers, architect, was engaged to superintend the work. The ground was broken in the month of April, 1857; and the corner-stone laid, with appropriate exercises, on the 9th of July following, at 2 P.M. The services commenced by singing the hymn entitled 'Beyond the starry skies.' Rev. Dr. McLaren followed with a very appropriate address to the Throne of Grace, and a portion of the Scriptures was read by the Rev. Dr. McCarrell. Chas. Johnston, on behalf of the trustees, then read a statement showing the organization and progress of the church, which was followed by the hymn 'Let every heart rejoice and sing.' The Rev. Mr. Crowell, of Philadelphia, then delivered an address, which was followed by the laying of the corner-stone by the Rev. Dr. Forsyth, who, on account of the ill health of Mr. McMullin, had been selected by the trustees for that duty. Dr. Forsyth introduced the ceremony by a short address, and was followed by Rev. Alex. R. Thompson. The exercises closed with an anthem by the choir, and the benediction by Dr. Forsyth. The building was dedicated on the 24th of February, 1858. The services were opened by an anthem by the choir, and invocation by the pastor. The Rev. Dr. Sprole then read a selection from the Scriptures, which was followed by singing the 504th hymn. Prayer was then offered by Rev. Dr. McCarrell, and the 502d hymn sung. Rev. Dr. Murray, of Elizabeth, N. J., then delivered a discourse from 1 Kings vi. 4, and vii. 68. At the conclusion the congregation arose, and with impressive words the speaker dedicated the house to the worship of God. The services were concluded with prayer by the pastor and the singing of a hymn.

"The style of the church edifice is that sometimes known among architects as Flemish, having, however, many of the peculiarities of the Gothic. It has a front of 56 feet on Liberty Street, running back to the depth of 96 feet, with a lecture-room in the rear. The audience-room is 72 by 52 feet, the lecture-room 62 by 22 feet. The aspect of the interior is that of severe simplicity. A trestle-work supports the roof, obviating the necessity of pillars, thus affording an unobstructed view from every part of the house. All the wood-work is grained, the pews being of chestnut oiled and grained so as to retain the natural color and grain of the wood; and the finish throughout has a pleasing effect. The cost of the building, lot, fencing, furniture, etc., was about $21,500."

Mr. McMullin continued in pastoral relation with the church until Jan. 24, 1860, when, in consequence of ill health, he tendered his resignation, to take effect May following. On December 19th of the same year Rev. Judson H. Hopkins was installed, and subsequently served until July, 1864, when, at his request, the relation was dissolved. He was without a successor until March, 1866, when the Rev. George S. Bishop, of Trenton, N. J., was installed, and continued in the relation until October, 1872, when, at his own request, and by consent of the church, he was relieved of the charge by the Presbytery. His successor, Rev. Jeremiah Searle, of Peekskill, was elected in February, and installed May 6, 1873.

To its real estate the society added, in 1867, a parsonage at a cost of $9000; and to its appointments, during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Bishop, an organ and a bell.

Union Presbyterian Church.—This church was founded July 13, 1837, by a colony of twenty-seven persons who belonged to the First Associate Reformed Church. Their names are as follows: E. W. Farrington, Mrs. Farrington, Thornton M. Niven, Mrs. Niven, John Wise, Mrs. Wise, John Beveridge, Mrs. Beveridge, Arnold McNear, Mrs. McNear, James Johnson, Mrs. Johnson, Matthew Sims, Mrs. Sims, James Blacklaw, Mrs. Blacklaw, James Danskin, Mrs. Danskin, Stewart Kelly, Mrs. Kelly, John James Monell, Miss E. Cypher, Mrs. E. Purdy, Miss C. Anderson, Mrs. Catharine Stewart, Mrs. N. Barclay.

The meeting for organization was held in the First Associate Reformed church (July 13th), and was conducted by Rev. Dr. McJimpsey and Rev. James Mairs, constituting a committee of the Presbytery. The sermon was by Dr. McJimpsey, from John xvi. 7. The following persons were elected as ruling elders, viz.: John Beveridge, E. Ward Farrington, Thornton M. Niven, John Wise. On December 5th following the Rev. John Forsyth, Jr., was installed pastor, the services being held in the academy where the congregation met for worship until the completion of the church edifice. The Rev. Dr. McJimpsey preached the sermon; the Rev. Drs. Wallace and McLaren gave the charges to the people and the pastor.

A church edifice was erected on a lot at the corner of Water and Clinton Streets, which had been given to the congregation for this purpose. Ground was broken July 27, 1837, and the building was dedicated May 1, 1838, when a suitable sermon was delivered by the Rev. Dr. M. N. McLaren, then of Hamptonburgh. Here the congregation continued to worship until March, 1859, when the property was sold to the rector and vestry of St. George's Church. The last time it was used by Union Church the sermon was preached by the first pastor, Dr. Forsyth.

Dr. Forsyth was elected to a professorship in the College of New Jersey at the end of the year 1846, but he did not retire from the pastorate until near the autumn of 1847. He was succeeded by Mr. Abraham R. Van Nest, a recent graduate of the theological seminary at New Brunswick, who was ordained and installed pastor on June 20, 1848. Mr. Van Nest remained here about a year. He was called by the Reformed Dutch Church, Twenty-first Street, New York, and having accepted the invitation he removed thither in the spring of 1849. Almost immediately upon his departure, the Rev. Dr. Robert McCartee, formerly of Canal Street Church, but at this time of Goshen, was called, and having accepted the invitation was installed Aug. 17, 1849. Dr. McCartee labored here with great acceptance and success until 1855, when he removed to New York to take the pastorate of the Twenty-fifth Street Associate Reformed Church. Union Church was supplied by various persons during the first six months or more after Dr. McCartee's removal, particularly by the Rev. Mr. Cunningham. Finally the Rev. Mr. Jack, who had graduated in the seminary in the spring of 1856, was called, ordained, and installed June 2, 1856, by the Presbytery of New York. On this occasion the sermon was preached by the Rev. John Brash, of New York, who also proposed the usual questions to the candidate, and offered the ordaining prayer. The charge to the pastor was given by the Rev. G. M. McEachron, of Mongaup Valley, and that to the people by Rev. Dr. Forsyth. Mr. Jack was succeeded in 1869 by Rev. Wendell Prime, and the latter by Rev. C. C. Hall, who was ordained and installed Dec. 2, 1875.

In October, 1859, in consequence of the union of the Associate Reformed and the Associate Churches, out of which the United Presbyterian Church grew, the congregation of Union Church was induced to unite with the Old School branch of the Presbyterian Church, and is now a component part of that body.

The old First Presbyterian edifice was purchased in March, 1859, by the Union Church, and was occupied by the society until July, 1871, when it was removed to give place to the present edifice. The work of removal was begun July 5, 1871, and on the 13th the last timbers of the old house were prostrated. The corner-stone of the new edifice was laid on Friday, Sept. 15th, following. The exercises were conducted by the Masonic fraternity, G. Fred Wiltzie officiating as Grand Master of the "Grand Lodge of Ceremony." The dedication was on Tuesday, Sept. 24, 1872, on which occasion the service was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Forsyth. Rev. Dr. Ormiston read the 48th Psalm, and the Rev. Wendell Prime the dedicatory prayer. The discourse was by the Rev. Dr. Hall, from 2 Peter iii. 2; the closing prayer by Rev. J. B. Wakeley.

The edifice is of Gothic architecture, from plans by Elkanah K. Shaw, of Newburgh. It is in the form of a T, and embraces an auditorium with gallery and UNION PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Sabbath-school and lecture-rooms. The auditorium, fronting on First Street, is 61 feet wide by 68 feet deep, 30 feet ceiling, and has, with the gallery, a seating capacity of 1000. The Sabbath-school room, fronting on Montgomery Street, is 33 by 81 feet, 22 feet ceiling, with seating for 600 pupils. The lecture-room is 27 by 57 feet, 15 feet ceiling, seating 300,—total seating capacity 1900. The windows throughout are of stained glass, the painting is in fresco, the floors of chestnut walnut oiled, and the entire finish cheerful. The walls of the building are of hard smooth brick with brownstone trimmings. The First Street front has two towers 18 by 18, the east 100, and the west 75 feet in height; the former contains the bell and city clock. The contracts for construction were executed by Thos. Shaw & Sons, carpenters, for $18,000, and Thomas Dobbin, mason, for $23,000; in addition to which sums about $19,000 was expended for furniture, carpets, furnaces, gas and water fixtures, etc., making the total cost $60,000. The organ (Reuben Midmer, builder) was the gift of John Galt and John G. Wilkinson. Its cost, including painting, was about $5000.

First Presbyterian Church, Middlehope.—The project of building a Presbyterian church at Middlehope was proposed in January, 1859, and was readily embraced by several of the active members of the Presbyterian Church at Marlborough. The enterprise having received sufficient encouragement to warrant further proceeding, a meeting was held (March 12th), at which Nathaniel T. Hawkins, Peter V. B. Fowler, James Rodman, and James O. Conklin were appointed "to contract for and build a church, and to take such measures to raise funds and to carry out and finish the work as they may think proper." This committee soon after awarded the contract for building to James D. Purdy, and that for painting to Ward & Leonard. The building was completed in September, 1859, and dedicated October 6th, at an adjourned meeting of the Presbytery of North River. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Rev. W. T. Sprole, D.D., reading of the Scriptures by Rev. B. T. Phillips, and the dedicatory prayer by Rev. S. H. Jagger. The building is 30 by 40 feet, with a lobby 8 by 20 feet. Its cost, including furniture, was about $2500.

First Associate Reformed Church.—Until near the close of the last century the adherents of the Associate Reformed Church resident in Newburgh were connected with the church of Little Britain, which was founded in 1763. Measures were taken to gather a congregation in 1797, and a church was formed consisting of the following persons, viz.: Hugh Walsh and his wife Catharine Walsh, Daniel Niven and his wife Jane Niven, Robert Boyd and his wife Eleanor Boyd, Janet Boyd, Robert Gourlay and his wife Margaret Gourlay, Derick Amerman, Robert W. Jones, Elizabeth Belknap, wife of Isaac Belknap, Samuel Belknap, Hugh Spier, Alexander Telford, and George Telford. The exercises in connection with the formal organization of the church were probably conducted by the Rev. Thomas G. Smith, at that time pastor of Little Britain.

The legal incorporation of the congregation did not take place until Feb. 7, 1803, when Messrs. Derick Amerman, Hugh Walsh, Daniel Niven, Robert Gourlay, Robert Boyd, John Brown, Isaac Belknap, Jr., John Colter, and Robert W. Jones were elected trustees. The ruling elders at this period were Daniel Niven, Samuel Belknap, Hugh Spier, John Shaw, and Derick Amerman.

The first pastor of the church was the Rev. Robert Kerr, who is reported to have been a preacher of more than usual ability. He was a native of Ireland, and had been settled in the ministry in that country. He came to the United States in 1797, and was received by the Associate Reformed Presbytery of New York, Oct. 10, 1797, and probably began his labors in Newburgh at that time, as steps were taken at that meeting of Presbytery to give him a regular call. He was installed pastor April 6, 1799. He resigned his charge Jan. 14, 1802. He subsequently removed to the South, and labored "with great diligence, approbation, and success" within the bounds of the Associate Reformed Synod of Carolina until his death, which occurred in Savannah, June 11, 1805, when on his way to the General Synod.

Mr. Kerr was succeeded by the Rev. James Scrimgeour, who was installed as pastor on Aug. 11, 1803. He was a native of Scotland, and had been settled in the ministry for seven or eight years at North Berwick. The loss of health obliged him to resign his charge and the work of his profession for some years. Up to this time he had been one of the most popular preachers in Scotland. Having recovered his health in a good degree, he was induced by the Rev. Dr. John M. Mason to emigrate to America in 1802. He remained in the pastoral care of the church of Newburgh until 1812, when he accepted a call to Little Britain, and was installed there on June 24th of that year. In this charge he remained until his death in 1825.

A vacancy occurred after Mr. Scrimgeour's removal of about four years, during which time various unsuccessful efforts were made to obtain a pastor. Calls were addressed to Rev. Robert McCartee and to Rev. John Knox, then licentiates and graduates of the theological seminary; but finally an invitation was given to the Rev. Arthur I. Stansbury, which he accepted, and was installed Dec. 4, 1816. Mr. Stansbury's pastorate was very brief. He resigned his charge in April, 1818, having accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Albany. The Rev. James Chrystie, minister of the Reformed Dutch Church of Union Village, Washington Co., having been invited to succeed Mr. Stansbury, accepted the call, and was installed Sept. 20, 1818. He remained as pastor, winning the warm attachment of the congregation, until October, 1821, when he joined the Reformed Presbyterian Church and removed to Albany. His successor, the late Rev. Dr. McCarrell, commenced his labors here as a supply Dec. 4, 1822. He was ordained and installed pastor March 14, 1823. The sermon was by the Rev. Dr. John McJimpsey, the ordination prayer was offered by the Rev. James Scrimgeour, the charges to pastor and people were delivered by the Rev. James Mairs, of Galway, N. Y. Dr. McCarrell faithfully discharged the duties of his office until his death. His successor, the Rev. Thomas T. Farrington, began his labors July 1, 1869, and continued until his death, June, 1875. He was succeeded by the Rev. John MacNaughton, Dec. 24, 1875.

The first edifice occupied by the church was erected on a lot given by James Renwick, of New York, and which now forms part of the farm of the late Capt. Henry Robinson. The church stood a little to the north and west of the gambrel-roofed house, with its side on the river, which forms so conspicuous an object on the hill west of the shipyards. It was surrounded by magnificent old apple and pear-trees, and in form was very similar to the First Presbyterian church at that time, having a square tower on the south end. Mr. Renwick deeded the lot, which was 200 feet square, to William Renwick, Dr. John Kemp, Rev. John M. Mason, Alexander Robertson, Alexander Hosack, John Turner, Jr., George Lindsay, Robert Gosman, of the city of New York, and Hugh Walsh, George Gardner, Robert Gourlay, Daniel Niven, Robert Boyd, Robert Ferguson, Thomas Tait, Robert W. Jones, and Alexander Murray, of Newburgh, as "trustees appointed by the said James Renwick for the Presbyterian Church of Newburgh, in connection with the Associate (Reformed) Synod in the United States of America, for the sole use and content that the trustees and members of said church should erect a church for Christian worship, and also a school-house for the instruction of youth." The church was completed in 1798, but no effort was ever made to erect a school-house, the locality being wholly unsuited for such an edifice. As the growth of the village was more towards the north than the south, the church came to be quite out of town and very inconveniently located for the great mass of its members. Accordingly, in 1821, measures were taken towards the erection of a new church within the village; the old building was taken down in the year just named, and while the new one was being built the congregation met for worship in the old courtroom in the academy. The present edifice was dedicated with appropriate services on Jan. 4, 1822, on which occasion the Rev. James Scrimgeour preached from Hosea viii. 17. The lot on which the church was erected was the gift of Hugh Walsh, one of the founders of the society, who also gave the largest portion of the lot on which the parsonage stands, and which was erected upon it in 1820. Internally the church is unaltered with the exception that it was repaired in 1879, and the location of the pulpit changed from the east to the west end of the auditorium; but externally some change has been made since its erection. The cupola was completed in 1834, and a bell procured. The lecture-room, on the north side of the church, was built about 1840.

REV. JOSEPH MCCARRELL, D.D., was a native of Shippensburg, Pa., and was born on the 9th of July, 1795. His parents were warmly attached members of the Associate Reformed Church of that place, and that region was one whose history was connected with the earliest annals of the denomination in the communion of which Dr. McCarrell lived and died, and for which he had an unchangeable affection. His mind was early turned towards the ministry of the gospel, and he entered upon studies preparatory thereto, availing himself of such helps as were within his reach, though in the main he had to depend upon his own efforts, and was, in fact, to a great extent a self-made man.

While thus engaged the war of 1812 came on. In the summer of 1814 Washington was burnt by the British, and Baltimore was threatened with the same fate at the hands of Admiral Cockburn, the man who promised his followers "the booty and beauty" of that city. The whole country was aroused; the adjacent counties of Pennsylvania sent as quickly as possible their militia to the point of danger, while from Shippensburg every person capable of bearing arms hurried to the defense of Baltimore.

Joseph McCarrell was one of these volunteers. He thus not only had a taste of military life, but from the mill, about two miles from the city, on which his regiment was placed he witnessed the magnificent spectacle of the bombardment of Fort McHenry. And he was one of those who through the long night watched the garrison flag, and when the morning dawned saw with inexpressible joy the glorious banner still waving defiance to the foe.

Soon after his return home he entered Washington College, Washington, Pa., and graduated with high honors in the class of 1815. One of his classmates is an eminent pastor in this county, the Rev. Dr. Snodgrass, of Goshen.

For several years after leaving college he was engaged in teaching in Bellefontaine, in Greensburg, and in Carlisle, while he was at the same time pursuing the studies that would fit him for the sacred profession to which he was looking forward.

In 1818 he entered the theological seminary of the Associate Reformed Church, then in New York, under the care of that distinguished man, Dr. John M. Mason. He brought to the seminary an amount of attainment in certain branches of learning which very few possess when leaving it, for he had made himself a thorough Hebrew scholar, and had read the whole of the Old Testament in that language. Having finished the prescribed course of study, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Big Spring, Pa., on the 21st of June, 1821.

For several months he supplied the Associate Reformed Church in Murray Street, New York (made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Mason), with so much acceptance that not a few of its members wished to call him as their pastor. At the same time he received calls from the churches of Hagerstown, Md., and Shippensburg, Pa., but he was destined to spend his life in another sphere.

Dr. McCarrell went to Newburgh in the autumn of 1822. He was soon afterwards invited to assume the pastoral care of the Associate Reformed Church there, and on the 13th of March, 1823, he was ordained and installed pastor. The edifice, corner of Grand and First Streets, in which he commenced to preach was erected in 1821, and had been dedicated but a few months before Dr. McCarrell arrived in Newburgh. He was consequently at his death the only one who had served the congregation as pastor since it began to worship in that building. His pastorate was nearly twice as long as the united pastorates of his four predecessors. The society, though one of the oldest in Newburgh, was by no means large when he became its pastor, but from that time it steadily increased in numbers, and has become the mother of two other congregations.

In 1829 the seminary, which had been suspended for some years, was revived, established at Newburgh, and Dr. McCarrell was chosen professor of theology. Towards the close of that year he entered upon his work of instruction, and from that period until near the end of life he continued to discharge his twofold duties as pastor and professor. During the last two years it was evident to those who saw him that his strength was on the wane. He was able, however, to preach until within a few weeks of his decease, and was mercifully spared the endurance of acute physical pain. His mental strength was unabated, and at last he peacefully fell asleep in the Lord.

Dr. McCarrell had lived and labored in Newburgh for so many years that in one sense it might be said everybody knew him. While his manner in the pulpit was quiet rather than demonstrative, his trains of thought were clear and striking, his logic unanswerable in argumentative directions, and his style forcible and compact. Some of the best legal minds of the country sat for years under his ministry. His students in the theological hall thoroughly loved him. Whilst he was always dignified and learned, and thorough in his instructions, yet his manner was so kindly they were always made to feel at their ease, and if any went from the class-room in ignorance the fault was theirs, and not his. It has been matter of great regret to his friends that so few results of his pen found their way into print. Vigorous, pleasant, and clear-cut as a thinker, he wielded "the pen of a ready writer." Admirable discourses in answer to Dr. Channing, the eloquent Unitarian champion, as also a series of sermons on a phase of the temperance question, and some others on the form of baptism, with an occasional special sermon, were all that have ever been published. Commentaries of great ability were prepared by him on the Epistle to the Hebrews and the Book of Revelation, but for some reason they were never published.

In private life he exhibited a rare combination of Christian graces, so that by all who knew him he was loved with an affection singularly warm and enduring; and all who saw him as he went out and in his own home and those of the community for so many years, knew that they were looking upon "a living epistle of Christ." His death occurred on the 28th of March, 1864, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, having occupied the pastorate of the same church for forty-one years.

Dr. McCarrell married in his native village. His wife survived him eleven years. Of eight children, four are living, besides one grandson.

First Reformed Presbyterian Church.—The origin of this congregation may be traced to the self-denying exertions of a few individuals in the communion of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, who settled in the village of Newburgh and vicinity during the early part of the century, among whom were James Clark, O. Gailey, and Robert Johnston. A society for prayer and other devotional services was formed and regularly attended as early as 1816 or 1817, which proved the means of gathering together and combining the efforts of a sufficient number to warrant an application for occasional preaching. From 1817 until 1824 the society was supplied with preaching by the Rev. J. R. Wilson, D.D., at that time pastor at Coldenham. Increasing in numbers, and desirous of obtaining a fuller supply of ordinances, the members of the Newburgh branch of the Coldenham congregation, as it came to be called, were, by deed of Presbytery, separated from the Coldenham congregation, and in 1824 organized as a distinct church, of which Samuel Wright and John Lawson were elders, and William M. Wiley and John Crawford deacons. Soon after the organization, Matthew Duke was added to the elders, and William Thompson to the deacons.

The first pastor of the church was the Rev. Jas. R. Johnston, who was ordained and installed in 1825. His connection with it was dissolved in 1829. June 8, 1830, the Rev. Moses Rooney became his successor, and served with great acceptance until 1848, when he was compelled to resign on account of failing health. Nov. 14, 1849, the present pastor, the Rev. Samuel Carlisle, was installed.

The society held its first public services in the academy. Arrangements were made for the erection of a church edifice in 1818, which was completed the following year and is still occupied by the congregation. In 1852 it was rebuilt, during which time the public services of the congregation were held in the court-house. In 1876, it was remodeled and a brick front added, on Grand Street, of fair architectural appearance.

Second Reformed Presbyterian Church.—The Second Reformed Presbyterian Church of Newburgh was organized by a commission of the New York Presbytery, Dec. 12, 1854. The original membership was composed of William Thompson, James Frazier, and William Johnston, elders; John Lawson and James Hilton, deacons, and 26 private members.

In accordance with a call made by the congregation, the Rev. J. Renwick Thompson, the present pastor, was installed Dec. 19, 1855.

The public services of the church were first held in the court-house. Arrangements for the erection of a church edifice, however, were made soon after the organization, and the building was completed in November, 1855, and dedicated on the 25th of that month. The morning services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Christy, of New York, who delivered an able lecture on the 12th chapter of Isaiah. In the afternoon the discourse was by the pastor of the church, from Gen. xxviii. 17; and the evening services were conducted by Dr. Christy. The church building, originally without much architectural character, was improved by the addition of a tower, etc., in 1872, at a cost of $3400. It is of brick, and has accommodations for 600 persons.

First United Presbyterian Church.—On May 25, 1858, a union, with reference to which negotiations had long been pending, was consummated at Pittsburgh, Pa., between the two branches of the Presbyterian family known as the "Associate" and the "Associate Reformed" Churches, under the title of the "United Presbyterian Church of North America." The two Associate Reformed congregations of Newburgh declined to enter this union. The friends of the united church in these congregations believing that the union was right, and an important step towards the unity of the church, petitioned (Nov. 9, 1859) the New York Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church for the constitution of a congregation to be known as the "First United Presbyterian Church of Newburgh." This petition having been granted, Rev. Alexander McWilliams was appointed by the Presbytery to organize the church, which then embraced 6 members. George Kearns, George Lendrum, John Geddes, Sr., and Dr. Matthew Stevenson were elected ruling elders, and Andrew Johnston, B. W. Chambers, Thomas M. McCann, Jas. S. Strachan, Robert Hyndman, George Lendrum, George Kearns, John Geddes, Sr., and John Brown were chosen as trustees, and the society organized Dec. 6, 1859. On December 31st the trustees purchased the edifice then occupied by the Baptist Church, situated on Montgomery Street (corner of Fourth), where the congregation has since held public worship. It was enlarged and improved during the summer of 1871 at a cost of about $1800. The first pastor of the church was Rev. Robert Armstrong, formerly of Philadelphia, Pa. He was installed March 12, 1861, and continued in the office until Oct. 21, 1868, when he was released from the charge. The present pastor, Rev. J. G. D. Findley, was ordained and installed Oct. 14, 1869. On April 21, 1862, Messrs. George Guy, Thomas M. McCann, and Andrew Johnston were ordained and installed as ruling elders in the congregation.

American Reformed Church.—The history of this church dates from October, 1834, when the Rev. Wm. Cruickshank, on the application of some of the members of the Reformed Dutch Church in the city of New York, was induced to visit Newburgh and undertake the establishment of a church. His efforts were successful, and on Feb. 24th following the church was formally organized by the Classis of Orange, at which time Isaac Belknap, Thomas G. Stansborough, Isaac A. Knevels, and John W. Knevels were ordained elders; and Cornelius Bogardus, Thos. Jessup, Daniel Corwin, and Albert Wells, deacons. Eighteen persons were then received into its communion by certificate.

April 13, 1835, the Consistory invited the Rev. William Cruickshank to become their pastor, and the call having been approved by the Classis of Orange, he was installed as the first pastor of the church on October 22d of the same year. In December, 1837, Mr. Cruickshank resigned, and on June 3, 1838, a call was addressed to the Rev. Isaac M. Fisher, which was accepted, and he was installed in July. He remained pastor only until October 5th of the same year, when he resigned on account of failing health. May 17, 1839, the Rev. F. H. Vandermeer was called, and continued the pastor of the church until Aug. 19, 1842, when he resigned. Sept. 3, 1842, a call was made upon the Rev. A. B. Van Zandt, and he was installed by a deputation of the Classis of Orange on December 14th following. He resigned in June, 1849, and was succeeded by the Rev. Malcolm N. McLaren, who was installed Nov. 12, 1850. He resigned the charge Feb. 5, 1859, and on June 14th a call was made upon the Rev. G. H. Mandeville, of Flushing, L. I., who entered upon the duties of pastor August 21st of the same year. He resigned Nov. 1, 1869. Rev. W. H. Gleason, the present pastor, was called on April 9th, and installed in May, 1870. He was succeeded by Rev. J. Halsted Carroll, the present pastor, in October, 1876.

The church was organized in the First Associate Reformed Church edifice, and its subsequent meetings, until the completion of the building now occupied by it, were held in the academy. Mr. Cruickshank, the first pastor, devoted all his energies to the interests of the infant church, and its early success was due, in a great measure, to his indefatigable exertions. He obtained from his congregation, and from New York, a handsome subscription for the erection of a church edifice, the site for which was selected on the corner of Grand and Third Streets. The building was commenced about Oct. 1, 1835; the corner-stone was laid October 22d. Mr. Warren, of New York, was the architect, and Gerard & Halsey, masons, and A. Whitmarsh, carpenter, were the contractors. Service was first held in the basement on Sunday, Nov. 13, 1837, and on December 7th, following, the edifice was dedicated. The financial difficulties of 1837 seriously affected the temporal interests of the church, and the Consistory were compelled to submit to a sale of the church property (April, 1839), which was purchased by Mr. Daniel Farrington, on behalf of the creditors, for the sum of $10,053. An arrangement, however, was soon after effected by which Matthew V. B. Fowler became the purchaser of the property in trust for the church. The debt was greatly reduced, and in 1849 the Consistory was enabled to resume the title.

The church edifice is of Grecian architecture. It is built of stone stuccoed, and was originally 50 by 80 feet with a portico of 20 feet, making a total depth of 100 feet; the roof was surmounted by a massive dome, which formed a prominent feature in the landscape. The style of architecture was continued in the interior, and gave to the auditorium a cold, massive grandeur. The first cost, including lot, etc., was about $20,000. The dome proved troublesome and was removed; the acoustics of the auditorium were bad, and led to a recessed pulpit. During the year 1851 the parsonage was built on the east side of the lot on Third Street at a cost of $3277. It has since been enlarged and improved at a cost of about $5000. The church edifice was enlarged in the fall and winter of 1867-68 by the addition of a transept in the rear 15 by 22 feet on each side and 20 feet high, giving an audience-room 100 feet in depth and 82 feet in width at transept. The improvements were from plans by J. E. Harney, architect, and including frescoing, grading, etc., involved an expenditure of about $20,000. It was reopened for service April 19, 1868. Its seating capacity (including gallery) is now about 1000.

First Baptist Church.—The first Baptist Church in Newburgh was a colony from the Baptist Church of Pleasant Valley, who were set off by themselves April 24, 1790, and formally organized as the church at Newburgh on the 2d of June following. This church continued in existence until 1817. In the mean time (1803) Elder Luke Davis, a Baptist missionary, raised a small congregation at Fostertown, which was incorporated with the original society. William Brundage served as pastor from 1790 to 1795; Levi Hall from 1796 to 1799, holding service one-third of the time; Jethro Johnson from 1799 to 1803; Luke Davis from 1803 to 1811; William C. Thompson, a licensed preacher, but not an ordained minister, from 1812 to 1815, and John Ellis from 1815 to 1817, whose time was equally divided between the Newburgh and the Pleasant Valley Church. Nov. 18, 1817, the two churches were united under the title of the Union Church of Pleasant Valley and Newburgh, and continued in existence down to Dec. 5, 1840, when the last entry is made in the minutes. From 1817 to 1832 meetings were held alternately at Pleasant Valley, where a church edifice had been erected in 1786, and in the "Stone Meeting-house," as it was called, in Newburgh. After 1832 meetings were held at Pleasant Valley only, and practically the Newburgh branch of the society closed its existence. The stone meeting-house which it occupied and its burial-ground were on the farm late of John Rodman, near Luptondale, on the Newburgh and Shawangunk plank-road. The building was about 30 feet square with walls about 20 feet high, 10 feet of which were stone, and covered by what is called a barrack roof, rising to about 25 feet in the centre. It was erected about the year 1806, and abandoned in 1832. The pulpit was on the west, the entrance on the east. In the adjoining burying-ground headstones mark the resting-place of many of the founders and supporters of the church, among others of Deacon Joseph Cauldwell and of Deacon William Winterton. A parsonage-house was also a part of the property, and Orange Lake was the baptismal font.

No effort appears to have been made to organize a church in the village of Newburgh until 1821. Baptist missionaries, however, frequently visited the place, and among others the Rev. Mr. Price, Charles Mais, and Thomas Powell, the latter afterwards or at that time (1820) pastor of the church at Cornwall. In 1817 the Hudson River Baptist Association made arrangements to supply the village with missionaries for one year. The Rev. Rufus Leonard held the first service under this arrangement in the academy on December 14th. From the records of the present church it appears that on Wednesday evening, Feb. 21, 1821, a meeting was held at the residence of Lydia Ann

Hill, for the purpose of consulting in reference to the organization of the church. "As the result of this meeting, an invitation was sent to Elder Daniel C. Stears to visit the brethren and give them such counsel as circumstances required. On the fourth Wednesday in March following a committee was appointed to draft articles of faith and covenant, which were presented and adopted at a meeting held on April 11th. On May 16th the church was formally organized, William Pierce acting as moderator, and Lewis Leonard as clerk. There were fourteen members at the time of its constitution, five of whom were brethren. This church survived, with all the attending difficulties usual to weak churches, until July 12, 1828. During its existence forty persons united with it, of whom only four were by baptism. The members attached to the church at the time of its dissolution removed their membership, and gradually all trace of it vanished."

From 1828 until 1834 there was no Baptist Church organization in the village. Dec. 23, 1834, however, a meeting was held "in the brick meeting-house, then owned by the Methodists, for the purpose of organizing a church. There were four ministers present, viz.: Parkinson, Bernard, Martin, and David James. Having resolved to constitute a church, it was agreed that Elder Parkinson preach the sermon. Elder Martin was appointed clerk. Elder Bernard gave the charge, and Elder Parkinson the right hand of fellowship. Elder David James was the first pastor of this church, it having been formed under his charge. The number of members at the time of its constitution is said to have been 13. At the first church meeting, held January 10th, there were present three brethren and seven sisters. The three brethren were David James, the pastor; William Mitchell, deacon; and Joseph Chase, clerk."

Mr. James continued to serve as pastor until January, 1838, when he resigned. The church does not appear to have gained much, in point of numbers, during his ministry. In April, 1838, Elder Spencer accepted a call to the pastorate, and served in that capacity until August following, when he resigned. The pulpit was temporarily supplied by Elder James until December, when Elder Van Gilder took the charge. He served until July, 1839, when Elder Daniel T. Hill accepted an invitation to supply the pulpit every Sabbath morning. This arrangement continued for only a few months. In July, 1840, Elder George Phippen accepted the pastorate, and remained in the charge until Nov. 1, 1842, when he resigned. During his ministry the condition of the society considerably improved. "Some old difficulties were removed, some prejudices which had long existed were broken down, and, as a denomination, some progress was made in gaining a more favorable opinion on the part of the community."

The Rev. C. A. Raymond succeeded Mr. Phippen, and entered upon his duties on the first Sabbath in November, 1842. He was a young man of superior talent and great energy, and under his ministry the church rapidly increased in membership. He resigned the charge in 1844. The Rev. W. S. Clapp and the Rev. Thomas Applegate served the church as supplies until April, 1847. In November of that year a call was extended to the Rev. James Scott, who entered upon the duties of the pastorate in December, and held the station until Sept. 11, 1855, when he was removed by death. On May 4, 1856, the Rev. J. H. Castle accepted the vacant pastorate, and served until March, 1859. His successor, Rev. Isaac Wescott, entered upon the charge May 1, 1859, and continued pastor until Sept. 13, 1861. He was succeeded by Rev. G. W. Lasher, who became pastor in March, 1862, and resigned April 25, 1864. In October of the same year Rev. Lyman Wright entered upon the pastoral work, continuing in the office until Dec. 31, 1868. His successor was Rev. E. W. Bliss, who accepted the pastoral office April 1, 1869, and resigned April 1, 1872. Rev. John Quincy Adams entered upon the pastorate April 1, 1873, and resigned in 1877. The present pastor, Rev. Arthur Jones, became Mr. Adams' successor in 1879.

After its reorganization in 1834 the church held services in the old McIntosh house (formerly in use by St. George's), and from thence it removed to the old Methodist church on Liberty Street, which was purchased by the society. This building was sold in the spring of 1842 for $925, and on the third Sabbath in May of the same year the church commenced worship in Washington Hall. In 1849 an edifice was erected on the corner of Montgomery and Third Streets (now occupied by the First United Presbyterian society), and opened for public worship in the spring of 1850. In the fall of 1859 the society purchased a site on South Street and commenced the erection of the edifice which it now occupies. It is 52 by 90 feet, and is in the Roman style of architecture. The tower and spire are 175 feet high; audience-room, 50 by 72 feet in the clear; height of ceiling, 32 feet. The audience-room has 156 pews, and will seat about 800. The lecture-room in the basement is 50 by 55 feet, and has 100 pews; it was renovated in 1875. The cost of the building and lot was about $19,500. It is supplied with a baptistery and other modern appointments. It was dedicated on Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1860, on which occasion Dr. Hague, of New York, preached in the morning from Eph. iii. 19, and Dr. Gillette in the evening from Luke ii. 49.

Second Baptist Church.—In the summer of 1860 (Aug. 12th) Mr. John Hagan, Jr., opened a Sunday-school in what was known as the Crystal Palace building, on the north side of Washington Street, and immediately thereafter a lot was procured on the opposite side of the street, and a small frame building erected at a cost of $700. This building was opened Sept. 1, 1860, under the name of the "Scott Mission School." In the fall of 1867 a larger building of brick was erected at a cost of $5000, and was opened for service on Tuesday, Jan. 14, 1868. Missionaries were employed by the First Baptist Church to labor in connection with this mission until June 10, 1871, when 41 members were, at their own request, dismissed for the purpose of forming the Second Baptist Church, and on Sept. 6, 1871, that body was formally recognized by a Council as an independent church. Rev. John Gray, who had acted as a missionary, was soon after called and ordained to the pastorate, which office he filled up to the destruction of the building by fire, when the organization ceased.

Methodist Episcopal Churches.—Methodism was introduced in Newburgh by Rev. Ezekiel Cooper in 1786.* In 1788 there were seven "classes," or informal societies, in the town, viz.: Samuel Fowler's at Middlehope, Elnathan Foster's at Newburgh Village, Munson Ward's at Fostertown, George Stanton's at Gardnertown, Daniel Holmes' at Middlehope, and Luff Smith's near Marlborough. In 1808 the "Newburgh," or "Elnathan Foster's class," as it was originally called, was organized into a church under the title of the "Methodist Episcopal Church in the Parish of Newburgh." Its trustees were Morgan Cole, Lewis Carter, William Baker, Joseph Cole, and George Westlake. It continued to be supplied by circuit preachers until 1820, when Rev. Samuel Fowler, its first located pastor, was appointed to the charge. Since that time the following ministers have held the station, viz.: 1820, Samuel Fowler; 1821-22, Tobias Spicer; 1823, William Jewett; 1824-25, John D. Moriarty; 1826-27, Thomas Mason; 1828-29, Robert Seney; 1830-31, Stephen L. Stillman; 1832-33, James Covell; 1834, William Thatcher; 1835-36, Seymour Landon; 1837-38, John Kennedy; 1839-40, Robert Seney; 1841-42, Edmund E. Griswold; 1843, Friend W. Smith; 1844-45, Davis Stocking; 1846-47, Zephaniah N. Lewis; 1848-49, John L. Gilder; 1850-51, Abiathar M. Osbon; 1852-53, Charles B. Sing; 1854-55, Luther W. Peck; 1856-57, Edwin R. The class from which the society sprung held its first meeting (1786) at the house of Elnathan Foster, which occupied the site on which the First Presbyterian Church edifice now stands. The old Lutheran church and the old clothing store-house were also used when the circuit preachers visited the station, and after the erection of the academy the services were held in the upper room of that building. Subsequently the old McIntosh house was occupied. Immediately after the organization of the society it was resolved June 8, 1808, to erect "a house of worship, 45 by 35 feet," and George Westlake and Morgan Cole were appointed to "circulate subscription papers, as well as to have the general direction in erecting the building." The sum of $773 was subscribed for the purpose, and a lot on the corner of Gidney Avenue and Liberty Street was purchased from Elnathan Foster for a nominal consideration. The trustees note their first meeting in this building, which was called the "Brick Chapel," under date of Feb. 18, 1811, but it was undoubtedly occupied at an earlier period. Even then, however, the interior of the edifice was not finished, nor was it completed until 1816 or 1817.

In 1833 December 23d the trustees of the church resolved to build "a new meeting-house, to be 50 by 62 feet, after the plan of the Washington Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, capable of accommodating 1000 persons." A suitable site was purchased on Second Street, and on July 29, 1834, the corner-stone of the edifice was laid with appropriate ceremonies. The building was completed in 1835, and was dedicated April 1st of that year. Its cost was about $10,000. It was erected by Sylvanus Loud, builder, and Henry work. The corner-stone was laid Nov. 14, 1860, by Bishop James. One year from that date (Wednesday, Nov. 13, 1861) the building was dedicated, in the usual form, by Bishop Simpson, of Indiana. It is in the decorated style of the thirteenth century Gothic, and has a front on Liberty Street of 73 feet 6 inches by 140 feet on Third Street. The chief features of the exterior consist of three towers with their entrances, the transept, and the lecture-room front. The centre tower and spire rises to the height of 180 feet; the side towers to 63 feet. The interior dimensions are: Nave, 85 feet long by 62 feet wide; transept, 78 feet long, terminating at the ends with large enriched windows. The ceiling of nave and transept is 40 feet, and is richly groined and ribbed. The auditorium contains 150 pews; the lecture-room, on the second floor in the rear, will accommodate about 400 persons, and the classrooms on the first floor are large and convenient. The cost of the building and lot was about $35,000. An organ was added in February,

Veltman, mason. A parsonage on Montgomery Street was subsequently added to the property. In the spring of 1860 the society determined to build a new edifice, and for that purpose the trustees purchased a site on the corner of Liberty and Third Streets. Plans by R. Lockwood, architect, were adopted, and the contracts awarded to Little & Kelly, carpenters, John Little, mason, and Madden & Fitzgerald, stonework, at a cost of $5000. It only remains to add that the title of the church was changed from "First" to "Trinity" in 1871. The property of the church on Second Street was sold to private parties, and subsequently converted into an opera-house.

The original "Samuel Fowler's class" and the "Daniel Holmes' class" were organized into a church at Middlehope, Dec. 14, 1821, and Wm. Smith, Daniel Holmes, David Wyatt, Gilbert Holmes, and Daniel Merritt were elected trustees. Arrangements were soon after made for erecting a church edifice, which was dedicated Dec. 29, 1822, under the name of "Asbury Chapel." It has always been supplied by circuit preachers, and is now associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fostertown, the two churches forming the "North Newburgh Circuit." Its building has undergone some slight architectural changes since 1860.

In 1825 the "George Stanton's class" was organized into a church, and (December 15th) Burroughs Westlake, Joshua Marston, David W. Gidney, Silas B. Gardner, and Robt. Lockwood were chosen "trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Gardnertown." A house of worship was erected the next year, and was dedicated November 20th. It remained in occupation until Nov. 24, 1858. The present edifice was from plans by E. K. Shaw. It was erected in 1858, under contract with Thomas Shaw & Sons, at a cost of $2750, and was dedicated November 24th. It is a simple Gothic chapel, accommodating about 400 persons. The society was for some years associated in a circuit with that at Little Britain.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Rossville was organized Oct. 8, 1830, when Thomas Aderton, Alvah Waring, Wm. Penny, John Bushfield, Nehemiah Fowler, Thomas Bushfield, and Gilbert Lockwood were elected trustees. The edifice now occupied by the society was erected in 1831. It is 30 by 42 feet, and cost originally about $600. It was considerably improved and refurnished and painted in 1876. The society cannot be satisfactorily traced to any of the original classes. It is now associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Pleasant Valley, Ulster Co., in the support of a minister. The parsonage is at the latter place.

December 31, 1833, the Munson Ward's class was organized as the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fostertown, and David Wyatt, Jethro Allison, John F. Williams, Jacob Gillis, and Wm. S. Holmes were elected trustees. In 1834 the building now occupied by the society was erected, and was dedicated in September of that year. Like its contemporaries of the primitive Methodistic era, it has been improved since its original dedication, but has no architectural claims.

In addition to these original churches there are the Second (now St. John's Church) and Grace Church, while for a few years there was St. Paul's, a German Church. The first (St. John's) was organized through the instrumentality of Joseph Longking, Henry Cornell, and James Martin, who proposed to the trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal Church (1851) that that body should hire for the use of such a society the building formerly occupied by the Second Presbyterian Church, the applicants agreeing to pay the interest on the debt then existing on that building for one year. The trustees, however, declined to take any steps in the matter. After further consideration, and with the approval of the presiding elder of the district and of Rev. A. M. Osbon, the preacher stationed in Newburgh, Mr. Longking and his associates determined to prosecute the enterprise, and in compliance with their request the presiding elder appointed Rev. Aaron F. Palmer, a local deacon, preacher in charge until the ensuing session of the New York Conference. The society was formally organized on Sunday, May 23, 1852, at the residence of Mr. Cornell, at which time certificates of membership were received from seven persons.

Previous to this time, however, arrangements had been made for the use of the Second Presbyterian Church edifice, and on the 9th of June following Henry Cornell, James Martin, John H. Waters, Nelson Austin, and Joseph Longking were unanimously elected trustees, and the articles of corporation were formed. At the annual session of the New York Conference for 1852, Rev. Rufus C. Putney was appointed to the charge. The church edifice was dedicated June 13th, and on the 25th of that month the society had a membership of 129 persons, nearly all of whom had been previously connected with the First Church.

The building which had been rented for the society at the time of its organization was purchased by its trustees in March, 1853, for $5000, which was principally paid by subscriptions, and at about the same time arrangements were made for erecting a parsonage and also a building for lectures and class-meetings. These buildings were completed Sept. 12, 1853,—the former at a cost of $2349, and the latter at $2109. The building was badly injured by fire in the fall of 1873, and in the summer following was repaired and materially improved at a cost of about $7000. It was reopened for service in October, 1874, Bishop Peck conducting the exercises. In the spring of 1876 the present front of 36 feet with towers was added (from plans by E. K. Shaw, architect) at a cost of $10,000. The edifice is now one of the most thoroughly modern in the city. The principal floor has seats for 650 persons, and the Sunday-school gallery over the vestibule for 300. A recess in the rear of the pulpit accommodates the choir and organ, and was part of the improvements of 1874.

The society adopted the title of "St. John's" at its reopening in 1874. The following have been its pastors: 1852-53, Rufus C. Putney; 1854-55, L. W. Walsworth; 1856-57, David Buck; 1858-59, E. L. Prentice; 1860-61, John P. Hermance; 1862-63, Chas. S. Brown; 1864, G. H. Gregory (three months); 1864-66, Thos. B. Smith; 1867-68, DeLos Lull; 1869-70, H. H. Birkins; 1871-72, W. E. Clarke; 1873-74, George H. Corey; 1875-76, L. H. King; 1877-80, F. W. Hamlin.

Grace Church is at West Newburgh, on Broadway. It was the outgrowth of the Second or St. John's Church, and especially of a mission Sunday-school established under its auspices in 1848. The society or school was legally organized in June, 1865, when

P. S. Haines, James Harrison, C. H. Bond, Joseph W. Bond, F. Klaproth, David Gibb, Charles Estabrook, John Haskins, and Charles L. Brown were elected trustees. The regular church organization, however, dates from April 25, 1868, when 30 members from the Second Church united for that purpose. The building of a church edifice was commenced in May, 1866, and the basement completed and occupied by the Sunday-school and by a free school, the latter under the charge of the Board of Education. The corner-stone was laid in the autumn of 1867, Rev. J. B. Wakely delivering the address, and the edifice was completed under plans by J. D. Kelly, architect. It was dedicated Sept. 2, 1868, on which occasion the sermon was by Rev. Dr. Fletcher, from Mark ix. 18, 19. Dr. McAllister preached in the evening. Rev. Dr. A. M. Osbon, presiding elder, had principal charge of the exercises at both services. The structure is of brick, and includes basement, auditorium, and choir gallery; it is in neat but plain finish, and has seats for about 400 persons. It is 35 by 61 feet; lot 66 by 105 feet,—the latter presented by Messrs. W. R. & C. L. Brown; its cost was about $10,000. A parsonage was added to the property in 1874 at a cost of $3500. Rev. Van Ness Traver (1868) was the first minister in charge. He was succeeded by Rev. D. W. C. Van Gaasbeck, the latter by Rev. Dr. Osbon, and the latter by Rev. W. S. Bouton.

St. Paul's German Methodist Episcopal Church was the outgrowth of an effort to organize a German Reformed Church, for which latter purpose a meeting was held in the lecture-room of the Associate Reformed Church on Sunday, Jan. 5, 1868. The exercises were conducted by Rev. A. Rahn, and resulted in the constitution of a society (February 7th) under the title of "St. Paul's German Reformed Church." Mr. Rahn was elected pastor, and was installed on Sunday, March 29th, by Rev. Dr. Schaff. At a subsequent meeting the society resolved to unite with the Presbytery of North River, and it was duly received by that body under the title of "St. Paul's German Presbyterian Church." Soon after organization the society purchased a site on Johnston Street near Western Avenue for the erection of a church edifice, the corner-stone of which was laid September 10th, by the Masonic fraternity in Grand Lodge of Ceremony. The building was completed and dedicated in the summer of 1869. Its cost, including lot, was about $12,000, and its capacity sufficient for the accommodation of about 400 persons. Mr. Rahn resigned the charge, and was succeeded, in July, 1870, by Rev. E. Lubkert, who served as supply until September following, when he was installed pastor, and continued in that relation until July 28, 1872. His resignation was mainly in consequence of a union which was effected in April of that year with the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, under which it was agreed by the trustees of Trinity Church that that body would assume the mortgage debt of St. Paul's, amounting to about $4500. The title of the society was then changed to "St. Paul's German Methodist Episcopal Church," and its pulpit supplied by the appointment of Rev. G. Myers. A subsequent board of trustees of Trinity Church refused to carry out the agreement which had been made, on the ground that the action which had been had was illegal, it not having been in compliance with a vote of the congregation. This conclusion compelled St. Paul's to submit to a sale of its property, under mortgage foreclosure, in 1876. After a period of suspension the society reorganized as a German Lutheran Church, repurchased its building, and is now under the pastorate of Rev. W. S. Buehler.

Roman Catholic Churches.—St. Patrick's, the first Roman Catholic Church in the county, was organized in 1826. Previous to that time Newburgh was visited by itinerant Catholic priests, among whom was the Rev. Dr. Ffrench, who said mass, in 1817, at the house of Mr. Gilmore on Western Avenue. The attendants upon his ministrations, which were only occasional, were as follows, viz.: Mark McIntyre, John Fitzpatrick, Henry Gilmore, Daniel Devlin, Dennis McCool, Enos McAllister, Michael Bird, George McCahill, Charles Mackin, Owen McGahey, Patrick McGahey, and Thomas and Hugh Riley, and their families. At the time of the organization of St. Patrick's the number of Catholics in the town did not exceed 30, and mass was said every six months. Soon after this time the Rev. Philip O'Reilly was stationed on the Newburgh district, and said mass here once every month. In 1836 the Rev. Patrick Duffy was appointed to the station, and for seventeen years remained Catholic pastor of Newburgh. He died in 1853. After an interval of one year, during which time the church was ministered to by the Rev. Mr. Gallagher, the Rev. E. J. O'Reilly was appointed pastor, and served until June 1, 1867, when he was succeeded by Rev. E. S. Briady. Rev. Joseph F. Mooney is now in charge of the parish.

The service of mass was first said in Mr. Gilmore's house, as already stated. Afterwards, and for a number of years, the McIntosh house was used by the congregation. In 1838 the preliminary steps were taken for the erection of a church edifice, and the site now occupied was purchased by subscriptions from resident Catholics, aided by outside collections and contributions from members of other denominations. The building was completed and opened for service in December, 1842. Its value was then estimated at about $12,000. It was a stone structure, about 100 by 60 feet, with no architectural features. It was neatly fitted up with pews and a small gallery, had an organ and two fine oil paintings about 14 by 9 feet, representing the birth and the entombment of the Saviour, painted by Rembrandt Lockwood.

In 1852 a field was purchased at the corner of First and Stone Streets, and a cemetery opened. In 1854 a lot was purchased adjoining the church, and a pastoral residence erected thereon,—the house and lot costing about $10,000. The year 1858 was signalized by the erection of a commodious school-house, situated immediately west of the church, which was completed and opened November 29th of that year. The school was instituted in 1850. In 1855 a library association was organized, and some 600 volumes collected. For four years, ending with August, 1860, this association published a very spirited monthly magazine, edited by the late John Ashhurst. A Sabbath-school and other organizations peculiar to the Catholic faith are also connected with the church.

In 1860 the church made extensive alterations and additions to its house of worship, rendering it one of the finest ecclesiastical structures on the Hudson. Its plan is in the style known as the decorated Gothic of the thirteenth century. The building is cruciform, the front ornamented with pinnacles and parapets of rich crochet and quatrefoil work. A tower, surmounted by a spire of open tracery work, adorns the front. The windows are of heavy carved work and filled with richly-stained glass. The ceiling is arched and ribbed, and the finish throughout of the highest order. The plans were furnished by Rembrandt Lockwood, and the work executed under his direction by J. Gill, mason, and Little & Kelly, carpenters. The following are the dimensions of the building, viz.: length, 150 feet; length of transept, 75 feet; front, 55 feet 3 inches; height of ceiling, 29 feet; spire, 135 feet.

During Father Briady's administration the church edifice and the school-house were thoroughly repaired and refurnished and the parsonage rebuilt, the latter in 1869 at a cost of $13,000. In 1871 the property on Grand Street near Washington was purchased and improved at a cost of about $15,000, and opened (1872) as St. Patrick's Orphan Asylum, under the management of Sisters of Charity. It is now occupied in part for that purpose and in part by a select school for young ladies. In the spring of 1875 a plot of fifteen acres near Muchattoes Hill was purchased for cemetery purposes at a cost of $7200.

St. Mary's Church was organized in March, 1875, on the application of a number of members of St. Patrick's to Archbishop McCloskey, who granted an order dividing the original parish and constituting from the northern part of its territory St. Mary's parish. Rev. M. J. Phelan, formerly of Port Ewen, was appointed pastor, and said his first mass in the parish on Easter Sunday, 1875, in the opera-house. Property was soon after purchased on Gidney Avenue and South Street for $20,000, and mass celebrated in the mansion on the premises. In May following a temporary frame building for church purposes was erected, costing $3500. In 1880 the building now occupied by the church was erected at a cost of $25,000, including cost of organ. It was dedicated by Archbishop McCloskey on Sunday, October 3d.

Embraced in St. Mary's parish is the Academy of

Our Lady of Mercy (a branch convent of the Sisters of Mercy of New York), which was opened at Balmville in the summer of 1875.

Unitarian.—The Church of Our Father was formed Feb. 21, 1859. On the last Sunday of July, 1867, Rev. William R. G. Mellen commenced Unitarian worship at the court-house with an audience of 25 in the morning and 30 in the afternoon. Subsequent services were held by Mr. Mellen and other preachers until Feb. 15, 1868, when the Rev. C. B. Webster was elected pastor. On July 7th following a Unitarian society was organized. A building-lot was soon after purchased at the corner of South and Johnston Streets at a cost of $3000, and in the summer of 1869 a church edifice was erected at a cost of $12,300. This building is in the early Gothic style, of brick with bluestone borders and granite caps; the roof is supported by iron pillars resting on brick piers. It is 40 feet by 60, and provides seats for 400 persons. A small pastor's room and a choir gallery are furnished in the rear. The dedication took place July 17, 1870. Mr. Webster resigned the pastorate in 1871, and Rev. F. W. Holland became his successor in June of that year. Rev. James Huxtable succeeded Dr. Holland in 1878. The principal patrons and founders of the society were the late Josiah S. Young and the late John P. DeWint, the latter a resident of Fishkill.

In addition to the societies already enumerated, the First Presbyterian Church maintains the Bethel Mission on North Water Street, and the American Reformed Church the Gleason Mission on Western Avenue. The Jews have a synagogue,—“Congregation Beth Jacob,”—of which David Fleishowr is rabbi. There are also two societies of colored people,—the Shiloh Baptist Church and the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. The latter has a neat edifice on Washington Street.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The theological seminary of the Associate Reformed Church was the first institution of the kind in the United States. There were indeed Professors of Divinity (most of whom were connected with colleges) who were accustomed to give lectures on the science of theology to such students as pleased to attend; but there was no institution expressly designed for the training of candidates for the ministry, and formally organized on an academic basis, in existence in this country previous to the erection of this seminary.

The first steps towards its establishment were taken by the Associate Reformed Synod in 1796, on the suggestion of one of its youngest members, Mr. (afterwards Dr.) John M. Mason, of New York, then in the early dawn of his brilliant career. At the meeting of Synod in 1796 an act was adopted "concerning a Synodical Fund," the main object of which fund was to aid poor and pious youth in their studies for the ministry, and to maintain a Professorship of Theology. The church was small, the country was very poor in those days, and the growth of the fund was necessarily slow; but the ideas thrown out by Dr. Mason had taken root in the minds of his brethren, and at the meeting of Synod in 1801 it was resolved, after much discussion, to erect a theological seminary on a peculiar plan, and of a higher order than any "school of the prophets" then in being. Dr. Mason was sent to Great Britain to ask help from the churches of the Fatherland, and he obtained the handsome sum of $5500, which was chiefly expended in the purchase of a noble library. Dr. Mason returned in 1802, and was unanimously chosen to preside over the infant institution, which was at first located in New York, where it was opened in 1805. The number of students rapidly increased, and considering the size of the denomination, it continued to be comparatively large until the suspension of the seminary in 1821. This result was mainly owing to the failing health of Dr. Mason, which had compelled him to retire from a sphere in which he had spent the best years of his life, and to which he was enthusiastically devoted. By a vote of the General Synod of the church in 1822 (which was judicially declared a few years afterwards to have been illegal), the library was transferred to the seminary at Princeton.

The operations of the seminary were suspended until the summer of 1829, when the Associate Reformed Synod of New York determined to resuscitate the institution and to locate it at Newburgh. The Rev. Joseph McCarrell, D.D., of Newburgh, was elected Professor of Theology, and the Rev. Drs. John McJimpsey, Alex. Proudfit, Robert Forrest, and D. C. McLaren were chosen superintendents. During the following year the necessary steps were taken (after sundry fruitless appeals to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church) for the recovery of the library and funds removed to Princeton in 1822, and after a protracted lawsuit they were restored to their old owners.

Another important movement was made in 1835, viz.: for the erection of a suitable edifice for the accommodation of the students and professors. For so small a body as the Synod of New York the undertaking was an almost herculean one. Money was collected from various sources, an admirable site covering thirteen acres of land was purchased, and a charter of incorporation was granted by the Legislature of this State on May 25, 1836. The trustees named in the act were Hon. John Willard of Salem, Hon. William M. Oliver of Penn Yan, Hon. Archibald C. Niven and Alpheus Dimmick of Monticello, Hon. Robert Denniston of Salisbury, Hon. John W. Brown, D. W. Bate, and Daniel Farrington of Newburgh, James Waugh and William Wear of Little Britain, James D. Bull of Hamptonburgh, and Benjamin Parker of Kortright. The foundation of the seminary was laid in 1837, and the building was completed in 1839 at a cost (including land) of about $25,000.

In 1858 an organic union was effected between the Associate Presbyterian Church of North America and the Associate Reformed Church, under the title of the United Presbyterian Church. A few congregations of the Associate Reformed Synod of New York refused to enter into this union. These laid claim to the seminary, but by a suit at law it was decided that the property rightfully belonged to that portion of the Synod, the great majority, which had assented to the union. In 1865 the Associate Reformed Synod of New York, the legally recognized owners of the property, took measures, in co-operation with the United Presbyterian Synod of New York, for reopening the institution, and elected as professors therein Rev. J. B. Dale, D.D., of Philadelphia, and James Harper of New York. On Oct. 2, 1867, accordingly, the building was opened again for the training of young men for the ministry, and now has students from nine or ten States. The number of bound volumes in the library is nearly 3600. The professors have been as follows:

Systematic Theology.—Rev. John M. Mason, D.D., 1805–21; Rev. Alex. Proudfit, D.D., 1820–21; Rev. Joseph McCarrell, D.D., 1829–60; Rev. James Harper, D.D., 1867—now professor.

Biblical Literature.—Rev. James M. Matthews, 1809–16; Rev. James Arbuckle, assistant, 1820–21; Rev. John Forsyth, Jr., 1837–45; Rev. David L. Proudfit, 1840–42; Rev. Robert Stewart, D.D., 1872—now professor.

Church History, etc.—Rev. John Forsyth, D.D., 1852–59; Rev. J. B. Dales, D.D., 1867—now professor.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Glebe School.—The first public school in Newburgh was that contemplated in the charter to the Glebe, and was known for many years as the Glebe

School. The time at which it was first opened cannot now be ascertained, but it was probably soon after the settlement of the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins. Nor is it possible to determine who was the first schoolmaster. The offices of minister and schoolmaster, however, were not combined in one person, as has been generally supposed. This is evident from the setting apart of a lot for the minister and another for the schoolmaster, and the erection of dwellings thereon respectively, as well as from the books of the trustees of the Glebe. During a portion of the time that Mr. Watkins held the office of minister a Mr. Palmer performed the duties of schoolmaster. In 1768, Lewis Donveur conducted the school; in 1769, Joseph Penny; and in 1773, Thomas Gregory. In 1774, John Nathan Hutchins was employed, and continued in the school until a short time prior to his death, which occurred in 1782. His successor was Richard King, who served from Sept. 18, 1782, until the settlement of the Rev. Mr. Spierin, in 1790. Mr. Spierin's engagement contemplated the combining of the two offices of minister and schoolmaster, and gave rise to difficulties which eventually terminated the jurisdiction of the Episcopal Church over the Glebe. He resigned in 1793. The records of the trustees fail to show the name of Mr. Spierin's successor, or indeed that of any teacher for several years. It is probable, however, that the school was conducted in the academy from 1796 to 1804, during which time the latter school was under the charge of the trustees of the Glebe. The "act to amend the charter of the Glebe," passed by the Legislature in 1803, directed that "the sum of $200 of the revenues arising from the Glebe" should be "paid annually to the trustees of the academy;" and that "the remainder of the money arising from such annual income" should be "paid to the trustees of the other schools which are, or may hereafter be, established on the Glebe," as the inhabitants should direct. The jurisdiction of the trustees of the Glebe being thus terminated, the old Glebe School ceased to exist.

No division of the revenues from the Glebe, as required by the act of 1803, appears to have been made until 1809, when what was called "the juvenile school in old town" was established. This school was subsequently known as the Glebe School, from the fact that the trustees of the Glebe were directed by the inhabitants of the patent to pay to it that portion of revenues not appropriated to the academy. It also received one-half of the public money after the creation of the common school fund. It was conducted for several years by Ebenezer Adams, and for a few years prior to 1830 by John P. Tarbell. Mr. John Goodsell succeeded Mr. Tarbell, and continued the school until 1846 or '47.

The first building occupied by the school was that previously spoken of as the "schoolmaster's house." All the teachers appear to have occupied this building prior to 1774. Mr. Hutchins and Mr. King (the latter at least part of the time) held the school in the "parsonage-house." In 1789 the trustees rented a house for the school from James Van Orsdall, and Mr. Spierin held it in a house which now forms part of the late residence of Charles F. V. Reeve. The school (under the title of "the juvenile school of old town") subsequently occupied the old Lutheran church, where it was continued down to 1846 or 1847, when it was removed to the academy.

April 6, 1848, the Legislature passed an act to divide school district No. 13 and to erect No. 15. The law also directed the levying of a tax of $5000 upon district No. 13, as it existed prior to the passage of the act, and that $3000 of the money so raised should be applied to the extinguishment of a debt on that district, and that the remainder should be expended in the erection of a school building in district No. 15. The trustees of the new district were also empowered to receive such portion of the Glebe moneys as the inhabitants should direct, and apply the same to the reduction of rate bills.

The new district was immediately organized under this law, and a site was selected and the erection of a school building commenced. Before the building was completed the inhabitants were called to determine what disposition should be made of the Glebe revenues beyond the amount directed by law to be paid to the trustees of the academy. The trustees of the Glebe at that time—viz.: John Bevridge, Samuel J. Farnum, and T. M. Niven—proposed that the unappropriated balance should be devoted to the payment of scholarships in the academy; but the suggestion was not favorably received, and at a public meeting held April 13, 1849, it was rejected. At the same meeting a resolution was adopted directing the trustees of the Glebe to pay to the trustees of school district No. 15 whatever revenue might be derived from the Glebe "over and above the sum required by law to be paid to the academy." The resolution also declared that "the said district school No. 15 shall hereafter be known as the Glebe School," and this designation continued until the adoption of the present free school system.

Newburgh Academy.—The Newburgh Academy was erected in 1795–96. On the settlement of the Rev. Mr. Spierin, in 1790, he announced his intention to open "an academy for the instruction of youth in the Greek and Latin languages and the different other branches of literature;" and with a view to encourage the establishment of a school of the character proposed, the trustees of the Glebe stated that "a subscription would be set on foot for the building of a convenient house for a seminary." In 1791 an effort was made to carry this promise into effect, and to that end an application was made to the Legislature for permission to establish a lottery, but for reasons already stated the application failed. The trustees again took up the matter in 1795, and succeeded in completing the building in 1796.

The institution continued under the charge of the trustees of the Glebe until 1804, when a meeting of the inhabitants of the patent was held (June 2d), at which the following persons were elected "trustees to take charge of the school in the academy," viz.: James Bate, Anthony Davis, William W. Sackett, Daniel Birdsall, James Coulter, William Ross, Richard Hudson, Charles Clinton, and Edward Howell. In 1806 it was incorporated under the general statute of the State. The trustees named in the charter were Daniel Niven, James Scrimgeour, Daniel Birdsall, Jonas Storey, Abraham Schultz, David Fowler, John Johnston, John McAuley, John Brown, Hugh Spier, Derick Amerman, William Ross, and Daniel C. Verplanck.

The names of the first and of several of the succeeding teachers of the academy cannot now be ascertained. In 1799, Samuel Nicholson was principal, and John Gillespie was assistant; 1802, James Lawrence, principal; 1803-4, Nathan H. White; 1805, Joel Cooper; 1806, Mr. Brackett; 1807, R. W. Thompson; 1809, Jabez Munsel. The more recent principals were Luther Halsey, Rev. J. T. Halsey, E. C. Benedict, E. Burt, J. Stark, Edgar Perkins, Rev. Dr. Prime, and Rev. R. B. Hall. The school was especially successfully conducted during the administrations of Mr. Halsey, Mr. Perkins, and Mr. Prime.

The academy building is located on the west side of Montgomery Street, a short distance north from South Street. When it was erected only the principal floor was finished for school purposes. In 1798 the courts of the county were directed by law to be held at Newburgh and at Goshen alternately, and for their accommodation the upper floor was finished. A stairway was placed on the north side, and two jury-rooms, a hall, and court-room occupied the floor. Courts were held here from 1798 until 1843, or about forty-five years. The court-room was also used for public meetings; the general and town elections were held there, and, as has been already shown, it was the cradle of several of the churches of the city. A few changes have since been made in the external appearance of the building, as well as in its internal arrangement. It is now held by the Board of Education, and is occupied by the senior or academic department of the public schools.

High School.—This institution was incorporated April 23, 1829, and was constituted the common school for district No. 13, which then embraced the whole village of Newburgh. For the erection of a school building $1400 was raised by a tax on the inhabitants of the district, and $3600 by a loan which was divided into shares of $25 each. The building was completed and opened for scholars in February, 1830, at which time John P. Tarbell and Miss Mary Ross were employed as teachers. The following persons composed the first board of trustees, viz.: William M. Wiley, Edmund Sauxay, and James Belknap; Thomas C. Ring, clerk, and David M. DuBois, collector. Orville M. Smith succeeded Mr. Tarbell in 1834, and held the position of principal with great credit until the close of the December term in 1848, when he resigned. His successor, James P. Brown, served until March, 1852, when S. G. McLaughlin was appointed principal and held that position until the system of free schools was established and the old organization dissolved. The building was removed in 1872.

Free Schools.—The movement which resulted in the adoption of the present free school system was commenced in the spring of 1851, when, by the passage of the general free school law, the necessity of furnishing increased school accommodations was thrown upon the trustees of the several school districts. With a view to meet the requirements of the new system, and to extend the principle upon which it was founded beyond the provisions of the State law, so far as the village of Newburgh was concerned, Moses H. Belknap, Nelson Haight, and Robert Sterling, trustees of district No. 13, and John Beveridge, A. Gerald Hull, and Nathan Reeve, trustees of district No. 15, held a joint meeting in May and passed the following resolution, viz.:

"Resolved, That the inhabitants of the village of Newburgh be invited to attend a meeting, to be held at Washington Hall on Monday evening, the 12th inst., to consider the propriety of applying to the next Legislature for a law to unite the whole village in one district,—to make all schools in the district free schools,—the same to be under the charge of a Board of Education to be elected by the people, in manner similar to other cities and villages in the State."

At the meeting held pursuant to this resolution Mr. Haight and Mr. Reeve united in a report showing the necessity for increased school accommodations, and proposing a system of free schools and the establishment of a free academy. The report was accepted, but definite action was postponed until the 23d, for the purpose of ascertaining the probability of securing the co-operation of the trustees of the academy, with a view to make that institution the free academy suggested. Mr. Reeve then submitted the draft of a law for the purposes embraced in the report, which was referred to a committee for examination.

The meeting held on the 23d adopted the plan proposed, and the trustees of the academy signified their willingness to unite in the movement. In this shape the subject remained until Feb. 27, 1852, when it was again considered at a public meeting and the law prepared in 1851 approved. On April 6th the "act to provide for the establishment of free schools in the village of Newburgh" passed the Legislature, and the academy, the high school, and the Glebe school ceased their separate organizations.

The first election under the law of April 6th was held on the 3d of May, when John Beveridge, John J. Monell, Nathaniel Jones, Charles F. V. Reeve, George W. Kerr, D. G. Leonard, L. B. Gregory, Rev. John Brown, and Thomas C. Ring were chosen "trustees of common schools," and constituted "The Board of Education of the Village of Newburgh." The first meeting of the board was held May 12th, when its organization was completed by the election of John Bevridge president, and Nathaniel Jones clerk.

The schools were soon after reorganized under what is known as the graded system. The academy was made the senior or highest department, and intermediate and primary schools were opened in the high school and in the Glebe school. The accommodations for the attendance of pupils were soon after materially increased by the erection of a commodious building on Washington Street; the Glebe school building was enlarged, and a building for a primary school fitted up adjoining the academy; a school for colored children, and a system of evening schools, were also established. Several changes have since been made. The senior department is now substantially academic, the intermediates are grammar schools, the grade of the primaries has been raised, and the colored school abolished. Three modern buildings have been erected, and two enlarged. Six buildings are now in occupation, with accommodations for 3000 pupils.* The value of school property in 1860 was $40,000; in 1875, $185,000. In addition to the free schools of the city, there are in the town fourteen school districts under the general school law of the State. A free school is also maintained by St. Patrick's Church, to which more extended reference has already been made.

Private Schools.—Very creditable private schools have been conducted at different periods. The first of this class, with the exception of that opened by Mr. Spierin, was established by Rev. Jonathan Freeman and Silvanus Haight, April 17, 1802, under the title of Clisophic Hall. It was a boarding and day school, and was held in the building now No. 169 Montgomery Street. Miss Heffernan succeeded Mr. Freeman in 1804, and established the first purely female school. A private school conducted by Robert Gardner about the same time attracted a fair patronage. Mrs. DeVendel followed Miss Heffernan in 1820, and subsequently similar schools by the Misses Phillips, the Rev. Mr. Raymond, Mr. A. Barker, and others; one of some note is now conducted by Miss Mackie. Joel Turrill, subsequently distinguished in politics in western New York, had a select school for young men in 1816. Rev. Saml. Phinney, Mr. Alzamora, and M. L. Domanski had similar schools subsequently; the latter was succeeded by H. S. Banks. A mixed school on Smith Street, known as the Newburgh Institute, was conducted for several years by John J. Brown. In 1858, Mr. W. N. Reid purchased the building erected in 1837 for a boarding-house in connection with the academy, and established a boarding and day school, which he continued a few years. The most prominent of the private schools at the present time (1880) is that established by Prof. H. W. Siglar in 1863, and known as the "Newburgh Institute." It occupies the stone school building erected some years since on the theological seminary property, and first occupied by Mr. Saunders.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Newburgh Library Association.—The Newburgh Library Association was organized December, 1835, by stock subscriptions. A. J. Downing, Abm. M. Smith, John W. Knevels, J. J. Monell, M. V. B. Fowler, D. G. Leonard, and Alfred Post were the first trustees. A. J. Downing, president; Alfred Post, treasurer; Charles U. Cushman, librarian. The first books held by the association were donated to it by individuals. Subsequently funds were raised by fairs. In 1838 a regatta for the benefit of the library yielded $300; and during the same year Abm. M. Smith, by will, gave $500 to the association. It continued in existence until 1847, when it was united with the Mechanics' Library Association.

Newburgh Mechanics' Library Association.—This association was organized Nov. 27, 1838, by the joint exertions of a few individuals who felt deeply the necessity for an institution which should combine the advantages of a well-selected library with that of a debating society. A plan of organization having been agreed upon, a meeting of the mechanics of the village was called at Nicholson's Hotel, on Wednesday evening, December 5th. At this meeting, which was well attended, a constitution was adopted and officers for the association elected.

The minutes of the association date from Dec. 4, 1839; hence the names of its first officers do not appear. The officers elected in 1839 were as follows: President, Miles Warren; Vice-Presidents, Charles U. Cushman, D. H. Barclay; Recording Secretary, John R. Wiltsie; Corresponding Secretary, John Caughey; Librarians, Robert Sterling, John Little, Jr.; Treasurer, John B. Jamison; Executive Committee, Robert Sterling, John Filkins, E. G. Woolsey, C. S. Russell, James S. Young.

March 29, 1842, the association was incorporated, by an act of the Legislature, under the name of the "Newburgh Mechanics' Library Association," for the "purpose of establishing and maintaining a library, reading-room, literary and scientific lectures, and other means of promoting the moral, intellectual, and mechanical improvement" of its members.

The association established its first course of public lectures Jan. 5, 1846, and continued them annually until 1858. The library of the association was collected by the contribution of books, and by purchases made from the proceeds of several fairs. Sept. 23, 1847, an arrangement was effected with the stockholders of the Newburgh Library, by which the books and property of the association were transferred to

* The South Street building was erected in 1866, and cost (including furniture) $35,830. The West Newburgh building was erected in 1867, at a cost of $16,795.60. The Washington Street building was enlarged in 1869 and again in 1873, and with original expenditure cost $25,639.36. The Grand Street building was erected in 1872, at a cost of $37,072.91. The Clinton Street school was enlarged in 1870, at a cost of $6738.92. The Library building cost $25,000. Total, $147,076.35.

the Mechanics'. This arrangement established a library of upwards of 3000 volumes, which was continued until 1861, when, public attention having been called to the subject in a series of articles in the News, it was, by the unanimous concurrence of the members, united with the school library and the foundation of the present free library established.

Newburgh Free Library.—By the act establishing the present system of free schools, the several school district libraries of the village were consolidated, and a single library established. The collection embraced some 2000 volumes, principally standard works. By subsequent purchases the number was increased to about 5000. In 1861 a union was effected with the Mechanics' Library Association, by which a material addition was secured, and in 1865, by an amendment to the free school law, the library thus formed became the Newburgh Free Library, with power in the Board of Education to provide for its maintenance by tax. During the year 1860 a very neat library building was erected, on Grand Street, by the Board of Education, and was occupied until its removal in 1874. The present commodious building was erected in 1876.

In addition to the public libraries named, there are in the town fourteen school district libraries; and the Sunday-school libraries of the several churches probably embrace not less than 6000 volumes. The library of the Theological Seminary, embracing some 3600 volumes, is also located here. A small library in connection with St. Patrick's Church has been referred to elsewhere.

NEWSPAPERS.

The present (1880) newspapers of the city are the Newburgh Register, daily and weekly, and the Newburgh Journal, daily and weekly. The history of their predecessors is embraced in the general history of the press of the county.

LITERARY, RELIGIOUS, AND BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

Newburgh Lyceum of the Natural Sciences.—This society was organized Sept. 7, 1824, and had an active existence for several years. Its officers were as follows: President, William Ross; Vice-Presidents, David R. Arnell, Albert Christie, A. M. Smith, S. R. Betts, David Fowler; Corresponding Secretaries, Jas. R. Wilson, Luther Halsey, Jr.; Treasurer, William Seymour; Curators, John T. Halsey, John Johnston, George Gordon.

Newburgh Lyceum Association.—The first meeting in reference to the organization of the Newburgh Lyceum was held in the high school on the evening of Dec. 18, 1837, when a committee, of which Rev. Dr. Johnston was chairman, was appointed to confer with leading citizens on the subject. At a meeting held on the evening of the 20th, Dr. Johnston made a favorable report. A constitution and by-laws were submitted by S. W. Eager, N. S. Prime, J. W. Knevels, Samuel Phinney, A. J. Downing, Victor M. Watkins, James H. Perry, A. B. Belknap, and John J. Monell, committee, which was adopted. The first lecture before the association was delivered by Rev. N. S. Prime, Dec. 27, 1837. An annual course was maintained until 1844 or 1845.

Newburgh Historical Society.—This society was organized in February, 1845, by Rev. John Forsyth, Rev. A. B. Van Zandt, Samuel W. Eager, Peter F. Hunn, G. C. Monell, A. J. Prime, M. Stevenson, and other gentlemen. At its first meeting Rev. Dr. Forsyth was elected president; Dr. A. J. Prime, secretary; and Dr. M. Stevenson, S. W. Eager, and P. F. Hunn, curators. The society had an active existence for about two years, during which time a considerable collection of manuscripts, coins, minerals, etc., was made, now mainly preserved at Washington's headquarters.

Young Men's Mutual Improvement Society.—This society was organized Nov. 20, 1840, by David C. Ringland, Jno. K. Lawson, Geo. W. Clarke, and other young men, who took an interest in it, but were debarred from participation in the debates instituted by the Mechanics' Library Association. The society attained considerable strength and accumulated a library of about 600 volumes, but after a year or two disbanded and transferred its books to the Mechanics.

Newburgh Sabbath-School Society.—This society was formed in 1816. It was one of the first agencies employed to awaken an interest in Sabbath-schools, and to promote their establishment in connection with the several churches. A union Sabbath-school was conducted for several years under its auspices in the session-room of the First Presbyterian church. The society continued in existence until the object had in view by its founders was accomplished.

Newburgh Bible Society.—This society was organized Sept. 9, 1818, at a meeting held in the First Presbyterian church, when a constitution was adopted and the following officers elected, viz.: Jonas Storey, president; Isaac Belknap and Jos. Clark, vice-presidents; Rev. John Johnston, corresponding secretary; Charles Miller, recording secretary; Benj. F. Lewis, treasurer. It still has an active existence.

Newburgh Mission Society.—The Newburgh Mission Society, for "aiding missions in the propagation of the gospel," was organized in 1823, and continued in existence for several years.

Young Men's Christian Association.—The first association of this character was organized Sept. 15, 1858, Arthur Potts, president. The present association is its successor.

Newburgh Home for the Friendless.—This institution was organized in the autumn of 1861, at a meeting of ladies connected with the several churches, under the title of the Newburgh Union Female Guardian Society. At the meeting of the Legislature in 1862 the society was incorporated by special act under the title which it now bears. Its object is to provide a home for "friendless or destitute girls under fourteen and over three years of age, and boys under ten and over three years, until permanent homes can be secured for them by adoption or otherwise." The Home was organized in the building on the northwest corner of Grand and Clinton Streets. In 1864 the academy boarding-house building was purchased, and has since been devoted to that purpose. Its cost was about $8700, which was principally obtained from subscriptions. In 1866, from constitution as residuary legatee of Lewis Jennings, a fund of $13,097.77 was secured, the income from which, with the addition of subscriptions, has hitherto been sufficient to meet the annual expenditures.

St. Luke's Home and Hospital.—This institution was formally organized by the adoption of constitution, Nov. 4, 1874. The first board of managers was elected on the 11th of the same month, viz.: Mrs. Haslit McKim, president; Mrs. Smith Ely, vice-president; Mrs. John L. Rogers, secretary; Miss Julia E. LeRoy, treasurer. Soon after organization a house was leased on DuBois Street, and has since been occupied. The object of the institution is "to provide a home for the aged, the indigent, and the infirm, and a hospital for the sick."

New England Society.—This society was organized February, 1867 (Daniel B. St. John, president), and has since held annual festivals.

Masonic.—The first Masonic lodge in this section of the State was called American Union Lodge. It was organized under a traveling dispensation, and usually accompanied the headquarters of the army. The first located lodge in Newburgh was Steuben Lodge, No. 18. Its history, as well as that of its immediate successor, has been given elsewhere. In 1853 (June 11th) Newburgh Lodge, No. 309, was constituted; Hudson River Lodge, No. 607, was constituted June 11, 1866; Highland Chapter, No. 52, R. A. M., Feb. 10, 1864; King Solomon's Council, No. 31, Feb. 4, 1868; Hudson River Commandery, K. T., Sept. 27, 1865; Adonai Grand Lodge of Perfection, 1872.

Odd-Fellows.—The following are the organizations of this order, viz.: Highland Lodge, No. 65, instituted 1842; Bismarck Lodge, No. 420 (German); Acme Lodge, No. 469; Mount Olive Encampment, No. 69; Daughters of Rebecca, Van Nort Degree, No. 12.

Temperance Societies.—Three divisions of the Sons of Temperance—viz.: Orange, Quassaick, and Fraternal—were organized prior to 1858; also, Avoca Tent of Rechabites, a social union of the order introduced by Col. E. L. Snow; a section of the Cadets of Temperance; and a tent of Good Templars. They all failed after a few years' continuance, and their places are now supplied by Mission Lodge, No. 639, Newburgh Lodge, No. 282, Union Lodge, No. 114, and Orange County Lodge, No. 38, Good Templars; St. Patrick's T. A. B. Society, and St. Mary's T. A. B. Society.

Benevolent Societies.—O'Connell Benevolent Association, Newburgh Branch of American Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Newburgh Bible

Depository, Newburgh Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor.

Jewish Societies.—Eliezer Lodge, No. 115, I. O. B. B.; Maccabee Lodge, No. 22, A. I. O. K. S. B.

Grand Army.—Post Ellis, No. 52, G. A. R.

Musical.—German Manner-Chor and the Newburgh Choral Society, the latter organized April, 1877.

Knights of Pythias.—Storm-King Lodge, No. 11.

United Americans.—Newburgh Council, No. 58.

Turn-Verein.—Newburgh Turn-Verein (German).

Newburgh Bay Horticultural Society.—Organized February, 1862. (See Horticultural Society.)

CEMETERIES.

The oldest cemetery is that generally known as "The Old Town Cemetery," on Grand Street in the city. It was probably used by the Palatine settlers from the time of the erection on a part of the plot of the first church (the Lutheran). The cemeteries at Middlehope and Gardnertown are next in the order of time, St. George's the fourth, St. Patrick's the fifth, Big Rock the sixth, Woodlawn the seventh, and Cedar Hill the eighth. Big Rock has been practically abandoned and the remains therein removed to Woodlawn, which, though a Newburgh undertaking, is located in New Windsor. St. George's is under the charge of St. George's Episcopal Church, and St. Patrick's is under the charge of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church. Cedar Hill Cemetery is at North Newburgh.

SEALS OF THE VILLAGE AND CITY OF NEWBURGH.

The first seal in use by the board of trustees was one previously obtained by the trustees of the fire department. It had for its design a figure of Justice, encircled with the words, "Seal of the Trustees of Newburgh."

The second seal was adopted June 7, 1819. It is described by Mr. William Rollinson, of New York, by whom it was engraved, as follows: "The figure is a representation of the deity of the Hudson, or a river-god (Aquarius, the water-bearer), according to heathen mythology, pouring forth the river from his urn, and bearing in his right hand an antique rudder of a vessel, as an emblem of the extensive navigation and commerce of the river, and the Hudson is designated by the arms of the State of New York being blazoned upon the rudder, which I believe corresponds with the idea communicated to me." This description is rather crude, but it was approved by the board and entered upon its minutes.

The seal of the city of Newburgh was adopted in 1866.

XVII.—MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS.

Immediately following the war of the Revolution very little attention was given to the militia. The enrollment was of course preserved, and embraced the name of every able-bodied male resident between the ages of sixteen and fifty. After the adoption of the Federal Constitution more attention was given to the matter, and prior to 1806 five uniformed militia companies were organized in the regimental district* of which Newburgh was a part, viz.:
